HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION.

VOL. VIII.—No. 366.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, JANUARY 2, 1864. [$3.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1863, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

a. Overhang protecting Propeller.—b. Rudder.—c, c, c. Hatches.—d. Engineer's Stere-Room.—e. Engine-Room.—f. Fire-Room.—g. Boilers.—h. Coal-Bunker.—i. Turret-Chamber.—k. Turret.—l. Pilot-House.—m. Men's Quarters.—n. Officers' Quarters.—o. Captain's Cabin.—p. Anchor-Chamber.—r. Ventilator.—s. Anchor-Well.—t. Ram.—u, u. Lockers for Stores.—v. Smoke Stack.—1, 2, 3, 4, 5. Water-tight Bulkheads.

DIAGRAM OF MONITOR "WEEHAWKEN," SUNK IN CHARLESTON HARBOR, DECEMBER 6, 1863.—[SEE NEXT PAGE.]

FREDERICK VII., LATE KING OF DENMARK.—[SEE NEXT PAGE.]

CHRISTIAN IX., PRESENT KING OF DENMARK.—[SEE NEXT PAGE.]

THE WEAWEKEN."

THE Diagram on page 1, for which we are indebted to Mr. Ericsson, shows the interior of the Weehawken, and explains the cause of her loss, which, it will be seen, implies no want of adaptation for the purposes for which the vessel was designed. Lying at anchor in thirty feet water, during a storm, she shipped a heavy sea forward, which entered the fore-hatch, c, open at the time, filling the cable and anchor-rooms, p and e. She immediately began sinking by the head, the rolling of the vessel preventing this from being perceived by the officers and men, whose quarters were nearly amid-ships, and so went down before those on board were fairly aware of their danger.

THE DANISH KINGS.

ON page 1 we give portraits of FREDERICK VII., the late King of Denmark, and of his successor, CHRISTIAN IX., the present monarch. For more than four centuries the Danish kings have upon their accession assumed alternately the names of Christian and Frederick, laying aside, if necessary, their original names. Thus the late king's name was really Christian, but his father having been Christian, he took the title of Frederick. The name of the present king being Christian, he was under no necessity of making a change. On page 5 will be found a statement of the question of the Danish succession, which threatens to give rise to a European war. We here give a few points in the history of the two monarchs. Frederick VII. was born in 1808, and ascended the throne upon the death of his father in 1848. Shortly after the commencement of his reign the Schleswig-Holstein war broke out, and the conduct of the king made him at the time extremely popular in Denmark. As a ruler he appears to have been able and patriotic. His personal character, however, was unfortunate. He had been twice married and twice divorced before he became king. In 1850 he married "with the left hand" a woman who had been a governess, and opera dancer, and at last a milliner. He created her a baroness, and this affair lost him most of the popularity he had won. He died on the 15th of November. Years ago it was evident that he would leave no legitimate children, and by treaty to which the most European powers were parties, the proper heirs to the throne were passed over, and the succession vested in a remote kinsman, Prince Christian, who has now ascended the throne. The present king, who is father of the Princess of Wales and of the newly-elected King of Greece, was born in 1818. All accounts agree in representing his character to be every way admirable.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 2, 1864.

☞ HARPER'S WEEKLY and MAGAZINE will be promptly and regularly delivered without any charge in the residences of subscribers in New York and Brooklyn. Terms for either publication Three Dollars a Year. Both the WEEKLY and the MAGAZINE will be delivered to one address in these cities for Five Dollars a Year. A Prize Page and Table of Contents for Volume VII. can be had gratuitously from the principal News-Dealers.

PRESIDENTIAL PROSPECTS.

THE gentlemen whose accession to political power depends upon the salvation of slavery are already casting about for available Presidential candidates. A year ago the nomination of Mr. Horatio Seymour was a foregone conclusion. But his obsequiousness to a murderous mob shamed the most shameless of his supporters. They hate Abolitionism; but a civil magistrate who calls the most reckless and brutal criminals his friends appalls them. Mr. Seymour, so long as his mouth spoke speeches merely, was to be nominated as "a Conservative statesman." But Conservative statesmanship in practical operation down the days of July was a little too repugnant to the popular common-sense. The Conservative statesman committed political suicide upon the steps of the City Hall. His alternate, if circumstances should require a military candidate, was General M'Clellan.

Poor General M'Clellan! Charles Lamb tells an ancient story of the man at table who preserved a dignified silence and solemnity which greatly impressed the company, until quet dumplings were brought in. Upon which the dignified silence was broken by the solemn exclamation, "Them's the jockeys for me!" So General M'Clellan patiently kept silence while the mob cheered for him and Jeff Davis, and while Mr. Cox, the special adviser of the Philadelphia landigham, extolled him as the hope of the future. He held his tongue while every friend of the rebel cause hurled him and every loyal man heaped on in painful doubt. But when the Pennsylvania election came, and the rebel papers prayed for the success of Woodward, and Lee moved to support his chances, and the lackeys of slavery and rebel partisans strained every nerve for Woodward, and every loyal Union man in the land knew that his election would be equivalent to a victory over the Army of the Potomac, then the late leader of that army chose to break his long silence by declaring that Woodward was the candidate for him. Poor General M'Clellan! His letter was as fatal to his political hopes as Governor Seymour's speech. And he should hold his managers to strict account, for he not only threw himself but the enemies of the Government with whom he allied himself off the track. He left them without a tolerable candidate.

The moment General M'Clellan subordinated his military conduct to his political aspirations he was doomed. A more tragical campaign than his upon the Peninsula history does not record. Not three volumes of a thousand pages each can explain away the profligate waste of the Chickahominy swamps. "Here's the smell of the blood still: all the perfumes of Arabia will not sweeten this little hand." It was the penalty of not comprehending the war. He thought he could fight without hurting the enemy much for it would not do to exasperate one's natural political friends. He would try fighting with one hand and waving the olive branch with the other. He was a well-meaning Captain of Engineers, of no remarkable military capacity, utterly unable to the touch of political intrigue who hoped to make him their tool.

Does any body suppose that the same game can be played with General Grant? General Grant is a soldier who does not believe in olive branches but in unconditional surrender. He is a citizen who comprehends the scope of the war, and knows and frankly says that liberty, Union, and peace are henceforward inseparable. His politics are the overthrow of the rebel army in the field, and the overthrow of the rebel army that sends it there. He supports the Government and its policy. Would he have written a letter to help the divisions in the Union party? Would a rebel mob in New York ever couple his name with that of Jeff Davis? Would the friends of Vallandigham, and of peace by submission to the rebels, ever fasten upon him as Horatio Seymour for their candidate? The revolutionary Tories in Connecticut would as soon have nominated Benedict Arnold for governor as the Copperheads of to-day would wish General Grant for President. And from whom then is his support to come?

Certainly not from the friends of the Government: for hearty and unconditional as is their admiration for General Grant's military services, they have no less regard for the civil services of Mr. Lincoln. No man has more thoroughly won the confidence of the national heart as the President. It would be as soon think of removing General Grant from command of the army, because he is conquering the rebel host, as it would of setting aside Mr. Lincoln because his administration is restoring the Union. If the Presidential election took place next week, Mr. Lincoln would undoubtedly be returned by a greater majority than any President since Washington. And unless he is deserted by his great sagacity, or some blunder which shall shake the whole country, or some serious blunder is committed by the Union men in Congress, his election is as sure as the triumph of the nation over the rebellion.

THE EUROPEAN CONGRESS.

IT must make an English nobleman wince a little to answer a letter in which a man as Louis Napoleon calls the Queen "my sister;" and the fine society of London may hardly relish stealing a curious glance at Leicester Square, and wondering which of the queer figures there is next to turn up as an Emperor and King, and step from drilling with his wife-beater to embracing the Queen at Windsor. Yet the response of Earl Russell to Louis Napoleon's invitation to a European Congress is the best state paper he has written for a long time. It is clear and conclusive, and dextrously eludes the French snare.

The invitation sets forth with the assertion that the Treaty of Vienna is destroyed, as well as modified and annexed. But the Englishman extorts the concession from the French Emperor that the treaty is still technically in force, and then very strongly argues that although there are now, as always, disputed European questions, yet the only reason to suppose that they could finally be settled by a Congress. He proceeds to the chief questions in detail—shows, for instance, that what the diplomatic phrase of the day calls "material guarantees" is extract from Russia their union in a Congress can not effect. On the other hand, if the Congress demands and Russia refuses, as of course it would, what remains but immediate war for the Powers concerned or war? And how is that a peaceful solution of the question? With the great question, Earl Russell disposes of the reason that they could finally be settled by a Congress. He proceeds to the chief questions in detail—shows, for instance, that what the diplomatic phrase of the day calls "material guarantees" is not prepared for every contingency, replied that he had already settled upon the Marquis of Lansdowne and the Barony of Bolebrook. The King immediately sat down, wrote the titles, and sent them to the Chancellor to have the business perfected. After which the gentleman, who had conducted the war which lost Great Britain her fairest colonies, retired from the royal presence a peer of the realm, and presently took his seat as Lord Sackville.

If Lord George Germain was made a viscount for such services, why might not the Mayor of London be made a baronet for his politeness to the Princess Alexandra?

FROM A PRIVATE LETTER.

LET nobody be deterred from reading the following extract because it is long. It is from a private letter of one of the most conspicuous of our friends in England, who has maintained our cause with a courage, ability, and fidelity which will be forever honored in this country:

"I wish you to know that although the opinions of the Times are the opinions of a respectable number of persons and journals, they are, nevertheless, many among or by whom the sentiments and tone of our press, and of what we said, wrote, and thought during great battles, regarded not only with regret, but with wonder and with shame.

"That the news of a dissolution of partnership between the free and the slave States would have been received with satisfaction in England was intelligible and natural. It seemed to be like the removal of a fever-patient from throwing away the worser part to live the purer with the other half. The free States, it was thought, would set forth to live to become uncompromising antagonists of slavery; would accomplish, would with energy and ambition of the globe of extent enormous to our insular ideas, and certainly, both large enough and rich enough to employ all their energies for centuries to come; would be strengthened, not weakened, by compression; and in making the slave States loose wools cast off the border of every one of the great nations which go to make up the national morale, manners, and policy. This view—and this I think was the view most generally taken at first—may have been short-sighted, but it was in conformity with all our English feelings, opinions, and habits of thought, and compatible with a sincere respect for all those feelings and the character of the United States as being property to the North, been in this light, the policy of a war for the preservation of the Union was a question fairly debatable; and if there are not among the supporters of persons who took the same view of it, I think, have been because the question involved elements known to you, but unknown to us. But then, the war having broken out, and the two parties being actually in conflict, no discussion, not commercially important, on the issue, should with the South to win, is a thing which I should have thought the most unbelievable, and which I can not now understand or explain. That having taken up a position as a minority here, that I should have persisted to support it as they have done, I see surprising; though the motives of partiality, misrepresentation, arrogance, and ignorance which has been exhibited by these gentlemen in the management of the interests in every of your affairs, must have been amusing to you—or would have been so, if the matters at issue had been less serious. I have nothing to say in excuse, and my only hope is that you will not only carry out and finish your work of asserting, you will be content with despising them. So treated, it will be well. I think, that all this pro-slavery animosity has no real mischief in it; it is only fretful, and has no power. It neither influences our government nor is to induce any national action, either administrative or popular.

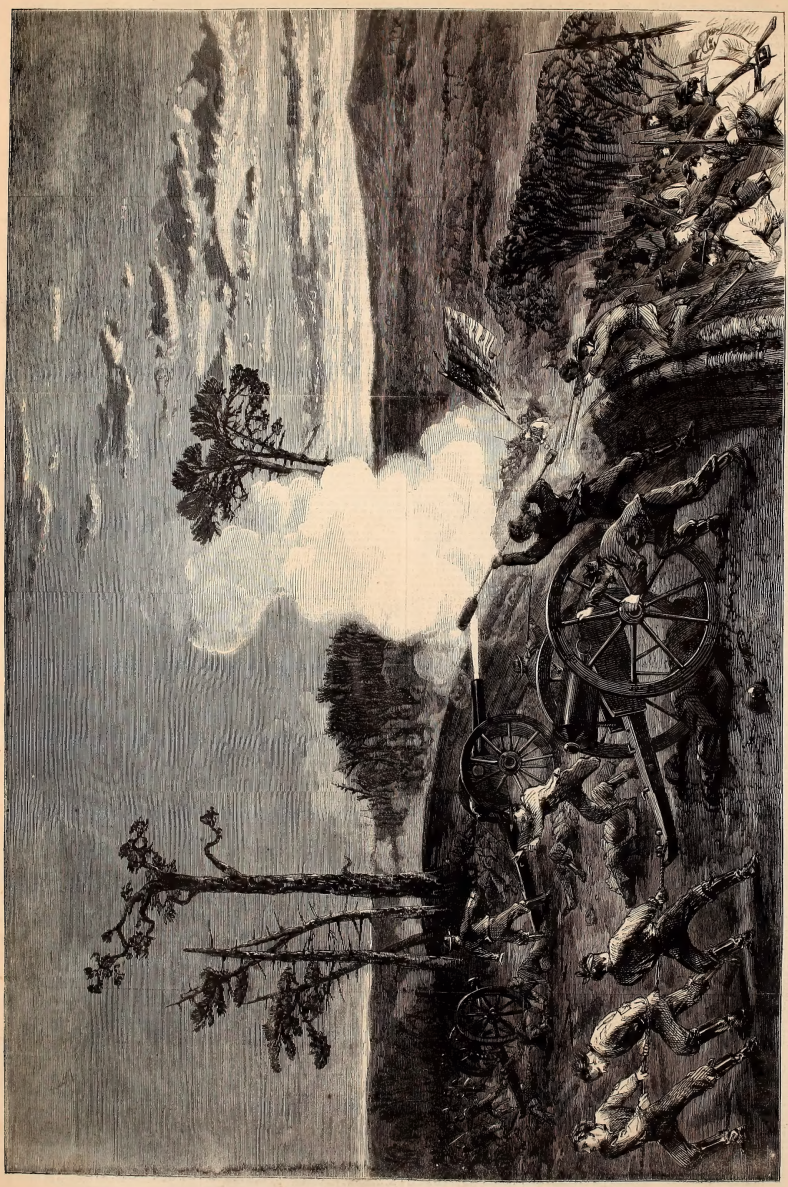
"The Government means to stand neutral, and is per haps no pressure. The laboring classes, who have suffered most, can not be persuaded to see that it is not all the slave interest on one side, and all the free interest on the other, that a war should subvert, or that it would be good for laborers to be slaves, and their sympathy has all along been with the North. So, I believe, is that of the middle class, in whose hands are the issue of elections; and if there should be a general election now, I suppose the question, 'Federal or Confederate?' I am persuaded that the Federal cause would be carried by a great majority. Emigration seems to be flowing toward the Northern States almost as much, scarcely checked at all by the war. The blunders away, but nothing happens in consequence. False prophecies and unjust criticism will be detected and disposed by the course of events, till the credit of the prophet is in danger. Then, as the Federal armies advance, and which is expected to lose the day, one or two leading articles will punish the feeble for a change of opinion. A new special correspondent (or the old one with new instructions) will introduce a new story. Everything that has been abused will be praised; every thing that has been praised will be abused, in a manner of course, but as if it had always been so. For about a week some of the readers may wonder, some laugh, some grave, some fret before a fortnight is over they will be following its lead just as cordially as they are doing now. Such seems to it judges, expecting what it foretells, believing what it the chances which are the most in accord with the interest strength are quite as touchy and chelatous on the point of honor as the fashionable classes are, and that they were never more loved to the Crown and all the belongings, and disposed friends with the government, were less disposed to let pass an affront to the nation, or not to go further to resent or to compel reparation. My queries taken up by the Government in visitation of its dignity and dignities of England would at this moment be supported enthusiastically by people of all classes; and again, while thing is will be of the most current should agitation between you and us. That we should have passed a century since, numerous instead of friends, is probably the greatest misfortune that has happened to the world. Since then, considering how much of good would have come to both through a more cordial understanding of each other, and to a larger degree the future of humanity depends upon our several characters and principles than on him. I had hoped that the remains of the hostile spirit was rapidly disappearing on both sides. I do not think it a mistake to say that the remnants of the Times for the sentiments of the English people may not lead to any revival of it."

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

CONGRESS.

SENATE.—December 16. By Mr. Wade, memorials from ladies for law emancipating all persons of African descent.

—By Mr. Saulsbury, memorial from clergymen asking to be exempted from draft; the Senator said that clergymen who attended to their spiritual duties should be exempt, but that political persons should be placed in the front ranks and made to fight till the war was over.—By Mr. Wilson, memorial from officers of colored regiments, asking for the same pay and bounty as given to other troops.—By Mr. Wade, reported back joint resolution of thanks to General Grant and his army, recommending its adoption.—Also, by Mr. Lane of Kansas, resolution of inquiry into the expediency of the Kansas prisoners in Texas being there has been seen seven Kansas prisoners in town, among others not treated, and that it was treated they were to be put to death; adopted.—By Mr. Hale, bill amending enrollment act.—Mr. Wilson reported back, with amendments, bill repealing back pay and bounty.—By Mr. Sumner, bill to satisfy claims of American citizens by reason of French spoliations.—December 17. Mr. Hale rose to a question of order. It had been charged that he had been guilty of bribery in accepting fees for defending a claimant before the War Department with offenses. The Senator explained the circumstances. He was employed as counsel and counsel of Mr. Bliss, Superintendent of the Armory Square Hospital. The result of the trial was that the accused was acquitted, and recommended to be restored to his place. Subsequently he was employed as counsel and agent for Mr. Hunt, with an offer of $5000 as a retaining fee; after consultation with his friends, he accepted the employment.—By unanimous consent, the following resolution was introduced by Mr. Hale: Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be requested to inform the Senate whether he has given orders to cease all contract investments with the rebel States or in States not under the control of the United States; if so, by what authority of law he has done so.—By Mr. Sumner, bill to confiscate the property of persons who have been engaged in the rebellion, and to provide for the liberation of their slaves.—By Mr. Wade, bill to amend the act to suppress insurrection, and to punish treason and rebellion, so as to confiscate the property of persons engaged in the rebellion, and to free their slaves.—By Mr. Sumner, bill to repeal the fugitive slave law, and all acts and parts of acts for the rendition of fugitives from service or labor



THE ARMY OF THE CUMBERLAND.—GENERAL BAIRD'S DIVISION CAPTURING THE REBEL GUNS ON THE LEFT OF MISSIONARY RIDGE.—FROM A SKETCH BY MR. THEODORE R. DAVIS.—[SEE PAGE 11.]

1. Albert's System.—2. Petin's System.—3. Henin's System.—4. Helle's System.—5. Julien and Samon's System.—6. Jarot's System.—7. Teisel's System.—8. Moreau-Seguin's "Captive Balloon."—9. Nadar's System.

DIFFERENT SYSTEMS OF SAILING IN THE AIR.—[SEE PAGE 11.]

THE TWO GENERALS.

A CHRISTMAS STORY OF THE WAR.

NEAR to the little State capital of Frankfort, Kentucky, there lived at Christmas-time of 1860, an old man, Major Breckenridge by name, whose life had been marked by many circumstances which had made him well known throughout Kentucky. He had sat for nearly thirty years in the Congress of the United States, representing his own State sometimes as Senator, and sometimes in the lower House. Once he had called a major he was by profession a lawyer, and as such had lived successfully. Time had been when friends had thought it probable that his might fill the President's chair; but his name had been too much and too long in men's mouths for that.

Upon the whole he had been a good man, serving his country as best he know how, and adhering honestly to his own political convictions. He had never been a slave-owner, but had voted in the Congress of his own State for the abolition of slavery in Kentucky. He had been a passionate man, and had lived not without the stain of blood on his hands, for duels had been familiar to him. But he had lived in a time and in a country in which it had been hardly possible for a leading public man not to be familiar with a pistol. He had been known as one whom no man could attack with impunity; but he had also been known as one who would not willingly attack any one. Now at the time of which I am writing he was old—almost on the shelf—past his duelings and his strong short invectives on the floors of Congress; but he was a man whom no one could tame, and still he was ever talking, thinking, and planning for the political well-being of his State.

In person he was full, still upright, stiff and almost ungainly in his gait, with eager gray eyes which the waters of age could not dim, with short, thick, grizzled hair which age had hardly thinned, but which ever looked rough and uncombed, with large hands, which he stretched out with extended fingers when he was vehemently; and of the life self that a marriage between Ada and his brother must, if it were practicable, be ruinous to both of them. If this were so, would not it be better for all parties that there should be another arrangement made? North and South were as far divided now as the two poles. All Ada's hopes and feelings were with the North. Could he allow her to be taken as a bride among perishing slaves and ruined whites?

But when the moment for his sudden departure came he knew that it would be better that he should go without seeing her. His brother Cecil had made his way to her through cold, and wet, and hunger, and through infinite perils of a kind never even than these. He trust now would be full of softness toward him. So Frank Reckenthorpe left the house without seeing any one but his servant.

Of course General Tom was a hero in the house for the few days that he remained there, and of course the step he had taken was looked on as a strength for him the affection of the girl whom he had come to see.

Ada Carrier and her aunt were passionately Northern, while the feelings of the old man had gradually turned themselves to the direction in the nation to which he seemed to belong. They were just the matter on which they were all thinking—the subject which filled their minds morning, noon, and night—and banished from their lips because it could not be discussed without the bitterness of hostility. But, nevertheless, there was no word of bitterness between Tom Reckenthorpe and his sister. While these few short days lasted it was all love. Where is the woman whom one touch of romance will not soften, though she be ever so impervious to argument? Tom could sit up stairs with his mother and his betrothed, and tell them stories of the gallantry of the South, while the offices women were making, and of the deeds men were doing, and they would listen and smile and caress his hand, and all for a while seemed to be sunshine; while the old Major did not dare to speak before them of his Southern hopes. But down in the parlor, during the two or three long nights that the General Tom passed in Frankfort, open secession was discussed between the two men. The old man now had given way altogether. The Yankees, he said, were too bitter for him. "I wish I had died first; that is all," he said. "I wish I had died first. Life is wretched to a man who can not bear to live." His son tried to comfort him, saying that secession would certainly be accomplished in twelve months, and that every Slave State would certainly be included in the Southern Confederacy. But the Major shook his head. "Nothing good can come in my time," he said; "not in my time—not in my time."

In the middle of the fourth night General Tom took his departure. An old slave arrived with his horse a little before midnight, and he started on his journey. "Whatever turns up, Ada," he said, "you will be true to me."

"I will, though you are a rebel, all the same for that."

"So was Washington."

"Washington made a nation; you are destroying one."

"We are making another, dear; that's all. But I won't talk seceds to you out here in the cold. Go in, and be good to my father; and remember this, Ada, I'll be here again next Christmas-eve, if I'm alive."

So he went, and made his journey back to his own camp in safety. He slept at a friend's house during the following day, and on the next night he again made his way through the Northern lines back into Virginia.

After that came a year of fighting, and General Tom Reckenthorpe remained during that time in Virginia, and was attached to that corps of General Lee's army which was commanded by Stonewall Jackson. It was not probable, therefore, that he would be left without active employment. During the whole year he was fighting, assisting in the wonderful raids that were made by that man whose fame was soon to be Confederate throughout the Valley of Vicksburg or of New Orleans. And General Tom gained for himself mark, name, and glory—but it was the glory of a soldier rather than of a general. No one looked upon him as the future commander of an army; but men said that if there was a rapid attack to be stricken, under orders from one unforethoughtful head, General Tom was the hand to strike it. Thus he went on making wonderful rides by night, upsetting like a warrior ghost loaded, over prior ghosts in some quiet valley of the Federals, seizing supplies and cutting off cattle, till his name came to be great in the State of Virginia as that Ada Forster, Yankee though she was, was proud of her rebel lover.

And Frank Reckenthorpe, the other general, made progress also, though it was progress of a different kind. Men did not talk of him so much as they did of Tom; but the War Office at Washington knew that he was useful—and used him. He remained for a long time attached to the Western army, having been removed from Kentucky to St. Louis, in Missouri, and was there when his brother last heard of him. "I am fighting day and night," he once said to one who was with him during his own State, "and, as far as I can learn, Frank is writing day and night. Upon my word, I think that I have the best of it."

It was but a couple of days after this, the time then being about the latter end of September, that he found himself on horseback at the head of three regiments of cavalry near the foot of one of those valleys which lead up into the Blue Mountain ridge of Virginia. He was about six miles in front of Jackson's army, and had pushed forward with the view of intercepting certain Federal supplies which he and others had hoped might be within his reach. He had expected that there would be fighting, but he had hardly expected so much fighting as was that day in his way. He got no supplies. Indeed, he got nothing but blows, and though on that day the Confederates would not admit that they had been worsted, neither could they claim to have done more than hold their own. But General Tom's fighting was in that day brought to an end.

It must be understood that there was no great battle fought on this occasion. General Reckenthorpe, with about 1500 troopers, had found himself suddenly compelled to attack about double that number of Federal infantry. He did so once, and then a second time, but on each occasion without breaking the lines to which he was opposed; and toward the close of the day he found himself unhorsed, but still unwounded, with no weapon in his hand but his pistol, immediately surrounded by about a dozen of his own soldiers. After the advance of the body of his troops as to make it almost impossible that he should find his way back to them, he had made cleared away and had again looked about him, he saw that he was close to an uneven, irregular line of Federal soldiers. But there was still a chance, and he had turned for a moment his pistol ready for use in his hand, when he found himself confronted by a Federal officer. The pistol was already raised, and his finger was on the trigger, when he saw that the man before him was his brother.

"Your time has come," said Frank, standing his ground very calmly. He was quite unarmed, and had been separated from his men and ridden over; but hitherto he had not been hurt.

"Frank!" said Tom, dropping his pistol-arm, "is that you?"

"And you are not going to do it, then?" said Frank.

"Do what?" said Tom, whose calmness was altogether gone. But he had seen at once that threat as soon as it had been uttered, and did not even know to what his brother was alluding.

But Tom Reckenthorpe, in the confusion at meeting his brother, had lost whatever chance there remained to him of escaping. He stood for a moment or two, looking at his brother in amazement, at the coincidence which had brought them together, before he turned to run. Then it was too late. In the hurry and scurry of the fight no one of his own men had left him, and he saw that a rush of Federal soldiers was coming up around him. Nevertheless he could not yet start for life. "Give me a chance, Frank," he said, and prepared to run. But as he went—or rather, before he had left the ground—he took aim at his brother with his pistol—at shot struck him, and he was disabled. In a minute he was as though he were stunned; then he smiled feebly, and fell upon the field of his own.

"It's all up, Frank," he said, "and you are in at the death."

Frank Reckenthorpe was soon kneeling beside his brother amidst a crowd of his own men. "Spurrell," he said, to a young officer who was close to him, "it is a terrible thing to say it, but I've killed Tom?" said Spurrell. "Not dangerously, I hope?"

By this time the wounded man had been able, as it were, to feel himself and to ascertain the amount of the damage done him. "It's my right leg," he said; "just on the knee. If you'll believe me, Frank, I thought it was my heart at first. I don't think much of the wound, but I suppose you won't let me go."

Of course they wouldn't let him go, and, indeed, if they had been minded so to do, he could not have gone. The wound was not fatal, as he had at first thought; but neither was it a matter little consequence as he afterward asserted. His fighting was over, unless he could fight with a leg amputated between the knee and thigh.

Before nightfall General Tom found himself in his brother's quarters, a prisoner on parole, with his leg all but amputated, and his fate decided. The first day after that saw the leg amputated. For three days the two brothers remained together, and after that the elder was sent to Washington as a prisoner, there to wait his chance of exchange. At all the interviews between the two brothers were cold, guarded, and uncomfortable; but after a while it became more kindly than it had been for many a day. If Washington were cold or selfish, its nature, we may be sure, was such as to be the opposite of that made it. Tom was ready enough to forget all personal animosity as soon as his brother would forget self be willing to do so; though he was willing enough also to quarrel—to quarrel bitterly as ever did Frank during the days of his anger. But the threat of the pistol, it had passed away from Tom Reckenthorpe, as all his angry words passed from him. It was forgiven as soon as it was spoken, that he had not wished to kill his brother, but that such a deed was impossible to him. The threat had been like a flash of lightning, terrible, which caused by passion as its rendiest weapon when passion is impotent. But with Frank Reckenthorpe words existed that had been spoken in anger. The threat had rankled in his bosom from the time of its utterance to that moment, when a strange coincidence had given the opportunity for its accomplishing it. The remembrance of it was then strong upon him, and he had expected that his brother would have borne a scar on his wood. But his brother had spared him; and now, slowly, by degrees, he began to remember that also.

"What can we do for you?" he said, as he sat one day by his brother's bed before the removal of the prisoner to Alexandria.

"Plan," said Tom. "How should a poor fellow like me have plans? To eat bread and water in prison at Alexandria, I suppose."

"There'll be let you up to Washington on your parole, I should think. Of course I can say a word for you."

"Oh, will, then, do say it. I'd have done as much for you, though I don't like your Yankee politics."

"Never mind my politics now, Tom."

"I never did mind them. But at any rate, you see I can't run away."

It should have been mentioned a little way back in this story that the poor old Major had been gathered to his fathers during the past year. As he had said himself, it would be better for him that he should die. He had lived to see the glory of his country, and had gloried in it. If further glory or even further gain were to come out of this terrible war—even great gains to men and nations do come from contests which are very terrible while they last—he at least would not live to see it. So when he was left by his sons, he turned his face to the wall and died.

"I suppose you will get home?" said Frank, after musing a while, "and look after my mother and Ada?"

"If I can I shall, of course. What else can I do with one leg?"

"Nothing in this war, Tom, of course." Then there was another pause between them. "And what will Ada do?" said Frank.

"What will Ada do? Stay at home with my mother."

"Ah, yes. But she will not remain always as Ada Forster."

"Do you mean to ask whether I shall marry her; because of my one leg? If she will have me, I certainly shall."

"And will she? Ought you to ask her?"

"If I found her seamed all over with small-pox, with her hair burned off, disfigured by any misfortune which could have visited her, I would take her as my wife all the same. If she were penniless it would make no difference. She shall judge for herself; but I shall expect her to act by me as I would have acted by her." Then there was another pause. "I look here, Frank," continued General Tom; "if you mean that I am to give her up as a reward to you for being sent home, I will have nothing to do with the bargain."

"I had intended no such bargain," said Frank, gloomily.

"Very well; then you can do as you please. If Ada will take me, I shall marry her as soon as she will let me. If my being sent home depends upon that, you will keep me here now."

Nevertheless he was sent home. There was not another word spoken between the two brothers about Ada till Frank Forster lay dying, and then he might still have a chance through want of firmness on the part of the girl; or whether he considered that it was his duty to make up to her what his own had left him, and he saw that a rush of Federal soldiers was coming up around him. Nevertheless he could not start for life. "Give me a chance, Frank," he said, and prepared to run. But as he went—or rather, before he had left the ground—he took aim at his brother with his pistol—a shot struck him, and he was disabled. In a minute he was as though he were stunned; then he smiled feebly, and fell upon the field of his own.

"It's all up, Frank," he said, "and you are in at the death."

Frank Reckenthorpe was soon kneeling beside his brother amidst a crowd of his own men. "Spurrell," he said, to a young officer who was close to him, "it is a terrible thing to say it, but I've killed Tom?" said Spurrell. "Not dangerously, I hope?"

By this time the wounded man had been able, as it were, to feel himself and to ascertain the amount of the damage done him. "It's my right leg," he said; "just on the knee. If you'll believe me, Frank, I thought it was my heart at first. I don't think much of the wound, but I suppose you won't let me go."

Of course they wouldn't let him go, and, indeed, if they had been minded so to do, he could not have gone. The wound was not fatal, as he had at first thought; but neither was it a matter little consequence as he afterward asserted. His fighting was over, unless he could fight with a leg amputated between the knee and thigh.

Before nightfall General Tom found himself in his brother's quarters, a prisoner on parole, with his leg all but amputated, and his fate decided. The first day after that saw the leg amputated. For three days the two brothers remained together, and after that the elder was sent to Washington as a prisoner, there to wait his chance of exchange. At all the interviews between the two brothers were cold, guarded, and uncomfortable; but after a while it became more kindly than it had been for many a day. If Washington were cold or selfish, its nature, we may be sure, was such as to be the opposite of that made it. Tom was ready enough to forget all personal animosity as soon as his brother would forget self be willing to do so; though he was willing enough also to quarrel—to quarrel bitterly as ever did Frank during the days of his anger. But the threat of the pistol, it had passed away from Tom Reckenthorpe, as all his angry words passed from him. It was forgiven as soon as it was spoken, that he had not wished to kill his brother, but that such a deed was impossible to him. The threat had been like a flash of lightning, terrible, which caused by passion as its readiest weapon when passion is impotent. But with Frank Reckenthorpe words existed that had been spoken in anger. The threat had rankled in his bosom from the time of its utterance to that moment, when a strange coincidence had given the opportunity for its accomplishing it. The remembrance of it was then strong upon him, and he had expected that his brother would have borne a scar on his wood. But his brother had spared him; and now, slowly, by degrees, he began to remember that also.

"What can we do for you?" he said, as he sat one day by his brother's bed before the removal of the prisoner to Alexandria.

"Plan," said Tom. "How should a poor fellow like me have plans? To eat bread and water in prison at Alexandria, I suppose."

"There'll be let you up to Washington on your parole, I should think. Of course I can say a word for you."

"Oh, will, then, do say it. I'd have done as much for you, though I don't like your Yankee politics."

"Never mind my politics now, Tom."

"I never did mind them. But at any rate, you see I can't run away."

It should have been mentioned a little way back in this story that the poor old Major had been gathered to his fathers during the past year. As he had said himself, it would be better for him that he should die. He had lived to see the glory of his country, and had gloried in it. If further glory or even further gain were to come out of this terrible war—even great gains to men and nations do come from contests which are very terrible while they last—he at least would not live to see it. So when

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

POPPING THE QUESTION.—One evenin', as I was a sittin' by Hetty, and had worked myself up to the sticking point, I, "Hetty, if a fellur was to ask you to marry him what would you say?" Then she laughed, and says, "That would depend on who asked me." Then says I, "Suppose it was Ned Willis?" Says she, "I'd tell Ned no, but not you." That kinder staggered me; but I was too cute to lose the opportunity, and so says I again, "Suppose it was me?" And then she went and her pet up her lip, and says she, "I don't take no supposes." Well now, you see there was nothin' left for me but to push the gun off. So bang it went. Says I, "Let, Hetty, it's me. Well, she said Smith, she'd be quite a sight more willin' to be able to tell ye, for Junet and I are just tryin' to settle that point."

Poets, sitting at table next to a gentleman who had helped himself to a very large piece of bread, took it up, intending to cut off a slice. "I beg your pardon, gentleman, "that is my bread." "I beg a thousand pardons, sir," replied Poet, "I quoted I took it for the first."

WE THINK THEY MAY.—May not "sweet children" of Hebrew parentage be appropriately called little Jew-bobs?

SWEET BREAD.—Loaf sugar.

A young Cambridge student once contended with Johnson, whom he met at Boswell's, that genuine poetry and good sense could not be combined in one piece. "I replied the Doctor; "a man may like brandy in his tea, though he can see in his bason." The student was then silenced and what she thought of Dr. Johnson. "I think," said he, "that he is the great bear of conversation—his diction is all contradiction."

OH!—May a large fee given to a physician be looked upon as a medical fund?

One of the fair daughters of Northampton was recently giving a little party at which a lady from Ireland, a fine Irishman, who was passing by, rushed in with a look of astonishment, and exclaimed, "Sure, and I thought some one was being murthered!"

A TOUGH QUESTION AND A LUCID ANSWER.

Question. If your mother's mother was my mother's sister, what relation would your great-grandfather's uncle's nephew be to my elder brother's first cousin's son-in-law?

Answer. As your mother's mother is to my elder brother's first cousin's son-in-law, so is your great-grandfather's uncle's nephew. Divide your mother by my elder brother's first cousin's son-in-law, and multiply my mother's sister's aunt by your great-grandfather's uncle's nephew's aunt's sister-in-law's cousin's aunt's sister—and you will have the answer—it is simple.

The Baptist Chronicle says: At an examination of girls for the rite of confirmation, in the Episcopal Church, in answer to the question, "What is the outward and visible sign and form in baptism?" the reply of a bright little damsel was, "Wet, sir; very wet, Sir!"

"WOMEN ARE GENTLEMAN SHIP A LADY!"—Certainly not; he would endeavor to persuade her.

A GHOST WE SHOULD LIKE EXCEEDINGLY TO SEE.—The Ghost of Crinoline.

KANSAS CITY is a gay place, and they have queer speakers at times in public meetings. The Journal, which we read the following from the Journal, about a woman of Wyandotte who was recently before the Provost Marshal: "She gave as an evidence of her loyalty that her husband had been killed in the Sixth Missouri and Sixth Illinois Regiment. 'When did your husband go to Illinois?' asked the Provost. 'He never went to Illinois the war, was it not?' 'Yes.' 'Why did you not go with him?' 'Well, I didn't like to go off so far with a man I wasn't much acquainted with.' 'You don't mean to say that your husband was so much of a coward that he would not like to go with him?' 'Yes, I do. I had only been married to him a few months when he went away to leave my folks and go off to Illinois with a man I didn't know more about.'" What could he do but discharge her?

A thief having stolen a cup from a tavern was pursued and a good mob was raised to apprehend him. A bystander was asked what was the matter. "Nothing," was the reply; "only a poor fellow has taken a cup too much."

A ONE-HORSE PEELER.—Why is Big Ben an hour after Big Bill like a whole regiment? Because he leaves.

A POST-TYPHOID CREATURE.—A stubborn cab.

The principal of a public school has been sending circulars to the parents, with a view to a written authority to "inflict such punishment, corporal or otherwise," as may in his judgment be proper. Some fellow has written to return that one of the priests, at least, was pleased with the plan. "Dear Sir,—Paying the bills for the boys is all I require, I hopes, as to my son John, you will flog him jus as often as you like, for he is a broth of a boy, but he has been in the habit of teaching him myself, it seems to me he will learn him nothink—its spoilin a illyshuble strugerly defficient. Wallop him well, Sur, and you will receive my hearty thanks. Yours respectfully, Pat Murphy." A reason for John being sich a bad scoller is that he's my nun by my wife's first husband."

People often make use of the expression, "where last year's snow is." After mature consideration we have come to the conclusion that it is somewhere.

A SERIOUS CONTRADICTION.—A suitable name for a man of no energy and feeble mind would be Mr. Percy Vere—Mr. Perceverc.

The Christian Advocate says: Meeting with a sick man the other day, we asked him how he was getting on. "I've got the measles." "Ah, indeed! And what are you taking for it?" "Oh, nothing but Cherry Pectoral." "The man had the asthma and was using Cherry Pectoral for it. Naturally he smelled cedar, and was hit upon happier words to tell the disease and the remedy.

A gentleman who took the occasion on Sabbath not to keep his eyes open during the sermon, was asked what he took by his good wife for laboring on the Sabbath. His reply was, "Why, Dearest, I believe I've been at work with the oil, for as he had been doing his best to refrain from doing so; "for," said he, "a joke in your mouth is no laughing matter."

Dr. Johnson was in company with a very loquacious lady, of whom he took but very little notice, and in pique she said to him, "Why, Doctor, I believe ye are at very fond of the company of ladies." "You are mistaken, Madam," he replied; "I like their delicacy, like their vivacity, and I like their silence."

NEW YE
NORTH

R'S DAY
SOUTH
64

VERY HARD CASH.

By CHARLES READE, ESQ.

AUTHOR OF "IT IS NEVER TOO LATE TO MEND," ETC.

CHAPTER LVI.

SERGEANT SAUNDERS thought it prudent to let the emotion subside before opening the defendant's case, so he disarranged his papers, and then rearranged them as before: and, during this, a person employed by Richard Hardie went out and told him this last untoward piece of evidence. He winced: but all was overbalanced by this, that Skinner's evidence was now inadmissible in the cause. He breathed more freely.

Sergeant Saunders rose with perfect dignity and confidence, and delivered a masterly address. In less than ten minutes the whole affair took another color under that plausible tongue. The faction began by declaring that the plaintiff was perfectly sane, and his convalescence was a matter of such joy to the defendant, that not even the cruel misinterpretation of facts and motives, to which his amiable client had been exposed, could rob him of that sacred delight. "Our case, gentlemen, is, that the plaintiff is sane, and that he owes his sanity to those prompt, wise, and benevolent measures, which no less eighteen months ago, at an unhappy crisis of his mind, to preserve his understanding and his property. Yes, his property, gentlemen; that property which, in a paroxysm of mania, he was going to throw away, as I shall show you by an unanswerable document. He comes here to slander you, gentlemen, of five thousand pounds; but I shall show you he is possessed of ten thousand pounds, the richer for that act of ours, for which he owes us five thousand pounds, instead of crediting us twice the sum. Gentlemen, I can not, like my learned friend, call witnesses from the shores of the United States, and from the grave, because it has not occurred to my client, strong in the sense of his kindly and honorable intentions, to engage gentlemen from foreign parts with woolly locks, and nasal twangs, to drop in accidentally, and eke out the fatal gaps in the case. The class of testimony we stand upon is less romantic: it does not seduce the imagination nor play upon the passions; but it is much higher in character for sober men's eyes, especially in a court of law. I rely, not on witnesses dropped from the clouds, and the skies, and the stripes—to order, nor even on the prejudiced statements of friends and sweet-hearts, who always swear from the heart rather than the head, but on the concise, cogent, but on the calm testimony of indifferent men, and on——tion documents furnished by the plaintiff, and on contemporaneous entries in the books of the asylum, which entries formally describe the plaintiff's acts, and were put down at the time—at the time, gentlemen—with no idea of a trial at law, to come, but in compliance with the very proper provisions of a wise and salutary Act. I shall call, by and by, before you the evidence of the medical witnesses who signed the certificates, men of probity and honor, and who have made those subtle maladies of the mind the special study of their whole life. I shall also call the family doctor, who has known the plaintiff and his infirmity, locally and mental, for many years, and communicated his suspicions to one of the first psychological physicians of the age, declining, with a modesty which we, who have less of insanity than he does, would do well to imitate—declining, I say, to pronounce a positive opinion in advance to the plaintiff, till he should have compared notes with this learned man, and profited by his vast experience."

In this strain he continued for a good hour, until the defendant's case seemed to be a thing of granite. His oration ended, he called a string of witnesses every one of whom bore the learned counsel out by his evidence in chief.

But here came the grand distinction between the defendant's case and the plaintiff's. Cross-examination had hardly shaken the plaintiff's witnesses: it literally dissolved the defendant's. Osmond was called, and proved Alfred's headaches and pallor, and his own suspicions. But then Colt forced him to admit that many young people had headaches without going mad, and were pale when thwarted in love, without going mad: and that as to the £14,000 on the phantom ha knew nothing, but had taken all that for granted on Mr. Richard Hardie's word.

Dr. Wycherley deposed to Alfred's being insane and abnormally irritable, and under a pecuniary illusion, as stated in his certificate: and to his own experience. But the fire of cross-examination melted all his polysyllables into guess-work and hearsay. It melted out of him that he, a stranger, had intruded on the young man's privacy, and had burst into a most delicate topic, his disagreement with his father, and he had himself created the very irritation he first discet down to madness. He also had to admit that he knew nothing about the £14,000 or the phantom, but had taken for granted the young man's own father, who consulted him, was not telling him a deliberate and wicked falsehood.

Colt.—I leave defendant's counsel to thank you for that. Come, never mind dignity; let us have a little truth. It is consistent with your dignity to tell us whether the keepers of private asylums pay you a commission for all the patients you consign to durance vile by your certificates?

Dr. Wycherley fenced with this question, but the remorseless Colt only forgi him longer under torture, and dragged out of him that he received fifteen per cent. from the asylum keepers for every patient he wrote insane; and that he had an income of eight hundred pounds a year from that source alone. This, of course, was the very thing to prejudice a jury against the defendant and Colt's art was to keep to their level.

Spency, cross-examined, failed to conceal that he was a mere tool of Wycherley's, and had signed in manifest collusion, adhering to the letter of the statute, but violating its spirit: for certainly, the act never intended by "separate examination," that two doctors should come into the patient's cell, walk in the one immediately then reunite, and do the signing as agreed before they ever saw the patient. As to the illusion about the thousand pounds, Spency frankly owned that the plaintiff had not uttered a word about the subject, but had peremptorily declined it. He had taken for granted, as he had taken for granted Dr. Wycherley was correctly informed about the said illusion.

"In short," said the judge, interposing, "Dr. Wycherley took the very thing for granted which it was his duty to ascertain: and you, Sir, not to be behind Dr. Wycherley, took the thing for granted at second-hand." And when Spency had left the box, he said to Sergeant Saunders, "If this case is to be tried seriously, you had better call Mr. Richard Hardie without further delay."

"It is my wish, my lud; but I am sorry to say he is in the country very ill; and I have no hope of seeing him here to-morrow."

"Oh, well; so that is settled at him. I shall not lay hearsay before the jury: hearsay gathered from Mr. Richard Hardie—whom you will call in person if the case goes on—is circulated have any basis whatever in truth."

Mr. Saunders said, coolly, "Mr. Richard Hardie is not dead, my lud," and flowed on: nor would any but a lawyer have suspected what a terrible stab the judge had given him so quietly.

The surgeon and Dr. Bolus gave their sworn, and produced the case book; and there stood the entries which had been so fatal to Alfred with the legal faculties. Suicide, homicide, self-starvation. But the plaintiff got to Mr. Colt with a piece of paper, on which he had written his view of all. The cross-examination dissolved the suicide and homicide into a spirited attempt to escape and resist a false imprisonment. In which he called it, by which the erotic monomaniac Alfred divested himself of all his money in favor of the Doctor. There was no disowning this dead away; and Crawford swore he had entreated the plaintiff not to insist on his drawing so unheard of a document; but opposition or remonstrance seemed to irritate his client so that he had complied, and the deed was to have been signed on the wedding-day.

All the learned counsel thought this looked really mad. Fancy a man signing away his property to his wife's relatives! Colt, in court, looked already a trifle worn by the usual time, broke up, leaving the defendant with this advantage. Alfred Hardie and Dr. Wycherley and Dodd. There in the hall outside, and talked excitedly over the incidents of the trial. Mr. Compton introduced Wallace and Verpoulet. They all shook hands with this, and thanked them warmly for the timely and most unexpected aid. But Green and the gymnastics broke in on the conversation. "I am down on Mr. Barkington, alias Noah Skinner. It isn't very far from here, if you will follow me." Compton was amazed as a fox-hound when Pug has begun to trail his brush; the more so that another client of his wanted Noah Skinner, and as the detective was doing a double stroke of business. He led the way; it was dry, and they all went in pairs after him into the back shops of Westminster: and a pretty part that is.

Now as they went along Alfred hung behind with Julia, and asked her what on earth she meant by playing a part that set every lawyer her and him. "Why, your last letter was full of love, dearest; what could you be thinking of to say that?"

She shook her head sadly, and revealed to him, with many prayers for forgiveness, that she had been playing a part for days: that she had concealed her father's death from him, and the fatal barrier interposed. "I was afraid you would be dishonorable, and lose your first chance, and perhaps your trial. But you are safe now, dear Alfred; I am sure the judge sees through them; for I have asked him for you. I know his face by heart, and all his looks and what they mean. My Alfred will be cleared of this wicked slander, and happy with some one—Ah!"

"Yes, I mean to be happy with some one," said Alfred. "I am not one of your self-sacrificing fools. You shall not sacrifice me to your mother's injustice nor to the caprices of fate. We love one another; but you would immolate me for the pleasure of immolating yourself. Don't provoke me, or I'll carry you off by force. I swear it, by Him who made us both."

"Dearest, how wildly you talk." She hung her head, and had a guilty thrill. She could not help thinking that eccentric little measure would relieve her of the sin of disobedience.

"I'll do it too," said he. "I'm not a man to be beat."

After uttering this doughty resolution he was quite silent, and they went sadly side by side; so dear, so near, yet always some infernal thing or other coming between them. They reached a passage in a miserable street. At the mouth stood two of Green's men, planted there to follow Skinner should he go out: but they reported all quiet. "Bring the old gentleman up," said Green. "I appointed him six o'clock, and it's on the stroke." He then descended the passage, and striking a light led the way up a high stair. Skinner lived on the fifth story. Green tapped at his door. "Mr. Barkington."

No reply.

"Mr. Barkington, I've brought you some money."

No reply.

"Perhaps he is not at home," said Mr. Compton.

"Oh yes, Sir, I sent a sharp boy up, and he picked the paper out of the keyhole and saw him sitting reading."

He then applied his own eye to the keyhole. "I see something black," said he, "I think he suspects."

While he hesitated, they became conscious of a pungent vapor stealing through the now open keyhole.

"Hallo!" said Green, "What is this?"

Fillalove observed coolly that Mr. Skinner's lungs must be peculiarly strong could breathe in that atmosphere. "If you want to see him alive, let me open the door."

"There's something amiss here," said Green, gravely.

At that Fillalove whipped out a tool no bigger than a pen-cracker, inserted the edge in, and set the door flying open. The room or den was full of an acrid vapor, and close to them sat he they sought miserably dead.

"Keep the lady back," cried Green, and threw the vivid light of his bull's-eye on a strange, grotesque, and pitiful scene. The floor was covered with bright sovereigns that glittered in the lamp-light. On the table was an open book, and a candle quite burned down: the grease had run into a circle.

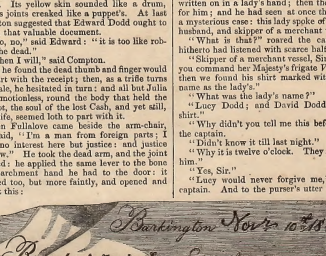
And as was that grease to the expired light, so was the thing that sat there in human form to the Noah Skinner they had come to seek. Dead this many a day of charcoal fumes, but preserved from decomposition by those very fumes, sat Noah Skinner, dried into bones and leather, waiting for them with his own Hard Cash, and with theirs: for, creeping saw-struck round that mummified figure seated dead on his pool of sovereigns, they soon noticed in his left hand a paper: it was discolored by the vapor, and part hid by the dead thumb; but thus much shone out clear and amazing, that it was a banknote receipt to David Dodd, Esq., for £14,000, drawn at Barkington, and signed for Richard Hardie by Noah Skinner. Julia had drawn back, and was hiding her face; but some curiosity struggled with awe in the others: they peeped at the Receipt; they touched the weird thing; it was not unlike a phantom of the brain, and its joints creaked like a puppet's. At last Compton suggested that Edward Dodd ought to have that valuable document.

"No, no," said Edward: "it is too like robbing the dead."

"Then I will," said Compton.

But he found the dead thumb and finger would not part with the receipt; then, as a trifle turns the scale, he hesitated in turn: and all but Julia stood motionless, round the body that held the Receipt, the soul of the lost Cash, and yet still, in its life, seemed loth to part with it.

Then Fillalove came beside the arm-chair, and said, "I'm a man from foreign parts: I have no interest here but justice: and justice I'll dew." He took the dead arm, and the joint creaked: he applied the same lever to the bone that had creaked: had he had to the door it creaked too, but more faintly, and opened and let out this:



A stately foot came up the stair, but no one heard it. All were absorbed in the strange weird sight, and this great stroke of fate; or of Providence.

"This is yours, I reckon," said Fillalove, and handed it to Edward.

"No, no!" said Compton. "See: I've just found a will, bequeathing all he has in the world with his blessing, to Miss Julia Dodd. These sovereigns are yours, then. But above all, the paper: as your legal adviser, I insist on your taking it immediately. Possession is nine points. However, it is actually yours, in virtue of this bequest."

A solemn, passionless voice seemed to fall on them from the doorway.

"NO; IT IS MINE."

CHAPTER LVII.

JUST before noon next day, on board the Fulvare, the bell on which the half hours are struck was tolled slowly to collect the ship's company; and soon the gangways and booms were crowded, and even the yards were manned with sailors, collected to see their shipmate committed to the deep. Next came the lieutenants and midshipmen and stood reverently on the deck: the body was brought and placed on a grating. Then, all heads being uncovered below and aloft, the chaplain in the solemn words read the dead.

Many tears were shed by the rough sailors, the more so that to most of them, though not to the officers, it was now known that poor Billy had not always been before the mast, but had seen better days, and commanded vessels, and owned lives; and now he had lost his own.

The service is the same as ashore, with this exception: that the words "We commit his body to the ground, ashes to ashes, dust to dust," etc., are altered at sea, thus: "We commit his body to the deep, to be turned into corruption, looking for the resurrection of the body, when the sea shall give up her dead, and the life of the world to come." At these words the body is allowed to glide off the grating into the sea. The chaplain's solemn voice drew near those very words, and the tears of pity fell faster; and George White, an affectionate boy, sobbed violently, and shivered beforehand at the sullen plunge that he knew would soon come, and then he should see no more poor Billy, and grieve in his life for his.

At this moment the captain came flying on deck, and, jumping on to a gun, cried sharply,

"Avast! Haul that body aboard."

The sharp voice of command cut across the solemn words in a most startling way. The chaplain closed his book with a look of amazement and indignation as the sailors stared, and for the first time did not obey at once. To be sure it was one they had never heard before. Then the captain got angry, and repeated his command louder; and the body was almost jerked in board.

"Carry him to my cabin, and uncover his face."

By this time nothing could surprise Jackey Tar. Four sailors executed the order promptly.

"Boom, pipe to duty."

While the men were dispersing to their several stations, Captain Bazalgette apologized to the chaplain, and explained to him and to the officers. But I give his explanation in my own words. Finding the ship quiet, the purser went to the captain down below, and asked him coolly what entry he should make in the ship's books about the William Thompson, who was no more William Thompson than he was. "What do you mean?" said the captain. Then the purser told him that Thompson's messenger, in presenting his last night for interment, had found a little bag round his neck, and inside it a medal of the Humane Society, and a slip of paper written on a lady's hand: then they had sent for him; and he had seen at once that this was a mysterious case: this lady spoke of him as her husband, and a shipper of a merchant vessel.

"What is that?" roared the captain, who hitherto had listened with scarce half an ear.

"Shipper of a merchant vessel, Sir, as sure as you command her Majesty's frigate Vulture: and then we found his shirt marked with the same name as he is lady's."

"What was the lady's name?"

"Lucy Dodd; and David Dodd is on the shirt."

"Why didn't you tell me this before?" cried the captain.

"Didn't know it till last night."

"Why it is twelve o'clock. They are burying him."

"Yes, Sir."

"Lucy would never forgive me," cried the captain. And to the purser's utter amazement he clapped on his cocked hat, and flew out of the cabin on the errand I have described.

He now descended to the cabin and looked: he cannot see enough to know the kindly face that had been his friend man and boy.

He hid his own with his hands, and moaned. He cursed his own blindness and stupidity in not recognizing that face among a thousand. In this he was unjust to himself. David had never looked himself till now.

He sent for the surgeon, and told him the whole and story: and asked him what could be done. His poor cousin Lucy had more than once expressed her horror of interment at sea. "It is very hot," said he; "but surely you must know some way of keeping him till we land in New Zealand: curse these flies; how they bite!"

The surgeon's eyes sparkled; he happened to be an enthusiast in the art of embalming. "Keep him to New Zealand?" said he contemptuously. "I'll embalm him so that he shall go to England looking just as he does now—by-the-by, I never saw a drowned man keep his color so well before; and that two thousand years after that, if you don't mind the expense."

"The expense! I don't care if it cost me a year's pay. I think of nothing but repairing my blunder as far as I can."

The surgeon was delighted. Standing over his subject, who lay on the captain's table, he told that officer how he should proceed. "I'll have all the syringes," he said; "a capital collection. I shall inject the veins with care and patience; then I shall remove the brain and the viscera, and provided I'm not stinted in arsenic and spices—"

"I give you carte blanche on the purser: make your preparations and send for him. Don't tell me how you do it; but do it. I must write and tell poor Lucy I have got him, and am bringing him home to be—buried."

The surgeon was gone about a quarter of an hour; he then returned with two men to remove the body, and found the captain still writing his letter, very sorrowful: but now and then slapping his face or leg with a hearty curse as the flies stung him.

The surgeon beckoned the men in softly, and pointed to the body, for them to carry it out.

Now, as he guided, his eye, following his finger, fell on something that struck that experienced eye as incredible: he uttered an exclamation of astonishment so loud that the captain looked up directly from his letter; and saw him standing with his finger pointing at the corpse, and a look of astonishment written on his face.

"Look! look! look!" said the surgeon.

The captain came and looked, and said, he saw not: ing at all.

"The fly; the fly!" cried the surgeon.

"Yes, I see a fly some of them has been biting him; for that's a little blood trickling. Poor fellow!"

"A dead man can't bleed from the small veins in his skin," said the man of art. "He is alive, captain, he is alive, as sure as we stand here, and God's alive! That little blood must have risen than us; he is alive."

"Jackson, don't trifle with me, or I'll hang you on the yard-arm. God bless you, Jackson! Is it really possible? Run some of you; get a mirror; I have heard that's a test."

"Mirror be hanged. Doctor Fly knows his business."

All was now flutter and bustle; and various attempts were made to resuscitate David, but all in vain. At last the surgeon had an idea. "This man was never drowned at all," said he; "he was stripped, and carried to a place where they could turn a water-cock on him from a height; and the surgeon had soon the happiness of restoring out to the captain a slight blush on David's skin in parts, caused by the flies' bites. A doubt ceased with this: the only fear was lest they should shake out the trembling life by rough usage. They laid him on his stomach, and with a bellows and pipe so acted on the lungs that at last a genuine sigh issued from the patient's breast. Then they put him in a warm bed, and applied stimulants; and by slow degrees the eyelids began to wink, the eyes to look more mellow, the respiration to strengthen, the heart to beat: "I forgive, now," said the surgeon, "patience, and lots of air."

Patience was rewarded. Just four hours after the first movement, a voice, faint but calm and genial, issued from the bed on their astonished ears. "Good-morning to you all."

They kept quiet. In about five minutes more the voice broke out again, calm and sonorous.

"WHERE IS MY MONEY? MY FOURTEEN THOUSAND POUNDS."

These words set them all looking at one another; and very much puzzled the surgeon: they were delivered with such sobriety and conviction. "I am here," he whispered, "ask him if he knows you."

"David," said the captain, kindly, "do you know me?"

David looked at him earnestly, and his old kindly smile broke out, "Know ye, ye dog," said he, "why you are my cousin Reginald. And how came you into this thundering Bank? I hope you have got no money here. Ware land sharks!"

"We are not in a Bank, David; we are on board my ship."

"The more we are. But where's my money?"

"Oh, we'll talk about that by-and-by."

The surgeon stepped forward and said, soothingly, "You have been very ill, Sir. You have had a fit."

"I certainly have not."

"Certainly, Sir."

The surgeon examined David's eye with his thumb and finger; and then looked into it to see how the pupil dilated and contracted.

He rubbed his hands after this examination. "More good news, captain!" then lowering his voice, "Your friend is as sane as I am."

The surgeon was right. A shock had brought back the reason a shock had taken away. But how or why I know no more than the child unborn. The surgeon wrote a learned paper, and explained the whole most ingeniously. I don't believe one word of his explanation, and can't better it, so confine myself to the phenomena. Being now sane, the boundary wall of his memory was shifted. He remembered his whole life up to his demanding his cash back of Richard Hardie; and there his reawakened mind stopped dead short. Being asked if he knew William Thompson, he said, "Yes, perfectly. The man was a foretopman on board the Argus, and rather a smart hand. The ship being aground, he came out to sea on a piano: but we cut the hawser and he got safe ashore." His recovered reason rejected with contempt as an idle dream all that had happened while that reason was in defect. The last phenomena I have to record were bodily: one was noted by Mr. George Wyatt Rede, the surgeon: "Billy's eyes used to be White in these terms: Billy's eyes used to be like a nut's: but now he is a person gentleman they are like yours and mine." The other was more singular: with his recovered reason came his first gray hair, and in the one fortnight it was all as white as snow."

He remained a fortnight on board the Vulture, beloved by high and low. He walked the quarter-deck in the dress of a private gentleman, but looking like an admiral. The sailors touched their hats to him with a strange mixture of veneration and jocoseness. They called him among themselves Admiral Billy. He was supplied with funds by Reginald, and put on board a merchant-ship bound for England. He landed, and went straight to Richard Hardie's, and found the family were in London. He came back to London, and sought them; a friend told him of Jessie's death. He then went down Green saw directly who he was. But able men don't cut business short; he gravely accepted David's compliments, and left him to Dodd. Finding him so confident David asked him if he thought he could find Richard Hardie, or his uncle, Nick Hardie, and was answered in the affirmative by Green, who was on a hot scent as to Skinner, demurely accepted both commissions, and appointed David to meet him at a certain place at six.

He came; he found Green's man, who took him up a coach, and then over a crowded group determining the ownership of the receipt.

Now to David that receipt was a thing of yesterday: "I'll be even with Billy." He all turned to look at this man, with sober, passionless voice, and hair of snow. A keen cry from Julia's heart awoke every heart there, and in a moment she was clinging and sobbing on her father's neck. Eldred could only get his hand and press calm. Then the whole world Heaven had given them their father back mind and all.

Ere the joy and the emotion had calmed themselves, Alfred Hardie stepped out and ran like a deer to Berrobie Street.

Those who had so strangely reunited could not part for a long time, even to go down the stairs one by one.

David was the first to recover his composure: indeed, great tranquility of spirit had ever since his cure been a remarkable characteristic of this man's nature. He had suffered intensely, but have burnt out all his impetuosity, leaving him singularly sober, calm, and self-governed.

Mr. Compton's name occurred in the will, and promised the executrix Skinner should be decently interred and all his debts paid out of the estate. This was done by the next day.

And now a happy party wended their way toward Penbroke Street.

But Alfred Hardie overboard with them: he went boldly up the stairs, and actually surprised Mrs. Dodd and Sampson together.

As sight of him was to make him a low courtesy, and beat a retreat. He whipped to the door, and set his back against it. "No," said he, smartly.

She drew back astonished, and the color mounted in her pale face. "What, Sir, would you detain me here?"

"And no mistake," said the audacious boy. "How else can I detain you? when you hate me so?" Then he explained to both the startling eyes to see the reason of this strange conduct.

"Cway from the door, ye vagabin," said Sampson.

"No, no, my friend," said Mrs. Dodd, trembling, and still peering into his sparkling eyes. "Mr. Alfred Hardie is a gentleman, and events he would not take this liberty with me, unless he had some excuse for it."

"You are wonderfully shrewd, mamma," said Alfred, admiringly. "The excuse is I don't hate you as you hate me; and I am very happy."

"Why do you call me mamma to-day? Oh doctor, he calls me mamma."

"It's audacious vagabin."

"No, no, my friend; you think he would call me that unless he had some good news for us both."

"What good news can be have, except that his trial is going well, and you don't care for that."

"Oh, how can you say so? I care for all that concerns him: he would not come here to insult my misery with his happiness. He is noble, he is generous, with all his faults. How dare you call me mamma if you don't? Call it me again, my dear child: because then I shall know you are come to save my heart from breaking." And with this, the truth must be told, the stately Mrs. Dodd did fawn upon Alfred with palms outstretched and piteous eyes, and all the cajoleries of her sex.

"Give me a kiss then, mamma," said the impudent boy, "and I will tell you a little bit of good news."

She paid the required tribute with servile humility and coolness.

"Well, then," said Alfred, and was just going to tell her all, but caught sight of Sampson making the most expressive pantomime to him to be cautious. "Well," said he, "I have seen a sailor."

"Ah!"

"And he is sure Mr. Dodd is alive."

Mrs. Dodd lifted her hands to heaven, but could not speak. "In fact," said Alfred, hesitating (for he was a wretched hand at a fib), "he saw him not a fortnight ago on board ship. But that is not all, mamma, the sailor says he has his reason."

Mrs. Dodd sank on her knees, and said no word to man, but many to the Giver of all good. "When she arose she said to Alfred: "Bring this sailor to me. I must speak with him directly."

Alfred colored. "I don't know where to find him just now."

"Oh, indeed," said Mrs. Dodd, quietly: and this excited her suspicion: and from that moment she had a strong measure by in wait for Master Alfred. She plied him with questions, and he got more and more puzzled how to sustain his story. At last, by way of buttressing up his own net, he said, "But I am sorry to say his hair has turned white. But perhaps you won't mind that."

"And he hadn't a gray hair."

"It is not gray, like the doctor's; it is white as the driven snow."

Mrs. Dodd sighed; then suddenly turning on Alfred, asked him, "Did the sailor tell you that?"

He hesitated a moment and was lost.

"You have seen him," she screamed: "he is in London: he is in the house. I feel him even on me:" and she went into something very like hysterics. Alfred was alarmed, and whispered the truth. The sailor was waiting to meet them, and recommended caution: her nerves were in such a state a violent shock, even of happiness, might kill her.

This warned, Julia came into the room alone, and while Dr. Sampson was inculcating self-control, Mrs. Dodd's face darkened with superior smile, and took quite a different line. "Mamma," said she, "he is in the town: but I have not heard of him. He is not composed. But his reason is restored; but his nerves are not so strong as they were; now, if you agitate yourself you will agitate him, and will do him a serious mischief."

This crafty speech produced an incredible effect on Mrs. Dodd. She sat down directly: or rather, her great love gave her strength to be calm. "I will not be such a wretch," she said. "See I am composed. Bring me my darling, and you shall see how good I will be: there now, Julia, see how calm I am, and how calm I will be. Oh, my child, my misery, with Heaven's help, and do you think I can not bear this great happiness, for my dear darling's sake?"

On this they proposed she should retire to her room, and th'y would go for David.

"Think on, my dear, dear, dear mamma," said Julia, "and then you will behave well for his sake, who was lost to us and is found."

It found its way into the Mrs. Dodd's room. No eye, even of the children, ventured to witness a scene so strange, so sacred. We are not in the habit of intruding; but few of us can conceive it by the light of our narrow experience. Yet one or two there may be; the rest will forgive us for the adventures and emotions of our race so many.

One by one all were had up to that sacred room but Mr. Dodd's pair. They took David seated calmly at his wife's feet, her soft hand laid on his white hair, lest he should leave her again. He told them all the sorrow he had hind them; and he, genial and kindly as ever, told them all the happiness before them. He would go with Reginald to the house, the father of the family, the friend of them all.

But with all his goodness he was sternly resolved to have the whole case of Richard Hardie. He had an interview with Mr. Compton that very night, and the lawyer went a letter to Richard Hardie, telling him about the death of Skinner, but saying that his client, Captain Dodd, had recovered from Noah Skinner the receipt No. 1 for the £14,000 and £, and he was instructed to sue for it unless repaid immediately. He added Captain Dodd was mercifully relieved, and only desired distinctly every particular of the transaction.

SAILING IN THE AIR.

IF we may believe the poets and fabulists, the idea of sailing in the air is no new one. Every school-boy knows the story of Daedalus and his son Icarus, and of the wings of feathers stuck together by wax, with which they attempted to fly over-sea from Crete to Sicily. These, it is said, proved well enough for the use of Icarus, who, for taking an upward flight he approached so near the sun that the wax melted, the wings came apart, and the son fell into the sea and was drowned, while the father, keeping nearer the earth, made good his flight. The story is a fable, upon the explanation of which many learned commentaries have been written. But sometime in the eleventh century Oliver de Malmerburg, an English Benedictine, undertook to play the part of Daedalus. He fitted himself with a pair of wings with which he flew a hundred yards, but came down breaking his thigh. "This accident would certainly not have happened," he said, "if I had only thought of putting on a tail." However, he did not try the experiment again, with or without a tail. Towards the close of the eleventh century Jean-Baptiste Dante, a French mathematician, tried the same thing with the same result—a broken leg. About the time of the Restoration the Marquis de Bacqueville fixed wings to his legs and arms, and launched himself from the balcony of his hotel, situated on the quay at Paris, intending to fly to the Tuileries. He came down upon a washer-woman's boat in the river, and also broke his leg. So much for wings fixed to the body.

Meanwhile another kind of aerial apparatus had been invented by Besnier, a French shoemaker. It consisted of a couple of poles, with a frame-work covered with silk at each end; these were strapped to the shoulders, and moved up and down by the hands and feet. The Journal des Savants, for 1678, relates that he went above the roofs of the houses, but says nothing of the sad fall which he got.

In 1772 the Abbé Desforges made an aerial machine, consisting of a boat with wings hinged to the sides and moved by a crank. On the day of trial the hinged arms broke crank, the wings flapped vigorously, but the boat would not budge. It remained immovable on the top of the tower where the experiment was performed.

In 1777 the brothers Joseph and Etienne Montgolfier, of Annoney, in France, having read Priestley's work on "Different Species of Air," conceived the idea of sailing in the air. They made a balloon of paper, which was inflated by a fire lighted within, which rarefied the air in the balloon, making it specifically lighter than the surrounding atmosphere. The first ascension was made about the close of the year 1783. The balloon carried up Pilatre de Rosiers and the Marquis d'Arlande, who thus made the whole circuit of Paris. On the 1st of December following the art of aerostation was fairly created. M. Charles, a clever physician, in company with one of the brothers Robert, went up in a balloon of silk, coated with gum, and inflated with hydrogen gas. They reached a height of some 15,000 feet, descending several times during the voyage. The descents and ascents were accomplished by letting off gas and throwing over ballast.

The balloon invented by Montgolfier, and improved by Charles, having given the power of ascent and descent, men began to hope that means could be contrived for directing the passage through the air. Ours were the first trials. On the 2d of March, 1784, Blanchard went up in a car suspended from a balloon, furnished with oars and rudder, and was seen rowing backward and forward. He boasted that he had sailed against the wind; but it was demonstrated that he had only availed himself of different currents at various elevations. Sundry other experiments to the same purpose are on record. Among these was that of Alban (shown in Figure 1). His balloon consisted of a number of rotary oars, not unlike the sails of a wind-mill. This revolved slowly in calm weather. However, the French Academy pronounced the idea impracticable, and ceased its experiments.

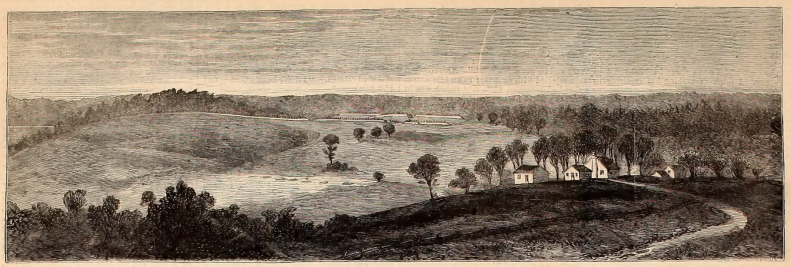
We come to the system which are now actually proposed. First is that of Mr. Henin's (Figure 2). This consists of four balloons mounted on a large platform. The latter has near its centre a "reversing" shutter, so as to offer more or less resistance to the ascent. Sails and "screws" are the means of propulsion. The former are to be elongated sails.—Mr. Henin's "reversed parachute" (Figure 3) has only sails fixed to the balloon and car. The parachute below the car is depressed to create the idea of ascent, and to aid the action of the wind upon the sails, which are managed as on a vessel—on the system of Mr. Wells (Figure 4), the combination of "fans" and "screws," moved by a couple of men below the car.

M. Julien and Sanson have given up the spherical form of the balloon as presenting too large a surface, and offering too great resistance to the wind, and have adopted one (Figure 5) as elongated as something like that of a fish. In Julien's balloon the "screws" are placed not under the car, but at the centre of resistance, beneath the balloon. A little balloon of this kind, in which the "screws" were moved by clock-work, was put in operation at the Hippodrome some years ago. It moved against the wind, and seemed to demonstrate that the fish-form was the one for aerial navigation; and many competent judges thought that with adequate motive power Julien would be able to overcome the currents of the atmosphere. Jarcot's system (Figure 6) has not, we believe, been practically tried. M. Teisel's project of a balloon drawn by birds (Figure 7) is ingenious. If it succeeds, we shall be happy to record the fact. M. Meresquin has projected a "captive-balloon" (Figure 8), the object of which is to give timid persons the advantage of an air voyage. This is to be moved by a locomotive on land. Who knows whether this may not turn out a profitable speculation in somebody's hands?

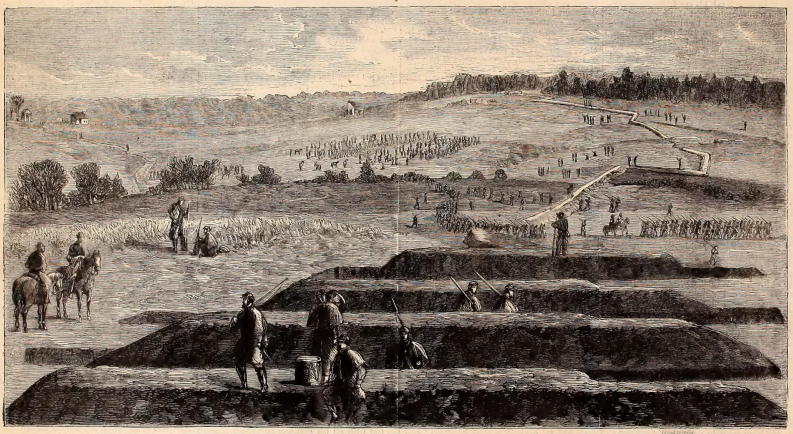
M. Le Verrière de Ponton d'Amecourt, finding in the great surface of a balloon the chief obstacle to aerial navigation, has propounded a system of which M. Nadar is the exponent. His design (Figure 9) stands at the head of our picture. Nadar's "Helicoptère" is composed of two screws placed horizontally on a vertical axis. When revolving, the wings strike the air obliquely, and send the machine up. For steering there is the third screw placed horizontally, with the axis perhaps oblique to those of the vertical screws. The motive power is furnished by a steam-engine specially designed for the purpose. M. Nadar, in order to raise funds to try this system practically, is now making the tour of Europe with his monster-balloon. If he raises the funds, we shall be glad to hear he raises the machine, we shall be more than delighted.

ARMY OF THE CUMBERLAND.

PAGE 4 contains an illustration from a drawing by our correspondent, who was an eye-witness of the affair, of GENERAL BAIRD'S DIVISION CAPTURING THE REBEL GUNS AT MISSIONARY RIDGE. Our artist writes that "the twilight was just perceptible as this gallant division gained the crest, Baird's right joining Wood's left. The ridge is steep, and was only carried by the most determined gallantry. After gaining the crest the division swept to the left, where the fight lasted till long after dark, the rebels making desperate but unavailing efforts to carry off their guns."



THE ARMY OF THE POTOMAC AT MINE RUN—REBEL LINE IN FRONT OF GENERAL SEDGWICK.

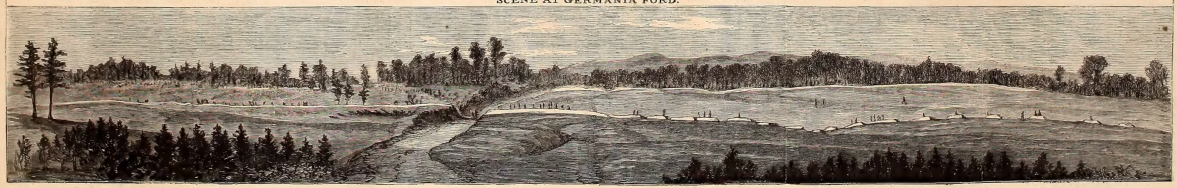


THE ARMY OF THE POTOMAC AT MINE RUN—REBEL EARTH-WORKS COMMANDING THE PASSAGE AT GERMANIA FORD.

THE ARMY OF THE POTOMAC AT MINE RUN—GENERAL WARREN'S TROOPS ATTACKING.—SKETCHED BY A. R. WAUD.—[SEE PAGE 7.]

THE REBEL POSITION AT MINE RUN.

SCENE AT GERMANIA FORD.



THE ARMY OF THE POTOMAC—REBEL LINE AT MINE RUN, OPPOSITE GENERAL WARREN'S LAST POSITION.—SKETCHED BY A. R. WAUD.—[SEE PAGE 7.]

ADVERTISEMENTS.

MORTON'S GOLD PENS are now sold at the same prices as before the commencement of the war; this is entirely owing to the Manufacturer's improvements in machinery. He presents large Retail Business and Cash-in-Advance System; for, until he commenced advertising, his business was done on Credit and strictly with the Trade.

The Morton Gold Pens are the only ones sold at old prices, as the makers of all other gold pens charge the Premium on the Gold, Government Tax, &c.; but Morton has in no case changed his prices, Wholesale or Retail.

Of the great numbers sent by mail to all parts of the world during the past few years, not one in a thousand has failed to give satisfaction in safety; showing that the Morton Gold Pen can be obtained by any one, in every part of the world, at the same price, postage only excepted.

Reader, you have an enduring, always ready and reliable Gold Pen, exactly adapted to your hand and style of writing, which will do your writing vastly cheaper than Steel Pens; and at the present rates of Gold and Steel Pressure Price of everything, you can have a Morton Gold Pen cheaper, in proportion to the labor spent upon it and material used, than any other Gold Pen in the World. If you want one, see "The Pen is Mightier than the Sword," in next column.

Bartlett's Burnished Needles.

"Incomparably well tried them a wonderful improvement over others for HAND or MACHINE SEWING. They possess a peculiar eye and form."—Mrs. DINSMORE.

Bartlett's Needle Factory, 440 Broadway, N.Y.

☞ Bartlett Needles for all the Sewing Machines. ☜

☞ HAND SEWING. ☜

Crotchet, Knitting, Sail, Packs, Mattress, Gilt, Hackle Pins, &c. Try sample. 150 for 25 c. Any size by mail anywhere.

The Deringer Pistol.

TIFFANY & CO.,

550 and 552 Broadway New York.

SOLE AGENTS FOR NEW YORK AND THE EASTERN STATES.

By a recent arrangement with MR. DERINGER, the subscribers have undertaken the exclusive agency, for New York and New England, of the well-known pistol of which he is the inventor and only manufacturer. They propose keeping constantly in store a full assortment, containing all sizes and finishes of this unique Pistol, and will be at all times able to fill Trade Orders with promptness and dispatch. The arrangement has become necessary on the part of MR. DERINGER, in order to prevent the entrance from spurious articles assuming to be his wares, and that purchaser only, wholesale or retail, will be able to appreciate this fact. TIFFANY & CO.

American Watches

For Soldiers

AT REDUCED PRICES.

American Watches for Americans!

THE AMERICAN WATCH COMPANY give notice that they have lately issued a new style of Watch, expressly designed for Soldiers and others who desire a good and reliable time-keeper, and in Sterling Silver Cases, Hunting pattern, at nearly as low a price as is asked for the fancy-named and highly-plated Watches of make, already offered to.

We have named the new series of Watches, WM. ELLERY, Boston, MASS., which name will be found on the plate of every watch of this manufacture, and is one of our trade-marks.

Sold by all respectable watch dealers in the loyal states. Wholesale orders should be addressed to

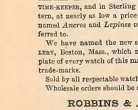
ROBBINS & APPLETON,

Agents of the American Watch Company,

182 BROADWAY, N. Y.

Cavalry and Artillery.

Solid Silver, $1 25. Solid Silver, $1 25



Solid 18 k. Gold, $5 00. Solid 18 k. Gold, $5 00.

Sent by mail on receipt of Price. Also all kinds Corps, Co., and Divine Pins, engraved to order, by the single one, 15c., 25c., and sent to any part of the country. Terms cash in advance. Send for a circular. Address

BROWNE & MOORE,

Manufacturing Jewelers, 169 Broadway, New York.

Opera and Field-Glasses

Of great power, from $2 50 to $25. Spectacles and Eye Glasses. Also HOLMES' Compass in Great Variety. R. H. HOPKINS, Manufacturing Optician, No. 212 Broadway, up stairs. Send for Circular.

DREAMS—Their Significance, Space, and Time Annihilated, Poetry and Music in Sleep, Horrid Dreams, and Happy Dreams—are Dreams Phrophetic? Read PHRENOLOGY; or, the Science of the Soul, for Jan. Double No. PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL. Only 15 cts. —or $1 50 a year. Address FOWLER & WELLS, 308 Broadway, N. Y.

H. A. HARVEY, 84 Maiden Lane, N.Y., TWINES, Ropes, CANVAS, and Yarn. Manila Rope, Wire CARPET WARP, Fish Lines, Blocking Cord, Loom Lord, and Jute Twine. Writing and Wrapping PAPER Envelopes, and Paper Bags.

"THE PEN IS MIGHTIER THAN THE SWORD."

THE GOLD PEN—THE BEST OF ALL PENS,

MORTON'S GOLD PENS,

THE BEST PENS IN THE WORLD.

On receipt of any of the following sums in Cash, the Subscriber will send by return mail, or otherwise as directed, a Gold Pen or Pens—selecting the same according to description, viz.:

GOLD PENS WITHOUT CASES.

For 25 cents, the Magic Pen; for 38 cents, the Lucky Pen; for 50 cents, the Ever-ready Pen; for 75 cents, the Elegant Pen; and for $1, the Excelsior Pen.—These Pens are not numbered, but designed to meet numbers 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 respectively.

THE SAME PENS IN SILVER-PLATED EXTENSION CASES, WITH PENCILS.

For 50 cents, the Magic Pen; for 63 cents, the Lucky Pen; for $1, the Always-Ready Pen; for $1 25, the Elegant Pen; and for $1 50, the Excelsior Pen.

These are Well-Finished, Good-Writing Gold Pens, with Iridosmin Points, the average wear of every one of which beyond all proportion to its cost.  Hint's Journal of Health.

 I have tried the Apparatus, and my wife and I proclaim the same a most valuable and indispensable article, and we now wonder how we could have got so long done without it.  Editor Coal Oil Circular.

 An economical contrivance for getting up heat at short notice for literary and general household purposes.  one important point is the saving in cost over coal fires.  N. Y. Evening Post.

PRICES, FROM TWO TO SIX DOLLARS.

CAPACITY FROM ONE TO FOUR QUARTS.

THREE ARTICLES COOKED AT ONE TIME WITH ONE BURNER.

Arranged for Kerosene or Coal Oil or Gas.

A Descriptive Pamphlet of thirty pages furnished gratis. H. L. RUSSELL, AGENT,

AGENTS WANTED. 200 Pearl Street, N. Y.

A BEAUTIFUL, USEFUL, AND PERFECTLY PRACTICAL THE PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL AND LIFE ILLUSTRATED, for 1864. Published the first of each month, at $1 50 a year. This year's Vol. contained more than 300 engraved illustrations, and is one of the most entertaining works ever published. Order it a year, for your nearest, dearest, and most valued friend. Sent regularly to any address, by FOWLER & WELLS, No. 308 Broadway, N. Y.

10 for One Dollar.

The Finest Portraits

At the Lowest Price.

Card Photographs of

Presidents Lincoln and each of his Cabinet—Senators—Statesmen—all the Major-Generals of our country. All other noted officers of our Army and Navy, living and dead.

Eminent Men of all Ages.

AUTHORS, ARTISTS,

ACTORS, ACTRESSES,

and all prominent persons, male and female.

Fancy and Humorous Pictures, &c., &c.

Send your orders to the

O. and Gift-Book Store, for all Pictures or Albums, and they will be sent free per return of mail, Ten for $1; Single Copies 15 cents.

Address

G. G. EVANS, Publisher,

Philadelphia, Penn.

N. B. A Classified Catalogue of over 2000 different books, especially adapted to Army and Navy reading, sent on receipt of Five Cents. SEND FOR IT. Frequently correspondence of my new enterprise of Watches, Jewelry, Vest Chains, &c., &c., sent on receipt of Two Cents.

Sportsmen, Tourists, and Army and Navy Officers.

Powerful and Brilliant Double Glasses.

Beautifully combined with great power in Hotels, Marine, Theatre, Opera, and general out-door day and night double perspective glasses, will show distinctly a person to know him at from 2 to 6 miles. Spectacles of the greatest transparent power to assist and improve the sight, without the distressing result of frequent change. Catalogues sent by enclosing stamp.

SEMMONDS, Oculists—Optician,

609½ Broadway, New York.

Cloaks and Mantillas.

BRODIE,

The Leader of Fashions!

Opened his Fall Stock on Thursday, 9th inst.,

And as usual stands unrivaled for Style, Quality, AND VARIETY.

300 Canal Street, New York.

STERLING GOODS FOR THE HOLIDAYS

(And all time).

Gold and Silver Watches,

And fine Gold Jewelry of every description. Staple Goods for the Holidays, and Lasting Tokens,

AT LOW PRICES.

T. B. HYNDS, Importer and Dealer in Watches and Jewelry, No. 175 BROADWAY, N. Y. UP STAIRS.

"TIP TOP."—THE JAN. PICTORIAL DOUBLE NUMBER, PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL is the best ever issued. It has FORTY PORTRAITS, and other Engravings, including MAJ.-GEN'L BANKS, LORD LYNDHURST, and many MASTERLY WORKS. Only 15 cts. Or $1 50 a year. New Vol. FOWLER & WELLS, N. Y.

STERLING'S AMBROSIA

DR. STERLING'S AMBROSIA is a stimulating and healthy extract of roots, barks, and herbs. It will cure all diseases of the scalp and falling of the hair; it entirely eradicates dandruff, and prevents the hair from falling out or from turning prematurely gray, causing it to grow thick and long. It is entirely different from all other preparations, and can be relied on.

PRICE $1 00 PER BOX, containing two bottles. DR. H. STERLING, Sole Proprietor, No. 355 Grand Street. For sale by all druggists.

Presents! Presents!

Soldier's Head-Quarters.

Rare Chance for AGENTS.

Head-Quarters for Army Corps Pins.

ANY one wishing to become my Agent, or wishing to purchase any thing in the Jewelry or Gold Pen line, will find us, as sample, on the receipt of $1, to agree with my wholesale prices with all Premiums and Premiums to Agents either a fine Gold Pen, with Ivorine Case and Pencil, or a fine engraved Spring Locket or Bracelet, or California Diamond Stud Setse Ring, or a new style Vest Chain or York Chain—a beautiful set of Jewelry. Also a Solid Silver Shield, with Army Corps, Division, or Co. Pin, or the Kearney Cross Pin, with name, Regiment, and Co. handsomely engraved upon it. 15 per ct. allowed Agents on Corps Pins.

J. W. ALLEN,

Manufacturing Jeweler, 208 Broadway, N. Y.

$200! $150! $100! $50!

PREMIUMS.

To Editors and Others!

I will pay the above-named amounts for the best four articles on either my Soap, Saleratus, or Concentrated Potash.

The article must state the writer's experience in using the goods, and not more than one hundred and fifty will be published in the editorial columns of any good family newspaper.

Any paper wishing to compete for the above, and desiring further information, may address the undersigned. Each person writing and publishing a notice as above, will mail a marked copy of the paper containing the notice to me, and also write to me that it has been done.

The Premiums will be awarded on the fourth day of July, 1864. B. T. BABBITT.

64 to 74 Washington Street, New York.

NEW HAVEN, CONN., OCT. 22d, 1863.

TO B. T. BABBITT:

Since receiving your Premium advertisement in The Scientific American, I concluded to state, in a few words, what I knew of the merits of your soap, having used it enough to conscientiously say that it is all that it is represented to be.

I wish to ask you if it is necessary to write my name in full under the article, should I put it in one of the New Haven papers.

If the article, which is on the next page, is of no account, please say so, and that will end the matter; if it is acceptable, it will appear in the paper immediately.

J. D. W.

right, golden day that ever gave he world a man who cares to save stimes the toil of womankind.

man with an ingenious mind

esters a real gift to us;

ensure experience proves it thus.

n every way its claims to aid,

here's none but true assertions made.

thus to affirm the truth we're told,

ince using this we are not sold;

aving our time and patience too—ur friends will find this statement true.

single trial, and you can erceive that BABBITT is the man.

J. D. W.

HOSTETTER'S

CELEBRATED

STOMACH BITTERS

TO THE DEBILITATED AND THE DECREPID.—Premature and early exhaustion of the powers of nature, whether occasioned by sickness, fast living, constitutional debility, old age, or any other physical or moral cause, the one thing needful and indispensable is HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS. When the fire of life seems to be absolutely dying out in the system, and the mind, sympathizing full in the body, is reduced almost to a state of imbecility, this mighty restorative seems, as it were, to lift the sufferer out of the Slough of Despond, and recruit and re-invigorate both the frame and the intellect. An old Roman, in the Valley of the Monongahela, writes thus to Dr. Hostetter; "I can assure you the operation of your Bitters upon me is nothing but the effect of a rain after a long dry spell in the fall of the year. The rain falling on the meadows starts the second crop of grass, and your wholesome medicine seems to have started a second crop of life and spirits in me." And this is truly the effect of this grateful and powerful preparation. Ladies of weak constitution, or whose strength has been impaired by sickness or age, find it a most efficacious and delightful tonic, and it is admirably tuned with great success in nauseous or vitiating of the flesh, to young children. In fact, it is a much safer and surer cordial for the nursery than any thing advertised specially for that purpose.

Sold by all Druggists and Family Grocers.

Hostetter's Stomach Bitters,

PREPARED AND SOLD BY

HOSTETTER & SMITH, PITTSBURGH, PA.

DEPOT FOR NEW YORK, 69 BROADWAY.

Holiday Presents.

J. H. Winslow & Co.,

100,000

WATCHES, CHAINS, &c., &c.

Worth $500,000.

To be sold for One Dollar each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for till you know what you are to get.

SPLENDID LIST!!

OF ARTICLES TO BE SOLD FOR ONE DOLLAR EACH.

100 Gold Hunting Cased Watches	$100 00 each.
100 Gold Watches	50 00 each.
100 Ladies' Gold Watches	25 00 each.
100 Ladies' and Gents' Silver Watches	15 00 each.
2000 Vest and Neck Chains	5 00 to 10 00 each.
3000 Gold Band Bracelets	3 00 to 10 00 each.
3000 "	4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Cameo Brooches	4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Mosaic and Jet Brooches	4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Lava and Florentine Brooches	4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Coral, Opal, and Em. Brooches	4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Mosaic Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Mosaic and Jet Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Lava and Florentine Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Coral, Em., and Opal Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Gent's Breast Pins	2 50 to 8 00 each.
3000 Watch Keys	9 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Fob and Ribbon Slides	2 00 to 6 00 each.
5000 Sets of Boson Studs	2 50 to 6 00 each.
3000 Sleeve Buttons	2 50 to 6 00 each.
6000 Plain Rings	2 50 to 8 00 each.
6000 Stone Set Rings	2 50 to 8 00 each.
6000 Lockets	2 50 to 10 00 each.
5000 Sets Ladies' Jewelry	5 00 to 10 00 each.
10000 Gold Pens, Silver M'td Holders	4 00 to 5 00 each.
10000 Gold Pens, with Pencil Extension Cases and Pencils	4 00 to 6 00 each.

All of the above list of Goods will be sold for one dollar each. Certificates of all the various articles, stating what each one is to have, are first put into envelopes, sealed up, and mixed; and when ordered, are taken out without regard to choice, and sent by mail, thus giving all a fair chance. On receipt of the Certificate, you will see what you can have, and then, if it is your option to send one dollar and take the article or not.

In all transactions by mail, we shall charge for forwarding the Certificates, paying postage, and doing the business. No articles will be sent by mail unless the Certificate is sent for. Five Certificates will be sent for $1; eleven for $2; thirty for $5; sixty-five for $10, and a hundred for $15.

AGENTS.—Those acting as Agents will be allowed ten cents on every Certificate ordered by them, provided their remittance amounts to one dollar. Agents will collect 25 cents for every Certificate, and remit 15 cents to us, either in cash or postage stamps. Great exertion should be used by our correspondents in regard to giving their correct address, Town, County, and State. Address

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,

No. 289 Broadway, New York.

The Neglected Warning!

OR, THE

TRIALS OF

A Public School Teacher,

BY

MRS. MARY KYLE DALLAS,

WILL SOON BE PUBLISHED IN THE

NEW YORK WEEKLY

SALISBURY, BRO. & CO.,

AGENTS FOR THE UNITED STATES FOR THE CELEBRATED

ALBERTINE

Extension Holders and Gold Pens.

Of the most handsome and durable construction, put up in new fancy cases of one dozen each, and not sold in any less quantities. They will retail for $3 each.

Prices, per dozen.....$10 25
Or 3 dozen for.....25 00

Sent by mail or express, prepaid. Address

SALISBURY, BRO. & CO., Providence, R. I.

$60 A MONTH! We want Agents at $60 a month, expenses paid, to sell our Everlasting Pencils, Oriental Burners, and 12 other articles. 15 circulars sent free. SHAW & CLARK, Biddeford, Maine.

AGENTS WANTED—Call and examine, or 10 samples sent free by mail for 70 cents, that retail for $5, magnetic needed by every person. Address

L. WOLFF, 110 Chatham Square, N. Y.

Cavalry Badges

Constantly on hand and Engraved to Order, and sent free on receipt of Price.

Terms Cash in advance. Send for a Catalogue. Address C. L. BALCH & CO., 209 Broadway, New York.

ANY WIDOW, or Parent, or Orphan, or Brother, or Sister of any Soldier, Sailor, Marine, Killed, or who has died in the service of the United States, who desires Three Hundred Dollars ($300) a year Pension, from One to Four Hundred Dollars ($100 to $400) Cash Bounty and all the arrears if any due him, should call at once or write to JOSEPH E. DEVITT & CO., No. 437 Walnut St., Philadelphia. Also date pay, if there is any due.

RHEUMATISM.

USE THE ELECTRO-METALLIC INSOLES, SHIELDS, AND ANKLETS. They are an INFALLIBLE REMEDY for RHEUMATISM, COLD FEET, &c. METTAM & CO., No. 629 Broadway, N. Y.

Insoles, $1 per pair; Belts, $3; Anklets, $1 50 each. Sent by mail for 20 cents additional.

Meeks' Cabinet and Furniture Warehouse,

No. 699 BROADWAY, and 333 and 335 Fourth Street.

New and elegant Designs, of superior Workmanship, at reasonable prices, manufactured of the very best well-seasoned and selected material, under the supervision of the firm, whose reputation has been established seventy years. Every description of Furniture manufactured to order and executed promptly.

Goods packed and shipped to all parts of the world.

A New Magazine for the Ladies.

The Lady's Friend.

A Monthly Magazine of Literature and Fashion.

The Subscribers would beg leave to call the attention of their friends and the public to their NEW MAGAZINE, the January number of which is now ready.

THE LADY'S FRIEND will be devoted to choice Literature and the illustration of the Fashions, and will also contain the latest patterns of Cloaks, Cops, Bonnets, Head Dresses, Fancy Work, Embroidery, &c., &c.; with Receipts, Music, and other matters interesting to ladies generally. It will be edited by Mrs. HENRY PETERSON, who will not only open the services in the Literary Department of a number of well-known writers.

A HANDSOME STEEL ENGRAVING and a COLORED STEEL FASHION PLATE will illustrate every number; besides well-executed Wood-cuts, illustrative of Stories, Patterns, &c., too numerous to mention.

THE JANUARY NUMBER.

This number (now ready) contains the following articles and illustrations:

BEAUTIFUL MEZZOTINTO STEEL ENGRAVING.
BEAUTIFUL COLORED STEEL FASHION PLATE.
MUSIC.—ADVANCE THE BATTLE. Words by H. Peterson Music by Heywood.
GABRIEL WILDER'S RETURN. By Eleanor C. Donnelly.
THE YANKEE GIRL. By the Author.
AFTER LONG YEARS. By Julia Eugenia Mott.
LIVES FOR AN ABODE. By the Editor.
RUELLA. By Hiram W. Stillman.
TO IDA. By T. J. C'—ben.
MAY DARLEY. By Virginia F. Townsend.
SONG. By Sara J. Rumsey.
MABEL'S MISTAKE.
A MEMORY. By Annie F. Kent.
THE LOCK OF MRS RILEY. By Mrs. Margaret Horner.
THE PRIDE OF CAROLINE. By Ella Clifford.
GLENGARY. By Harris Byrne.
THE STEPMOTHER. By Sarah Tyler.
THE DEAD AND THE LIVING. By Carrie Myer.
HOW THEY DO IT. Embodying a Plea for Widowers. By Marion Harland.
A MEMORIAL EACH. By Eliza Sproat Randolph.
WEAR THE RING. By Olive E. Payne.

NEW STYLES OF BONNETS, CAPS, SLEEVES, &c. Illustrated with numerous Wood Engravings.

THE WORK-TABLE. Illustrated with numerous Wood Engravings.

DEBOE'S DEPARTMENT. Including Salutatory, Flowers in Winter, The Mother's Remorse, New Publications, Miscellaneous Receipts, The Fashions, Plan of Dressing for Consumptives, &c.

☞ Price $2 a year. Single number for sale by all Periodical Dealers.

DEACON & PETERSON,

319 WALNUT STREET, PHILADELPHIA.

IMPORTANT to the PENNSYLVANIA RESERVE.—Any Soldier of the Pennsylvania Reserve Regiments, Sailor, Marine, Widow or Heir who is in the city, can hear something greatly to his advantage by calling upon or sending his address to JOSEPH E. DEVITT, No. 437 Walnut St., Philadelphia, Pa., the Military and Naval Agency.

Gold! Gold! Gold!

20,000 Watches, Chains, &c., &c., &c.

Worth $100,000.

To be sold for One Dollar each without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 20 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and if you choose to take our Circular, containing full list of articles and particulars; also how to these on sale as Agents. Address

C. F. SHULTS, 285 River Street, Troy, N. Y.

ARTIFICIAL EAR DRUMS

SOUND MAGNIFYING TUBES FOR DEAFNESS.

They can be concealed from view, and enable deaf persons to converse in public assemblies. For descriptive pamphlet to E. HASLAM, cor. John & Nassau St., N. Y.

LOVE, COURTSHIP, AND MARRIAGE.—

A Book for every one to be Married or Married. Unhappy Marriages, The Remedy, Love,—signs, in the face. Secret of Beauty. Lover's Experiences. Failing in Love. To improve the Complexion—with numerous Illustrative Portraits—in Jan. Double No. PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL. The first of a new vol. Only 15 cts. Or $1 50 a year. FOWLER & WELLS, N. Y.

DO YOU WANT LUXURIANT WHISKERS OR MUSTACHES?—My Oriental or Arabian secret for them to grow heavily in six weeks (upon the smoothest face) without stain or injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post free, to any address, on receipt of an order. E. G. GRAHAM, No. 199 Nassau Street, N. Y.

Salesmen Wanted.

$75 a month, or commission allowed on sales. Apply to HALL & CO., Newburyport, Mass.

Friends, Send a stamp for my Circular. Address L. M. HARRIS, Boston, Mass.

American Card Company's New Union Playing Cards.

National Emblems.

Ten of Eagles.

The suits are EAGLES, SHIELDS, STARS, and FLAGS. Colonel in place of King; Goddess of Liberty for Queen; Major for Jack.

The Union Playing Cards are the first and only genuine American Cards ever produced, and as they are entered according to Act of Congress, they can be manufactured only by the American Card Company.

The Cards are rapidly taking the place of Cards bearing Foreign emblems. The demand for them is unprecedented in the Card Trade, and they will soon become the Leading Card in the American market.

In playing with these Cards, they are to be called by the names the emblems represent, and as the emblems are as familiar as household words everywhere among the people of the American Republic, they can be used as readily in the first session as cards bearing Foreign emblems.

The Union Cards are the most pleasing and attractive card ever made. They are produced in the highest style of the art, and each pack is put up in an elegant Card Case, suitable to keep them in when not in use, and then in handsome dozen boxes for the trade.

Two Sample Packs in Card Cases sent, prepaid, on receipt of $1.

Address AMERICAN CARD COMPANY,

465 Broadway, or 165 William St., N. Y.

The Bard of the South.

1718, the son, for a short time, of the Tennessee Swamp Sheik Bulsam stimulates the Beard, Moustache, &c., to an exceedingly fine and vigorous growth. Has been thoroughly tried and found infallible. A small sample box and the interesting history of this Balsam will be sent sealed on receipt of return postage. Address

JOHN RAWLINS, 767 Broadway, N. Y.

Elegant Christmas Presents for a Lady. Gold Composite Hunting Watch, Jewelled, excellent Timekeeper, $15. For a gentleman the Magic Railway Watch, with Time Patent Indicator, showing Time without opening Case, $15. Watches sent for inspection before payment. Under is great variety, newest styles, Ladies, $3 upwards; Gents, $1 upwards. Send for Circular. ABBOTT & CO., Importers of Watches, 313 Broadway, N.Y.

BEAUTIFUL WOMEN.—For PORTRAITS, with the Secret of Beauty, and "How to Beautiful," see the Phrenological Journal. The January Double No. has more than 40 portraits. Only 15 cts. by first post, or $1 50 a year. New Vol. FOWLER & WELLS, 308 Broadway, N. Y.

Portable Printing Offices.

For the Army and Navy Hospitals, Merchants, Druggists, and all who wish to print neatly, cheaply, and expeditiously. Send for Circular and Specimen Sheets of Type, Cuts, &c., to Adams Press Co., 31 Park Row, N. Y., and 23 Lincoln St., Boston.

$50 for $20.

SOLDIERS IN THE ARMY.

For $20 we will forward by mail or express, pre-paid, the following list of Fine Gold-Plated Jewelry:—A Vest Chain, 12 Gent.'s Scal Rings, 3 Gold Pens and Extension Holders, 6 Vest Hooks, 4 Fancy Watch Keys, 12 Boson or Scarf Pins, 4 pair Sleeve Buttons, 3 Sets and Class Pins for Miniatures, 3 Double Glass Lockets, and 3 Cluster Stone Pins. Address THOMAS CAFFERTY & CO., Providence, R. I.

ALL ARTICLES FOR SOLDIERS

Sent to the Army or Navy, or elsewhere except by Union troops, should be sent by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 74 Broadway. Soldiers charged low rates.

SPLENDID HOLIDAY PRESENTS.

Superbly finished watches, the beauty of which is only equaled by their chronometers.—N. Y. Weekly, July 25th.

Particularly valuable for officers in the army, and travelers.—Frank Leslie's, Feb. 21.

Prettiest, best and cheapest watch we ever offered.—N. Y. Illustrated News, Jan. 16.

Magic Time Observers,

The Perfection of Mechanism!

Being a Hunting, or Open Face, or Lady's or Gentleman's Watch combined, with Patent Self-winding Improvement.

A most pleasing novelty. One of the prettiest, most convenient, and decidedly the best and cheapest timepiece for gentlemen or ladies ever offered. It is a Hunting watch and connected with its machinery its own winding attachment, rendering a key entirely unnecessary. The cases of this Watch are composed of two metals, the outer one being like 18 carat gold. It has the improved ruby action lever movement, and is warranted an accurate timepiece. Price, superbly engraved, per case of half dozen, $204. Sample watches in most morocco boxes, $35. If sent by mail, the postage is 70 cents for registering, 20 cents.

Silver Watches!

First-Class Hunting Time-Pieces.

FOR ACCURACY OF MOVEMENT, BEAUTY OF FINISH, AND, ABOVE ALL, CHEAPNESS IN PRICE, THESE WATCHES MAY CHALLENGE

UNIVERSAL APPROBATION!

An imitation so faultless that it can hardly be detected by the most experienced Expert. The material being of two metals, the outer one fine coin or Silver and the inner one German Silver, it can not be recognized by cutting or bearing, engraving, making it look like solid silver case, but in durability, the best resemblance of Solid Sterling Silver in existence.

The sale of these watches in the army is a source of enormous profit, which can be realized on sales of $100 and upward. Many hundred dollars can be made in a single pro-rata day by any one of ordinary business tact.

AS WHOLESALE GOLD! In heavy hunting cases, beautifully engraved, white enamel dials, and patent levers, and in good running order, by the half dozen, $60; postage, $7 38; registering, 20 cts. Sold only by the case. Can be safely sent by mail.

☞ TERMS CASH, INVARIABLY IN ADVANCE. No agents employed; buyers must deal directly with us. If money is sent by express or mail, it is registered letter, it is at our risk! Orders will meet the most prompt and faithful attention.

HUBBARD BROS., Sole Importers,

Broadway, cor. Courtlandt St., New York.

The Prettiest Present for a Lady is Gold Composite Patent Detected Lever Watch, Jewelled in 13 actions, beautifully engraved Hunting Case, by Rockell of Liverpool, $15. For a gentleman, the Time Patent Self-Detached Lever Movement, with 13 Jewels, in Sterling Silver Cases, with Time Patent Time Indicator, invented for the Army, the handsomest and most useful Watch ever offered, $20. ☞ (The Gold Composite Watches are also made medium size for Gents.) Watches sent for inspection before payment. Every novelty can be seen by sending for descriptive Catalogue. Agents wanted in every Regiment and every County or town in the civil terms. ARRANDALE & CO., Importers of Watches, 313 Broadway, N. Y.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

AGENTS, male or female, SOLDIERS, and all having some time to spare, are invited to write for terms, and if we like to send us their address, and we will send in return, free, information which they may wish to know. We wish no EXTRA INCUMBRANCES. From $6 to $15 per day ABOVE EXPENSES. We want agents in every county, town, and city in U. S., and from EVERY REGIMENT in the ARMY. Address in full, RICHARDS & CO., 37 and 39 Nassau Street, Box 3131, N. Y.

$75 A MONTH! I want to hire Agents in every County at $75 a month, expenses paid, to sell my new cheap Family Sewing Machines. Address

S. MADISON, Alfred, Maine.

J. W. EVERETT & CO.,

Will forward to any address, on receipt of order, Photographs from life of any of the prominent

OFFICERS OF THE ARMY AND NAVY, STATESMEN, DIVINES, ACTORS, ACTRESSES, FOREIGN CELEBRITIES, ETC., ETC.

20 cents each, $1 50 per dozen, sent by mail.

Address J. W. EVERETT & CO.,

Box 1614. N. Y. City.

☞ Send for a Circular.

Printing-Press for Sale.

One Taylor Double Cylinder, five Rollers, Table Distribution, Bed 32 by 46 inches.

Apply to HARPER & BROTHERS, 329 Pearl St., N.Y.

HARPER'S NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE.

TERMS.

One Copy for one Year	$3 00
Two Copies for One Year	5 00

An Extra Copy, gratis, for every Club of Ten Subscribers.

An Extra Copy will be allowed for every Club of TEN SUBSCRIBERS, at $2 50 each, or 11 Copies for $25.

TERMS TO ADVERTISERS.—Seven lines CENTS for 1 insertion, and One Dollar per line for each subsequent insertion.

Volumes I., II., III., IV., V., VI. and VII. for the Years 1857, 1858, 1859, 1860, 1861, 1862, and 1863 of HARPER'S WEEKLY, neatly bound in cloth, will be sent by express, free, price $5 00 each, are now ready.

HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS.

A Splendid Holiday or Bridal Present.

HARPER'S Illuminated and Pictorial BIBLE.

Including the Apocrypha. Superbly embellished by over Sixteen Hundred Illustrations, exquisitely engraved by Adams, Pilsbury & Designs by Chapman, executed with a Series of Rich Illuminations in Colors, comprising Frontispieces, Presentation Plate, Family Record, Title-pages, &c. The whole forming a sumptuous Folio Volume.

PRICES.—Morocco, gilt edges, bevelled and panelled sides, $25 00; Morocco extra, gilt edges, $20 00; Full Calf, marbled edges, bland stamped, $18 00; Full Roan, marbled edges, $16 00.

HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers, N. Y.

For sale by A. WILLIAMS & Co., Boston; SMITH, ENGLISH & Co., Philadelphia; GEORGE S. BAILEY, Baltimore; FRANCIS TAYLOR, Washington; ROBERT CLARKE & Co., Cincinnati; KEESE & WOODS, St. Louis; S. C. GRIGGS & Co., Chicago; DAWSON & BROTHERS, Montreal.

FISK & HATCH.

Bankers and Dealers in Government Securities, AND AGENTS FOR THE UNITED STATES FIVE-TWENTY LOAN, No. 38 Wall Street, New York.

A Gold Watch Free!

To all who act as Agents for our splendid STATIONERY PRIZE PACKETS, which contain fine Writing Materials, Paper, Envelopes, Handsome Jewelry, Novelties for the Holidays, &c. Retail for only 25 cts. Worth five times as much. These Packets contain better Stationery and more than any other yet up. They are in great demand; sales quick; the profits immense; and, in addition, receive as a present from us a splendid Gold or Solid Silver Watch, warranted a perfect time-keeper, worth ten times as much as the Composition Watches given with the sale of other parties. Three cent stamp to send for our New Circular.

G. S. HASKINS & CO., 36 Bookman Street, N. Y.

VERMILYE & CO.,

Bankers, No. 44 Wall Street,

WILL CONTINUE TO FURNISH

U. S. FIVE-TWENTY BONDS

As long as issued by Government at Par and Interest.

To BANKS and BANKERS the usual commission allowed.

We also buy and sell at market rates,

U. S. 6-20 CERTIFICATES OF INDEBTEDNESS.

U. S. COUPON BONDS OF 1881.

U. S. 7-30 TREASURY NOTES.

U. S. QUARTERMASTER CHECKS.

Matured Certificates of Indebtedness collected on favorable terms.

VERMILYE & CO.,

BANKERS, No. 44 Wall Street, N. Y.

Lands. To all Wanting Farms.

LANDS.—TO ALL WANTING FARMS.—Large and thriving settlement, mild and healthful climate, 30 miles south of Philadelphia by railroad. Rich soil, produces large crops, which can now be sure growing. Twenty and fifty acre tracts, at from $15 to $20 per acre, payable within four years. Good business opening for MASSACHUSETTS and other mechanics, schools, and good society. It is now the most improving place East or West. Hundreds are selling and building. The beauty with which the place is laid out is unsurpassed. Letters answered. Pamphlets containing reports and giving full information will be sent free. Address CHAS. K. LANDIS, Vineland Post Office, Cumberland County, New Jersey.

From Report of Solon Robinson, Agriculturist Editor of The Tribune:—It is one of the most attractive fertile tracts in an almost level position and suitable condition for pleasant farming that we know of this side of the Western prairies.

FOR

Holiday Presents,

SEE

J. H. Winslow & Co.'s

Advertisement on page 15

Learn to Skate in One Hour by using The American Parlor or Floor Skate. Hard Rubber Rollers. Anti-friction Axles. Frederick Stevens, 215 Pearl Street, New York. 68 Kilby Street, Boston.

ARTIFICIAL LEGS & ARMS SELPHO'S PATENT

The best Substitutes for Natural Limbs ever invented. (Established 24 years.) 910 Broadway.

For Holiday Presents

Be sure and read B. T. HAYWARD'S Notice on page 14.

Davis Collamore & Co., 429 Broadway, below Broome Street.

ARE NOW Opening HOLIDAY GOODS in great VARIETY and of very beautiful styles.

ALSO DINING, TEA, and TOILET SETS. GLASS WARE, ENGRAVED with CREST or INITIAL.

ELEC CANTON COFFEE CUPS, &c., &c.

CHICKEN EGG DISHES.

$15 Per Day Easy $15 And a Watch Free.

Agents should be careful in directing their orders to us, as several small unprincipled imitators of our styles have sprung into existence lately, who copy our advertisements, and "promise" the same Premiums that we have "given agents" for years. Those parties can not fulfill their promises; consequently, agents can not be dealt with honorably by them. Those parties who advertise our Premiums require agents to send them from $40 to $50 in cash for their poor imitations before they can receive any thing. "We" do as we have done for years, present our customers with a Beautiful Gold or Silver "Hunting-Case Watch" on the spot, or send it with their "first order." No delay, no promises. We do it, and guarantee all our watches a perfect time-keeper, as we print the MONEY AND PAYMENT THE GOODS. Agents will notice that our Price Package must be of extra quality, and meet with a ready sale, or they would not be invited. We are the sole importers of the beautiful watches we present to agents, and no other Houses have them. Look at the list of articles contained in each one of our popular, successful, and valuable extra large size STAR, ARROW, EMPIRE, and YANKEE NOTION PRIZE PACKAGES. Fine Writing Materials, such as Paper, Pens, Pencils, Envelopes, Pictures, Beautiful Emblems, Ladies' Fashion Plates, Designs for Needlework, Cottage Keepsakes, Household Companions, Camp Companions for Soldiers, Parlor Amusements, Latter Writer's Guide, Medical Preparations, Many Ways to Get Rich, Likenesses of Military Heroes, Union Designs, Gents' Pocket Calendars for 1864, YANKEE NOTIONS of all kinds, a rich and costly Present in Jewelry, Rare Receipts, Games, Army Advice, &c., &c., &c., the whole worth, if bought separately, three times our Price each Package only 25 cents retail. Wholesale rates to Agents only, from 100 to 1000 per cent. profit allowed. Our Packages stand same as ever, alone, and above all competition, and have long been acknowledged as the leading and only real valuable and standard Articles of the kind now manufactured. Packages of all descriptions put up by the 1000 for Sutlers, Peddlers, Wholesale Dealers, &c. Goods sent by Express at our risk to any part of the army South or Southwest. We want agents in every town and county, and will easily make $15 per day, and obtain with their first order a Beautiful and Correct Timekeeper free. A sample of our Price Package contains more valuable articles than any half dozen others. Send for our Great Circular for 1864, containing Extra Premium inducements, free. S. C. RICKARDS & CO., 102 Nassau St., N. Y. The Great (Original), Largest, and Oldest Prize Package House in the World.

FURS.

C. G. GUNTHER & SONS.

FUR WAREHOUSE,

46 Maiden Lane, New York.

Importers, Manufacturers and Shippers of Raw Furs and Skins.

Invite attention to their extensive Assortment of Ladies' Furs now on hand.

STEINWAY & SONS'

GOLD MEDAL GRAND AND SQUARE PIANOS, now considered the best in Europe, as well as this country, having received the first Prize Medal at the World's Exhibition in London, 1862.

The principal reason why the Steinway Pianos are superior to all others is, that the firm is composed of five practical pianoforte makers (father and four sons), who devote all their own improvements, and under whose personal supervision every part of the instrument is manufactured. Ware-rooms, Nos 82 & 84 Walker Street, N. Y.

ROMAN SCARFS SENT BY MAIL EVERYWHERE.

3,000 dozen pure Roman Scarfs.

Made from the Purest and Best Silk.

These are the most fashionable, elegant, and economical Scarfs ever imported, as they are reversible; one scarf is as good as two.

They are much worn in Europe by both ladies and gentlemen. Can be worn with or without pin or ring.

The whole lot will be retailed at

WHOLESALE PRICES!

$1 50 AND $2 EACH.

A single Scarf sent by mail on receipt of the cash, and six cents for postage.

Very fine Gilded Bead Scarf Pins or Rings

At $1 50 each.

S. W. H. WARD, No. 307 Broadway, New York.

STEEL COLLARS

ENAMELED WHITE.

Having the appearance and comfort of linen, have been worn in England for the last two years in preference to linen collar, as they can be easily cleaned at one minute with a sponge.

The Army Men and Travelers they are invaluable.

Price $1 each, sent by Post to any part of the Union on receipt of $1 25.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

AGENTS WANTED to every Town in the Union.

S. W. H. WARD, Sole Agent for U. S., 307 B'way, N. Y.

FRENCH FLANNEL OVERSHIRTS,

the largest assortment in New York, $2 75, $3, $3 75 each; all cut on one pattern.

A single Shirt sent by mail on receipt of the cash. The cost of postage must be enclosed—22 cents for each Shirt.

Send the size of your neck.

ENGLISH MERINO UNDERSHIRTS AND DRAWERS, $2, $2 25, and $2 50. SCOTCH LAMB'S WOOL UNDERSHIRTS AND DRAWERS. ALSO, FINE WHITE SHIRTS MADE TO MEASURE AT $24, $30, $36, AND $42 PER DOZEN.

Self-Measurement for Shirts.

Printed directions for self-measurement, list of prices, and drawings of different styles of shirts and collars sent free everywhere.

The Cash can be paid to Express company on receipt of goods.

S. W. H. WARD,

No. 307 Broadway, New York.

IVORY SLEEVE BUTTONS

Engraved with initials, 75c. per pair, sent free on receipt of the price. Pearl, $1 00 per set each. WM. J. WELLING, manufacturer of Ivory goods, 301 Centre St., N. Y., sign of the Golden Elephant.

HOLIDAY GOODS.

Schuyler, Hartley & Graham,

19 Maiden Lane AND 22 John Street,

31 Rue du Chateau d'Eau, Paris, Sands St., Birmingham, England.

French and English Fancy Goods.

PORCELAIN VASES. MANTEL ORNAMENTS. MARBLE CLOCKS. BRONZES. CARD RECEIVERS. PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS. ORDER AND DRESSING CASES. CARVED WOOD WORK BOXES. LIQUOR CASES. OPERA GLASSES. FANS. LEATHER BAGS. ALSO JET AND CORAL JEWELRY, DIAMOND, WATCHES, &c.

MILITARY GOODS.—GUNS.—PISTOLS.—CUTLERY, &c.

A FINE ENGLISH SKATE.

$35 WATCHES. $35

Genuine Full-Jeweled American Lever Watches, in 4 Ounce Coin Silver Hunting Cases, Gold Joints, for $35.

Also every variety of good Watches at equally low rates. All orders from the Army must be pre-paid, as the Express Companies will not take bills for collection on soldiers.

J. L. FERGUSON, Importer of Watches. 208 Broadway New York.

$7. WATCHES. $7.

A Beautiful Engraved Gold-Plated Watch, Lever Cap, small size, English Movements, perfect time-keeper. Sent free by mail, in neat case, for only $7. A Solid Silver, same as above, $7. Specially adapted to the ARMY. CHAS. P. NORTON & CO., 98 & 99 Ann Street, N. Y.

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper, of Aug. 22, says: "Messrs. NORTON & CO. have completed two very desirable things in a watch—cheapness and reliability. When it is known that for $7 a person can obtain an excellent timekeeper, there will be greater punctuality in all the affairs of life."

FINE DRESS SHIRTS TO ORDER. UNRIVALED

In Manufacture, Fitting, and Material.

AT UNION ADAMS, No. 637 Broadway.

Remington's

ARMY AND NAVY REVOLVER.

Approved by the Government.

Warranted superior to any other Pistol of the kind. Also Pocket and Belt Revolvers. Sold by the Trade generally.

E. REMINGTON & SONS, Ilion N. Y.

A Household Word.—Buy your Housekeeping Articles at RASSFORD'S, Cooper Institute, New York.

PREPARE FOR THE HOLIDAYS.

There is no Gift, or Present, which compares with that of Microscope and Mounted Objects. As a source of amusement and instruction they are unsurpassed. This Microscope will be mailed, postage paid, for $2 75; or with 6 beautiful mounted objects, for $3; or with 24 objects, for $5.

Address, CHARLES CHALLIS, 335 Broadway, New York.

A liberal discount to the trade.

The only enameled "Turn-over" Collar made in metals. Send $1 for a "Turn-over" or 75 cents for a "Choker," to Box 5151, and receive by return mail. American enameled Metallic Collar Co., 94 Pine St., N. Y.

AGENTS WANTED.—$2 positively made from 20 cts.! urgently needed by every person. Call and examine, or use samples sent free by mail for 20 cts.; retails for $2, by R. L. WOLCOTT, 170 Chatham Square, N. Y.

Fogg's Double-Action Patent Lever SKATE BUCKLE,

Manufactured and for sale on Straps, at wholesale, by F. STEVENS, Manufacturer of Skates, Straps, and Leather Goods, 215 Pearl St., New York, 68 Kilby St., Boston.

MUNN & CO.,

Solicitors of American and Foreign Patents,

And Publishers of the ILLUSTRATED SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN, 37 Park Row, N. Y. Thirteen years' of information concerning Patents, free. Specimens of the Paper, free.

The Soldier's Gift To the Loved One at Home.

We will deliver, free of freight charge, at any Express Office East of St. Joseph, Mo., any of our beautiful Albums of the value of $5 or more, that may be ordered by members of the Army or Navy of the United States or Invalids to friends at home. We manufacture elegant styles of all prices to $25, and higher.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY,

Manufacturers and Importers,

501 Broadway, N. Y.

A Bad Breath.—The Greatest Curse the human family is heir to. How many lovers it has separated—how many friends forever parted. There is no use to state, your nearest friend will not mention it, and you are ignorant of the fact. The remedy is at hand, use the "BALM OF THOUSAND FLOWERS" as a dentrifice, which not only removes at the same time the cause, but moving all tan, pimples, and freckles, leaving the skin soft and white. Price 50 cents. For sale by all druggists.

The Trade supplied by HOWARD, SANGER & CO., 208 and 107 Chambers Street, N. Y., and for sale by all Druggists.

The Parlor Ghost.

NOTICE TO THE TRADE.—Now is the time to send in your orders for the greatest sensation of the day.

Every body wants it, and it is just the thing for the Holidays.

THE GREAT NEW HOLIDAY PRIZE PACKET; or, Santa Claus Christmas Casket.

PRICES GREATLY REDUCED FOR FIVE CENTS.

It contains something for all, both old and young.

And is Useful, Novel, and Amusing.

In addition to the numerous articles, it contains the receipt for producing, at trifling expense,

THE WONDERFUL PARLOR GHOST.

For sale by all the Wholesale and Retail Stationery and News Dealers throughout the country. Circulars sent free.

TRISTEE & CO., 110 Nassau St., N. Y.

BILLIARD BALLS.

Patent compressed Ivory Billiard Balls, 2¼ and 2¼ in. $10 per set. 2 in. Bagatelle, $8 per set. 1¾ in. Bagatelle, $6 per set. Also, Pool Set, $20 set. WM. H. WELLING, 307 Centre St., New York, sign of the Golden Elephant.

"Joy to the World."

THE INTRODUCTION OF

PERRY DAVIS' PAIN KILLER

To the suffering humanity of this age, has relieved more pain and caused more real joy than any other one thing that can be mentioned.

IT IS A

"BALM OF EVERY WOUND,"

OFTEN PROVED HEREIN, AND RECOGNIZED TO BE.

The Apothecary finds it first among the medicines called for, and the Wholesale Druggist considers it a leading article of his trade. All the popular medicine speak alike in its favor; and its reputation as a medicine of the most unfailing virtue is fully established throughout the A. N. WILLIAMS, Parkersburg, Va., one of the oldest and most respectable druggists in that section, writes to the proprietors, writes:

"Sales of Perry Davis' Pain Killer what I could not say of many of the medicines of the day. In my trade it is a leading article. I sell largely of it, and have the entire satisfaction to sell. I would on no account be without it." JOHN FARRELL, Druggist, of Rockingport, Ill., writes:

"I sell considerable of Davis' Pain Killer in this place, for it is well liked and highly recommended by all who use it."

GEO. WILLIAMS, Druggist, at Hockingport, O., writes:

"Perry Davis' Pain Killer is quite generally used by the inhabitants of our town and vicinity. Indeed, I think it the best medicine I have for the uses for which it is recommended."

NATIONAL BATTLE PIN.

M'Clellan, Grant, Rosecrans, Banks, Meade, Gillmore, Burnside, Hooker, Foster, and Sigel. All are the same pattern as the cut, only differing in battle-grounds and date. Perfect photograph likeness in each pin. Plated in rich gold. Sent in gold. By enclosing $1, a sample will be sent by mail. Agents wanted in town and the army. The undersigned are the exclusive right of manufacturing of different styles of the beautiful keepsake and receipt of gallant action.

LOUIS PHILIP, 609 Broadway, N. Y.

Shults' Unguent, warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in six weeks, or money refunded. Sent postpaid, for 50 cents. Address C. J. SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

GOLD PENS AND CASES.

Retailed at wholesale prices. 14 kt. Gold Pen, Solid Silver Case, $1 50, warranted for one year, guarantee accompanying each Pen. Pens to suit any hand. Pens repointed on receipt of 50 cents.

C. S. JOHNSON, 13 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION.

VOL. VIII.—No. 367.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, JANUARY 9, 1864. [$1.00 FOR FOUR MONTHS. $3.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1863, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

THE REBELS FIRING ON OUR SUPPLY-TRAIN.

On this page we give a graphic sketch of an attack made by rebel sharp-shooters upon our supply-train on the banks of the Tennessee. After the battle of Chickamauga, when our army had retired to its strong-hold at Chattanooga, it was the chief object of the rebels to disturb our communications, and if possible to break up its supply-trains. Of the particular instance given in the sketch the artist was an eye-witness. Upon the crags of Raccoon Mountain, and overlooking the river, were posted a small force of picked men of Longstreet's corps, armed with Whitworth rifles. The position was twelve miles in the rear of our works at Chattanooga, and was unguarded. Captain Gross had charge of the attacking party. The only way of reaching the position chosen for attack, and avoiding our scouts, was by taking the Indian trails through the forest heights. No sooner had the position been gained than the rumbling of the approaching train was heard along the river-bank. Thus when the train came up the gorge, preceded by a small infantry escort, and had fairly filled the open space of the road in front of the rebel sharp-shooters, it was entirely at the mercy of the latter. Then the word was given to fire, and a score of deafening reports leaped from crag to crag; and close upon the fire followed the confusion of a stampede. The teams in front were crippled by dead mules; and those behind, thus blocked in and unable to move forward, were equally cut off from retreat by the inextricably confused wagons in the rear. The escort, after firing a few shots, fled panic-stricken, leaving the train in the hands of the enemy.

THE SIEGE OF CHARLESTON.

On page 28 we give an illustration representing the effect produced by one of Gilmore's shells bursting in the streets of Charleston. When Gilmore first began to shell the city it had more noncombatants in it than it has now; it was not believed that the city was within range until the actual reality brought conviction. The illustration is designed to represent the first occasion upon which the city was shelled, and depicts the overwhelming surprise of the citizens. The shelling commenced at midnight, but did little harm beyond terrifying the ladies left in the city. Only a single house was set on fire. In the particular scene presented by the artist a fireman is running through the streets giving the alarm, and a watchman, thoroughly overcome, is taking leave of his senses and his staff in the fore-ground. The gun burst after a few discharges. The distance was over four miles. At latest dates General Gilmore had recommenced shelling the city, having destroyed twelve buildings, killed one man, and seriously wounded some eight or ten persons. We give also on the same page an illustration representing the interior of Fort Sumter after a continuous bombardment by the batteries on Morris Island. The bombardment was from 200-pound Parrott guns, and every gun of the fort was dismounted, leaving the garrison to be passive spectators of the gradual demolition of the walls. Nearly the whole parapet of the fort was swept away. The gorge-face presents one mass of ruins, and the casemates scarcely afford shelter to the garrison. Beauregard, it is said, is determined to hold the fort till the last, by the bayonet, if need be.

LONGSTREET'S SHARP-SHOOTERS FIRING ON A FEDERAL SUPPLY-TRAIN.—[SKETCHED BY AN ENGLISH ARTIST.]

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 9, 1864.

THE NEW YEAR.

WE have the right to wish our friends a HAPPY NEW YEAR, for a year never opened more full of promise for the country and the cause, dear to all faithful hearts. No man who truly comprehended the magnitude of our war, or who has thoughtfully studied its development, could have expected that we should stand at this time with so firm a hold upon the future as we have. Forced to learn to fight while we were fighting, we have patiently learned our lesson, amidst the doubts of friends and sneers of foes, until at last the fidelity, tenacity, and courage of the people begin to tell again at their enemies, and the great experiment of free popular government, victorious in domestic revolt has always been in foreign war, was never surer of its triumphant vindication than on the New-year's Day eighteen hundred and sixty-four.

This confession is extorted from the bitterest foes of our loyal enemies at home and abroad. Directly, by its words, the British aristocratic jealousy of a republic concedes that, without foreign intervention, we shall put all in the contest; and, indirectly, by their acts the rebels allow the desperation of their cause. The late law of the rebel Congress compelling every private citizen to be a commissioned officer, and physician to serve for the war, regardless of the conditions of enlistment; the law forcing those who have supplied substitutes to take place in the ranks by their side, the demand that the rebel currency shall be reduced by force, the terrible revelations of Memminger's report, with the wild nuance of abuse in the message of that "accomplished statesman," Jefferson Davis, and the resolutions offered by Foote in the rebel Congress—all these are signs that the greater resources and unwilling energy of the American people directed in the interest of humanity, civilization, and law, against a colossal conspiracy of crime and anarchy, begin already to be successful.

Surely the year may be hailed as happy that opens upon such a prospect—happy though a thousand homes, as Andromache, like Rachel, weeps for her children, who shall return no more. But dead, they yet speak, and shall speak forever. Unseen they hold as fast in love and honor to the holy cause for which they fell. The young, the brave, the true, who by night and day, through summer and winter, on land and sea, have fought the many foes, have consecrated us all to their own heroic fidelity. The land mourns—it is full of graves; but what the President so simply and solemnly said of Gettysburg is true also of the country: "The world will not note nor long remember what we say here, but will never forget what they did here."

The year that begins brings us nearer to the end of great military operations, and to the settlement of the war. Standing upon its threshold, with hearts saddened for those who are gone, and hopeful for those who are to come, let us take care through this year and through all years, to stand as fast for the victory our brothers in the field have won as they stood firm in winning it.

MR. PHILLIPS'S SPEECH.

THE late speech of Mr. Wendell Phillips has naturally provoked a great deal of censure. His sharp and direct criticisms upon men and measures can not fail to exasperate the friends of both, and his sarcasms, while they sparkle, sting. We do not agree with Mr. Phillips in his estimate of the President, of Mr. Seward, or of Mr. Chase; and we certainly do not acknowledge the justice of a criticism of the public action of public men which takes no account of circumstances. Statesmanship is no more the doing, or the attempt to do, what the accurate scientific individually think to be abstractly right, without regard to the conditions that surround him, than seamanship is laying a course and persisting in it, spite of the wind. In fact, the wind will control the ship, and public opinion the statesman.

Probably no man in the country would more heartily assent to this than Mr. Phillips; and the apparent injustice of his criticism of public men arises from the fact that he always regards the man instead of the officer. If the attainment of the end desired depended solely upon the will of the man, the work would always be easy enough. But when the cardinal condition of success is the consent of other men, the work is plainly difficult and gradual. If Mr. Phillips made the point clearer, not that the President ought to do this or that, but that the people ought to wish him to do it, and insist upon his doing it, he would be juster to what we suppose to be his real view.

For it should be borne in mind always, that there is but one key to all the discourses of this eloquent orator. A true Democrat, with the fullest faith in the people, even in "the pavement," as he expresses it, his constant purpose is to stimulate, enlighten, and elevate public opinion, in order that its servants, the magistrates, may obey it. Mr. Lincoln, he says, is a good man; he will do what the people wish; therefore the people must be made to wish the best thing. That is certainly fair enough. But when he adds that the President is a growing man, because we, the people, constantly water him, then, as it seems to us, the orator misapprehends the case. It is not the convictions of Mr. Lincoln, but the convictions of the President, that we water. A few years since Mr. Phillips called Mr. Lincoln the slave-hound of Illinois, and yet, three months before, this slave-hound had made the plainest statement of the vital and radical conflict between slavery and liberty in this country. Mr. Lincoln has learned upon that point nothing new. His convictions about slavery are substantially now what they have always been. So firm view of his military power over it was exactly the same when he nullified the orders of Generals Frémont and Hunter that it was when he issued the final order of January 1, 1863. But his convictions as a lawyer, and his power as a magistrate to fulfil them, are entirely different. He had no doubt, as appears from his letters to Generals Frémont and Hunter, that he had the right to emancipate slaves as a military measure, and he certainly had no doubt that slavery was the root of the rebellion. But he did not, for that reason, think it wise to begin the work of emancipation. For he was acting not upon his own convictions as to slavery and its relation to the war, but upon his conviction of what was wisest to be done under all the circumstances. And he acted otherwise he might have been a very good man, but he would certainly have been a very poor officer.

It is not, therefore, the President who is growing, but the popular conviction upon the subject of slavery. And we certainly know no man who has more faithfully and more patiently watered it than Mr. Phillips. His work in arousing the public mind to the real issue of our times is already as historic as that of James Otis at an earlier day. Like him, he has been, of course, hated and defamed by the intetest he attacks, and also, like him, has often outrun the sympathy and tried the patience of many friends of the cause he serves. But in censuring him his critics should understand exactly his position. It is that of a man who will not be content with any thing done long as any thing remains to do; who believes that selfishness is always alert, and that the only way for men and nations not to go backward is to go forward. But to go forward they must not be hindered, and, in urging must often be sharp and stern. While, therefore, he is glad of every step gained, he leaves to others the joint ringing down of congratulation. For himself he steps forward and asks, What next?

Now this is the spirit which saves society. It is real genius, earnest and manly, which the man inspired by it may be. It must be always in the minority; for the moment the path is accepted and popular the pioneer is already far out of sight, seeking new impediments. It seems often rough and unfeeling; for sleepers can not be always or wisely roused by gentle taps and soothing tones. And this is of this spirit, of which the career of Mr. Phillips is our most complete illustration, is to discover in good things how they may be made better; in him men may become more and more of America more American. The President, for instance, can supply reasons enough for what he has done. Mr. Phillips would supply public opinion with reasons for asking him to do more. These reasons may be good or bad; but a man whose purity of life and nobility of character, no less than his genius command the public confidence, class him among the truest Americans, is not to be disposed of as a scold or a professional caviler. For it is precisely such men as he who have kept the sacred fire of liberty burning in this country, while other men sneered and slept.

FIRST IN THE FIELD.

AT length General M'Clellan is first in the field. More unfortunate in his friends than in his enemies, he has been formally nominated for the Presidency by a knot of gentlemen in Philadelphia, of whom—to make an intelligible ball—the only one who is publicly known has been long ago forgotten. For the Hon. Amos Kendall is only remembered with powerful pity as the Postmaster-General of the United States, who tampered with the mails at the bidding of the master of the men who are now rebels. That he should preside at a convention to nominate or to ratify the nomination of a candidate for the Presidency who, since his letter to Judge Woodward, must be considered a Copperhead of the clearest type, shows that he is of the same mind still, and that his age worships the dreary old idol of his youth.

Alas! we think of two years ago, when, amidst universal acclamation, General M'Clellan was called to the head of our armies, with the hope and faith of a nation lavished upon him in advance, with thousands and thousands of our best and bravest soldiers committed joyfully to his charge, with the President, his only superior officer, resolved to give him every chance, with the national determination that he was a great soldier because a great soldier was a national necessity—when we think of all that fond and persistent blindness in which we slumbered, and of all that has followed since down to the letter urging the election of Judge Woodward—it is hard not to hang the head with sorrow for the soldier and shame for the nation. But when from that letter we descend, although logically, to this nomination, the tragedy becomes farce, and it is impossible not to explode with laughter.

For genuine fun there is to a very great man, in this the body of politicians who have ever shown any true perception of the public sentiment? Did this not spell gentlemen, by whatever name they choose to call themselves, ever do more than make themselves politically ridiculous? When they nominated Mr. Fillmore in 1856, and Mr. Bell in 1860, they intended to help the slaveholders as they do now. They were in the political market, but they never pretended, as now, to lay hands upon the price they had paid in by handling. They offered their flabby little veal chops, and knew that the great beef dealers would buy them up. But this time they put their bill of fare in print, and then, upon the baron itself. Do they seriously expect the Copperhead Convention to take a candidate from them?

General M'Clellan will perhaps thank Mr. Amos Kendall and his friends for this expression of their good-will, but will await a more emphatic indication from the public desire. Or he may delay, and give time for that outburst of popular enthusiasm which we have been constantly assured was to follow the presentation of his name to the country. Or, again, he may accept the nomination upon the platform of his Woodward letter. Or he may let the whole matter go by default. But it is useless to consider what he may do. The nomination, when you remember, as every man will, that all the friends of Vallandigham, all the apologists of the rebellion, all the Copperheads in the country will ratify it. And can any man, or any course, which the Copperheads approve save the honor of the nation, the integrity of the Union, and republican government? It may be a loyal citizen, and may think that justice has not been done to General M'Clellan; but you can not evade that searching question, and you can give it but one answer.

OUR MEN AT RICHMOND.

THAT the rebels give the best food they can to our prisoners in their hands may be true, but the best food is neither plenty enough nor of the right kind for them. We know of a letter of late date from General Neal Dow, at the Libby Prison in Richmond, in which he says that he has at his table rice mixed with a little water—in other words, flour paste. Of course the fate of the private soldiers is worse than his; and an eye-witness of the return of our starved soldiers to Annapolis describes to us their suffering condition as incredible.

This, then, is the way in which the rebels make good their threat of the black flag. They do not massacre, but they use new impediments. It seems often rough and unfeeling; for sleepers can not be always or wisely roused by gentle taps and soothing tones. And this is of this spirit, of which the career of Mr. Phillips is our most complete illustration, is to discover in good things how they may be made better; in him men may become more and more of America more American. The President, for instance, can supply reasons enough for what he has done. Mr. Phillips would supply public opinion with reasons for asking him to do more. These reasons may be good or bad; but a man whose purity of life and nobility of character, no less than his genius command the public confidence, class him among the truest Americans, is not to be disposed of as a scold or a professional caviler. For it is precisely such men as he who have kept the sacred fire of liberty burning in this country, while other men sneered and slept.

Do not let us become callous to the tales of horror which reach us every day from Richmond merely because they are incessant. Let the hapless prisoners who are there, and the soldiers in the field who have that possible fate before them, understand that the people hear their sighs and comprehend their fears, and will insist that in this matter the rebels shall be held to the sternest account.

SOLDIER'S PAY.

NOW that, in obedience to the demands of national common-sense, colored men are enrolled as soldiers, every citizen ought to insist that they shall have exactly the same treatment, chance, and pay as other soldiers. Hitherto they have been paid, under a general law regulating the labor of contrabands, ten dollars a month. This sum was offered to the freemen of the Massachusetts Fifty-fourth, the first colored regiment raised in the Free States, and they declined it. The State of Massachusetts then resolved to pay the soldiers the difference, and Major Emerson was sent with the money to Morris Island. But they declined that. Was this unreasonable upon their part? Let us see.

These men, free citizens of the United States, were enlisted in Massachusetts under the express written guarantee of the Secretary of War to the Governor of Massachusetts that they were to stand exactly upon the same footing with all other soldiers. Every body who knows the feelings of the Secretary of War in this matter knows that such was his wish. With that solemn assurance the men were mustered in, and have proved themselves as heroic and docile and patient as soldiers can be. And they simply decline any thing less than bare justice. They do not mutiny. They make no trouble whatever. They say simply that the United States Government pledged its honor, and they will wait the fulfillment of the pledge.

Is this unreasonable? Would any white regiment do otherwise? And have we a right to require of men, whom we are so ready to call less than men, more than our own average manhood?

The remedy is immediate and thorough. Instead of wasting time in abusing men who merely claim what we all confess that we owe, let us urge upon Congress the passage of a law to pay these soldiers of the Union army exactly what other soldiers are paid. For if we reproach those who ask for higher wages than others get for the same service, what shall we say of ourselves who hesitate for a moment in agreeing to the demand? The Secretary of War has recommended the passage of the necessary law. Is it unreasonable in the soldiers concerned quietly to await its passage?

A NOBLE PUBLIC INTEREST.

THERE has been another illustration of the generous manly art of self-defense. The London papers give copious details. The news is transmitted across the sea as an affair of public interest. The story has large headings in our own papers. But what is it? Simply that one man has tried to squeeze the breath out of another and failed, while the other pommeled the squeezer to a jelly. There are several columns of the story. There are editorials in the Times, in the Saturday Review, in almost all of the great papers. It is very fine, it is very noble, it is manly, and full of the true heroic art of self-defense; but there was a much more remarkable occurrence in London a few weeks ago, which has most lamentably failed of that universal popular interest which waits upon the reduction of a big man to a jelly.

A man in London called a cab at a railway station just after dark. He and his wife and two children stepped in and the driver drove as directed. On the way the cabman is told to stop at a public house for some porter. It is drunk by the passengers, and the cab driven out. By-and-by the gentleman calls to the driver to let him out, but to drop the lady and children at a certain point. The gentleman moves off; the cab drives away, and when it reaches that point and cabby alights and opens the door he sees the woman and children dead; murdered in a cab quietly driving in the evening through London streets. Here is a matter infinitely more remarkable and important than the beating a man to a jelly; but alas! it has had no large headings, and doubtless many a reader now knows it for the first time.

If two men should train themselves to lift heavy weights, and then strike each other with sledge-hammers, it would be just the same thing as hardening their muscle to iron and then fighting with their fists. But why is it manly? Why is it any thing but a wretchedly debauching of man? Why should any body feel a livelier or more elevated interest in it than in the butting and goring of prize bulls? Of course we do not deny that there is the profoundest interest. But why is that particular form of brutality, and utter want of every distinctive manly trait, so fascinating that it must be elaborately reported, and thoroughly discussed upon? The persons who congregate to see the show are bullies, blacklegs, sharpers, the dregs of human society. Their haunts are the dens of ignorance, bestiality, and infamy. The encounter is an outrage upon the law and common decency. Why, then, should respectable papers do more than chronicle the fact that they do all other events painful or pleasing, elevating or disgusting? Would there be the public interest which they plead in justification if they did not pander to it?

A MYSTERY.

THE rebels resolved some time since that all our colored troops taken in war should be handed over to the State authorities and their officers hung. Since then we have heard of the hanging of all officers and men in Arkansas, and we know of the probable capture at others. How true is the Arkansas story, and what is the fate of such prisoners? The President promptly and righteously declared that he should retaliate for any ill-usage they might receive. But is care taken to ascertain their precise condition? We have already a colored army. The examinations for commissions in it are properly careful and strict. The officers are men of character and conviction, as well as of military skill and personal courage. They are among the best and noblest in the land, and they face peculiar perils. Does the Government know at this moment how many such officers, with their men, are prisoners, and what their treatment is? If not, is it not especially bound to ascertain? When it invites young men to peculiar peril, does it mean to surround them with less than ordinary care?

We ask the questions not supposing that there is neglect, but because of the singular mystery which overhangs the whole subject. Of every officer, for instance, who fell or was captured at the assault upon Fort Wagner we have accounts, except of Captain Cabot Russell of the colored regiment. Had he fallen, the space was so small and the struggle so brief that the death of an officer of his rank would have been surely known and reported. But to General Gilmore's request to know if he were taken Beauregard returned answer that there was no such person.

If the resolution of the rebels has been carried into effect, many of these men have been sold into slavery or put to death, the duty of the Government is plain enough. But can it do nothing to solve the terrible doubt?

MY LORD SETTINGTON AGAIN.

It will be remembered that a young English gentleman, known as Lord Hartington, was in this country last winter, and signalized his visit by insulting all faithful American citizens by wearing a rebel badge in the drawing-rooms of Mr. Aspinwall Belmont, for which he was not reproved by his host, but was called to account by a young Union officer. The fact is not a private one, for it was the subject of universal public comment at the time.

This promising sprig of the British aristocracy does not seem to have learned from experience the danger of meddling with edged tools. He has lately been making a speech abusing this country, and especially New England. He also referred to Mr. Colden's late speech at Rochdale. Upon which his lordship received the following letter:

MONTREAL, 29th Dec., 1863.

MY LORD.—You will, perhaps, be good enough to take an early opportunity of correcting, publicly, your error—a bad almost said reckless—perversion of the remarks which fell from me in the course of an address at Rochdale.

While with my pen in hand, permit me to add, that, with better opportunities than your lordship of studying the system of popular education and the state of society in the New England States, I have always thought much greater accuracy in what you stated to the Hottingham meeting on those subjects than in what you said of myself. I quote the honor to be, my lord, your obedient servant,

THE MARQUIS OF HARTINGTON, M.P., &c. &c. &c. R. COLDEN.

There is a punishment known in infant schools as sitting down hard. Perhaps the Marquis of Hartington knows something about it.

WESTERN STUDENTS.

THE University of Michigan, the leading college of the West, has some eight hundred students. Three years ago the fair proportion of Sophomore Copperheads to true men in the free States—lately went to see Vallandigham, and were regaled with rebel sympathy. They put their performance into the papers. It echoed through the country. The young men, then, are traitors, and accept Vallandigham as their idea and abuse of their country and Government as their doctrine? So many a man wondered, but the students of the University have answered the question for themselves. They held a meeting and passed this resolution, with others of the truest tone:

Resolved, That we feel deeply concerned and justly indignant that the University of Michigan, whose unflinching support of the Union has been so greatly assisted by the long "army list" and the unlimited enlistments of its rebles and most promising sons, should be brought under the unmerited censure of the press and other men by the ill-concerted holiday freak or thirty-five adventurers, seeking notoriety through their disgraceful exhibitions; and who represent neither the honor, intelligence, nor patriotism of the eight hundred men who constitute the membership.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

CONGRESS.

SENATE.—December 21. Petitions presented for exemption of clergymen from draft. Mr. Sumner gave notice of bill for confiscating lands, and substituted resolution requesting the Postmaster-General to report whether legislation is necessary for new railroad line between Washington and New York.—Select Committee on Pacific Railroad appointed.—Mr. Wilson introduced bill prohibiting members of Congress from acting as counsel where the United States are concerned.—Mr. Howe submitted resolution requesting to Secretary for payment, of the amount of notes of public loan paid to Mr. Fessenden.—Resolution for promotion up various commanders proposed by the Committee was amended by adding exemplary commanders, and was rejected by a vote of 33 to 8. Mr. Hendricks proposed amendment that the naval forces be divided into three classes, the first to include unmarried persons between the ages of twenty-one and thirty-five years, to be enrolled in all others, not to be called into service until the first class had been called out. Mr. Wilson introduced the Conference report on appropriations in the army.—Mr. Wade introduced bill for reorganization, under penalty of fine, imprisonment, and disqualification for office, any member of Congress from voting on matters of claim in any court or military tribunal, in which the United States is directly or indirectly a party, or from receiving any compensation for services, in any such case, before any department, bureau, office, or board of Government.—Resolution referred to Committee on the Judiciary.—Mr. Sumner introduced his Collection Act, which is the law of March, 1863, and which not only such enrollment has not been made: adopted.—Mr. Trumbull moved notice of inquiry as to granting without a command equal to a brigade, etc., was taken up and adopted.—Pending this question the Senate then adjourned till January 5.

HOUSE.—December 21. After minor business bill appropriating $100,000 for payment of men called out for home defense in the Missouri Department, was passed.—The bill making appropriation for the Military Academy was passed.—Mr. Johnson offered resolution that as the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania had decided the conscription to be unconstitutional, it is the duty of the Executive either to acquiesce or to bring the question before the Supreme Court of the United States: laid on the table by 74 to 58.—The Senate amendments to the $30,000,000 bounty bill were concurred with: bill passed.—December 22. Select Committee on National Bankrupt Law appointed.—Mr. Spaulding Chairman.—The Secretary of War sent in General McClellan's report of his operations while General-in-Chief and Commander of the Army of the Potomac.—Mr. Fenton, from Committee on Military Affairs, reported bill to facilitate the payment of bounties and arrears due to deceased soldiers.—Mr. Schenck, from the same committee, reported bill to create the office of Paymaster-General, and also bill repealing part of the Enrollment bill; designed to unite the two classes of enrolled men: debate ensued, in the course of which Mr. Ancona offered a proposition to amend the Constitution, and declared slavery to be unconstitutional, because it takes from the States the question of their rights, and turning the Committees to bring in a bill for the repeal of the act, and the substitution of a more constitutional one.—Mr. Wood opposed the filling up our armies; Mr. Schenck said that the committee would not report a repeal, but would have numerous amendments to make it more effective.—Mr. Myers introduced a bill requiring the Secretary of War to, in paying the claims which permits its expenditure free of charge.—Mr. Dawes, from Committee on Claims, to-day.—Mr. Morehead introduced resolution requiring inquiry into the Improvement of the navigation of the Ohio River.—The House adjourned to January 5.

VIRGINIA.

No important movements on the line of the Armies of the Potomac are reported. General Meade has issued an order granting a furlough of thirty days to officers and men re-enlisting, and directing that when three-fourths of the officers and men of any regiment have re-enlisted as a company or regiment they will be entitled to return home, taking its arms and equipments. An ordinance includes that the two counties in Virginia in which the rebels have their positions—are upon the north side of the Rappahannock and Rapidan, the enemy is now on the south.

AVERILL'S EXPEDITION.

A brilliant account of the expedition of General Averill, who commands in Western Virginia, has been received, the object of which was to break the line of communication between the Confederate armies in Virginia and Tennessee. Two thousand cavalry were employed, with the object of misleading the enemy, all of which were successfully executed. The expedition left Beverly on the 20th ultimo to General Averill. On the 8th of December he started from Huntersville, with about two thousand men, two regiments and a battery, marching almost due south, through Pocahontas County, directly through the most secret arsenic in Virginia and Tennessee. On the 10th he struck the line of the Virginia & Tennessee Railroad in the work of destruction. The telegraphic wire was cut, three miles of the road was torn up, and the rails twisted, the track torn up, bridges and culverts destroyed for a space of 25 miles; that is, from Wytheville to Max Meadows. The enemy in the mean time had learned of his position and purposes, and sent six regiments of infantry and artillery, without generals, to intercept him on his return. They took possession of every road and ford by which retreat was thought possible. One road, which crossed the tops of the Alleghanies, and was very difficult, Averill's men mastered. By this Averill made his escape, carrying off with his material with the exception of the artillery, which were burned in order to increase the teams of the pieces. He came in on the rail via Gauley Bridge, after crossing a river, 4 wounded, and about 90 missing. He captured about 200 prisoners, and destroyed 1,000 stand of arms and of their inability to walk. In his report General Averill says: "The enemy was rebuilt as rapidly as we destroyed it, put in the icy mountains and the icy roads. I was forced to swim my command and drag my artillery with ropes across Gray's Creek seven times in twenty-four hours. The horses have suffered severely for want of proper country, and the officers and men have suffered cold, hunger, fatigue, and constant exposure. Many command has marched, climbed, slid, and swam 295 miles in 12 days." General Averill adds that the destruction of the is "one of the most hazardous, important, and successful raids since the commencement of the war. Its importance is not to be measured by the less actually sustained by the destruction of property, but by the delay and total direct communication between the armies of Lee and Longstreet.

TENNESSEE.

Nothing of definite importance is reported from the army in Tennessee. Longstreet's attack on Knoxville has been repulsed to the command of the rebel army formerly commanded by Bragg, and now by Hardee. The attack is reported to be in the neighborhood of Dalton, Georgia. Longstreet, it appears, has retired to the north of the 14th of December by a portion of our troops in pursuit as Dean's Station, Strawberry Plains, and Kelly's Ford, on the road through Southern sources, our troops fell back. The Confederates, it is said, say: "Averill's command consists of the enemy retreated toward Knoxville; we captured seventy wagon-loads of stores and ammunition, and 200 men. We killed and wounded was 600; 375 prisoners have come in." The Union loss in the affair was given.

CHARLESTON.

The report of disaster to the Ironsides and "Monitors" engaged in the attack upon Fort Sumter and the Charleston continues to be carried on. A fire took place on Fort Sumter on the night of the 19th, which was put out. Sharp firing is exchanged between the batteries and the ironclads, and the former appear to be slightly damaged, inflicting considerable damage. The latest accounts, received at Washington, are to the 22d inst. Operations on the 20th and 21th 12th shells were thrown into the city, but the fire from the forts was very slow, and the ironclads is not stated, destroying ten or twelve buildings, and killing and wounding several persons. The heaviest fire from three guns at Fort Gregg, one at Cumming's Point, and one at the Middle Battery. The fire from the ironclads on the 20th between our gun-boats and the Confederate batteries on Cumming's Point. The latest accounts represent that it is to have been a drawn battle; that they are no one killed and five wounded. On the night of the 20th the rebels were engaged in throwing up earthworks, and erecting new batteries on Cumming's Point, which the enemy are trying to prevent by heavy fire from their ironclads.

ARKANSAS.

A strong Union feeling is being developed in Arkansas. Several Representatives elected to Congress in the fall of election. The reports of the abandonment of the rebel cause by the people are numerous. The Memphis Bulletin of December 16th, from Fort Smith, stating that the Choctaw chiefain, Peter Pitchlynn, had surrendered himself to the Federals and surrendered themselves to General McNeil. They were then paroled and sent home. Also that Colonel Cooper, the naval themselves of the President's Amnesty Proclamation, so as to embrace the case of Pitchlynn. Commissioners being selected at Washington.

THE "ALABAMA."

The Alabama has turned up in the Eastern seas. In October she left Cape Town for the Straits of Sunda, and at the month made her appearance at the port of Malacca, and did not stay long. The British steamer Sunda, which left apparently early in November, she had captured and burned a number of vessels in the neighborhood of Malacca. One was the Amanda, bound from Manilla to Cork, the other the Tycoon, bound from Hong Kong to New York.

EXCHANGE OF PRISONERS.

It was supposed that arrangements had been made to secure an exchange of prisoners. The case of Colonel Butler, to whom the matter has been committed, was for the present postponed, and the prisoners sent to Fort Lafayette back. The rebel Government then refused any further exchange, since they had no more Union officers to offer which our Government has been contending, and their have in regard to officers and soldiers in negro regiments are recognized. They also refused to receive a flag of truce from General Butler, or to negotiate with him on the subject of exchange, because as Jeff Davis's proclamation outlawing General Butler last year. They have also refused to receive any further supplies for our suffering prisoners.

PASSPORTS FROM NEW YORK.

An order has been issued by the Government prohibiting any vessels from putting to sea from the port of New York until they, their crews, and passengers, have been examined by the authorities; all suspicious persons will be arrested, and the transmission of arms and munitions of war will be prevented. It is said that the existence of a considerable trade with the enemy in these articles has been discovered, and several arrests of prominent merchants on this account have been made. The general plan has been to send revolvers, percussion caps, and similar articles, in packages supposed to contain provisions, apparently to California. Arriving at Panama, the goods are taken off, by orders from the shippers, and sent through Mexico to the Confederate States.

SOUTHERN TRADE.

The Confederate Congress has passed a new Military bill, which enacts that "All musicians, privates, and noncommissioned officers now in the military service of the States, by virtue of volunteering, enlistment, or conscription into the military service of the Confederate States, and the same are hereby retained in the said service for the war during the existence thereof, unless sooner discharged by law." A bill has been passed imposing a tax of 10 per cent upon the value of all sweepstakes in the entire South.——A resolution has been adopted confiscating the real estate of all persons in the Confederacy who hold by alien enemies; the same principles is to be applied to all property of persons not amenable by delivery.

The Richmond papers contain statistics from which they arrive at the following results within the Confederate lines: contains provisions sufficient to support the whole army of Virginia and the population of the State.

Governor Clarke, of Mississippi, has issued a proclamation requiring all persons between 18 and 45 to enter the service before the 1st of March. Those below or above that age will be liable to be called into service in same as citizens.

North Carolina, North Carolina, has for some time been the only Confederate port with any considerable trade; but now, as a result of the victories in captured vessels, may now be considered effectually blockaded. Accordingly the Richmond papers state that the usual exportation of cotton shipped thence during the year is less than 20,000 bales, but that this has been shipped by blockade runners from all other ports east of the Mississippi; the whole sent abroad by the rebels during the year will not exceed 40,000 bales, against more than 4,000,000 exported the year before the rebellion.

General Forrest, commanding at Atlanta, has issued an order threatening arrest and confiscation of property against all who refuse Confederate money.

The Legislature of Texas has refused to pass a resolution repealing Congress to repudiate the Confederate Treasury notes legal tender.

The Richmond Inquirer says that in case colored soldiers are "sent to the field and put in battle none will be taken prisoners—they will be shot down on the spot by the score. If any negroes have been captured during the year of soldiers in the service, they will be shot down like dogs."

FOREIGN NEWS.

GREAT BRITAIN.

A PRIZE fight between Heenan, an American, and King, an Englishman, which came off on the 8th of December, created much excitement in the Province of Leinster. The fight was for £200. King was victorious, after a terrible struggle of about half an hour.

The British Government seem to be determined to prevent the building of war vessels in Great Britain for the Confederates. Besides the rams heretofore seized, the steamer Pampero has been seized at Liverpool. On the 22d December, by order of the Lord Advocate of Scotland, Commissioner Adair, with a force of marines thereto, have broken out in India. Some of the Hill Tribes assisted in the Lushai Expedition, but they have been repulsed. Two British officers were killed and five wounded. 150 British troops have been killed and wounded.—Lord Elgin, the Governor-General of India, died on the 20th of December, and will be succeeded by Sir John Lawrence.

THE EUROPEAN CONGRESS.

Several of the European Powers have replied formally to the proposal of the French Emperor for a general Congress. Austria and Prussia accept, Great Britain absolutely declined to take part.

The reply of the Czar is cordial in terms, and professes a readiness to join in the scheme on certain conditions. It should be remembered, however, "if your Majesty's proposition lead to a loyal understanding between the sovereigns; but it must be first realized in order that any act proceed from the consent of the other Great Powers. It is indispensable that the Congress should define the question upon which an understanding should be arrived at, and that both agree to submit to the decision to be arrived at by the Congress." The Polish question is the leading one, it is assumed that the reply of Russia will contain a refusal.

The King of Prussia is quite ready to take part in a Congress, but thinks the Minister of the Interior of different States should prepare the proposals to be submitted for consideration. It is said that the Emperor of Austria is most anxious to form the foundation of the European peace, and that the Czar is cordial in his reception of the proposal.

The Emperor of Austria, in his reply, wished to know the programme of the Congress. To this the Minister added a dispatch, insisting that the French Government should define the question to be submitted to them, that the Austrian Government could decide upon the advantage of taking part in it.

The Pope seems to the proposal, and declare that he shall "protest against the establishment in Catholic countries of the real pre-eminence naturally appertaining to the Holy See, and which it has ever held." Russia, Italy, Denmark, and Greece seem to the proposal in the most cordial terms.

The King of the Belgians answers dubiously. "It would be desirable," he says, "to be in effect of a pacific movement the existing causes of anxiety in Europe could be settled." But he adds that the Government is declaring that his Government "would be quite inclined to join in it, so far as its rights." The King of Portugal answers coldly in his reply, lays down certain conditions precedent, and says that "it will be for the Cabinet to decide upon the invitation, and take part in the Congress, by sending a special plenipotentiary, or would be thing with the members of the Confederation who had received individual invitations.

MEXICO.

In Mexico every thing appears to be in utter confusion. The French are fighting with the Juarez guerrillas every day. General Comonfort was killed on the 31th of November, fighting for the Juarez Government, or by a band of robbers, is a matter of doubt.

CENTRAL AMERICA.

For many months a war has been going on between the States of Guatemala and Salvador, the advantages being on the side of the latter. A decisive battle, it is said, took place, about the close of September, shut up in the capital, and shortly thereafter the Salvadorian blood a surrender when Barrios received to cut his way through the beleaguering force. He succeeded in doing so with the most terrible loss of the latter. Most of these were killed or captured during the march through a hostile country, and left the General with a few followers at last succeeded in reaching the coast, where he found a British man-of-war steamer, which conveyed him to Panama, whence he took passage for Europe.

Troubles have broken out between Ecuador and the United States in consequence of the seizure of arms which are obscure. The Ecuadorian General Flores has marched on the New Granadian territory, capturing the town of Ipiales.

Honduras is likely to be agitated by a dispute as to the Presidency. It seems that when Guardiola was assassinated, a couple of years ago, the Presidency was assumed for the remainder of his term by the Senator Medina. At the recent election Medina was elected by a small majority. He then announced the Congress to meet in February, expecting that this body would declare him elected, upon what grounds we do not know.—Nicaragua is in echo way involved in the quarrel between Salvador and Guatemala. Costa Rica seems to be the only Central American State which remains tranquil.

ARMY AND NAVY ITEMS.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL MICHAEL CORCORAN died on Tuesday, the 28d of December, at Fairfax Court House, Virginia, from injuries received by a fall from his horse. General CORCORAN was born in Carrickfest, Slige County, Ireland, on the 21st of September, 1827, and emigrated to this city in 1849. In the summer of 1859 he became Colonel of the Sixty-ninth Regiment. He was being court-martialed for his refusal to take part in the reception given to the Prince of Wales when the rebellion broke out. His regiment was mustered, and he was allowed to take command of it. At the first battle of Bull Run he was wounded and taken prisoner, and remained in confinement for thirteen months. He was released in August, 1862, when he returned to this city, upon which occasion he was honored with one of the most brilliant receptions which New York ever gave. He then received his rank as Brigadier-General and commanded the regiments. The CORCORAN Legion, which he has since led on the battle-field.

A few days ago JOSEPH LÉVE, alias JOHN KENDALL, a conscript or substitute from Thirty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers, was shot at Morris Island for desertion.

Major-General BUTLER has been in Fort Lookout on a tour of inspection among hospitals and prisons. There has been some rumor of an intention on the part of some rebels to release the prisoners confined at that point, and of a readiness to revolt among the prisoners themselves. This was doubtless the occasion of his mission.

On Christmas-day the Rondout arrived at Hampton Roads at noon, steaming our flag. The Minnesota replied.

The steamer New York left City Point on the 25th, with two hundred deserters, for Dutch Gap Canal.

A few days ago the New Orleans steam-ship George Cromwell was seized by Marshal MURRAY, with a large quantity of powder and percussion caps were found on board. Several persons were arrested. A suspicious appearance were arrested. The shipment of the materials of war—which are supposed to be intended for the rebels—was traced to a certain prominent house in Cortlend Street. The goods were found to be the property of one of the authorities—no doubt for good reason—and it is therefore enveloped in some mystery for the present.

The steamer Peterhof has been put in commission at the Brooklyn Navy-yard as a thorough man-of-war, carrying ten guns, and will be ready for service in the most successful manner. She will in a few days be ready for active service.

Captain WILLIAM W. BADGER, who was dismissed from the 13th Regiment N. Y. Forty-fifth New York Volunteers in August last, for an alleged insult to his colonel and lieutenant-colonel, has been honorably restored to the rebel LINCOLN, and has been appointed a captain in the Irondequoit Regiment, Forty-fifth New York Volunteers, now in Louisiana. In the mean time the offended colonel and lieutenant-colonel have been honorably restored to their commands by the same Government. Captain BADGER leaves for New Orleans to-day.

It is stated that the Confederacy has sent Commissioners to Ireland to recruit clandestinely for the rebel army. Several have been sent to the United States, and have safely returned from Richmond. The plan is said to be as follows: Recruiting agents are to be provided a suspicious stating that 500 or 500 laborers, 100 mechanics, 50 clerks, etc., are required for immediate and permanent employments. The applicants are told that their passage will be paid free to Nassau, and that their transportation thence will be guaranteed there. Blockade-running steamers are to run at CORK and other ports to convey recruits for Canada to their destination.

Two steamers and eighteen rebels have, within the last few days, been released from the Old Capitol and allowed to go North, bearing a flag of truce. Amongst them are two hundred rebels who have expressed a desire to do likewise.

The Senate have postponed the period at which the three hundred dollar bounties are to cease from the 5th of January to the 1st of February next, and the bill will probably be put off for the same length of time.

The Second Connecticut Cavalry, A. Fifth Vermont, and Private —— BROWNE, Company B; Third Vermont Regiment, Company K, have been promoted a sergeant-major for desertion and found guilty were executed on December 19.

Commodore MONTGOMERY will relieve Commodore HARstone of the command of the Charleston blockading fleet on the 1st of January. At the same time the popular commander officer of the Canandaigua, Captan MARCY, will assume the command of the Potomac flotilla.

It is said that the Eastern Gulf Coast Rebels Blockading Squadron will be relieved from duty in the Chesapeake with the North River, by the arrival of the Potomac flotilla.

On Wednesday evening, December 23, General Burnside arrived at Providence. Governor SMITH met him at Dépôt, and a Major-General's Salute was fired.

In the skirmish which took place a short time ago at Rood's Station, the enemy admit a loss of 600 killed and wounded.

All the officers, soldiers, and sailors, captured at Galveston, Texas, have not been paroled, and are on the way to New Orleans.

The gallant number of re-enlistments into the Veteran corps from the Army of the Potomac is estimated at ten thousand.

The Soldiers' Relief Bureau of Boston will pay over one hundred and forty thousand dollars to the Sanitary Commission.

The United States steamer Massachusetts arrived at Hilton Head on the 20th inst. She had been chased by three rebel privateers, and also a portion of the obstructions which the rebels had placed in the channel of Charleston harbor.

Private —— New York regiment which has re-enlisted in the Sixth New York Cavalry, Colonel DAVIES. It has left Washington for the front.

Brigadier-General ROBERT O. TYLER has been relieved of his command and ordered to report to Major-General Halleck, lately commanded by CORCORAN.

The duty of superintending the exchange of prisoners has been transferred from General MEREDITH to General BUTLER, and a new regime will at once be inaugurated.

Several officers and soldiers of the rebel army have come into the Union lines at Newbern, North Carolina, and have taken the oath of allegiance, and expressed a gratified desire for Mr. LINCOLN's recent Proclamation.

The number of rebel deserters now at about to do the same thing.

On December 28 COLLINS and MCKENNA, two of the Chesapeake pirates, were arrested and brought before the police magistrate, Mr. BERGEN.

Lieutenant-Commander MCCREA, of the gun-boat Kensington, has captured a rebel schooner, the Caroline, with a valuable cargo of cotton, turpentine, and bound from Mobile to Havana. Her cargo, it is supposed, includes two hundred and fifty bales of cotton.

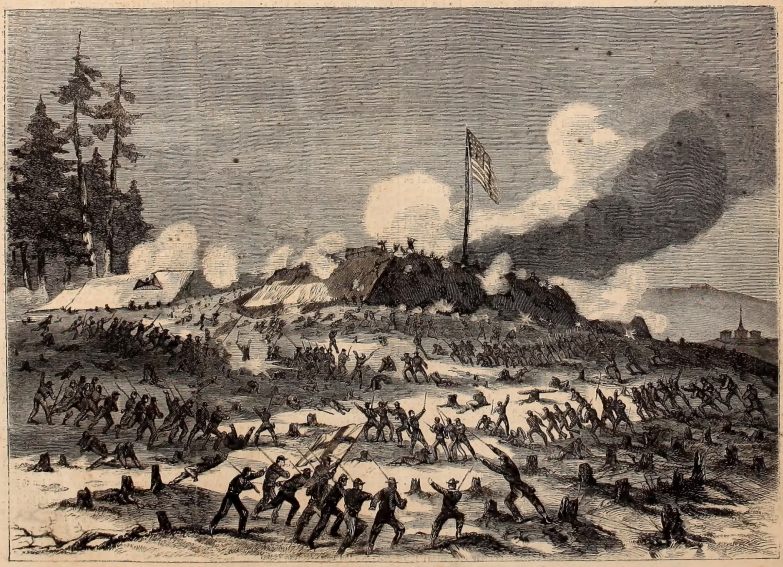
The Richmond papers are despondent over the effects of General AVERILL's late raid.

A new cemetery, called the Chattanooga United States Cemetery, has been established [illegible] and any soldier who has fallen in the vicinity of [illegible] will now be properly interred but in such a manner as to secure him readily his identification by his friends.

The trouble in the Ordnance Department at Alexandria will foot up millions. The Secretary of War has taken the matter in hand. These frauds have been in progress seven months.

HEAD-QUARTERS OF GENERAL THOMAS—THE CAPTURED CANNON.—SKETCHED BY MR. THEODORE R. DAVIS.—[SEE PAGE 24.]

CHARGE OF COLONEL CREIGHTON'S BRIGADE AT THE BATTLE OF RINGGOLD.—SKETCHED BY MR. THEODORE R. DAVIS.—[SEE PAGE 23.]



FORT SAUNDERS ASSAULTED BY A PORTION OF LONGSTREET'S CORPS.—SKETCHED BY MR. THEODORE R. DAVIS.—[SEE PAGE 23.]

LOOKOUT.

[The following stirring poem was sent by Dr. Meigs, of Philadelphia, father of General M. C. Meigs, whose vivid description of the "Battle in the Clouds" has become classic, to his son, with a note, in which he says: "If my verses were worthy of being presented to General Hooker I should be glad to give them to him, with the blessing of an old man, who has many a time prayed to God in his behalf, and is now thankful and proud for the honor with which his life has been crowned."]

LISTY, right! left, right!—
Left, right!—March!
Steady, men! so—
For aloft we go
To rescue our country from tyrant and foe.
Not a word, my good men—not a sound,
Save the tramp of your feeble round.
Till you win the mountain's topmost head,
Where trenches and bulwarks stand circling them round.

Not a shout! no hurrah!
Not a musket-shot,
Nor the scream of a shell,
As nearer you draw;
Not a trumpet's blare,
Nor a bugle's note,
Till, blind with the daze
Of our tyrants' blaze,
Your loud hurrah shall sound their knell.
Left, right! left, right!
Steadily, ye firemen!—So!
Now forward we go,
Rushing o'er shattels, breast-work, and wall,
Victorious, in triumph o'er slavery's fall,
Shouting peans. To to our glorious stars!
Hurrahing loud anthems to the Red, White, and Blue!

As they fly with their bright constellation of light,
Proclaiming to traitors and tyrants inditht
That "Victory the Wingless" dwells ever with you.

VERY HARD CASH.

By CHARLES READE, Esq.

AUTHOR OF "IT IS NEVER TOO LATE TO MEND," ETC.

CHAPTER LVIII.

THEY all thought in their innocence that Hardie v. Hardie was now at an end. Captain Dodd could give Alfred's sol-diant opinion for him in simple truth. But Compton let them know that this evidence had come too late. "What, may we not get at and say here it papa, and it is all true?" cried Julia, indignant.

"No, Miss Dodd, certainly not, our case is closed."

"But suppose I insist on doing it?"

"Then you will be put out of court, Miss Dodd."

"Much I care, Mr. Compton."

He smiled, but convinced them.

Well then they would all go as spectators, and pray that justice might prevail.

They did go: and all sat together to hear a matter puzzled over, which had David come one day earlier he would have set at rest forever.

Dick Absolom was put in to prove that Alfred had put two sovereigns on the stump for him to bowl if he could; and after him the defendant, Mr. Thomas Hardie, a mild, benevolent, weak gentleman was put into the box, and swore the boy's father had come to him with story after story of the plaintiff's madness, and the trouble it would get him into; and so he had done for the best. His simplicity was manifest, and Saunders worked it ably. When Colt got hold of him, and helped him, he showed something more than simplicity. He stuttered, he contradicted himself, he perspired, he all but wept.

Colt.—Are you sure you had no spite against him?

Def.—Nd.

Colt.—You are not sure, eh?

This candid interpretation of his words knocked him stupid. He made no reply, but looked utterly ill-used pained.

Colt.—Did he not provoke you? Did he not call you an idiot?

Def.—He might.

Colt (satirically).—Of course he might (Laughter). But did he?

Def. (plucking up a little spirit).—No. He called me SORT TODDY.

This revelation, and the singular appropriateness of the nickname, were so highly relished by an intelligent audience, that it was a long time before the trial could go on for roars. The plaintiff's ringing laugh was heard among the rest.

The cross-examination proceeded in this style till the defendant began to drivel at the mouth a little. At last, after a struggle, he said, with a piteous look, that he could not help it—he hated signing his name; some mischief always came of it; but this time he had no option.

"No option?" said Colt. "What do you mean?"

And with one or two more turns of the screw, out came this astounding revelation:

"Richard said if I didn't put Taff in one, he would put me in one."

The Judge.—In one what?

(Def). (weeping bitterly).—In one mad-house, my lord.

In this peal that followed this announcement Colt sat down grinning. Saunders rose smiling. "I am much obliged to the learned counsel for making my case," said he: "I need not prolong the sufferings of the innocent. You can go down, Mr. Hardie."

The Judge.—Have you any defense to this action?

"Certainly, my lord."

"Do you call Richard Hardie?"

"No, my lord."

"Then you had better confine yourself to the question of damages."

The sturdy Saunders would not take the hint: he replied upon the whole case, and fought hard for a verdict. The line he took was bold; he described Richard Hardie as a man who had acquired a complete power over his weaker brother: and had not only persuaded him by statements, but even compelled him by threats, to do what he believed would be the salvation of his nephew. Will you imitate the learned counsel's cruelty? Will you strike a child? In short, he made a powerful appeal to their pity, while pretending to address their judgments.

Then Colt rose like a tower, and assuming the verdict as certain, asked the jury for heavy damages. He contrasted powerfully the defendant's paltry claim to pity with the anguish the plaintiff had undergone. He drew the wedding party, the insult to the bride, the despair of the kidnapped bridegroom; he lashed the whole gang of conspirators in the entire, repeated and retested that they could only make one of all these villains smart, but hinted that Richard and Thomas Hardie were the two he had, and that heavy damages inflicted on Thomas would find the darker culprit out. He rapped out Mr. Cooper's lunes on liberty, and they were not the jury, though to nobody else: he warned them that all our liberties depended on them. "I am," said he, "here to behended the tyrant, and banished another, to secure those liberties, if men are to be allowed to send away their own flesh and blood into the power of all pretense for life and not smart for it, in those lamentably few cases in which the law permits the weak to have hold of them." But it would task my abilities to the utmost, and occupy more time than is left me, to do any thing like justice to the fervid, rapid eloquence of Colt, Q.C., when he got a great chance like this. Tonst, fulgurets, et rapidis eloquentiæ fluctibus omnem obruit auditorium. Bursts of applause, that neither crier nor judge could suppress, bore witness to the deep indignation Britons feel when their hatred of kidnapteries are tampered with by power or fraud, in defiance of law; and when he sat down, the jury were ready to fly out at him with £3000 in hand.

Then rose the passionless voice of "justice according to law." I wish I could give the very words. The following is the sense as I understood it. Lawyers forgive deficiencies!

"This is an important, but not a difficult case. The plaintiff sues the defendant under the law of England for falsely imprisoning him in a madhouse. The imprisonment is admitted, and the sufficiency of the plaintiff's evidence. The question is, whether he was insane at the time of the act? Now, I must tell you, that in a case of this kind it lies upon the defendant to prove the plaintiff's insanity, rather than on the plaintiff to prove his own sanity. Has the defendant overcome this the difficult task? He has called from him hearsay and conjectures of respectable persons, but very little evidence. Illusion is the best proof of insanity, and no such evidence was certainly made to fasten an illusion on the plaintiff about a sum of £14,000. But the proof is very weak, and would have been a sanction-that all error is hallucination: this is illusory, and would, if acted on, set one half the kingdom imprisoning the other half. Again, after all, they did not quite prove that the plaintiff was in error. They advanced no undeniable proof that Mr. Hardie had ever made or owned this £14,000. I don't say it was proved on the other hand that he did embezzle that sum. Richard Hardie was not put in the box, and he is on this evidence might possibly obtain a verdict: for then the burden of proof would lie on Alfred Hardie: but here I am bound to say that he is insane. The fact appears to be that the plaintiff imbibed a reasonable suspicion of his own fellow's integrity; it was therefore founded on fair evidence; imperfect, indeed, but of a high character as far as it went. There was a letter from Captain Dodd to his friend, announcing his return with £14,000 upon him, and, while as yet unaware of this letter, the plaintiff heard David accuse Richard Hardie of embezzling the properly £14,000, the identical sum. At least, he swears to this, and as Richard Hardie was not called to contradict him, I am bound in law to suppose that Richard Hardie could not contradict him on oath. Here, then, true or false, was a rational ground for every man in the land to right to a rational suspicion of his neighbor, and even to utter it within due limits: and, if he overstep those, the party injured has his legal remedy; and, if he omits his legal remedy, and makes an attempt of doubtful legality not to redress but to stifle the voice of reasonable suspicion, shrewd men will suspect all the more. But then comes a distinct and respectable kind of evidence for the defendant. It appears that the plaintiff was going to sign away his property to his wife's relations. Now, this is proved, and a deed of the deed put in and sworn to. This taken singly, has a very extraordinary look; still you cannot consider the plaintiff's reasonable suspicion that money belonging to the Dodds had passed irregularly to the Hardies, and then to the wonder of the whole world, Young and noble minds have in every age done these generous, self-denying, and delicate acts. The oldest we get, the less they seem to be connected for a crime of this character. But we are not to imprison youth and chivalry because we have outgrown them. We go from particulars to generals, the defendant on whom the proof lies, has advanced hearsay and conjecture, and not put their originators into the box. And the plaintiff, on whom the proof does not lie, has advanced an overpowering amount of evidence that he was sane at the time of his incarceration: this was proved to demonstration by friends, strangers, and by himself." Here the judge analyzed the testimony of several of the plaintiff's witnesses.

"As to the parties themselves, it is curious how they impersonated, so to speak, their respective lines of argument. The representative of evidence and sound reasoning, though accused of insanity, was clear, precise, frank, rational, and dignified in the witness-box. The party who relied on hearsay and conjecture was as feeble as they are; he was almost imbecile, as you observed; and looking at both parties, it seems monstrous that the plaintiff should be the one confined as a lunatic, and the defendant allowed to run wild and lock up his intellectual superiors. If he means to lock them all up, who is safe? (Laughter.) The only serious question, I apprehend, is on what basis the damages ought to be assessed. The plaintiff's counsel has made a powerful appeal to your passions, and calls for vengeance. Now, I must tell you you have no right to indulge yourselves instincts of vengeance, nor even to punish the defendant in a suit of the kind: still less ought you to strike the defendant harder than you otherwise would, in the vague hope of hitting indirectly the true mover of the defendant and the other property. Let me solemnly warn you against that unfortunate suggestion of the learned counsel's. If the plaintiff wants vengeance, the criminal law can give it him. Threatening by your verdict, he can still indict the guilty party or parties. Meanwhile he comes here, not for vengeance, but for compensation and restoration to that society which he is every day falling to adorn. More than this—and all our sympathies—it is safe for us to give him. But then the defendant's cause went too far the other way. His client, he says, is next door to an idiot, and so forsooth his nephew is not entitled correctly. This is all very well if it could be shown ignorance implies the plaintiff and his just claim to compensation. If the defendant instead of being weakminded were an idiot, or a lunatic, it would be error, and the plaintiff would be a felon, but not for damages in a suit. A sane man is not to be falsely imprisoned by a lunatic without full compensation for the loss of his time or his estate; a fortiori, he is not to be so imprisoned by a mere fool without just compensation. Supposing your verdict then to be for the plaintiff, I think vindictive damages would be unfair on this feeble defendant, who has acted recklessly, but under the error, and therefore not a bad faith. On the other hand, nominal or even unsubstantial damages would be unjust to the plaintiff, and this plaintiff seems entitled to a doubt. I am sure you do not entertain, as to the plaintiff's perfect sanity during the whole period of his life.

At noon on Friday had ended. The foreman of the jury said their minds were quite made up long ago.

Silence in the court.

We find for the plaintiff, with damages three thousand five hundred pounds.

The verdict was received with some surprise by the judge, and all the lawyers, except Mr. Colt, and by the people with acclamation; in the midst of which Mr. Saunders announced that the plaintiff had just gained his first class at Oxford.

"I wish him joy," said the judge.

CHAPTER LIX.

THE verdict was a thunder-clap to Richard Hardie; he had promised Thomas to bear him blameless. The Old Turks, into which he had bought a lot of Peggy's, and that implied a loss of five thousand pounds. On the top of all this came Mr. Compton's letter, neatly copied by Colt: Richard Hardie was doubly and trebly ruined.

Then in his despair and hate he determined to baffle them all, and to steal the hearts of some of them once more.

He would give Peggy his last shilling; write a line to Alfred Hardie to Julia, assure them he had no money, and they had killed him. And with that leave them both the solemn curse of a dying father, and die by himself.

Not to be interrupted in his plan, he temporized with Mr. Compton; wrote that, if the Receipt was really lost, he would pay the costs of the loss must fall on him; it was a large sum, but he would not be ruined and his heir in days from date. With this he went and bought a pistol, and at several chemists' shops a little essential oil of almonds; his plan was to take the poison, and be killed without pain well and good; but if it tortured him, then he would blow his brains out with the pistol.

He also arranged his worldly affairs, and on the day gave Peggy his £500, and told her she had better keep it for Julia, who should be arrested. He sent her on an errand to the other part of town: then with his poison and the pistol

He ran the risk, with a brief but emphatic curse for his son, and Julia; and a line to Peggy to thank her for her fidelity to one so much older than herself, and to beg her to take a tobacconist's shop with his money: when he had done all this, he poured out the fragrant poison and tasted it.

Ere he could drink it, one of those quidnuncs who are always interrupting a gentleman when he has important business on hand came running in with all manner of small intelligence. Mr. Hardie put down the glass and gave him his full attention, because he would then go away and let him proceed to business. And at last his visitor did rise and go. Mr. Hardie sat down with a sigh of relief to his fragrant beverage.

Doesn't the door open, and this bore poke in his head? "Oh, I forgot to tell you: the Old Turks are going up to-day like a shot." And with this he slammed the door again, and was off.

At this the cup began to tremble in the resolute wretch's hand. The Old Turks going up! He poured the poison back into the vial, and put it and the pistol, all the letters, carefully into his pocket, and took a cab to the City.

The report was true; there was an extraordinary movement in the Old Turks. The sultan was about to pay a portion of this loan, being at six per cent., this had transpired, and at four o'clock the Turks were quoted at 73. Mr. Hardie returned a gainer of £5000 instead of a loser. And he locked up the means of death for the present.

And now an ordinary man would have said to, and got clear of the fatal cup: but this was not an ordinary man: he would not sell a share that day. In the afternoon they rose to 74. He came home, unloaded his pistol, and wrote himself some brandy-and-water, and with a grim smile, favored it with a few drops of the poison that was a delicious tonic. The Turks rose again up, up, to 82. Then he sold out, and cleared £49,000, and all in about ten days.

With this revived the habits of his youth; no more cheating: nothing could excuse that but the dread of poverty. He went to his appointment with Mr. Compton, asked to see the Receipt; said "Yes; that was his form, and Skinner's handwriting; he had never personally received one bullring of the money; Skinner had clearly embezzled it; but that did not matter; of course, Captain Dodd must not lose his money. Send your bill of costs in Hardie v. Hardie to me, Mr. Compton," said he, "they shall not be taxed; you have lost enough by me already."

There was an air of dignity and good faith about the man that imposed even on Compton. And when Julia called, he told her the same, and said, "I should be grateful if you would forgive me the interest but for a great piece of good fortune on the Stock Exchange. I could never have paid the whole principal," he said, warmly.

"The interest should never be demanded through him."

He called in Colts, delivered up the Receipt, and received the £14,010, 12s. 6d. from Mr. Hardie.

* * *

"O Immortal Cash! You, like your great inventor, have a kind of spirit as well as a body; and on this, not on your grosser part, depend your potential activity. So long as that survives, your body may be recalled to its lawful owner from Hearent knows where.

Mr. Compton subdued to Dorcas Street and put this hard, hard Cash in David Dodd's hands once more.

* * *

Love and Constancy had triumphed; and Julia and Alfred were to be married and go down to Albion Villas, to prepare for the whole party: tenants no more: Alfred had bought it. The Commissioners of Lunacy had protected his £20,000 resolutely from the first: and his trustees had now paid the money over.

Alfred, consulted by Mrs. Dodd, whose pet of pets he now was, as to the guests to be asked to the wedding-breakfast, suggested "none but the tried friends of our adversity."

"What an excellent idea!" said Mrs. Dodd, naively.

Dr. Sampson being duly invited asked if he should bring his friends.

This proposal puzzled all but Mrs. Dodd. She was found laughing heartily in a corner with not any one to laughter. Julia and Alfred had pointed out by Julia, she said, with a little crow, "He means his wife! Yes, certainly, bring your Euclogue!"—pretending to have had the most elegant word—"and then they will all see how well you can behave."

Accordingly he brought a lady, who was absurdly pretty to be the mother of several grown young ladies and gentlemen, and two shades more quiet than faded they were. She was quietly had her chair placed by Dr. Sampson's, and, whenever he got racy, she put a hand gently on his shoulder, and by some mesmeric effect moderated him as Neptune did the waves in the Æneid. She was such a mistress of this mesmeric art that she arrived on a perfect conversation with her other neighbor, yet modulated her to her husband's tone of the moment. Dr. Sampson had a peculiarly jovial manner, and while looking another way.

This hand, soft as down, yet to all appearance irresistible, suppressed the great art of healing, vital chronometry, the wrongs of inventors, the columns of many Medical Mo., and set her drawing-room topics, at the very first symptom, and only just allowed the doctor to be the life and soul of the party.

Julia and Mrs. Dodd had a good cry at parting. Of course Alfred consoled them; reminded them it was only for a few weeks, and took off his lovely prize, who in the carriage soon dried her eyes upon his shoulder.

Then she applied to her new lord and master for information. "They say that you and me are one, now," said she.

He told her confidently it was so.

"Then from this moment you are Julius and I am Elfrida," said she.

"I am a barbarian," said he, and sealed it on the sweet lips that were murmuring Heaven so near him.

In this sore-tried and now happy pair the ardor of possession lasted long, and was succeeded by the calm but full feeling of conjugal love, high esteem combined. They were so young and elastic that past sorrows seemed but to give one more to the great draught of joy. Sometimes they now drank day by day. They all lived together at Albion Villa, thanks to Alfred. He was by nature combative, and his warlike soul was roused at the current theory that you can not be happy under the same roof with your wife's mother. "That is cant," said he to Mrs. Dodd; "let us you and I trample on it hand in hand."

"My child," said poor Mrs. Dodd, sorrowfully, "every body says a mother-in-law in the house bores a young gentleman sadly."

"If a young gentleman can't live happy with you, mamma," said he, kissing her, "he is a little snob, that is all, and not fit to live at all. Everlinds est Cantilena! That means down with Cant!" They did live together: and behold eleven French plays, with their thirty-three English adaptations, confused to the end of time.

Creatures so high-bred as Mrs. Dodd never fidget one. There is a repose about them; they are balm to all those they love, and blister to none. Hem, no stranger could tell by Mrs. Dodd's manner whether Edward or Alfred was her own son.

Oh, you happy little villa! you were as like Paradise as any mortal dwelling can be. A day came, however, when your walls could no longer hold all the happy inmates. Julia presented Alfred with a lovely boy: enter nurses, and the villa showed symptoms of bursting. Two months more, and Alfred and his wife and boy overflowed into the next villa. It was but twenty yards off; and there was a double reason for the migration. As often happens after a long separation, Heaven bestowed on Captain and Mrs. Dodd another infant to play about their knees at present, and help them grow younger instead of older: for tender parents begin life again with their children.

The boy were nearly of a size, though the nephew was a month or two older than his uncle, a relationship that was early impressed on their young minds, and caused those who heard their prattle many a hearty laugh.

"Mrs. Dodd," said a lady, "I couldn't tell by your manner which is yours and which is your daughter's."

"Why they are both mine," said Mrs. Dodd, blissfully.

As years rolled on Dr. Sampson made many converts at home and abroad. The foreign ones acknowledged their obligations. The leading London physicians managed more skillfully: they came into his ideas, and bit by bit reversed their whole practice, and, twenty years after Sampson, began to strengthen the invalid at once, instead of first prostrating him, and so causing other long sickness or sudden death. But, with all this, they disowned their forerunner, and still called him a quack while adopting his practice. This dishonesty cost them into difficulties. To hide that their whole practice in medicine was reversed on better information, they were thus shuffle to shuffle, till at last they reached this climax of fatuity and egotism—THE TYPE OF DISEASE IS CHANGED.

Natura mutatur, non ne mutamur.

O, mutable Nature and immutable doctors!

O, unstable Omniscience, and infallible Nescience!

The former may err; the latter never—in its own opinion.

At this rate, draining the weak of their lifeblood was the right thing in Cervantes's day; and when he observed that it killed men like sheep, and said so, said tit Sangrado, he was confounding the age with an age to come three hundred years later, in which coming age depletion was going to be wrong.

Moliere—in bashing the whole scholastic system of lancet, purge, and blister as one of slaughter—committed the same error: mistook his century for one to come.

And Sampson, thirty years ago, sang the same tune, and mistook his inflammatory generation for the dead generation unborn. In short, it is the characteristic of a certain blunder called genius to see things too far in advance. The surest way to avoid this is not to see them at all; but go blindly by the cant of the hour. Race mountebanks, va!

Sampson was indignant at finding these gentry, after denouncing him for years as a quack, were pilfering his system, yet still reviling him. He went in a severing passion, and laid about them by tongue and pen: told them they were his subtractors now as well as detractors, asked them how it happened that in countries where there is no Sampson the type of disease remains unchanged, depletion is the practice, and death the result, as it was in every age?

No man, however stout, can help being deeply wounded when he sees his ideas stolen, yet left naked and publisher disowned. Many men's hearts have been broken by this: but I doubt whether they were really great men.

Don't see Lilliput ever really break Brobdignab. Except of course when Brobdignab takes medical advice of Lilliput.

Dr. Sampson had three shields against subtraction, detraction, and all the wrongs inventors endure: viz., a choleric temper, a keen sense of humor, and a good wife. The first stormed and rages at his detracting pupils; but ends with tears of love at their independence. I am told he still hopes to meet with justice some day, and to give justice a chance he goes to bed at ten, for, says he,

Jinny oh, jinny oh,
Take care of your carcass, and explains that no genius ever lived to ninety without being appreciated.

"If Chatterton and Keats had attended to this, they would have been all right. If James Watt had died at fifty he would have been all wrong; for at fifty he was a failure: so was the painter Etty, th' English Tishin." And then he accumulates examples.

His last distich bearing on Hard Cash is worth recording. "Miss Julee," said he, "y' are goen to marry int' a strange family—

Where th' ills pass the jinny us
In—ill a mad-house," which, like most of the droll things this man said, was true: for Soft Tommy and Hard were the two intellectual extremes of the whole tribe of Hardies.

Mrs. Archbold, disappointed both in love and revenge, reposed her understanding and soothed her mind with Frank Beverley and opium. This soon made the former deep in love with her, and his intellect grew by contact with hers. But one day news came from Australia that her husband was dead. Now, perhaps I shall surprise the reader if I tell him that this Edith Archbold began her wedded life a good, confiding, loving faithful woman. Yet so it was: the unutterable blackguard she had married, he it was who labored to spoil her character, and succeeded at last, and drove her, unwilling at first, to other men. The news of his death was like a shower-bath; it roused her. She took command of herself, and hope revived in her strong head and miserable heart. She told Frank, and watched his face. He was a man of honor. He blushed, and implored her to marry him directly. She gave him her hand and turned away, and shed the most womanly tear that had blessed her for years. "I am not mad, you know," said poor Frank; "I am only a bit of a muff." To make a long story short, she consulted all her intelligence, and with her help Frank took measures toward superseding his Commission of Lunacy. Now, in such cases, the Lord Chancellor always examines the patient in person. What was the consequence? Instead of the vicarious old Wolf, who had been devoured at a mouthful and fourth hand, Frank had two interviews with the chancellor himself: a learned, grave, upright gentleman, who quickly saw that his kindly counsel by and finding him to be a young man of small intellectual grasp, but not the least idiotic or mad, superseded his commission in defiance of his greedy kinsfolk, and handed him his property. He married Edith Archbold, and she made him as happy as the day was long. For the first year or two she treated his adoration with goodnatured contempt; but, as years rolled on, she became more and more his loving counselor. They are now a happy pair, and all between her first hostile love and this her last, seems to her a dream.

So you see a female rake can be ameliorated by a loving husband, as well as a male rake by a loving wife.

It sounds absurd, but that black-browed jade is like to be one of the best wives and mothers in England. But then, mind you, she had all ways—Brains.

I don't exactly know why Horace puts together those two epithets, "just" and "tenacious of purpose." Perhaps he had observed they go together. To be honest, I'm afraid the reason of this is so on the grand scale. But certainly these two features did meet remarkably in one of my characters—Alfred Hardie. He left the bank broke he had said he would pay the creditors. He now set to work to do it by degrees. He got the manager to allow him a share of his income, and paid half away to these creditors; he even asked Julia to try and find Maxley out, and do something for him. But that, Julia, let me see him," said he, trembling, "for I could not answer for myself." Maxley was known to be cranky but harmless, and was a public man of the country. Julia wrote to Mr. Green.

Alfred's was an up-hill game; but fortune favors the obstinate as well as the brave. One day, about four years after his marriage with Julia, being in London, he found a stately figure in the corner of a street, soliciting out his hand for alms, too dignified to ask it except by that mute and touching gesture.

It was his father.

Then, as truly noble natures must forgive the fallen, Alfred was touched to the heart, and thought of the days of his childhood. The temptation came. "Father," said he, "have you come to this?"

"Yes, Alfred," said he hard, composedly: "I undertook too many speculations, especially in funds and shares, and secured profitable at first too; but now I am overwhelmed: if you would but relieve me of them, and give me a guinea a week to live on, I would forgive all your disobedient conduct."

"Come home with me, Sir," said the young man.

He took him to Barkington, bag and baggage, and his good Christian wife received the old man with delight: she had prayed for any sight but this reconciliation. Finding his son so warm, and being himself as cool, Richard Hardie entrapped Alfred into a commercial scheme, and lodge him, and pay him a guinea every Saturday at noon; in return for this Alfred was to manage Richard's business, and sell off his goods, if any. Alfred assented; the old man chuckled at his son's simplicity, and made him sign a formal agreement to that effect.

This done he used to sit brooding and misery the nearly all the week till guinea time came; and then brightened up. One day Alfred sent for an accountant to look after his father's papers, and see if matters were really desperate.

The accountant was a long time at work, and told Alfred the accounts were perfectly clear, and kept in the most admirable order. "The cash balance is £20,000," said he, "and no bills, or rents are due. It is an agent you want, not an accountant."

"What are you talking about? a balance of £00,000?" Alfred was stupefied.

The accountant, however, soon convinced him by the figures of the case.

Alfred went with the good news to his father.

His father went into a passion. "That is one side of the account, my fool," said he, "think of the rates, the taxes, the outgoin's. You want to go from your bargain, and turn me on the world; but I have got you in black and white, tight, tight."

Then Alfred saw the truth, and wondered at his past obtuseness.

His father was a monomaniac.

He consulted Sampson, and Sampson told him to increase the old man's comforts on the sly, and pay him his guinea a week. "It's all you can do for him."

Then Alfred employed an agent, and received a large income from his father's land and houses, and another from his consols. The old gentleman had purchased westward of Hyde Park Square, and had bought with excellent judgment till his mind gave way. But Alfred never parted a farthing of it on himself: all he took was for his father's creditors. "All justice is good," said he, "even wild justice." Some of these unfortunate creditors he found in the work-house: the Nemesis Lunley that survived, were there also! He paid them their four thousand pounds, and restored them to society. The name of Hardie began to rise again from the dust.

Now, while Richard Hardie sat brooding and miserable, expecting utter ruin, and only bright-ened up on guinea day, Julia had a protégé with equally false views, but more cheerful ones. It was an old man with a silver beard, and a bamboo with which he stamped feather into round pieces of silver, in his opinion. Nothing could have shaken that notion out of his mind. Julia remembered it. She let it be known that she would always cash five pieces of round leather from Mr. Matthew's mint per day, and ten on Friday, when guinea day went on paper.

She contrived this with diabolical, no, angelical cunning, to save the old man from ridicule, and to do him much good. All souls were dear to her. What was the consequence? He went about with his mint, and relieved poor people, and gratified his mania at the same time. His face began to beam with benevolence, and innocent self-satisfaction. On Richard Hardie's will was cordage: and deep gloom sat on his ever-knitted brow.

Of these two men which was the rich man; he who left Alfred, yet thought he possessed enough for himself and his neighbors: or he who rolled in wealth, and writhed under imaginary poverty?

One reflection more. Do not look to see Providence dash the cup of prosperity from every disagreeable hand: you will often be disappointed: yet this, if you look closer, you shall often see: such a man holds the glittering cup tight, and nectar is in it, but also that one drop of unwholesome sauce some subtle ingredient, which turns that nectar to wormwood.

Richard Hardie died in the end being hastened by fear of poverty coming, like an armed man, and his guinea a week going. Matthews met him in the street, and was impressed with pain, but subject to death, was laid beside his poor mistress in St. Anne's church-yard. Julia buried him, and wept for the same pat to his grave; and, when this was done, she took her husband to see it. On that stone was fresh carved the name of the deceased, Matthew Hardie.

"I have done what you told me," said Julia, solemnly.

"I know it," said Alfred, softly. "I saw who your Matthews was; but I could not speak of him, even to you. You have done right my good Christian wife. I wish I was like you. My poor little Jenny!"

Richard Hardie's papers were all in order; and showed them an old will leaving £14,000 to Edward Dodd.

On this being announced to Edward, he remarked with a sigh, "Alfred has been dead at him for a long time with offers of money, and failing these had lost his temper and forged a will, by Jove. I wish I was like you."

This scandalous defense broke down. The document was indisputable, and the magic sum of £14,000 made Edward's livelihood for life pretty comfortable. Thus rose the Hard Cash once more from the grave.

All this enabled the tenacious Alfred to carry out a deeply-considered design. Hardie's late bank had been made into a shop; but it belonged to Mr. Dodd, and he heard it of her, and set up the bank again, with Edward as managing partner. This just suited Edward, who sadly wanted employment. Edward's character, still young and soon wiped out the late disgraceful episode, and being a man of great acuteness of business, a good credit. No creditor of Richard Hardie was left unpaid. Alfred went in for politics; and Barkington, being educated by seventeen clergymen, took it as a matter of course; told his friends he had never succeeded in any thing at first; nor should he succeed again, and returned Alfred M.P. for Barkington, whence to dislodge him I pity any one who tries.

For a long time Mrs. Dodd was nervous, and used to wake with a start at night, and put out her hand to make sure David was not lost again: this was over at last.

For years the anniversary of that fatal day, when he was brought home on a stretcher, came to them all as a day of gloom: but that was over off.

Sometimes the happiness of her family seemed incredible to her, remembering what they had all gone through. At first, their troubles were too terrible and recent to be discussed. But now and then they would talk of it all; and things bitter at the time became pleasant to remember.

One mid-summer day they had all dined together rather early, at Albion Villa, and sat on the lawn with Mrs. Dodd's boy and Julia's boy and girl playing at their ladies' knees. Now after a little silence, Mrs. Dodd, who had been thinking quietly of many things, spoke to them all, and said: "If my children and I had not been born friends, we never should have survived that terrible time we have passed through, my dears. Make friends of your children, my child."

"Ah, that I will!" said Julia; and caught up the nearest brat, and kissed it.

"It wasn't only being friends, mamma," said Edward; "it was our sticking together so."

In looking back on the story now ended, I incline to the same conclusion. Almost my first word was that Mrs. Dodd and her children were bosom-friends; and my last is to congratulate them that it was so. Think of their various trials and temptations, and imagine what would have become of them if family love and unity had not abounded. Their little house was built on the sure foundation of true family affection: and so the winds of adversity blew distracted, and the floods came, and burst upon that house, but could not prevail against it; it was founded on a rock.

THE END.

THE UPPER AND LOWER RIVER.

I STOOD, by the young, glad river
That watered the prairies wide,
And held the face of their gallant blooms
Enshrined in its crystal tide:

And I asked of the dimpled water
Its secret of happiness,
And it answered full from its heart of joy,
"I am blessed; I learn to bless."

Its voice was lost in the singing
That rose from the wheat-fields near,
And the lark-winged song of the reaper's child
From the opening whistled clear.

I stood by the old, sad river
That threatened the lowlands wide,
And the shout and the shame of the Spanish beard
Held in its poisoned tide:

And I asked the stream the secret
Of its fishery to threaten,
And it answered deep from the heart of woe,
"I am cursed; I turn to curse."

Its voice was lost in the clanking
Of chains in the cane-fields damp,
And a hungry buzzard, gaunt and still,
Flapped off to the cypress swamp.

THE BATTLE OF RINGGOLD.

The charge of Colonel Creighton's brigade at the battle of Ringgold, a gallant though disastrous assault, which ended the series of battles lately fought by the Army of Chattanooga, General Grant, is presented to our readers on page 21.

Colonel Creighton, killed at the very front of his men, with his last breath gave them, "Three cheers for the First Brigade, and God save the Union!" Nearly every officer of his regiment, the Seventh Ohio, was either killed or wounded, and the loss in the brigade was great.

The warm feeling between the divisions of General Grant's army is illustrated by the hearty and mutual gallantry in their side-by-side struggle for our cause, was a gladdening sight to witness.

HEAD-QUARTERS OF GENERAL THOMAS.

In front of the head-quarters of General Thomas, a sketch of which is given on page 20, we now parked the greater portion of the cannon captured in the late battles.

Each one answers of the soldiers and officers may be seen gathered about the spot, and if space could be given their stories of the manner in which each battery or piece was taken would be of exciting interest to their many friends who are readers of the Weekly. To them the thought that they may look at the same guns that their soldier friends daily view must be gratifying.

ASSAULT ON FORT SAUNDERS.

On pages 21, 24, and 25 we publish sketches representing the ASSAULT MADE BY THE REBELS ON FORT SAUNDERS, November 29, 1863. Fort Sanders had lasted two weeks, and tidings had come of the defeat of Bragg's army by Grant. KNOXville, if taken, therefore, must be taken at once. Fort Saunders was believed by the enemy to be the key to the whole position, and accordingly a forlorn hope was ordered out of the obscured earth of Longstreet's corps to carry the fort by assault, their success to be the signal for a general assault.

At early dawn the assaulting column moved up to the attack over the slope in front of the fort, as seen in this illustration on page 21. This slope was covered with dense undergrowth, and was woven a net-work of wire. This and a galling fire from our rifle-pits, into which the men were crowded, threw their ranks into confusion, but they struggled on. As soon as they came within easy range shot range the guns of the fort opened upon them with grape and canister. Around the fort was a deep ditch, twelve feet wide, upon which the enemy had not calculated. The parapet was high and steep, the lighting point to be represented in the illustration on pages 24 and 25.

The enemy, staggered by the fire, stumbling through the wires, at last reached this ditch, and sprang for the parapet. Unseen wires caught and threw them. The ditch was full of them. Rebels with faces cut short, and lighted, were thrown over the parapet among them. A few struggled to the top of the parapet, but were shot, killed or captured. Half a dozen, who made their way into one of the embrasures, were blown to atoms by a discharge of grape from the gun at whose muzzle they stood. This work lasted for half an hour, when, broken and terribly punished, the enemy withdrew. The ditch around the fort, as well as the slope, was full of the bodies of the slain and wounded. In the ditch they were piled eight and ten deep—a most horrible sight. The loss of the enemy in the assault exceeded a thousand, besides two hundred prisoners. Our loss did not exceed six. With this attempt the siege of Knoxville practically ended.

THE REBEL ASSAULT ON FORT SAUNDERS—THE FIGHT OVE

ER THE DITCH.—Sketched by Mr. Theodore R. Davis—[See Page 23.]

THE SCOUT'S NARRATION.

IT was in the bleak mountain country of East Tennessee; the evening was growing late, and the camp-fire was smouldering lower and lower, but we still sat around it, for the spell of the scout's marvelous gift of story-telling we were none of us willing to dissolve. Captain Charlie Leighton had been a Lieutenant in a Michigan Battery at the commencement of the war, but a natural love of excitement and restlessness of soul had early prompted him to seek employment as a scout, in which he soon rose to unusual eminence. He is a man of slight, even form of the real nervous type, of much refinement, well educated, and of a "quick, inventive brain." The tale I am about to relate is my best recollection of it as it fell from his lips, and if there is aught of elegance in its diction we have presented it all his own. He had been delighting us with incidents of the war, most of which were derived from his own experience, when I expressed a desire to know something of his first attempt at scouting. He willingly assented, took a long pull at my brandy flask, and commenced his yarn; and I thought that I had never been a handsomer man than Charlie Leighton the scout, as he carelessly lounged there, with the ruddy glance of the dying camp-fire occasionally flickering over his strongly-marked intelligent face, and his curling black hair waving fitfully in the night wind, which now came down from the mountain fresher and chillier.

It happened in Western Virginia, said he, I had been pretty much acquainted with our commander, General R., before the war commenced, and having intimated, a short time previous to the date of my story, that I desired to try my luck in the scouting service—of which a vast deal was required to counteract the guerrillas with which the Blue Ridge fairly swarmed at that time—one night, late in the fall of the year, I was delighted to receive orders to report at his head-quarters. The General was a man of few words, and my instructions were brief.

"Listen," said he. "My only reliable scout (Mr.Cockwell) was killed last night at the lower ford; and General F. (the rebel commander) has his head-quarters at the Selley Mansion on the Ronney road.

"Very well," said I, beginning to feel a little queer.

"I want you to go to the Selley Mansion," was the cool rejoinder.

"To go there! Why it's in the heart of the enemy's position!" was my amazed ejaculation.

"Just the reason I want it done," resumed the General. "Listen: I attack to-morrow at daybreak. F. knows it, or half suspects it, and will mass either on the centre or the left wing. I must know which. The task is thick with danger—twenty-four hours in the enemy's lines from here, midway to the enemy's outposts, and six paces beyond the second mile-stone, are two rockets propped on the inside of a hollow stump. Mackworth placed them there yesterday. You are to slip to F.'s quarters to-night, learn what I want, and hurry back to the hollow stump. Fire the rockets on the centre, let one rocket; if on the left, let off both. This duty, I repeat, abounds with danger. You must start immediately and alone. Will you go?"

Every thing considered, I think I voted in the affirmative pretty readily, but it required a slight struggle. Nevertheless, consent I did, and immediately left the tent to make ready.

It was nearly midnight, having received a few additional words of advice from the chief, I set forth on my perilous ride. The country was quite familiar to me, so I had little fear of losing my way, which was a considerable advantage, I can tell you. Riding slowly at first, as soon as I had passed our last outpost, I put spurs to my horse (a glorious gray thoroughbred which the General had lent me for the occasion) and fled down the mountain at a rapid pace. It was a cool, misty, uncertain night—almost frosty, and the country was wild and desolate. Mountains and ravines in endless multitude, with here and there that diversification of the brawny, irregular plateau with which our mountain scenery is occasionally softened. I rode rapidly and pace with but little caution until I arrived at the further extremity of one of these plateaux. Here I brought up sharply beside a thicket-belt, which I recognized as the second mile-stone. Dismounting, I proceeded to the hollow stump which the General had intimated, and finding it all right there, examined them, and to make sure of their efficiency—remounted, and was away again. But now I exercised much more caution in my movements. I rode more slowly, kept my horse on the turf at the edge of the road, in order to deaden the hoof-beats, and also shortened the circle of my sabre, binding the scabbard with my knee to prevent its jingling. Still I was not satisfied, but tore my handkerchief if two and made two bits of it, and tied the sword of my sword, which otherwise had a little tinkle of their own. Then I kept wide awake, with my eyes every where at once, like the eyes of cutting a glimpse of some clew or landmark—the glimmer of a campfire—a tent-top in the moonlight, which now began to shine faintly, or to hear the snort of a steed, a signal of a picket—any thing, any thing to guide me or to give warning of the lurking foe. But no; if there had been any camp-fires they were dead; if there had been any tents they were struck. Not a sign—not a sound. Every thing was quiet as the tomb. The great mountains rose around me in their mantles of pine and boods of mist, cheerless and repellent, as if their solitude had never been broken. The moon was driving through a weird and ragged sky, with something desolate and solemn in her motion that seemed like an omen of ill. And in spite of my efforts to be cheerful I felt the iron loneliness and sense of danger creep through my flesh and touch the bones.

None but those who have actually experienced it can properly conceive of the apprehensions which throng the heart of him, however brave, who well knows himself to be alone in the midst of enemies who are invisible. The lion-hunter of Abyssinia is encompassed with peril when he makes a pillow of his gun in the desert; and our own pioneer slumbers but lightly in his new cabin when he knows that the savage, whose moccasinia is vengeance, is prowling the forest that skirts his clearing. But the lion is not always hungry; and even the Indian may be conciliated. The hunter confronts his terrible antagonist with something like mutual decency. The hand that levels and the eye that directs the rifled tube are nerved and fired by "the mind, the spirit, the Promethean spark," which, in this case, is indeed a "tower of strength." And the settler, with promises and alcohol, may have won the savage to himself. But to the solitary scout, at midnight, every turn of the road may encounter him with a hair-trigger; every stump or bush may hold a foe in waiting. If he rides through a forest it is only in the deepest shadow that he dares ride together; and should he cross an open glade, where the starlight or moonshine drops freely, he crouches low on the saddle. Danger is around, for every second he feels he may be a target. His senses are painfully alive, his faculties strained to their utmost tension.

By way of a little relief, I made a very successful scout, who met his death, however, on the Peninsula, who would always require a long sleep immediately after an expedition in which he had lasted out a few hours, and had apparently called forth no more muscular exertion than was necessary to sit in the saddle. But strong as he was, he would complain of overpowering fatigue, and immediately drop into the most profound slumber. And I have often informed him that I frequently envied him. I can only attribute it to the fact that, owing to the extreme and almost abnormal vivacity—I think of the better word—of his brain, he was relieved on these momentous occasions like twice on thrice as fast as ordinarily; and the usual nerve-play and wakefulness of a man's brain, was for him concentrated in the brief period of a few hours.

But to resume: I felt to the full this apprehension, this dread, this sense of danger, from my knowledge of my position and the issues at stake kept my blood flowing. I had come to the termination of the last pasture or plain, when the road led me down the side of a ravine, with a prospect ahead of nothing but darkness. Here, too, I was compelled to make more noise, as there was no sod for my horse to tread on, and the road was flinty and rough in the extreme. But I kept on as rapidly as possible, when suddenly, just at the bottom of the ravine, where the road began to ascend the opposite declivity, I came upon the dark outlines of a group of several horsemen, so suddenly that they seemed to have sprung from the earth like phantoms.

"Why do you return so slowly?" said one of them, impatiently. "What have you seen? Did you meet Colonel Craig?"

For a moment—a brief one—I gave myself up for lost; but, with the rapid reflection and keen invention which I generally exercised under circumstances of peril, I grasped the language of the speaker, and formed my plan accordingly. "Why do you return so slowly?" and "Colonel Craig!" thought I. "What have you seen?" I had been sent as a spy, then. "Did you meet Colonel Craig?" Oho! I thought, I've found a clew. No, I won't; I will be Colonel Craig's orderly. So I spoke out boldly:

"Colonel Craig met your messenger, who had seen nothing, and advised him to scout down the edge of the creek for half a mile. But he dispatched me, his orderly, to say that the movement will be retreating in heavy masses. I am also to convey the intelligence to General F."

My voice had started at the tones of a strange voice, but seemed to listen with interest and without suspicion.

"Then the Colonel think the movement a real retreat or only a feint?" asked the leader.

"He was uncertain," I replied, beginning to feel more and more confident—"uncertain; but he bade me to say that he would ascertain; and in an hour or two, if you should see one rocket up to the north centre, yet might be confident that the enemy are retreating; if you should see two, then you might guess that they were not retreating, but stationary, or, perhaps, flanking our position. Tally, tally—I'm not to do. Now, owing to their mistake, the countersign had not been thought of; but the next picket would not be likely to make the same mistake in advance, and it was a lucky thing that the trooper led the way, for he would catch them first, and I would be in no danger. But I was in a terrible state of fear. But he passed the picket so quickly, and dropped the precious syllables so indistinctly, that I only caught the first and last of them—Tally—and the remainder might as well have been Greek. Tally, tally, tally what? Good Lord! thought I, what can it be? Tally, tally—here I am almost up to the pickets!—what can it be? Tallyho? No, that's English. Tallyho? No, that's French. God help me! Tally, tally—

"TALLAHASSEE!" I yelled, with the inspiration of despair, as I dashed through the midst of their levelled carbines sank toothless before that wonderful spell—the Countersign.

Blessing me politely without further mishap, I reached the place indicated by the trooper, which was high up on the side of the mountain—so high that clouds were forming in the deep valley below. Making my bridle fast, I clambered with some difficulty the still ascending slope on my feet. Extraordinary caution was now necessary. I crept toward the farm-house, and soon perceived the tent of the rebel chief. A solitary guard was pacing between it and me—probably a hundred yards from the tent. Perceiving that boldness was my only plan, I sauntered up to him with as free-and-easy an air as I could muster.

"Who goes there?"

"A friend."

"Advance and give the countersign."

I advanced as near as was safe, and whispered "Tallahassee," with some fears as to the result.

"It's a d—d lie!" said the sentry, bringing his piece to the shoulder in the twinkle of an eye. "That answers the pickets but not me." Click, click, went the rising hammer of the musket.

I am a dead man, thought to myself; I am a dead man before the cap falls. Wonderful, marvelous to relate, the cap did fall. The hammer dropped with a dull, harmless thug on the nipple. With the rapidity of thought and the stealth of a panther I glided forward and clutched his windpipe, forcing him to his knees, while the gun slipped to the ground. There was a fierce but silent struggle. The fellow could not speak for my hand on his throat; but he was a powerful man, with a whole-limb'd body to him, if he could only get at it. But I got it first, bestirred a moment, and then drove it in his midriff to the hilt; and just at that last stab grinders closed on my arm and bit to the bone. Restraining a cry with the utmost difficulty, I got in another blow, this time home, and the man fell. I had now spar with a start, for my blade had pressed the spring of the casket. Breathless from the struggle, I lay still to collect my thoughts, and to consider how if the inmates of the tent had been disturbed. But no; a light was shining through the canvas, and I could hear the low murmuring of voices from within, which I had before noticed, and which seemed to be those of a number of men in earnest consultation. I looked at the corpse of the sentry, and groaned. The shocked but had fallen off in the scuffle, and the pale face of the dead man was upturned to the scant moonlight. It was a young man, and exceedingly handsome face, and I noticed that the hands and feet were small and beautifully shaped; while every thing about the body denoted it to have been the remains of a gallant, gentle soul. Was it a fair fight? did I attack him justly? thought I; and, in the sudden contrition of my heart, I almost knelt to the ground. But the sense of my great peril recurred to me, stifling every fine and generous worthy. I took off the dead man's overcoat and put it on, threw my cap away and replaced it with the fallen sombrero, and then dragged the corpse behind an outhouse of the farm that stood close by. Returning, I picked up the gun, and began to saunter up and down in a very unconcerned manner indeed; but a sharp observer might have noticed a furtiveness and anxiety in the frequent glances I threw at the tent, which would not have been well for my safety. I drew nearer and nearer to the tent at every turn, until I could almost distinguish the voices within; and presently came to a pause under the canvas. There were half a dozen rebel chieftains within, and a map was spread on a table in the centre of the apartment. The thought the consultation was at an end, and the company rose to depart. I ran back to my place, and resumed the watchful saunter of the guard with the utmost an air as possible, drawing the hat well over my eyes.

The generals came outside of the tent and looked about a little before they disappeared. Two of them came close to me and passed almost within a yard of the sentry's body. But they passed on, and I drew a long breath of relief. A light still glimmered through the tent, but presently that, too, vanished, and all was still. But occasionally I would hear the voice of a fellow sentry, or perhaps the rattle of a halter in some distant manger.

I looked at my watch. It was two o'clock—about by the moon. I could fire the signal, and the attack was to be at daybreak.

Cautiously as before, I started on my return, meeting with no further accident. Here I abandoned the gun and overcoat, remounted, and started down the mountain. "Tallahassee" let me through for the first picket; but something was wrong when I cantered down the ravine to the troopers to whom I had been so confidentially dispatched by Colonel Craig. Had I slyly the genuine messenger, or perhaps the gallant Colonel himself had paid them a visit during my absence. At any rate, I saw that something unpleasant was up, but resolved to make the best of it.

"Tallahassee!" I cried, as I began to descend the ravine.

"Halt, or you're a dead man!" roared the leading trooper. "He's a Yank!" "Cut him down!" resound in the others.

"Tallahassee! Tallahassee!" I yelled. And something my soul to God, I charged down the gully with sabre and revolver in either hand.

Click—bang! something grazed my cheek like a hot iron. Click—bang again! something whistled by my ear with a sharp, venomous hiss. And then I was in their midst, shooting, stabbing, slashing, and swearing like a fiend. The rim of my hat flopped over my face from a sabre cut, and I felt blood trickling down my neck. But I burst away from them, up the bank of the ravine, and along the bare plateau, all the time yelling "Tallahassee! Tallahassee!" without knowing why. I could hear the shouts pursuing me down the mountain by halloos and drums, and presently the clatter of pursuing steeds. But I fled onward like a whirlwind, the mad, limitless excitement and loss of blood, until I reeled off at the hollow stump.

Fix, fix! one, two! and my heart leaped with exultation as the bursting rockets followed each other in quick succession to the zenith, and burst on the gloom in glittering showers. Emptying the remaining tubes of my pistol at the nearest pursuer, now but fifty yards off, I was in the saddle and away again, without waiting to see the result of my plan. It was a wild ride for the few moments I had. I pressed as noble a steed as ever spurned the footstool, and as we neared the Union lines the pursuit dropped off. When I attained the summit of the first ridge of our position, and saw the day break faintly and rosily beyond the pine-tops and along the crags, the air fluttered violently in my face, the solid earth quivered beneath my feet, as a hundred cannon opened simultaneously above, below, and around me. Sentried columns of men were surging irresistibly down the mountain toward the opposite slope; flying field-pieces were dashing off into position; long lines of cavalry were hurrying the gullies, or hovering like vultures on the steep; and the blare of bugles rose above the roar of the artillery with a wild, victorious peal. The two rockets had been answered, and the veterans of the Union were bearing down upon the enemy's weakened centre like an avalanche of fire.

"So that is all," said the scout, rising and yawning. "The battle had begun in earnest. And maybe I didn't dine with General R. when it was over and the victory gained. Let's go to bed."

A VOICE FROM BELLE ISLE.

"Sick, and in prison."
Poor Tom's just gone! I closed his eyes.
He died in muttering low the text
That says, "They never hunger more."
I lie and wonder who'll be next.
So many waiting at Death's door—
To some it opens Paradise.

Oh help! oh help! We'll all go mad!
The dreadful, gnawing hunger-pain
Comes back, and with a giant's grasp
Holds life and reason in its clasp:
It works like hell-fire in the brain;
If Death would come we could be glad.

Once we had friends and country too.
Did all die serving? tell me, Jack!
Where's mother? where's the dear old flag?
Hurrah! I'll fight while there's a rag.
Off boys! why do you keep me back?
Stand by the old Red, White, and Blue!

Ah, is it death? I can not see!
I had a dream. Oh help! Be quick!
Come mother, Ruth! (Don't say I died!
With Tom, poor Tom! dead by my side.)
Who says, "It was in prison sick,
And yet came not unto Me"?

"I was athirst, and hungered too."
Ah then He knows our agony!
Read, Jack, how cunning Satan tried
To tempt Him! I'd be satisfied
To die ten deaths, Jack, just to see
Our army marching here for you!

How many, Jack, are on the floor?
Poor fellows! There is little Jim!
How can they starve a child to death?
Cry, dead boy, loud! My dying breath
Must bring our boys to rescue him
And all the thirteen thousand more.

Why don't they come? How could we see
Them starving, prisoned here? I'd choke
At food until I'd raised a band
Who'd vow with steadfast heart and hand
To dare and die until we'd broke
Their prison-doors and set them free.

But, Jack, no matter! We won't think
From death by starving, of the Lord
Do suffer this. But still I know!
I'd slay my country's deadly foe
In honest battle with my sword,
But not in prison, tied by inch.

Oh, Jack, come close! I'm going fast!
If you get home tell mother this:
I died for love of Right and Truth.
God bless her and my little Ruth!
Dear Jack, give mother my last kiss.
Good-by. Our boys will come at last!

All's over with that faint "Good-by."
Ah, brothers, comrades, is that all?
His mute lips still cry out of wrong—
The martyr's wail, "How long, how long?"
And thrill us with the trumpet-call,
"Help, help! before the thousands die!"

THE SHADOW.

I WAS traveling toward evening on one of those great moors, covered with low gorse and scattered stones of granite common enough in Cornwall. The gorse was covered with snow, and the thick mantle of snow lay there and there, pushing their way out of the earth from the stratum below, locked detailing in thick white coverings. I was on foot. I had come a long way, and was weary. It was, then, a matter of great anxiety to me when, after an hour's walking, I discovered I had lost the track. It had never been more than a bridle-road, and it was quite choked up now with snow: it was easy to lose it. The inclement weather, a wild bit of Cornwall, had evidently deterred any traveler from choosing this shorter route, and the great bleak steps were before my eyes in unbroken whiteness, unmarked by step of man or beast.

In vain I turned to the right and left, seeking to recover the lost path, or at least to find some blessed footprint that should speak to me in accents clear as human voice of help and shelter. None such met my view. If any wayfarer had lately passed that solitary waste, the fast-falling snow had effaced his steps with the white covering that had my way track almost as quickly as my weary feet marked their way.

I stood still in despair and gazed around. As far as I could see stretched one wide waste of snow, dotted here and there by the rugged granite that rose in solid masses from the earth. The snow fell thickly, blinding me as I looked; but I fancied in the dim distance I could define the form of a solitary tree. I stood patiently waiting till some momentary lull should quiet the sharp wind, which was now whirling the blinding snow into my face, and thus enable me to judge whether this indistinct object were a tree or not. In a short time such a lull occurred: the snow ceased suddenly to fall, and I felt certain there was a tree, being thus enabled to certain it could not be growing on the common itself. This inhospitable soil, scarcely an inch thick, resting on the primeval granite, could not shelter the roots of a tree. Here, then, were the limits of the moor. By-the-tree I should at least find a more hospitable country—meadows, roads, perhaps a village. I determined to steer straight for this point, abandoning all hope of reaching the place for which I had set out. By this means only could I hope to escape from this interminable waste, which, perhaps, stretched on either side of me. Shutting from my eyes with my hand, I looked at my landmark, and judged it to be about three miles off; and with cheerful courage, counting the distance but little by my new hopes, I started at a brisk walk in spite of my weariness.

Night fell suddenly around me as I sped on, but the moon had risen early in the afternoon, and her bright light enabled me to keep the tree constantly in view. I soon discovered that I was right in my conjecture when I supposed it to lie beyond the moor. The changed character of the ground suffered to prove that I was approaching the other side of the common. The gorse grew thicker and wilder, and here and there a little corner, inclosed by a low hedge of stone stones, showed that cultivation was encroaching on these desolate borders. These little patches in the great waste, covered as they were with snow, had an inexpressible, dreary look, making me feel the solitude more acutely from their very association with life and labor.

I plodded on, ever keeping the tree in front, while an oppressive sense of loneliness, weariness, and cold weighed heavily on me, added to an indefinable fear, more painful still, that seized my flesh creep and shiver. Suddenly I found myself obliged to halt before a steep embankment rising like a natural edge in the plain. At a point of length to some extent on either side of me, I scrambled up the side in order to see if I might not, by crossing the inclosure, avoid the detour of a mile or ill. On reaching the top I perceived it inclosed the workings of an abandoned mine. The yawning shaft was still there—a black spot in the white world, telling of depth and darkness. The ruins of building-by-the-way snow-covered heaps; fragments of walls, piles of rubbish scattered here and there, glittered in the moonlight with dazzling whiteness; while behind all rose a dark stream, just flowing up in frost, but brawling over stones and rocks in a precipitous descent, till it reached a cliff, where, in a shower of foam mingled with driving snow, it descended into some unknown valley lost to me in the darkness.

I stood for some moments contemplating this scene. Drear it would have been at all times; but now, in the silence of this winter night, clad in its snow garment with that cold, still moon lighting up its chill desolation, it had to me something appalling in its ruin. The fear of some hidden shaft, or open pit, deterred me from crossing the stream, and determined me to skirt the embankment, which indeed scarcely deserved this name, as it was in fact but heaps of stones and rubbish flung here from the mine.

The great shaft lay almost at my feet. By the light of the moon I could see some way into its depths, and mark where the snow speckled its dark sides. At the edge of the yawning pit lay a pile of heavy timbers covered with snow. Apparently the moonlight shone brilliantly. I was about to turn and descend, when I was struck by the strange appearance of my shadow on this pile. It had its arms folded as I had, it gazed into the pit as I did. It was not larger, or colder, or grayer than other shadows, and yet it filled me with an inexpressible sensation of strangeness. I do not know what possessed me to do it, but I flung my arms into the air, and as the shadow did the same, there was not the expression of measureless despair in the action that unable to bear the sight, I turned and fled.

In this fright which had a fear in it that words can not express, I lost my footing in the treacherous snow, and fell heavily. As I arose from the ground I fancied I heard a cry, like the sound of a human voice, arise from within the embankment, mingle with the rush of the stream, and die away in the roar of the fall. I stood still and listened, but all was silent save the dash of waters; and the reassuring myself, I essayed to continue my journey. The moon had at my right hand, the wall of stones on my left, and on its glittering surface of snow my shadow stood out distinct and clear. For a moment my shadow only; but in an instant I saw, with a sensation that lifted every fluttering hair on my head, the shadow had stood on the brink of the shaft, creeping stealthily behind my shadow, mocking every motion of mine, and of it, even to the terror that my own feelings impressed on this gray image of myself.

I had been a spectre-haunted man all my life long; but the shadow that had ever followed me had come in the shape of a murdered woman, sometimes accompanied by a pale sweet face. I knew too well. But this was strange, unlooked for; and bewildered, fascinated gazed, I turned and faced my tormentor.

This shadow I thought was none of my raising: the sharp outline of that haggard profile there was no likeness to my spectres. The pointed beard, the old-fashioned dress, the waving curls, spoke of by-gone period. I marked it well, as for a moment the shadow and I stood face to face; then, flinging my steps toward the dim tree, I strode resolutely forward.

The thing followed. In vain I turned and faced it, or in despair dashed rapidly to the right or the left. It was always behind me, always mocking my movements. I gathered up snow and flung at it; in horrid mockery it repeated my action. Then serving myself for the effort, I sprang on it and tried to grapple with its impalpable form. I only grasped the cold snow, while it stood by with its unchanging face, ever expressing that one look of dire, boundless despair.

In face of this thing I was powerless, and, feeling this, I resolved on flight; but when, on turning my head, I saw it gliding on, without apparent movement, at a pace equal to me, I lost my self-possession, and ran hither and thither on the moor, till sense failed me, and I fell headlong on the snow. When I recovered myself, the shadow still stood over me like a sentinel: the same despair in the sharp lineaments, the same strange appearance of life in its gray form.

I arose sick and numbed with cold. I began to feel that if I could not escape from some human habitation I should die. In this new fear I almost ceased to regard the spectre; was I not used to witness sights hidden to others?

All my energies were concentrated on reaching the tree, whose snow-laden branches gleamed distinctly before me. I had a small bottle of brandy in my pocket; putting it to my lips, I drank all it contained, and then, less pallid, less numbed with cold, I walked on with a surer step.

Often I turned to look at my companion. Some new demon surely possessed it: a thousand wicked smiles lurked in it. On that haggard profile, with its deep lines of despair, a new malignity sat triumphant. It mocked no motion of mine now; it had a hundred of its own. It stepped in my shadow, and seemed to shake it, as it laid its thin long hand, of which I marked the bony fingers, on its shoulder, making me feel every pat at the touch. Though it was not on me that gray hand rested, but only on the dim sigillitude of myself on the snow. Sometimes it flung its arms upward with those strange gestures of measureless despair that I had marked when I first saw it standing by the old shaft.

I went steadily on, but impossible feeling of relief stealing over me as I neared the gaunt tree. For hours its rugged branches had loomed before me as an object to be reached in effort. A thousand fancies had sprung up round its figure—hopes of rest and refreshment, visions of ruddy fires, of kind, helping hands, pitying voices, and merry faces—all, in my loneliness and pain, appearing to me with a beauty and happiness that extremely like had been formerly familiar to me.

I reached the borders of the moor. The tree stood right against the sky, so distinct every snow laden branch that I could have counted them. It was straight before me. I hurried on, with a step that had something of unreason in it, so eager and fierce had it become. A few feet now were separated me from the object I had so long striven to reach. I leaped it with a glad cry, and found myself in a narrow lane directly fronting the tree, which was planted precisely at the point where four roads met. I had reached the goal sought for, an eager was I to clasp the gnarled trunk, and feel that this thing, that for so many hours had seemed to mock my endeavors to reach it, was no phantom like that gray shadow lying on the moor. Quick though I had been, this creature of my spectre-haunted brain was gone—gone, motionless, dead, and yet only like the shadow of death.

With one arm round the trunk of the old weird tree, I stood regarding it till I gradually, in all my frenzy I determined to cover it up, and hide it from my sight in the snow. I flung armfuls on it; heaps of anguish fell from my hands unheeded, and dashed on it—always in vain. It lay there still, ever on the surface, in inflexible calmness, more terrible and unconquerable than the phantasies with which it had haunted my path on the moor.

Exhausted, I ceased these strange exertions, and drops of anguish fell from my brow as I gazed at it in vain to leave this haunted place. Some invisible chain—some horrible attraction—kept me there, in spite of all the efforts made by my will and my reason to resist the spell. This struggle between me and the viewless power that held me was terrible: the sweat stood on my brow, and the veins in my temples swelled like cords. I felt myself giving way, when a little wooden cross standing just at the head of the shadow caught my attention, and in spite of that horrible presence I stooped to regard it more attentively.

By the light of the full moon I read this inscription in deeply-cut letters:

To the Memory of Reginald Carbyhon. May God have mercy on the self-murderer!

I started back. I stood, then, on the grave of the suicide. And this phantasm was his ghost!

I was not afraid of such things; from an early period of my life I had been shadow-haunted, but I had the peculiar transcendental temperament, unless state into which I was thrown, either by the visions themselves, or by some power which, in my abnormal state, they enabled me to see them. I wiped the sweat from my brow, and, with one arm clinging to that strange tree that had beckoned me on so far so many weary hours, I looked and contrated all my faculties in the one sense of listening. A human sound—the faintest echo of any human life—reaching me there, would, I felt, break the spell whose horrible chain bound me to this spot. Gradually on my strained ear came the ripple of running waters: gratefully, pleasantly, it fell, bringing a new sense of power—a feeling of recovered strength. I unwound my arm from the dead ey tree and stood upright. Another moment, and the bark of a dog, mingled with the cheerful, hearty voice of some rustic, broke the music on my ear. With a cry of joy—released, free!—I bounded from the accursed spot—from that shadow of some unseen dead man, and, rushing on at headlong speed, found myself by the side of that little brook the sound of whose rippling waters had come to me like a holy whisper of heaven in an evil place. I sprang across the stream; and whether its clear springs had a power of their own to change the current of my magnetic or spiritual influence that had held me, I know not; but the moment I had crossed I felt myself free, calm, and with full power to perform any task well in my thing on which I might resolve: in a word, I was master of myself.

A CRY FROM THE ARMY.

A cry from starving Ireland
Was borne across the sea,
And many hearts were melted by
That wail of agony.
Soon white-sailed vessels, outward bound,
Laden with bread were seen;
And plenty reigned in that fair land,
Where famine late had been.
And there lives no true Irishman
Who will not proudly say,
When he hears this story told,
"God bless America!"

On Britain's isle, not long ago,
Gaunt famine reared its head;
And parents wept, as round them rose
Their children's cry for bread.
Again our Western land sent forth
A messenger of peace—
A noble ship, whose noble freight
Fed Britain's hunger cease;
And Albion's sons will ne'er forget
Until Time's latest day
The ship which brought her starving poor
Bread from America.

Another cry is heard to-day:
It comes not o'er the main;
And God forbid that earnest cry
Should e'er be made in vain!
It comes from the North—come and tried,
Who felt such stern delight,
With Thomas, Garfield, Whitaker,
In Chicamagua's fight;
Who in that dark and bloody hour
Rolled back the tide of war;
Who bear the tokens of that field
In many a glorious scar.

It comes from the Potomac's side—
From Rappahannock's bank,
Whose waters clear so oft are dyed
With true and traitor blood;
From far Arkansas, Tennessee,
And from the mouth of Red
Which Gilmore leads to victory
On Carolina's coast;
From that proud bulwark of our land,
Who guards with their lives,
Thy cry comes, "Watch you well, we pray,
Our mothers, children, wives!"

Men of the rich and fertile West,
Your lives and lands you owe
To those brave men who stand between
Your firesides and the foe.
And while they face the battle-storm,
For all the heart holds dear,
Can you refuse their earnest cry,
They utter now, to hear?
While fathers, brothers, husbands, sons,
Bleed for their country's sake,
Shall mothers, wives, and children dear
The pangs of hunger feel?

No!—hands which oft have strangers fed,
And thus the heart have shown,
Will not withhold when such a cry
Arises from our own.
No!—in our nation's history
It never shall be read,
That soldier's mother, wife, or child
Have ever lacked for bread.
No!—when our noble boys come home,
And we around them stand,
They shall have welcome, cheer, and shout,
"God bless our native land!"

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

The "Mystery" of Paris—Napoleon.

The Greatest Swell out of London—Nadar's Géant.

Why are Quakers like Railway Engines?—Because there's a go-ahead in their principles.

Advantages of Smoking Tobacco.—We have often heard it stated that a Pipe assists one much in arriving at a correct solution of a knotty problem. This arises no doubt from its giving one a Birdseye-view of the whole matter.

A Caledonian Gem.—A Scotchman, upon being informed by one of his fellow-countrymen of the name of the inventor of the Gatling gun, replied that it was pretty nice; because, if he were asked to go up in it, he should not hesitate to say "Shoo-ther."

The Out-Series.—In a recent bankruptcy case it transpired that one of the debtors for which the petitioner, a lady, was indebted to one of her creditors, had in fifty-two years of life. Strangers measures must be adopted to prevent our fair ones from going such lengths—or to speak mile-ily, such distances—in dress. When the wife's dress covers an amount of space which we may be pretty sure that the husband's waistcoat will sooner or later cover as near as the length of purse will allow.

Every bird pleases us with its lay—especially the hen. When a farmer has bad crops does he generally make a rye face?

A "Consummation devoutly to be wished."—For the Atlantic to become Pacific.

A Poser.—If a man knows roundly to a falsehood can he be found guilty of flat perjury?

When a clergyman denounces the age may he be said to "speak against time?"

The editor of the Kinderhook Branch Notes says he shall not raise the price of his paper for the present, because he is not able, as a general rule, to raise more than half of what he charges now.

When Archbishop Laud was on trial, he was told that if he had not committed one great act of treason, he had perpetrated so many small crimes taken together, made him a traitor. "I never knew," said the Archbishop, "that one hundred black rabbits made up a black horse."

"Another Blow for Life"—Eight hours at the seaside during the equinox.

A Consolation.—"The money-market is easy."

What will probably be the last language spoken on earth?—The Finnish.

"In Mr. Jones in Pocket on Irishman of the porter in a hotel. "No," was the reply; "will you favor your name?" "Och, do you think I'd be after going home without a name?"

"What a pity, mamma, that papa wore his best coat today." "Why, my dear?" "Why, because he said that the thickest part of his head did nothing but pick holes in it."

Constant motion is the first law of Nature; nothing being stationary except pen, ink, and paper.

The evils from which a morbid man suffers most are those that don't happen.

A debating society has under consideration the question, "Is it wrong to cheat a lawyer?" The result is expected to be, "No! but impossible."

Lady Yarmouth asked Garrick why Love was always represented as a winged god. "Because," the artist retort, "he never reaches the years of wisdom and discretion."

Politeness is like an air cushion: there may be nothing in it, but it makes one wonderfully.

A certain Scotchman, who is not a member of the Temperance Society, being asked by a dealer to purchase some fine old Jamaica spirits, drily answered, "To tell you the truth, Sir, I canna say I'm very fond o' rum; for if I tak' mair than six tumblups it's very apt to gie's a body the headache."

Why is a tale-bearer like a bricklayer?—Because he belies stories.

Not more than a hundred years ago an artist painted a portrait of Mr. Jenkins, who was noted for his frequent libations. The artist invited the gentleman himself to see it, and they inspected it and pronounced it excellent. One of them, however, who was rather near-sighted, complained of the light, approached it to change its position, when the artist exclaimed, "Don't touch it, Sir; it isn't dry." "No use of looking at it then," replied the gentleman. "It can't be my friend Jenkins."

A ship belonging to a gentleman named Hewers, sailed from the port of Gaspé recently for Canada with a cargo of coals. Shortly before the left it was ascertained that the vessel was not quite down to Plimsoll's mark. The vessel, and the agent startled his clerk by the order, "Telegraph to Hewers for more coals!"

Mrs. Partington says that Ike, who has just returned from France, "speaks French like a Parishioner."

Lord Keeper's housekeeping was not liberal, nor his dinner good, which occasioned many harsh reflections upon it. "It is best all the year round in his kitchen, and Passion Week in his parlor."

"Does the razor take hold well?" inquired a darkey, who was shaving a gentleman from the country. "Yes," replied the customer, with tears in his eyes; "it takes hold first-rate, but it don't let go worth a cent."

The Peal of Bells.—The Chapter of Worcester Cathedral are making an appeal to raise a peal of bells, as a compliment to the Prince of Wales, and have given rise to the following Jew Irregard:

When Governeth to deumhip raised a Peal,
They ask a penny from what might well be worse;
And now, to keep the first one's memory green,
To raise another peal the thought is worse.

Peal and the peal should unlike be and like—
The bells must be, the dean must be, hung—
And, though both voices should be lordly heard,
The dean must still be right, the bells must still be rung.

And long may they together work for good,
Each a fair share of duty undertake;
Thus, when for change the dean the bells may preach,
The peal must peal a peal ere Peel appeal can make.

Musicians are often hard to get along with; they are a crotchety people.

The young fellow who engaged himself to half a dozen young women is undoubtedly a beau of promise.

Jones writes to a friend and closes by saying, "I am glad to be able to say that my wife is recovering slowly."

A young gentleman, visiting his intended, met a rival who was evidently rejected by the lady. Inquiring of his suit him, inquired how all he was. "I can't exactly tell," replied the rival, "but I can tell you that an ass is older at twenty than a man at sixty."

Why is a plow-boy like sandy's cloak?—Because he is a man under.

A Curious Fact.—Though twelve dozen make a gross twenty doesn't make a grocer.

"John, how do you like to have your tea ?"—"My tea? Strong."

"Hear, hear!" continually exclaimed an enthusiastic individual at a late political meeting. "There is mighty little hear here," dryly remarked a wag standing close by him.

"I'll bide you, my boy!" exclaimed an angry father. "I don't think you will," replied the mother, "for I have helped him to bide himself."

Dr. Thompson, a celebrated physician in his day, and consequently remarkable for the extensive use of his person, could not endure the sight of mouthing, and in his medical capacity always made it a point to have every one shaved. On his breakfasting once at Lord Melcombe's, when Garrick was present, a plate of shaffins was introduced, when the Doctor grew outrageous, and vehemently called out, "Take away the muffins!" "No, no," said Garrick, seizing the plate, "take away the ragamuffins!"

When is a luggage-van like a forest?—When it is full of trunks.

Do not put your trust in money, but put your money in trust.

The look that is sometimes forced—Wellock.

INTERIOR OF FORT SUMTEP AFTER BOMBARDMENT FROM MORRIS ISLAND.

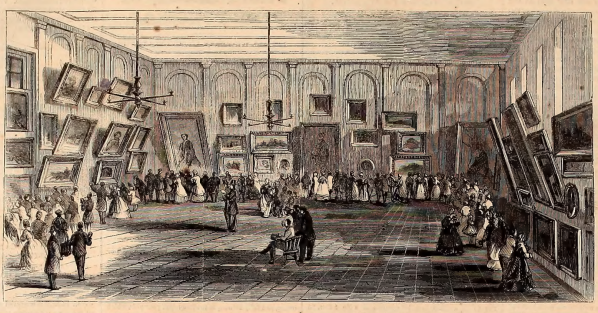
SKETCHED BY AN ENGLISH ARTIST.—[SEE PAGE 17.]

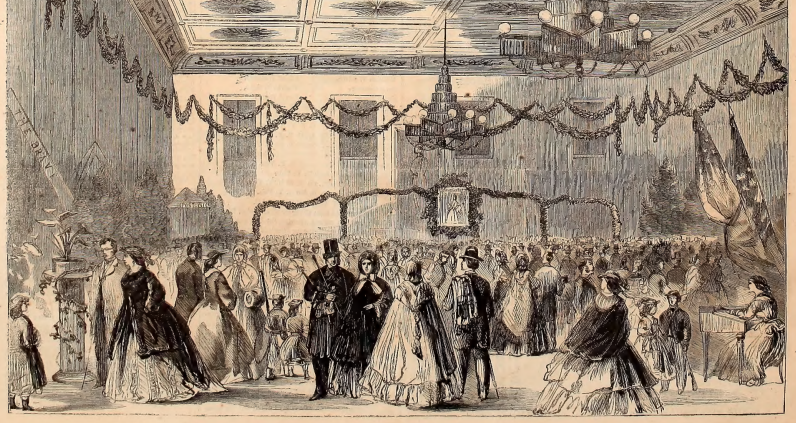
BURSTING OF A SHELL IN THE STREETS OF CHARLESTON, SOUTH CAROLINA.

SKETCHED BY AN ENGLISH ARTIST.—[SEE PAGE 17.]

THE GREAT WESTERN SANITARY FAIR AT CINCINNATI, OHIO.—[SKETCHED BY MR. THEODORE R. DAVIS.]

"Ten different departments of this Fair," writes a correspondent, "occupy several large buildings, two of which were built expressly for this occasion. One of these, the Lesley Barrack, would furnish comfortable barracks for a division of soldiers. It is furnished with 'works' thrown up by the hands of the ladies of Cincinnati and thereabouts. Any one who attempts to carry these works is met by a determined 'charge' from their defenders, by which 'Greenbacks' without number are captured. These 'Greenbacks,' I am assured, are, by a process of exchange, to be available for the benefit of soldiers who are or have been employed in the capture of 'Greybacks.'—In another large building is a collection of memorials of the war, curiosities, and paintings. In the Art Gallery, under the charge of W. P. Bennett, the author of the famous 'Harp of a Thousand Strings,' are many admirable works of Art. The 'Floral Collection' at Greenwood Hall found admirers not a few, and a Promenade Concert held there was a most decided success.—The Refreshment Hall was a delightful place—at least I found it so after a long course of rough experience with the Army of the Cumberland. In a sensible point of view I could not help thinking that this might have been better managed. When a 'plate,' the like of which I had not seen for months, was placed before me by one of the fairest of the daughters of Cincinnati, I felt almost like a swindler in paying the solitary quarter for that and the privilege of looking at the company 'waiter-girls.' I compromised with my conscience by giving only one look, and then addressing myself to my food. I would gladly have given twice as much for two looks without the food. I could then appreciate the sentiment of the honest tailor at the great Boston Fair for the Blind, years ago. He stopped for a moment before a table presided over by a lady, gave one glance at her, laid down a gold eagle, and was on the point of passing on. 'My good friend,' said the lady, 'will you not take something for your money?' 'Nothing more, Madam, I thank you,' said Jack, stealing another look at the lady. 'I've had more than twice my money's worth already.'—Any one who did not think he got more than twice his money's worth in the Refreshment Room at Cincinnati—not counting the refreshments at any thing—must have a high idea of the value of a quarter."





ADVERTISEMENTS.

MORTON'S GOLD PENS are now sold at the same prices as before the commencement of the war; this is entirely owing to the Manufacturer's improvements in machinery, his present large Retail Business and Cash-in-Advance System; for, until he commenced advertising, his business was done on Credit and strictly with the Profit.

The Morton Gold Pens are the only ones sold at old prices, as the makers of all other gold pens charge the Premium on the Gold, Government Tax, &c.; but Morton has in no case changed his prices, Wholesale or Retail.

Of the great numbers sent by mail to all parts of the world during the past few years, not one in a thousand has failed to reach its destination in safety; showing that the Morton Gold Pen can be obtained by any one, in every part of the world, at the same price, postage only excepted.

Reader, you can have an enduring, always ready, and reliable Gold Pen, exactly adapted to your hand and style of writing, which will do your writing vastly cheaper than Steel Pens; and at the present almost universal High-Pressure Price of everything, you can have a Morton Gold Pen cheaper, in proportion to the labor spent upon it and material used, than any other Gold Pen in the World.

If you want one, see "The Pen is Mightier than the Sword," in next column.

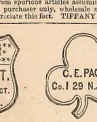
The Deringer Pistol.

TIFFANY & CO.,

550 and 552 Broadway, New York.

SOLE AGENTS FOR NEW YORK AND THE EASTERN STATES.

By a recent arrangement with Mr. DERINGER, the subscribers have purchased the exclusive agency for New York and New England, of the well-known pocket arm of which he is the inventor and only manufacturer. They propose keeping constantly in store a full assortment, comprising all sizes and finishes of this unique Pistol, and will be at all times able to fill Trade Orders with promptness, at manufacturer's prices. No arrangement will become necessary on the part of Mr. Deringer, in order to protect the public from spurious articles assuming to be his wares, and that purchaser only, wholesale or retail will be safe who appreciate this fact. TIFFANY & CO.



Head-Quarters for Army Corps, Company, and Division Flags of every description. On the receipt of $1, I will send you a Solid Silver Shield, or either Army Corps, Division, or Co. Pin with your Name, Regt., and Co. Number neatly engraved upon it, or a fine Gold Pen with Extension Case and Pencil, in a fine style Vest Chain or Neck Chain, or a California Diamond Ring or Pin, or a Seal Stone Ring; and for $1 50, I will send you a Solid Silver case for your CAVALRY PIN, engraved as above. Agents sending for 10 or more Pins at one time will be allowed 15 cents each.

B. T. HAYWARD,
Manufacturing Jeweler, 160 Broadway, N. Y.

The Prettiest Present for a Lady is Gold Composite Patent Detached Lever Watch, Jeweled in 13 sockets, beautifully engraved Hunting Case, by Rockford Watch Co., Rockford, Ill. For a Gentleman, THE OFFICER'S WATCH, Detached Lever Movement, with 13 Jewels, in Heavy Silver Cases, with New Patent Time Indicator, just the thing for the Army, the handsomest and most useful Watch ever offered, $25. ☞ (The Gold Composite Watches are also made mentions size for Gents.) Watches sent for inspection before payment. Every novelty can be seen by sending for descriptive Catalogue. Agents wanted in every Regiment and every County on very liberal terms. ARNANDALE & CO., Importers of Watches, 218 Broadway, N. Y.

Elegant Christmas Presents for a Lady. Gold Composite Hunting Watch, Jeweled, excellent Timekeeper, $15. Fine gentleman's Size Maple Leaf Watch, with Time Patent Indicator, showing Time without opening Case, $25. Watches sent for inspection before payment. Call and in great variety, newest styles, Ladies, $5 upwards; Gents, $5 upwards. Send for Circular. ARNANDALE & CO., Importers of Watches, 218 Broadway, N.Y.

American Needle Co.—J. W. Bartlett
Sole Agent for Broadway, New York.
☞ The only Barnished Needles for Howe, Singer, Wheeler & Wilson, Grover & Baker, Florence, Finkle, Bradley & Wood, L. & Webster, Bartholf, Boudoir, and all Standard Sewing Machines.
☞ Sharps, Reiley's, Gold Downs, Millners, Glovers, Sewing, Embroidery, Ivory, Bristol, Head Needles.
☞ Fancy Handles, Long Steel, and Common Crochet Needles.
☞ Hackle, Gill, Comb, and Card Pins. ☞
We are happy to recommend BARTLETT'S CELEBRATED NEEDLES, having found them a wonderful improvement over others for Howe Machines and Hand Sewing. Try Sample! Dollar's Worth; or 250 any sizes for 50 c by mail."—Ladies' Repository, Cincinnati.
☞ Or a Beautiful Needle-Book and 200 Needles, One Dollar.

☞ Every one of a Sewing Machine Needle.

The New Automatic Self-Sewer. ☞ only $1 .62
ALL W. BARTLETT'S, 441 Broadway, N. Y.
☞ Adapted for all Sewing Machines; Hook, Tucker, and Guides, to work without the Hand or Foot. Straightest stitching. Complete directions free by mail. Agents wanted everywhere.

Sportsmen, Tourists, and Army and Navy Officers.

Powerful and Brilliant Double Glasses.

Portability combined with great power in Field, Marine, Theatrical, Opera, and general out-door day and night double perspective glasses, will show distinctly a person to know him at from 3 to 6 miles. Spectacles of the greatest magnifying power to preserve the sight can also improve the sight, without the distressing pain of frequent change. Glasses sent by enclosing stamp.

SEMMONS, Oculists—Optician,
609 Broadway, New York.

WANTED! WANTED!

Do you want Splendid Whiskers or Moustaches?

HUNTER'S CONGUEST will force them to grow heavy, lp in a short space on the smoothest face without stain or injury to the skin. Also, for bald Heads, in six weeks. Two Boxes for $1. Postage free. Address

C. HUNTER & CO., Box 674, Milwaukie, Wis.

"THE PEN IS MIGHTIER THAN THE SWORD."

THE GOLD PEN—THE BEST OF ALL PENS,

MORTON'S GOLD PENS,

THE BEST PENS IN THE WORLD.

On receipt of any of the following sums in Cash, the Subscriber will send by return mail, or otherwise, as directed, a Gold Pen of Same Size—selecting the same according to description, viz.:

GOLD PENS WITHOUT CASES

For 25 cents, the Magic Pen; for 38 cents, the Lucky Pen; for 50 cents, the Always-Ready Pen; for 75 cents, the Reliable Pen; and for $1, the Invincible Pen.—These Pens are not numbered, but correspond in sizes to numbers 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 respectively.

THE SAME PENS IN SILVER-PLATED EXTENSION CASES, WITH PENCILS.

For 50 cents, the Magic Pen; for 75 cents, the Lucky Pen; for $1, the Always-Ready Pen; for $1 25, the Excellent Pen; and for $1 50, the Invincible Pen.

These are Well-Finished, Good-Writing Gold Pens, with Iridium-pointed Nibs, the same as are used in the most costly, but are fitted in cases of the best Steel Pens; although they are sometimes sold, as Gold Pens, for much more.

MORTON'S WARRANTED PENS.

The best of A, Morton's "Number One Quality," are stamped on the following Pens, and the points are warranted for six months, except against accidents.

The Numbers indicate size only: No. 1 being the smallest, No. 6 the largest, adapted for the pocket; No. 4 the smallest, and No. 10 the largest Mammoth Gold Pen, for the desk.

Long and Medium Nibs of all sizes and qualities. Short Nibs of Numbers 4, 5, 6, and 7, and made only of first quality.

The Long and Short Nibs are fine pointed; the Medium Nibs are flexed. Coarse Business pens. The engravings are fac-similes of the sizes and styles.

GOLD PENS, WITHOUT CASES.

For $0 75 a No. 1 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 3d quality.

For $1 00 a No. 2 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 3d quality.

For $1 25, a No. 3 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 3d quality.

For $1 50, a No. 4 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 3d quality.

For $1 75, a No. 5 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 2d quality.

For $2 25, a No 6 Pen; $2 75 a No. 7 Pen; $3 25 a No. 8 Pen; $3 75 a No. 9 Pen; $4 25 a No. 10 Pen—all 1st quality.

THE SAME GOLD PENS, IN SILVER EXTENSION CASES, WITH PENCILS.

For $1 50 a No. 1 Pen, 1st quality; or a No 3 Pen, 3d quality.

For $1 75, a No. 2 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 3d quality.

For $2 00, a No. 3 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 3d quality.

For $2 50, a No. 4 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 3d quality.

For $3 00, a No. 5 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 2d quality.

For $3 50, a No. 6 Pen, 1st quality.

GOLD PENS, ALL FIRST QUALITY, IN SILVER-MOUNTED DESK HOLDERS.

For $2 00 a No. 4 Pen; for $2 25 a No. 5 Pen; for $2 75 a No. 6 Pen; for $3 25 a No. 7 Pen.

For $4 50 a No. 8 Pen; for $5 a No. 9 Pen; and for $6 a No. 10 Pen.

The "1st Quality" are pointed with the very best Iridium-pointed Nibs, carefully selected, and none of this quality are sold with the slightest imperfection when sent from the closest scrutiny and search.

The "2d Quality" are superior to any Pens made by him previous to the year 1860.

The "3d Quality" he intends shall equal in respect to Durability, Elasticity and Good Writing Qualities (the only true considerations) any Pens now in general use.

In regard to the Cheap Gold Pens, he begs leave to say that they are engraved by the New and Improved Machines, he could not have made so Good Writing and Durable Pens, for the money, by any Machine formerly used nationally.

Parties ordering must in all instances specify the "Name" or the "Number" and "Quality" of the Pens wanted, and be particular to describe the Date they Paper—whether old or limber, coarse or fine.

All communications by mail in registered letters are at my risk; and to all who send twenty cents (the charge for registering), in addition to the price of goods ordered, I will guaranty their safe delivery.

Further reliable information by letter will be allowed the full premium on the day received.

TO CLUBS.—A discount of 10 per cent. will be allowed on sums of $15, of 15 per cent. on $24, and of 20 per cent. on $40 if sent to one address at one time.

A. MORTON,
No. 25 Maiden Lane, New York.

Fish's Patent Lamp Heating APPARATUS.

Boiling—Frying—Stewing—Steeping—with the fame that lights the room. THREE ARTICLES COOKED AT ONE TIME WITH ONE BURNER. Arranged for Cooking or Cold Cure.

A Descriptive Pamphlet of thirty pages furnished gratis.

WM. D. RUSSELL, AGENT.
AGENTS WANTED. 326 Fourt Street, N. Y.

Portable Printing Offices.

For the Army and Navy Hospitals, Merchants, Druggists, and others who wish to print neatly, cheaply, and expeditiously. Circular sent free. Sheets of Type, Cuts, &c., six cents. Adams Press Co., 31 Park Row, N. Y., and 25 Lincoln St., Boston.

Elliot's New Repeaters

Are now ready. The most safe, compact, durable, effective, sure, and reliable Revolving Pistols made. Carry large balls (No. 33 cartridges), are rapidly loaded and fired—conveniently carried in the pocket—cannot get out of order—are four barrels—each rifled pain trifled. The Trade supplied.

ELLIOT ARMS CO., 404 Broadway, N. Y.

DR R. GOODALE'S CATARRH REMEDY.

Is a Positive Cathartic, Root and Branch, forever. Price $1. Send stamp for pamphlet. Depot, 612 Broadway, N. Y. NORTON & CO., Sole Agents.

Sixty Voices FROM ARMY OF THE POTOMAC.

LET ALL WHO HAVE LOVED ONES IN THE ARMY RE.D.

BRANDRETH'S Pills protect from the arrows of disease, usually so fatal to Soldiers as the bullets of the foe.

THIS TESTIMONIAL FROM SIXTY RETURNED SOLDIERS.

Places Brandreth's Pills in so strong a light, as a remedy for our soldiers, that it is to be hoped President Lincoln and Surgeon-General Hammond will give it the attention it merits. For soldiers, no medicine can be compared to Brandreth's Pills, because they are as innocent as bread, and yet unfailing as a remedy in all cases where a purgative can effect a cure, and the field is wide, as the following testimony sufficiently shows:

NEW YORK, Oct. 29, 1863.

DR. B. BRANDRETH:

SIR,—I noticed in the New York Herald of this date, a letter from the surviving members of Company F, Seventeenth Regiment N. Y. S. Vols., extolling your valuable pills, which I fully had freely indorse, having been in command of the company from the third day of August, 1861, until the 2d of June, 1863, when the company was mustered out of the service and discharged, in this city. The percentage of men reported sick during that time was much less than in any other company of the regiment, owing, as I fully believe, to the free use of your pills, which were not supplied to the other soldiers. I believe them to be invaluable in camp or in the field.

Respectfully yours,
JOHN VICKERS, Capt. Co. F, 17th Regt. N. Y. V.

EDGE SPOR, Oct. 28, 1863.

We, the undersigned, surviving members of Company F, Seventeenth New York State Volunteers, hereby certify that we have used Brandreth's Pills during our two years' service, and we most cheerfully attribute the fact that our constitutions are uninjured by the necessary hardships and privations of a soldier's life in the field. In convalescing from fevers, dysentery, diarrhœa, and typhoid fever, their prompt use cured us in a few days. Our health was often restored without having been entered on the sick list; in fact, a dose or two of our free pills usually cured what, under the regular treatment, would have been a serious sickness. Others, who appeared to be sick in no respect different from us, but who used the remedies prescribed by the regimental surgeon, either died or were sick for weeks in the hospital.

When we left Camp Edge, in June, 1861, you gave us a supply of these Pills, and we feel sure, from our experience, that if every soldier was supplied with this medicine, the general health of the army would be greatly improved. For ourselves, it is our sole remedy, answering all our wants in the way of physic, and we have known and tested it from our childhood, and our parents before us.

Sergeant, Patrick Cullen, 6th Sergeant.
J. L. Smith, 1st Lieutenant. Benj. F. Brown, 1st Corporal.
William See, 1st Sergeant. Wm. Mathers, 2d Corporal.
C. H. Dauntry, 2d Sergeant. Noah W. Miller, 3d Corporal.
Dennis Shay, 3d Sergeant. Theo. Crofut, Drummer.
Geo. B. Cox, Drummer.

PRIVATES.

Francis J. Jennings,	Lewis B Cox,
William W. Cornell,	Albert Lane,
William J. Charlton,	Ellis Jones.
Albert Wesley,	Wm. Van Wart,
John W. Griffin,	James B. Crofut,
William Holmes,	Roscoe K. Watson,
William W. Rider,	Frederick Hunt,
Martin See,	William Tuttle,
George Ackerley,	Arthur Spangler,
Hiram Seagle,	Charles Wright,
Aifred Wilkins,	Sanford Olmstead,
Charles Griffin,	Fuller Carpenter,
George Ayles,	James Bentley,
William J. P. Hewett,	Robert W. Westcott,
John D. Hemmingway,	Jacob H. Dykman,
Thomas A. Barlow,	John M'Bedine,
Henry Hannah,	James N. Dixon,
William Watkins,	Edgar Waldron,
John Conover,	Warren Wright,
Jacob Baker,	David Baker.

T. B. Lane, 1st Lieut., $38 Co. W.
M. C. Earle, 1st Sergt., Co. D, 176th N. Y. Vols.
Wm. Knight, Co. J, 6th N. Y. Artillery.
Abram H. Miller, Co. A, 6th N. Y. Artillery.
Millard F. Lansing, Musician, 1st N. Y. Vols.
Wm. Kenny, Co. B. Decker's Sharpshooters.
Cornelius Miller, Co. I, 2d N. Y. Vols.
Elliot See, Co. B, 13th N. Y. Vols.
Daniel Gillis, Sergt., Co. B, 3d N. Y. Vols.
Caleb S. Fricks, Co. B, 3d N. Y. Vols.

LET THE AILING READ.

A gentleman had been ailing for some weeks: his stools had become light colored, showing the bile was retained in the blood, and symptoms of an attack of jaundice imphold Fever probable. He was nervous and irritable; sleep confused; acid stomach; dizzy; absent-minded; memory failing; tongue coated; limbs heavy; sense of weight a severe diarrhœa set in, which lasted for two days. When this stopped, severe pains of the bowels came on—dysentery. He took three Pills that night, and he had done nothing but now and then take a single Brandreth Pill; but now he understood the case admitted of no delay, and he at once took five Brandreth Pills, and perfect took plentifully of oat-meal gruel. The pills, in about six hours, operated well, and he thought the difficulty removed. This was not so, for in less than two hours the pains in the bowels returned with great violence, accompanied with a shaking feeling, and he thought he was going to die. He immediately swallowed two more pills and some warm broth. The pain soon abated, and he slept for several hours. The pills brought away pitchy-looking stools, and he had more severe pain in his bowels. For three more days he took five pills at night, and his bowels became natural, and his health fully restored by less than a box of Brandreth's Pills.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS are sold at 25 cents per box, enveloped in full directions. Purchases none unless by PRIVATE GOVERNMENT STAMP'S on the box. Sent free to it. BRANDRETH in white letters.

PRINCIPAL OFFICE, BRANDRETH BUILDING, NEW YORK.

Caution
FROM
The American Watch Company.

It having come to our knowledge that imitations of the American Watch have been put upon the market in great numbers, calculated, by their utter worthlessness, to injure the reputation of our genuine products—to protect our own interests and the public from imposition, we again publish the trade marks by which our Watches may invariably be known.

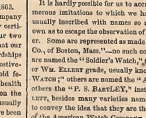
The First Grade has the name
AMERICAN WATCH CO. engraved on the inside plate.
The Second Grade has the name
APPLETON, TRACY & CO. engraved on the inside plate.
The Third Grade has the name
S. BARTLETT engraved on the inside plate.
All the above grades have also
AMERICAN WATCH CO. painted on the dial, and are warranted in every respect.
The Fourth Grade has the name
WM. ELLERY engraved on the inside plate, and has not the name "American Watch Co." painted on the dial.
All of these grades of Watches are made of various sizes, and are sold in gold or silver cases, as may be required.

It is hardly possible for us to accurately describe the numerous imitations to which we have alluded. They are usually inscribed with names so nearly approaching our own as to escape the observation of the unaccustomed buyer. Some are represented as made by the "Union Watch Co., of Boston, Mass."—no such company existing. Some are named the "Soldier's Watch," to be sold as our Forms or Wm. Ellery grade, usually known as the "Soldier's Watch" "others are named the "Appleton Watch Co." others the "S. Bartlett," instead of our P. S. Bartlett, besides many varieties named in such a manner as to convey the idea that they are the veritable productions of the American Watch Company.

A little attention on the part of buyers will protect them from gross imposition.

ROBBINS & APPLETON,
Agents for the American Watch Company.
162 BROADWAY, N. Y.

THE "RIDGEWOOD" PATENT SMOKING CASE.



A Beautiful Holiday Gift.

Most ingenious in its combination of the Metallic Case, containing Pipe and Stem, Matches and Tobacco, filled with a handsome Tobacco Pouch attached, filling the Pipe by a valve, without use of the fingers or waste of Tobacco, the whole securing freedom from all odor, and portable as a Cane Case. $3 is made for service, of waterproof silk, at $1 50, $2 00, $2 25, $2 50, and $3 00 to $5 and $6 00 the two latter richly plated and engraved. Sent safely conveyed in Country, Utility, and Economy for all Smokers, at Home or Abroad, in the Army and Navy. As a PRESENT to Friends, as a GIFT FROM THE LADIES, nothing could be more valuable. FOR THE SOLDIER AT ALL RANKS, in Camp or on the March, IT IS INVALUABLE. Large Orders, either Wholesale or Retail, promptly sent Army, daily attest this fact. SKATERS will appreciate this Case.

Also, The Ridgewood Smoking Tobacco,

Of superior quality and flavor, in packages to fit the pouch about a week's smoking, $2 per box, and larger sizes for the Social Trade. SMOKERS, DEALERS, and Sutlers invited to call and examine the Article. Circulars sent on order. A LIBERAL DISCOUNT to Dealers. Single Case sent by mail, post, on receipt of price and 25 cents. Also half-pound Package of this fine Tobacco, full weight, sent carefully put up by mail, post, on receipt of $1. All Orders receive prompt attention.

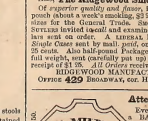
RIDGEWOOD SMOKING CO.,
Office 429 Broadway, cor. Howard Street, N. Y.



DROWNE & MOORE,
Manufacturing Jewelers, 208 Broadway, New York.
N. B.—All kinds of Gents' Jewelry Cut, Pin, Enameled, in Red, White, and Blue, by the case, 100, or 1000.

A. I. ROOT, Manufacturer of Pure Coin Silver Chains and Rings. Goods by mail as follows: Chains from $1 50 to $15 00, according to weight and design. Plain Rings, fine finish, 13 cts., 18, 25, and 38, and so up to $3, according to weight. Fancy Top Rings, chased and engraved, from $1 to $3 according to weight and design. Also Silver Keys, Chain Bars, Hooks, Pins, Sleeve Buttons, Studs, &c. Liberal discount to dealers.

A. I. ROOT, Medina, Ohio.

Holiday Presents.

J. H. Winslow & Co.,
100,000
WATCHES, CHAINS, &c., &c.
Worth $500,000.

To be sold for One Dollar each, without regard to value, and are to be paid for till you know what you are to get.

SPLENDID LIST!!

OF ARTICLES TO BE SOLD FOR ONE DOLLAR EACH.

100 Gold Hunting Cased Watches..... $100 00 each.
100 Gold Watches..... 60 00 each.
200 Ladies' Gold Watches..... 35 00 each.
200 Ladies' Hunting Silver Watches..... 15 00 each.
3000 Vest and Neck Chains..... 5 00 to 10 00 each.
3000 Gold Band Bracelets..... 5 00 to 10 00 each.
3000 Lockets..... 3 00 to 5 00 each.
3000 Gents' Pins..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Mosaic and Jet Brooches..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Lava and Florentine Ear Drops..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Coral, Opal, and Em. Brooches..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Cameo Ear Drops..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Mosaic and Jet Ear Drops..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Lava and Florentine Ear Drops..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Coral, Em., and Opal Ear Drops..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Gents' Breast Pins..... 2 50 to 5 00 each.
3000 Watch Keys..... 2 50 to 5 00 each.
3000 Fob and Ribbon Slides..... 2 50 to 6 00 each.
3000 Sets of Studs..... 2 50 to 6 00 each.
3000 Sleeve Buttons..... 2 50 to 6 00 each.
3000 Plain Rings..... 2 50 to 5 00 each.
3000 Stone Set Rings..... 2 50 to 6 00 each.
3000 Lockets..... 2 50 to 5 00 each.
3000 Sets Ladies' Jewelry..... 5 00 to 10 00 each.
3000 Gold Pens, Silver M'td Holders 4 00 to 7 00 each.
10000 Gold Pens, with Silver Extension Cases and Pencils..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.

All of the above list of Goods will be sold for one dollar each. Certificates of all the various articles, stating what each one can have, are first put into envelopes, sealed up, and mixed; and when ordered, are taken out without regard to choice, and sent by mail, this giving all a fair chance. On receipt of the Certificate, you will see what you can have, and then it is at your option to send one dollar and have the article or not.

In all transactions by mail, we shall charge for forwarding the Certificate, paying postage, and doing the business, 25 cents each, which must be inclosed when the Certificate is sent for. Our responsible will be sent for $1; eleven for $2; thirty-five for $5; sixty-five for $10; and a hundred for $15.

AGENTS.—Those acting as Agents will be allowed ten cents on every Certificate ordered by them, provided their remittance amounts to one dollar. Agents will collect 25 cents for every Certificate, and remit 15 cents to us, either in cash or postage stamps. Great caution should be used by our correspondents in proposed to giving their correct address, Town, County, and State. Address

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
208 Broadway, New York.

SALISBURY, BRO. & CO.,
AGENTS FOR THE UNITED STATES FOR THE CELEBRATED
ALBERTINE
Extension Holders and Gold Pens,

Of the most elegant pattern and durable construction, put up in new fancy cases of one dozen each, and not sold in any less quantities. They will retail for $3 each.

Price, per Dozen..... $30 25
Or 2 Dozen for..... 25 00

Sent by mail or express, prepaid. Address
SALISBURY, BRO. & CO., Providence, R. I.

$60 A MONTH! We want Agents at $60 a month, expenses paid, to sell our Everlasting Pencils, Ground Burners, and 13 other articles. 15 circulars sent free. SHAW & CLARK, Biddeford, Maine.

AGENTS WANTED.—Call and examine, or 20 sample cost free by mail for 30 cents, that retail for $3, ureanly needed by every person, by
R. L. WOLCOTT, 175 Chatham Square, N. Y.

Cavalry Badges
Constantly on hand and Engraved to Order, and sent free on receipt of Price.

Terms Cash in advance. Send for a Catalogue. Address C. L. BALCH & CO., 208 Broadway, New York.

ANY WIDOW, or Parent, or Orphan, or ANY Brother, or Sister of any Soldier, Sailor, Marine, Killed, or who died in the service of the United States, who desires Ninety-six Dollars ($96) a year Pension, FROM ONE TO FIVE HUNDRED DOLLARS ($100 to $500) Cash Bounty and all the arrears of pay due him, should call at once or write to the Subscriber, DEWITT C. Cox, 207 Walnut St., Philadelphia. Also state pay, if there is any due.

RHEUMATISM.

USE THE ELECTRO-METALLIC INSOLES, BELTS, AND ANKLETS. THE ONLY RELIABLE REMEDY FOR RHEUMATISM, COLD FEET, &c. MEYER & CO., 409 Broadway, N. Y. Insoles, $1 per pair; Belts, $3; Armlets, $1 50 each. Sent by mail for 50 cents additional.

Look. Look. Look.

RICH, RARE, AND INSTRUCTIVE.—An excellent number. For portraits, character, and biographies of GEN. HARRIS, Lord Lyons, Forrest, with portraits of many beautiful women, Egyptian mummies, Sioux Indians, Love, Courtship, and Marriage, with 200 Men and Beasts, Children, Miss K. got a Husband, A Woman's Experience, The Secret of Beauty, Love-Signs in the Face, The Human Face Divine, Dreams, Causes and Effect, see the January number Phrenological Journal, now ready. Only 15 cents or $1 70 a year. New volume. FOWLER & WELLS. No. 308 Broadway, N. Y.

IMPORTANT to the PENNSYLVANIA RESERVES.—Any Soldier of the Pennsylvania Reserve Regiments, who may have been discharged, or who is in the city, can hear something greatly to his advantage by calling upon or sending his address to JOSEPH E. DEVITT, No. 417 Walnut St., Philadelphia, Pa., the Military and Naval Agency.

H. A. HARVEY, 84 Maiden Lane, N. Y., TWINES, Rope, CORDAGE, and Yarn, Steam Packing, Wire, CARPET WARP, Fish Lines, Hooking Cord, Loom Cord, and Superior Tow, Wicking and Wrapping PAPER, Envelopes, and Paper Bags.

Winter Cloaks.

BRODIE'S
Great Clearing Sale.
The Entire Winter Stock
Will be Sold without regard to Cost,
Before making Extensive Alterations for the Spring Trade.
BRODIE,
The Leader of Fashions!
300 Canal Street, New York.

American Card Company's
New Union Playing Cards.
National Emblems.

Nine of Eagles.

The suits are EAGLES, SHIELDS, STARS, and FLAGS. Colonel in place of King; Goddess of Liberty for Queen; Eagle for Jack.

The Union Playing Cards are the first and only genuine American Cards ever produced, and as they are printed according to Act of Congress, they can be manufactured only by the American Card Company.

The Cards are rapidly taking the place of Cards bearing Foreign emblems. The demand for them is unprecedented in the Card Trade, and they will soon become the leading Card in the American market.

In playing with these Cards, they are to be called by the names the Union regiments adopt, as the emblems are as familiar as household words everywhere among the people of the American Republic, they can be used as reading the first occasion as cards bearing Foreign emblems.

The Union Cards are the most pleasing and attractive card ever made. They are produced in the highest style of the art, and each pack is put up in an elegant Card Case, suitable to keep them in when not in use, and then in handsome dress home for the trade.

Two Sample Packs in Card Cases sent, post-paid, on receipt of $1.

Address AMERICAN CARD COMPANY,
455 Broadway, or 165 William St., N. Y.

HOSTETTER'S
CELEBRATED
STOMACH BITTERS

TO THE DEBILITATED AND THE DECREPID—

For general debility and exhaustion of the powers of nature, whether occasioned by sickness, hard living, constant exposure, old age, or any other physical or mental cause, the one thing needful and indispensable is HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS. When the fire of life seems to be absolutely dying out in its system, and the mind, sympathizing with the body, is reduced almost to a state of imbecility, this mighty restorative comes, as it were, to kindle the last spark of the Slough of Despond, and recruit and re-invigorate both the mind and body to the full vigor of health. The Captain of the Mennonghela, writes thus to Dr. Hostetter: "I can truly say that your Stomach Bitters were upon me a boon at the effect of a rain after a long dry spell in the fall of the year. It is the only thing on the passive state the second crop of grass, and your wholesome medicine seems to have united a second crop of life and energy in me." And this is truly the effect of this grateful and powerful invigorant, and the same happy consolation, or where strength has been spent by sickness or age, find it a most efficacious and delightful tonic, and it is advised to be used with great caution in instances or waiting of the flesh, by young females. In fact, it is a much safer and surer remedy for the surrery than any thing advertised specially for that purpose.

Sold by all Druggists and Family Grocers.

Hostetter's Stomach Bitters,
PREPARED AND SOLD BY
HOSTETTER & SMITH, PITTSBURGH, PA.
DEPOT FOR NEW YORK, 476 BROADWAY.

Salesmen Wanted.
$75 a month, or commission allowed on sales. Apply to HALE & CO., Newburyport, Mass.

SPLENDID HOLIDAY
PRESENTS.

Superbly finished watches, the beauty of which is only equaled by their chespness.—N. Y. Weekly, July 25th.

Particularly valuable for officers in the army, and travelers.—Frank Leslie's, Feb. 31.

Prettiest, best and cheapest time-pieces ever offered. —N. Y. Illustrated News, Jan. 16.

Magic Time Observers,
The Perfection of Mechanism!
Being a Hunting, or Open Face, or Lady's or Gentleman's Watch combined, with Patent Self-winding Improvement.

A most pleasing novelty. One of the prettiest, most convenient, and decidedly the best and cheapest timepiece for general and reliable use ever offered. It has within it and connected with its machinery its own winding attachment, rendering a key entirely unnecessary. The cases of this Watch are composed of two metals, the outer one being fine 16 carat gold. It has the improved ruby action lever movement, and is warranted an accurate timepiece. Price, superbly engraved, per case of half dozen, $204. Simple watches in neat morocco cases, $24 00 sent by mail, the postage is 36 cents; registering, 20 cents.

Silver Watches!
First-Class Hunting Time-Pieces.
FOR ACCURACY OF MOVEMENT, BEAUTY OF MATERIAL, AND, ABOVE ALL, CHEAPNESS IN PRICE, THESE WATCHES ARE UNEQUALED.

UNIVERSAL APPROBATION!

An imitation so faultless that it can hardly be detected by the most experienced eye. The material being of two metals, the outer one first quality Silver and the inner one German Silver, it can not be recognized by outing or heavy engraving, making it not only in appearance, but in durability, the best manufactured Solid Sterling Silver in existence.

The rate of these watches in the army is a source of enormous profit, retailing, as they very readily do, at $25 and upward. Many hundred dollars can be made in a single pay-day by any one of ordinary business tact!

AT WHOLESALE ONLY! Having many leaders open, beautifully engraved, white enamel dial, and fuffey end hands, in good running order, for the half dozen, $66; dozen, $3 38; registering, 29 cts. Sold only by the case. Cash to be safely sent by mail.

22ND TERMS CASH, INVARIABLY IN ADVANCE. No agents employed; buyers must deal directly with us. If money is sent us by express or mail in a registered letter it is at our risk. Orders will meet the most prompt and faithful attention.

HUBBARD BROS., Sole Importers,
Broadway, cor. Courtlandt St., New York.

Bring-Press for Sale.

One Taylor Double Cylinder, five Rollers, Table Distribution, Bed 38x51. Price $3500.

Apply to HARPER & BROTHERS, 329 Pearl St., N.Y.

$8 Watch and Chain. $8

$11 Watch and Chain. $11

A Beautiful Engraved Gold-Plated Watch and Chain, fine Swiss movement, handsome dial and hands, warranted a perfect time-keeper, 8 Dollars. Engraved Silver, same as above, chain included, 8 Dollars.

A very heavy Hunting Cased Solid Silver Watch for Ladies or Gents, fine Swiss movement, stem wound and stem set, capped, warranted a perfect time-keeper, and a handsome Gold Plated Chain included, for 11 Dollars.

We will send, on receipt of the money, one of our Watches and a Chain, by mail, postage paid, to any address. These Watches are especially adapted to the Army, being heavily cased and perfect time-keepers, and in running order.

GEORGE A. ELY & CO.,
No. 208 Broadway,
New York.

$50 for $20.

SOLDIERS IN THE ARMY.

For $20 we will forward by mail or express, pre-paid, the following list of fine Gold Plated Jewelry:—1 Vest Chains, 12 Gents' Seal Rings, 3 Gold Pens and Extension Holders, 6 Vest Hooks, 4 Scarf Pins with Stone Set, 1 Pair or Scarf Pins, 4 pair Sleeve Buttons, 3 Box and Glass Pins for Shirt Bosom, 3 Plain Chain Lockets, and 1 Dozen Stone Fine. Address THOMAS CAFFERTEY & CO., Providence, R. I.

ALL ARTICLES FOR SOLDIERS
At Baltimore, Washington, sell all places occupied by Union troops, should be sent to BERNDTSON'S EXPRESS, No. 74 Broadway. Sutlers charged low rates.

DO YOU WANT LUXURIANT WHISKERS OR MUSTACHES?—My Onguent will force them to grow heavily in twenty-seven days on the worst face without stain or injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, free of observation, on receipt of money or draft. R. G. GRAHAM, No. 109 Nassau Street, N. Y.

Gold! Gold! Gold!

20,000 Watches Chains, &c., &c., &c.

Worth $100,000.

To be sold for One Dollar each without regard to value, and not to be paid for till you know what you are to get. Send 20 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time get our Circular, containing full list of articles and particulars; also Terms to those who act as Agents. Address

C. F. SHUTTS, 385 River Street, Troy, N. Y.

Opera and Field-Glasses
Of great power, from $2 50 to $25. Spectacles and Eye Glasses. Also HOLIDAY GOODS Cheaper than Ever!!! By the Manufacturing Optician, H. P. KING, 189 Broadway, up stairs. Send for circular.

J. W. EVERETT. & CO.,

Will forward to any address, on receipt of order, Photographs from life of any of the prominent

OFFICERS OF THE ARMY AND NAVY, STATESMEN, DIVINES,
ACTORS, ARTISTS,
FOREIGN CELEBRITIES, ETC., ETC.

20 cents each. $1 80 per dozen. Free by mail. Address

J. W. EVERETT & CO.,
Box 1614. N. Y. City.

$75 A MONTH! I want to hire Agents in every County to sell a recently patented article, just patented, to sell my new cheap Family Sewing Machines. Address
S. MADISON, Alfred, Maine.

A Splendid Holiday or Bridal Present.

HARPER'S
Illuminated and Pictorial
BIBLE.

Including the Apocrypha. Superbly embellished by over Sixteen Hundred Illustrations, entirely engraved by Adams after Designs by Chapman, exclusive of a Series of Rich Illuminations in Colors, comprising Frontispieces, Presentation Plates, Family Record, Title-pages, &c. The whole forming a sumptuous Folio Volume.

PRICES.—Morocco, gilt edges, bevelled and paneled sides, $25 00; morocco antique, gilt edges, $22 00; morocco, bevelled edges, blank stamped, $18 00; Full Roan, marbled edges, $16 00.

Harper's Pictorial Bible is printed from the standard copy of the American Bible Society, and contains Marginal References, a Copious Index, a Concordance, Chronological Table, List of Proper Names, General Index, Table of Weights and Measures, &c. The large Family Record, Titles to the Old and New Testaments, Family Record, Presentation Plate, Historical Illustrations, and Initial Letters to the chapters, Ornamental Border, &c., are from original designs, engraved for this work expressly by J. G. Chapman, Esq., of New York. In addition to which, there are numerous other large Engravings drawn by distinguished modern artists in France and England; to which a full Index is given.

HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers, New York.

For sale by A. WILLIAMS & CO., Boston; SUTTON, ELGIN & CO., Philadelphia; CUSHINGS & BAILEY, Baltimore; FRANCK TAYLOR, Washington; ROBERT CLARKE & CO., Cincinnati; RICHARD & WORTH, Louisville; G. CRIGGS & CO., Chicago; DAWSON & BROTHERS, Montreal.

HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK,
329 Pearl Street, Franklin Square.

VERY HARD CASH.
A Novel.
BY CHARLES READE,
AUTHOR OF
"LOVE ME LITTLE, LOVE ME LONG," "NEVER TOO LATE TO MEND," &c., &c.
WITH ILLUSTRATIONS.
8vo. Paper, 75 Cents.

HARPER'S
NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE
For January, 1864.

CONTENTS:

SCENES IN THE WAR OF 1812.—VII. CLOSING OPERATIONS OF THE ARMY OF THE NORTH.

ILLUSTRATIONS.—View at Langley's Lane, 1814.—La Colle Mill and Block-House.—Sir James Lucas Yeo.—Attack on Oswego.—Place of Battle at Sackett's Creek.—Peter B. Porter.—Plan of Battle of Chippewa.—Street's Creek Bridge, 1814.—Monument of Fort Mississaga.—Ruins of Fort Erie.

A CRUISE AMONG THE FUEGIANS.

ILLUSTRATIONS.—Staysail Beach.—Banner Cove.—A Fuegian and his Feast.—Jemmy Button's Guard.

PICTURES OF THE JAPANESE.—III. INSTITUTIONS AND CUSTOMS. (Concluded.)

ILLUSTRATIONS.—Japanese Divinity.—The Village Beauty.—Crossing a River.—Soldier Writer.—On Duty.—Going up Hill.—Storks.—Japanese Physician.—A Japanese Group.—Road-Side Shrine.—Coming.—Courtesan in Gala-Costume.—Gigantic Statue of Buddha.—Japanese Group.—Wedding Party.—A Gentleman.—Japanese Printer.—Exchange of full Powers.

CAP-AND-BELLS.—A NOVEL IN TEN CHAPTERS. (Concluded.)

WOMEN UNDER DIFFICULTIES.

THE LEADSMAN'S SONG.

OUT ON NAHANTH.

THREE HUNDRED THOUSAND STRONG.

THE VISIT OF THE CHRIST-CHILD.

DRIFTING APART.

A MEMORY.

THE SMALL HOUSE AT ALLINGTON.

CHAPTER XLIII. Fit For!

CHAPTER XLIV. Valentine's Day at Allington.

CHAPTER XLV. Valentine's Day in London.

ILLUSTRATIONS.—The Gate.—"It is over now."

A FAITHFUL CONSUMER.

OUR ARTISTS.

FASHIONS FOR AND WEEKS.

BY CHEMICAL EXPERIENCE.

THE NEW LAMP WICK TO TRIM.

IN HOSPITAL AFTER STONE RIVER.

THE CRISIS AND THE MAN.

MONTHLY RECORD OF CURRENT EVENTS.

LITERARY NOTICES.

EDITOR'S EASY CHAIR.

EDITOR'S DRAWER.

ILLUSTRATIONS.—Andrew Johnson, a. d. 1864.—An Amazon, a. d. 1854.—Bodily Exemption.—Nellie's Wisdom.

FASHIONS FOR JANUARY.

ILLUSTRATIONS.—Dinner Toilet.—Children's Dress.—Child's Dress.

TERMS.

One Copy for one Year $3 00
Two Copies for One Year $5 00

An Extra Copy will be allowed for every Club of Five Subscribers, at $2 50 each, or 11 Copies for $25 00.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE and HARPER'S WEEKLY, both one year, $5 00.

HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS.

Circulation over 100,000.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.
Single Copies Six Cents.
TERMS.

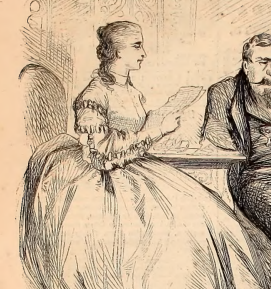
One Copy for One Year $3 00
One Copy for Two Years $5 00

And an Extra Copy will be allowed for every Club of Ten Subscribers, at $2 50 each, or 11 Copies for $25.

THREE DOLLARS A MONTH.—Subscribers can begin for twelve, and One Dollar per time for outside Advertisements.

Vols. I., II., III., IV., V., VI. and VII. for the Years 1857, 1858, 1859, 1860, 1861, 1862, and 1863 of "HARPER'S WEEKLY," handsomely bound in Cloth extra, Price $3 00 each, are now ready.

HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS.



UNAVOIDABLY POSTPONED.

EUGÉNIE (Reading the English Note). "The BELLS don't come, Dear!"
LOUIS. "I'll ne—Then of course we must give up the Party."

FISK & HATCH.

Bankers and Dealers in Government Securities,

AND

AGENTS FOR THE UNITED STATES
FIVE-TWENTY LOAN,
No. 32 Wall Street, New York.

A Gold Watch Free!

To all who act as Agents for our splendid STATIONERY FAMILY PACKETS, which contain fine Writing Materials, Paper, Envelopes, Handsome Jewelry, Novelties for the Holidays, &c., &c." Retail for only 25 cts. Worth three times as much. These Packets contain better Stationery and more than any others put up. They are in great demand; sales quick; the profits immense; and, in addition, every one is a present from us a splendid Gold or Solid Silver Watch, warranted a perfect time-keeper, worth ten times as much as the Competition Watches given with the trash sold by other parties. Please call or send for our New Circular.

G. S. HASKINS & CO., 25 Beekman Street, N. Y.

ARTIFICIAL LEGS & ARMS SELPHO'S PATENT

The best substitutes for Natural Limbs ever invented. Established 24 years. Call or send for circular.

VERMILYE & CO.,

Bankers, No. 44 Wall Street,

WILL CONTINUE TO PURNISH

U. S. FIVE-TWENTY BONDS

As long as taxed by Government at Par and Interest.

To BANKS and BANKERS the usual commission allowed.

We also buy and sell all market rates,

U. S. One Year CERTIFICATES OF INDEBTEDNESS.
U. S. COUPON BONDS OF 1881.
U. S. 7.30 TREASURY NOTES.
U. S. QUARTERMASTER CHECKS.

Matching Certificates of Indebtedness collected on favorable terms.

VERMILYE & CO.,
BANKERS, No. 44 Wall Street, N. Y.

Lands. To all Wanting Farms.

LANDS.—TO ALL WANTING FARMS.—Large and thriving settlement, mild and healthful climate, 30 miles south of Philadelphia by railroad. Rich soil, produces large crops, which can now be seen growing. Twenty and fifty acre tracts, at from $15 to $20 per acre, payable within four years. Good business opening for Mason, Carpenter and others, churches, schools, and good society. It is now the most improving place East of the west. Hundreds are settling and building. The beauty with which the place is laid out is unsurpassed. Letters answered. Papers containing reports and giving full information will be sent free. Address CHAS. R. LANDIS, Vineland Post Office, Cumberland County, New Jersey.

From Report of Solon Robinson, Agricultural Editor of the Tribune:—It is one of the most attractive fertile tracts, in an almost level position and suitable condition for immediate farming that we know of this side of the Western prairies.

FOR

Holiday Presents,

SEE

J. H. Winslow & Co.'s

Advertisement on page 31.

Learn to Skate in One Hour by using The American Parlor Or Floor Skate, Hard Rubber Rollers, Anti-friction Axles, Frederick Stevens, 215 Pearl Street, New York. 68 Kilby Street, Boston.

A Beautiful Complexion free from Tan, Pimples and Freckles may easily be procured by using the "BALM OF THOUSAND FLOWERS." For clearing it is unsurpassed. It is composed of palm oil, honey, and other valuable articles, highly perfumed by its own ingredients, and when used for washing, night and morning, renders the skin soft and white, and free from blemish. Price 50 cents.

The Trade supplied by HOWARD, SAMPSH & CO., 165 and 167 Chambers Street, N. Y., and for sale by all Druggists.

CLOTHING
For the Holidays.
Prices Reduced.
Overcoats,
Fancy and Dress Suits,
Robes de Chambre,
Smoking Jackets,
AND
Furnishing Goods
FOR Gentlemen.
Metropolitan Leonard
AND Garibaldi Suits
FOR Children.
Devlin & Co.,
Broadway, cor. Grand St.
Broadway, cor. Warren St.

BILLIARD BALLS.

Patent compressed Ivory Billiard Balls, 2¼ and 2⅜ in., $10 per set. 2⅝ in. Bagatelle, $5 per set. 1¾ in. Bagatelle, $3 per set. 79 Ball Pool, $30 set. WM. H. HALLING, 205 Centre St., New York, sign of the Golden Elephant.

THE

Atlantic Monthly

FOR

1864

Will contain Poems by LUCRET DOWNING, HENRY W. LONGFELLOW, JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL, JOHN G. WHITTIER, and others of the highest order. Price $3 00 a year, postage paid; a liberal reduction to clubs.

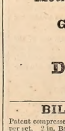
TICKNOR & FIELDS, Boston.

Shults' Onguent, warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in six weeks, or money refunded. Sent postpaid, for 30 cents. Address C. F SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

GOLD PENS AND CASES.

Retailed at wholesale prices. 14 kt. Gold Pen, Solid Silver Case, $1 50, warranted for one year, guarantee accompanies each Pen. Circulars and Sc a stamp. Pens reponted on receipt of 25 cents.

H. S. JOHNSON, 15 Malden Lane, N. Y.



A GENTS WANTED.—$3 positively made from 20 cts.; Sample sent by mail on receipt of 20 cts. Call and examine, or one sample sent free by mail for 30 cts; retails for $1, by E. L. WOLCOTT, 170 Chatham Square, N. Y.

Davis Collamore & Co.,
479 Broadway, below Broome Street.

Are now Opening HOLIDAY GOODS in great VARIETY and of very beautiful styles.

Also DESKS, TEA, and TOILET SETS. GLASS WARE, ENGRAVED with CRESTS or INITIALS.

BLUE CANTON COFFEE CUPS, &c., &c.

CHICKERING EGG DISHES.

FINE WATCH FREE,
And $15 Per Day Easy.

Agents should be careful in directing their orders for our Original and "only Genuine" Extra Large Size Stationery Prize Packages, which have become so popular through the fine quality and value of their contents. As we have several imitations, who copy our Styles, Advertisements, Premiums, &c., for the purpose of deceiving Agents, we are the only manufacturers of the Celebrated Philadelphia Prize Packages," and none are genuine unless bought from us. These parties who advertise to give a "Premium Watch" to agents will not do so unless the agent first pays them from $10 to $20 in cash. This was challenge any of them to deny." We will present a case of 100 of our Finest Packages to any agent who obtains a watch from them without first paying the above-named amount. Their attempt to prevent our premiums, after our long-established custom, is in this case but a poor dodge. We will do as we have done for years past, present free to every one who acts as our agent, a Solid Gold or Silver Hunting-Case Watch, "Genuine English Movements," and warranted a correct time-keeper. These watches are presented on the spot or sent with the first order. No one else does this. Our Wonderful Packages contain more really valuable articles than any half dozen others ever issued. Among the surprising articles, consists of each package will be found Fine Stationery, Pens, Pencils, Envelopes, Leather Fashion Plates, Designs for Needle-work, Cottage Keepsakes, Household Companion, Letter-Writer's Instructor, Parlor Companion, Ready-Reckoner, Pocket Calendar for 1864, Union Emblems, Camp Companions for Soldiers, Military Directions, Lucky Advice, Set Curious Recipes, Many Ways to get Rich, Yankee Notions, Fancy Articles, Birds and Animals, Jewelry, Gentlemen's Jewelry, &c., &c., all together worth nearly dollars, for only 25c. Agents make immense profits. Circulars sent free. We will guarantee smart agents can make $15 per day. Our regular agents make more. Our Packages stand same as ever, above all others for quality and quantity of contents. Agents wanted in every town and town, in the country. Goods sent safe to all parts of the army. Send for our Great New Circular for forming remaining Extra Premium inducements, free. S. C. HICKARDS & CO., 102 Nassau St., N. Y. Only Original and Largest and Oldest Prize Package House in the World.

ROMAN SCARFS SENT BY MAIL EVERYWHERE

3,000 dozen pure Roman Scarfs.

Made from the Purest and Most Silk.

These are the most fashionable, elegant, and economical Scarfs ever imported, as they are reversible; one Scarf is as good as two.

They are now worn in Europe by both ladies and gentlemen. Can be worn with either pin or ring.

The whole lot will be retailed at

WHOLESALE PRICES!

$1 50 and $2 EACH.

A single Scarf sent by mail or receipt of the cash, and six cents for postage.

Very fine Plaited Scarf Pins or Rings

At $1 50 each.

S. W. H. WARD, No. 387 Broadway, New York.

STEEL COLLARS

ENAMELLED WHITE.

Having the appearance and comfort of linen, have been worn in England for the last ten years in preference to any other collar, as they are readily cleaned in one minute with a sponge.

To Military, Sea and Travelers they are invaluable.

Price $1 each, sent by Post to any part of the Union on receipt of $1 00.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL

AGENTS WANTED in every Town in the Union.

S. W. H. WARD, Sole Agent for U. S., 387 Broadway, N. Y.

FRENCH FLANNEL

OVERSHIRTS,

the largest assortment in New York, $2 75, $3, $3 75 each; all cut on one Pattern.

A single Shirt sent by mail on receipt of the cost. The cost of postage must be enclosed—40 cents for each Shirt.

Send the size of your neck.

ENGLISH MERINO UNDERSHIRTS AND DRAWERS, $2, $2 25, and $2 50. SCOTCH LAMB'S WOOL UNDERSHIRTS AND DRAWERS. ALSO, FINE WHITE SHIRTS MADE TO MEASURE AT $2, $2 50, $3, AND $3 50 EACH.

Self-Measurement for Shirts.

Printed directions for self-measurement, list of prices, and drawings of different styles of shirts and collars sent free on receipt of stamp.

The Cash can be paid to Express company on receipt of goods.

S. W. H. WARD,

No. 387 Broadway, New York.

IVORY SLEEVE BUTTONS

Engraved with Initials, 75c. per pair, sent free on receipt of the price. Pearl, $1 00 per set each. WM. J. WELLING, Importer of Ivory goods, 207 Centre St., N. Y., sign of the Golden Elephant.

Fogg's Double-Action Patent Lever SKATE BUCKLE,

Manufactured and for sale on Straps, at wholesale, by STEVENS, MATTHEWS & DANIELS, Straps, and Leather Goods, 215 Pearl St., New York. 68 Kilby St., Boston.

MUNN & CO.,

Solicitors of American and Foreign Patents,

AND

Are Publishers of the ILLUSTRATED SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN, 37 Park Row, N. Y. Pamphlets of information concerning Patents, free. Specimens of the Paper, gratis.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

AGENTS, male or female, SOLDIERS, and all having some time to spare, are particularly requested, as a favor, to send us their address, and we will send in return, FREE, information for which they will be THANKFUL. We offer EXTRA INDUCEMENTS. From $5 to $25 per day ABOVE EXPENSES. We want addresses from every COUNTY in the U. S., and from every COUNTY in the Army. Address (in full) RICHARDS & CO., 37 and 39 Nassau Street, Box 5313, N. Y.

Friends. Send a stamp for my Circulars. Address L. M. HARRIS, Boston, Mass.

HOLIDAY GOODS.

Schuyler, Hartley & Graham,

19 Maiden Lane AND 22 John Street,

31 Rue du Chateau d'Eau, Paris. Sade St., Birmingham, England.

French and English Fancy Goods.

PORCELAIN VASES. MARBLE ORNAMENTS. MARBLE CLOCKS. BRONZES. CARD RECEIVERS. PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS. OBDEN AND DRESSING CASES. CARVED WOOD WORK BOXES. LIQUOR CASES. OPERA GLASSES. TABLE LEATHER BAGS. Also JET AND CORAL JEWELRY, DIAMONDS, WATCHES, &c.

MILITARY GOODS.—GUNS—PISTOLS—CUTLERY, &c.

FINE ENGLISH AND FRENCH MEERSCHAUMS.

$35 WATCHES. $35

Genuine Full-Jeweled American Lever Watches, in 4 Ounce Coin Silver Hunting Cases, Gold Joints, for $35.

Also every variety of good Watches at equally low rates. All orders from the Army must be prepaid, as the Express Companies will not bill for collection on soldiers.

J. L. FERGUSON, Importer of Watches.
208 Broadway New York.

$7. WATCHES. $7.

A Beautiful Engraved Gold-Plated Watch, Lever Cap, small size, English Movements, perfect time-keeper. Sent free by mail, in neat case, for only $7. A Solid Silver, same as above, $10. Specially adapted to the ARMY. CHAS. P. NORTON & CO., 38 & 40 Ann Street, N. Y.

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper, of Aug. 23, says: "Messrs. NORTON & CO. have combined two very desirable things in a watch—elegance and reliability. When it is known that for $7 a person can have an excellent time-keeper, there will be greater potentiality in all the affairs of life."

The only enameled "Turn-over" Collar made in metals. Send 3 cts. for "turn-over" or 15 cents for a "Choker," to Box 5173, and receive by return mail a beautiful American enameled Metallic Collar Co., 24 First St., N. Y.

E. T. ANTHONY,
Manufacturers of Photographic Materials,
501 Broadway, New York.

Card Photographs.

Our Catalogue now embraces considerably over

A FOUR THOUSAND

different subjects (to which additions are continually being made) of Portraits of Eminent Persons, viz.:

72 Major-Generals,	325 Statesmen,
190 Brigadier-Generals,	197 Divines,
220 Colonels,	116 Authors,
84 Lieut.-Colonels,	30 Artists,
907 Other Officers,	112 Stage,
60 Officers of the Navy,	46 Prominent Women,
	147 Prominent Foreign Portraits.

2,500 COPIES OF WORKS OF ART,

INCLUDING REPRODUCTIONS OF THE MOST CELEBRATED ENGRAVINGS, PAINTINGS, STATUES, &c.

Catalogues sent on receipt of Stamp.

An order for One Dozen Photos from our Catalogue will be filled on receipt of $1 50, and sent free.

Photographic Albums.

Of these we manufacture a great variety, ranging in price from 50 cents to $50 each.

Our ALBUMS have the reputation of being superior in beauty and durability to any others.

The smaller kinds can be sent safely by mail (5 a package of six cents per oz.

The more expensive can be sent by express.

We also keep a large assortment of

Stereoscopes and Stereoscopic Views.

Our Catalogue of these will be sent to any address on receipt of Stamp.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY,
MANUFACTURERS OF PHOTOGRAPHIC MATERIALS,
501 Broadway, New York.

Friends or relatives of prominent military men will confer a favor by sending us their likenesses to copy. They will be kept carefully, and returned uninjured.

CDV. FINE ALBUMS MADE TO ORDER for Centennial Regiments in their Uniform, or for other purposes, with suitable inscriptions, &c.

THE BOWEN MICROSCOPE.

Magnifies small objects 800 times. Makes a useful everywhere for 30 CENTS. Price of different powers, for $1 00. Address E. C. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass.

STAMMERING

And Stuttering cured by Dutch's Patent Scientific Appliances. For (New Edition of) descriptive Pamphlets and Drawings, address J. L. M. DUTCH, P. O. Box 94, N. Y.

Remington's

Approved by the Government.

Warranted superior to any other Pistol of its kind. Also Pocket and Sporting Rifles. Sold by the Trade generally.

E. REMINGTON & SONS,
Ilion N. Y.

The Soldier's Gift

To the Loved One at Home.

We will deliver, free of freight or cartage, at any Express Office East of St. Joseph, Mo., any of our beautiful Albums of the value of $5 or more, that may be ordered by members of the Army or Navy of the United State as Presents to friends at home. We manufacture elegant styles of all kinds.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY,
Manufacturers and Importers,
501 Broadway, N. Y.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION.

VOL. VIII.—No. 368.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, JANUARY 16, 1864. [$1.00 FOR FOUR MONTHS. $3.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1864, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

AVERILL'S RAID.—[SEE NEXT PAGE.]

AVERILL'S RAID.

We give on page 36 the portrait of GENERAL AVERILL, whose dash upon the Virginia and Tennessee Railroad is "one of the most hazardous, important, and successful raids since the commencement of the war." We must defer to a future time a sketch of the services of General Averill. The best account of his raid is contained in his own dispatch, the essential points of which will be found in our Number of January 9. Our sketch presents an instant in this expedition, which is thus described by a correspondent of the press: "All of the columns suffered severely from cold and hunger; but the severest suffering was endured by Averill's command. The nights were bitter. It rained, snowed, and hailed. Imagine the gathering of clouds, the wind approaching, the worried soldier and foot-sore horse climbing and scraping up the steep mountain roads; then the descending of the storm, the water freezing as it touched the ground, the line winding its way up one side and down another, entering passes that seemed to be the terminus of these mountainous creations, and then emerging upon open lands but to feel the fury of the storm the more severe, and he can form but a mere idea of what was the scene on this trying occasion."

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 16, 1864.

THE GOVERNOR AND THE POLICE.

GOVERNOR SEYMOUR has removed the Metropolitan Police Commissioners upon the ground that their report of the riots of last summer is sectarian and partisan. The passage of the report upon which he bases this objection is as follows:

"These violent proceedings had a political design and direction, and received encouragement from newspapers and partisans of influence and intelligence. The Board of Police had been threatened with summary removal, which was regarded as a near impunity. Resistance to the force desired the removal, and there were not lacking instances of lawlessness—too fruit of the expected change. A large portion of the mob were of the same nationality and political and religious faith of the riotous mob."

Certainly there could be no simpler or calmer statement of the facts than is here presented. Is it "partisan" to say that the riots received encouragement from newspapers and partisans of influence and intelligence? But Governor Seymour has surely not forgotten his own speech at the Academy of Music on the 4th of July, about ten days before the riots, in which, after sneering at the war and the Government, he warns the latter that mobs can play at necessity as well as a Government. Governor Seymour surely knows that every other man in the country knows, that the riots sprang from the bitter hostility to the Government and the war, and the incessant denunciation of the law of the land which distinguished the speeches of Vallandigham, Brooks, and other members of the regular meetings of Mr. Luke Cozans's Democratic Association. Mr. Cozans, as is well known, being a particular friend of Fernando Wood. Governor Seymour surely knows, what no law-obeying citizen has forgotten, that not only did the mob attack the officers sent to quell its riotous operation; but that he stood at the City Hall, the chief civil magistrate sworn to execute the laws, and told the rioters, reeking with unnecessary blood and raving in outrage of every law human and divine, that he had asked the Government to suspend the operation of the law, which they put forth as their excuse for arson and murder.

These are facts of history. Is not Governor Seymour a "partisan of influence and intelligence," who in an offense incapacitating men for public office to tell the truth of him as of all other instigators of the mob?

Or is it any less true that influential papers in the city spread these bloody and murderous mobs as "an uprising of the people," hoping that they would lead to some signal and fearful embarrassment of the Government in prosecuting the war? And will any honest man say that the daily issues of a single paper, The World, for a fortnight before the outbreak, and not say that it gave "encouragement" to the rioters? Is it, then, "partisan" to say so? Does a man cease to be fit for Police Commissioner because he thinks that the course of such papers was destructive of the public peace?

It seems also that it is "sectarian" to say that a large part of the police force were of the same religious faith with the mob. It may be a mistake, but how is it "sectarian?" Is it perhaps liable to that charge because it implies that the mob were of one religious faith? But can any fact be more notorious than that the mob was mostly composed of Irish, and that the Irish are generally of one faith? Why else did the late Archbishop Hughes summon them to his house, and address them as their spiritual head, and beg them not to disgrace the name of Irishmen and Catholics? To mention these facts, without which their report would be curiously incomplete and unfaithful, shows, according to Governor Seymour, that the Commissioners have departed from the impartial and dispassionate position of public officers, and have lost their usefulness.

It will be plain enough to every attentive reader of these reasons for the removal that Governor Seymour lends himself to the pitiful attempt of Mr. M'Keon to excite a religious rancor in this country. Do these gentlemen not know that they are playing with edged tools? that to excite such a feeling is to annihilate those for whose support it is in bid? Much may be pardoned to the desperate political extremity of Mr. Seymour. A year ago his prospects were unclouded for the nomination and support of the "Conservative" party for the Presidency. This year even the rump of the old Whig party passes him by for M'Clellan, and a man would be laughed at who should name Mr. Seymour as a candidate. Mr. Seymour therefore is at his coolest as "a partisan" during the riots, and his futile struggles to perplex the Government and the war. Much may be pardoned to his extremity. But when he tries to excite religious hate, it is an effort which shows his own consciousness of his desperate position.

THE TRUTH CONFESSED.

THE Richmond Inquirer of December 18 has a very remarkable article upon the rebel conscription, in which it states plainly the political philosophy of the leaders in the rebellion. It is exactly that of Mr. Calhoun. It is that which every honest supporter of slavery must logically hold. And when the mass of the people in the Southern States are once able to comprehend the intentions of the leaders they now so blindly follow, the retribution will be terrible and deserved.

The argument for the universal conscription, says the Inquirer, is "to secure the equality of every man, from which it is inferred that every man ought to go to the field. It then asks: "Is not our war based on the principle and fact, which all history has established, that there is a truth—the inequality of man—for policy we say of races." In other words, the rebellion is a reaction against the Declaration of Independence. Men have not equal rights, and slavery is not only not yet quite done to say so, that is what we mean.

The great need of the Southern people is a leader. Some man would show them how to live under pretense of holding colored men in slavery, the real purpose of the aristocracy is that capital shall own labor of every kind; and that, if secession could be accomplished, the reconstruction organization of society upon a strictly aristocratic basis would follow. Such a leader would show the people that the scriptural argument for slavery upon which the slaveholders rely, is an argument for the enslaving of white men, for the old Hebrew slaves were not black; and that, in fact, they are fooled to the most complete extent by the men for whom they fight so bravely. It was the knowledge that, if the right of free speech, guaranteed by the Constitution, were tolerated in the South, slavery would be destroyed by the common-sense of the Southern people, which made Calhoun and all his school insist upon suppressing it. Consequently, by the most imperious and peremptory law, the Constitution has been a dead letter in every slave State for more than thirty years.

Meanwhile as the rebel leaders are all slavedrivers, and bound by a common purpose and peril, and as the people have neither the habit of free thought nor discussion, but, being ignorant, are the easy victims of every fear, prejudice and the baser passions, it will be yet a long time before they fairly understand their condition, and see that they are deliberately to rivet their own chains. But some day we shall hear, that in some remote corner a few men have made a stand against the sweeping conscription. There will not be enough force to compel their obedience. Successful disaffection will spread; and once emancipated from the iron control of the slave-driving drivers, these men will see that their interest, their prosperity, their peace and progress, lie in the total overthrow of a system which makes a great slave driver like Jefferson Davis the head and overpowering rival of every poor artisan or laborer in the South who lives by the work of his own hands.

"OUR OWN."

MR. CHARLES MACKAY, the correspondent of the London Times, has returned to this country and to his vocation. When he left for England in the autumn it was supposed that he had been recalled on account of the ridiculous position into which his reports of affairs and opinions upon this side of the water had thrown the Times. The lavalier Lengo, more generally known as Mariotti (a family name), who filled the post of correspondent ad interim, was a man of very much greater ability than Mr. Mackay, but of a disappointed and bitter feeling, which rendered all his comments upon our affairs sharp and cynical.

It seems that it was a mistake to suppose Mr. Mackay recalled. He has resumed the duties of his post. It is not a pleasant one, and he has our sincere commiseration. To reside in a country for the purpose of finding fault with it; to supply information about it derived from its enemies; to live in New York, and to wish the rebels at Richmond to succeed, when success in Richmond would be anarchy in New York; and to do all this in exile, must be as dreary a business as the New Year is likely to see.

Let us, then, offer a word of friendly advice to this correspondent. We advise him to turn to his letters of last summer, in June and July—letters in which he plainly said that the loyal Union men had virtually given up the contest, and in which he announced that the riots were the beginning of the counter-revolution—and then consider whether it is worth while to suppose that the Copperheads are the true representatives of public opinion in this struggle, or that General Lee, who has not had a solitary success since Stonewall Jackson died, is the only "great captain" on this continent.

If he wishes to leave the London Times the least reputation for intelligent criticism or sagacious prophecy, let him consult other oracles than those which are inspired by the hope of attaining political favor with the New York Government. He has hitherto made himself the mouth-piece of a faction; retailing all their venomous wishes as probabilities, and their foolish gossip as the utterance of political talk. He has imbibed their frantic hate of what they call Abolitionism, and rails at the Herculean effort of a great nation to maintain its unity and civil existence, as if it were a mad ebullition of fanatic zeal. If henceforth he will try to understand that a loyal New York Copperhead is not the country, and that their hopes, and beliefs, and expectations in regard to this war are no more valuable than if he may proceed in writing such letters which will not, indeed, be friendly or true, but may be less conspicuously and absurdly wide of the mark than those he has been in the habit of writing.

THE SANITARY FAIRS.

THE call for the great Metropolitan Fair of the Sanitary Commission, in New York is a herald of her sister cities, and ought to bring up the rear with a metropolitan magnificence. Chicago made noble efforts, Boston a handsome one, and forty thousand, Cincinnati is making, let us hope, two hundred thousand, and New York should continue with not less than three hundred thousand dollars. Meanwhile Rochester has done nobly, Portland also: Albany is preparing, and in every town and city you hear the cry of the Sanitary Fair.

For what purpose more humane and lofty can busy the brains and the fingers of all loyal men, women, and children in the land than the unlimited care of the soldiers in the field? There they are—exposed to fever and casualties, on hills and in valleys, our friends, our brothers, our sons, our lovers, and as they turn their eyes and hearts and hands towards us at home, what joy so great, what cheer so encouraging, as to feel our hands outstretched and our hearts boating in response?

The Sanitary Fairs will enlist the industry, the thought, the interest of the country, hold us all closer together. It is a common cause, a common toil, and, because God is common victory. And as long as the war lasts the work of the Commission is unending. Its means of succor for the sick and wounded, for the prisoner, for hospital, and camp, and field—its agents, transports, and depôts—must be constantly maintained, replenished, and renewed. It is not an institution which, when once created, goes of itself. When the kind hands of the country stop giving, and the kind hearts of the country lose the impulse to bestow, then the great machine work stops, and the son and husband and father languishes in the field uncared for. As he, the soldier, our representative of rest, but is always ready for the summons, armed and equipped, so must all the rest of us be ready at all our posts with the supports which they have a right to expect.

MONUMENT TO ROBERT FULTON.

IF it is incredible that in this age and country of progress, the first steamboat by the waters of the river on which his great experiment triumphed, in the city which that river, by means of that triumph, has enriched, no monument has yet been built to Robert Fulton. Of a genius peculiarly American, and whose great victory was achieved within the limits of living men, the personality of Fulton is less familiar to us than that of any equally illustrious American.

It is meant that there is a Fulton Monument Association which is now engaged with this subject. They are understood to have selected a site in Fulton Ferry Square, and a sculptor, whose Fulton is buried. Henry R. Rowe, the sculptor, has made a design for a monument. It is a structure of the Egyptian type, massive arches and supporting figures representing American lakes and rivers. Above these are other figures representing the first steamboat which he offers to the attention of the world. A photograph of the design may be seen at the Fulton Insurance Company's office in Trinity Building.

It is undoubtedly imposing, and what Mr. Brown does not know is, that one, but we fear but at the height of forty feet the face of the statue should be lost. The object of such a work is not merely to commemorate Fulton, but to establish connection with the face and form of a benefactor, or hero, or statesman. If this can be successfully done at that height, the sculpture for the remainder of the design commends the whole. In any case, we hope to know before long that the work is to be done, and not above the clouds and smoke, and stately movement of the myriad steamers which fill the river, the traveler to the city may see, sitting enthroned, the figure of Robert Fulton from whose brain they sprang.

LITERARY.

DR. DRAPER'S "History of the Intellectual Development of Europe" (Harpers), which has just passed to a second edition in this country, and by its extensive scholarship and vigorous thought has already justly placed its author very high a place among living authors, is being reprinted in England by Messrs. Bell & Daldy in two splendid octavo volumes, with a steel portrait of the author. The work is also being translated into Italian, and will be published at Turin in April.

Charles Reade's "Hard Cash" is how issued complete by the Harpers. Mr. Dickens, who is now engaged upon his new story, declares that it is the master-piece of the author; and those who have read it as it has appeared from week to week are even wont to the usual attractions of his style this work has a peculiar value as a vivid picture of the working of the lunatic system in England; doing, in fact, for the Lunatic Asylums the service that his "Never too Late to Mend" did for the Penitentiary system. It is a tale of a great variety of interest, and of much broader, firmer grasp than some of Mr. Reade's later works.

"Dream Children." (Sever & Francis, Cambridge.) The author of "Seven little People and their Friends," published a year ago, has written another book, which, following Charles Lamb, he calls "Dream Children," and which is one of the most perfectly printed and completed little books of the year. At first glance the book seems to address itself to children; but it is really no child's book; it is too full and complex. It was something in it for every one who has not lost his childhood; who has not so matured himself as to have left out of his organization the finest effects of imagination and humor. This little volume will make an audience of its own, and for that audience there are no other books of the kind. The book is made up of short stories, having a vein of romance running through them, without any thing which we are in the habit of calling sentiment. All of the stories are characterized by a peculiar humor—not a broad humor like Dickens's, but nevertheless an exquisite, delicate humor. The author, in the introduction of his work, has shown an artist's skill and taste, with a great degree of enthusiasm, as if his heart were in every part of his life. The effect of the stories upon the imagination and upon the undercurrent of moral sentiment in advanced children of the highest refined and purest character.

Professor Henry Drisler, of Columbia College, has attacked Bishop Hopkins's positions upon the Bible view of slavery and routed him from every point. The Bishop's unfortunate pro-slavery and learned criticism is issued by the Loyal Publication Society, No. 863 Broadway, and is No. 39 of the publications. The answer to the attestments, inconsistencies, and inevitable conclusions of the Bishop's letter are unsparingly exposed. The learned Greek Professor Drisler proves that so far as it meets the Bishop upon his own ground. It follows him into the Bible history and into Biblical interpretation, and that whatever the manners of Hebrew slavery may have been, it constitutes no more excuse for African slavery than the polygamy of the Patriarchs, or the Mormon practice of to-day. So of the New Testament argument: if it proves any thing it proves that captives in war may be enslaved, but does not hold Apostolic sanction for slave-trade. Unquestionably there has been slavery in society before ours; and undeniably, if the fact is evidence of the divine approval, it is approved. But then crime of every kind has always abounded; and this fact is as equally conclusive of the divine approval of crime. Moreover slavery as an it emerges from barbarism into a higher civilization abolishes slavery. Dahomey, Turkey, and the African tribes that Captain Speke discovered, cherish slavery. But Western Europe and Northern America discard it. Bishop Hopkins pronounces for Dahomey, barbarism, and slavery. The human heart and conscience and the religion of Christ declare for civilization and liberty. This is the end of the matter. Mr. Hopkins will defend his position to the last; but he will see by a late English work that in that he is still following the line of calmness. Professor Drisler, in his sober, earnest, searching, and conclusive little pamphlet, has done the good cause good service.

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

We have no sentimental tenderness for a miscreant, notwithstanding, but we think that the fate of Holmes he might be let alone. Not so, however, think the colonel—"that thing" is the felon's name—"must have been room—in short, his every thing?" "Yes, his drawing-room included," supplied his witty counsel.

A VERY CLEVER DISTINCTION.—A Lover is a Suer—a bookseller's a purse-suer.

Why is a ballroom like a man disinherited?—Because he is an heir-d-sanght.

When is an oarsman like a herring?—When he has a hard row.

"Where shall I go?" as the bullet said to the trigger.

To what order does flogging change a boy's complexion? —It makes him pell—O!

"I prefer being foremost," as the hare said to the hound's.

Why should turtles be pitied?—Because theirs is a hard case.

A West Indian, who had a remarkably fiery nose, having fallen asleep in his chair, a negro-boy who was waiting observed a mosquito hovering round his face. Quashy eyed the insect very attentively; at last he saw a slight on his master's nose, and instantly fly off again. "Yah, yah," he exclaimed, with great glee, "me berry glad to see you berry near fire."

"My lord," said the foreman of a Welsh jury, when giving in their verdict, "we find the man that stole the mare not guilty."

"A LITTLE HELP IS BETTER THAN NONE."

An auctioneer, while engaged in his vocation, thus exercised the mantle of a priest:—"Gentlemen and ladies, some folks sell carpets for Brussels which are not Brussels, but I can merely positively assure you that this elegant article was made by Mr. Brussels himself."

An abbé having a violent cold on his return from Rome, where he had been unsuccessfully soliciting the rank of cardinal, it was observed that the malady was easily accounted for, as he had been all the way home without his hat.

Put was a volunteer, and he got sick. The first question the surgeon asked him was, "Pat, are your bowels regular?" "No, Sir; he loikes, I'm a volunteer."

An Irishman was challenged to fight a duel, but declined on the plea that he did not wish to "have his cold mother an orphan."

A friend in California writes us that they have fire-flies as large in that State that they use them to cook by. They bring the heifer to their black-legs, which are best for the purpose like pot-hooks.

A new mode of dispersing a mob has been discovered, which is said to possess the recommendation of a military force: it is to pass round a contribution-box.

One of the German Kings wanted his army heretofore to the use of the Armstrong gun. He accordingly got one, but was obliged to ask leave of the next king to have the secret sent to him. Meanwhile, he was not being big enough for the Armstrong range!

Sometimes a girl says no to an offer, when it is as plain as the nose on her face that she means yes. The best way to judge whether she is in earnest or not is to look straight into her eyes, and never mind her nose.

Some men keep savage dogs around their houses, so that the hungry par who stop to "get a bite" may get it outside the door.

When you are running from a mad bull to slow don't to be sure.

"Do you hear who built this bridge?" said a person to Hook. "No," replied Hook; but if you go over you'll be told."

It is said that some babies are so small that they can creep into quiet measures. But the way in which some adults will force such measures is very astonishing.

The reason, no doubt, why people don't like to sit down thirteen to dinner is because, under those circumstances, they must necessarily be "at sixes and sevens with each other."

If an elephant can travel eight miles an hour, and carry his trunk, how much could he go if he had a little pupp to carry it for him?

"All!" said a Sunday-school teacher—"Ah, Caroline Jones, what do you think you would have been without your good father and pious mother?" "I suppose, mam," said Caroline, who was very much pleased with the compliment—"I suppose, mam, as I should ha' been a boarder."

When Jackson was President of the United States, Jimmy O'Neil, the porter, was a marked character. He had his foibles, which were offensive to the fastidiousness of Colonel Donelson, and caused his dismissal on an average of about once a week. But on appeal to the higher court, the verdict was invariably reversed by the good-nature of Mrs. Colonel Donelson, Jimmy was restored to favor in one flagrant offense, and was summoned before the highest tribunal in camp. The Governor, after stating the details of the mischief, observed, "Jimmy, I have borne with you for years, in spite of all complaints; but in this act you have gone beyond my powers of endurance." "And to you believe me sorry?" asked Jimmy. "Certainly I am," answered the General; "I have just heard it from two Senators." "Faith," retorted Jimmy, "if I believed what that twenty Senators say about you, it's little I'd think you are fit to be President." "Pshaw! Jimmy!" exclaimed the General; "clear out, and go on duty, but be more careful hereafter." Jimmy remained with his Excellency for seven years, and to the close of his Presidential term, but, when he resigned, gave him to the Hermitage, we will him to the day of his death.

"Talk about women talking!" says a lady of our acquaintance, herself by no means deficient in eloquence; "why, look at the debates in the public dinners, the vestry meetings, and, above all, the gossip, gossip, gossip at those horrid tea-fights we have in a week when we do get in a year; though, to be sure, what we do say has got some sense in it."

An officer, who was inspecting his company one morning, spied one private whose shirt was sadly begrimed. "Patrick Duffy!" he called out the captain, "what is Hooz?" promptly responded Patrick, with his head to his ten. "How long do you wear a shirt?" "Twenty-eight inches," was the rejoinder.

"You have not a drop of the great Napoleon's blood in your veins, I would say, old Jerome one day to a boy who was nephew the Emperor. "Well," replied Louis Napoleon, "all at events I have the whole family on my hands."

A lady that would dress herself in marrying was wanted that her intended, although a good sort of a man, was very plain-look. "Well," replied the lady, "if he is very much unlike other men, he is much more likely to be a good husband."

An old lady, who had been reading the famous moon story very attentively, remarked with emphasis that the idea of the moon's being inhabited was incredible. "For," says she, "what becomes of the people in the new moon when there's nothing but a little streak left of it?"

"Pat," said the captain of a ship to an Irishman who was a passenger on board, and who sometimes used to sleep rather soundly in succession, "how do you contrive to sleep so long?" "How?" cried Pat; "why, I pay particularly attention to it."

"Patrick," said a Judge, "what do you say to the charge; are you guilty or not guilty?" "Faith, that is difficult for your honor to tell, as also myself. Wait till I hear the evidence."

"Have you read my last speech?" said a vain orator to a friend. "I hope so," was the reply.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

We avail ourselves of the space gained by the adjournment of Congress from December 21 to January 5 to present a list of the members of the next House, together with an attempt to designate their political status. The former preponderance of Republicans and "Democrats" are wholly out of date, many members who were elected as Democrats acting with the Republicans. We have classified the members as "Administration," denoted by "A.," and "Opposition," denoted by "O." In the House this classification is comparatively easy. All the members who voted for Mr. Colfax as Speaker are marked "A." Those who voted for Messrs. Cox, Dawson, Mallory, and other Opposition candidates, are designated by "O." The whole number of vote cast for Speaker was 181, of which 101 were cast for Mr. Colfax. The entire number of members is 238. We have classed those who were not present according to our best knowledge of their politics. The list contains several names not inserted on the official lists. The right of these gentlemen to seats is disputed, supposing them to be confirmed, according to our estimate the Administration has 105 votes to the Opposition 81. As must be borne in mind, however, that several members who are classed as "A." are not friendly to the Administration upon the essential questions concerning the carrying on of the war, which will be before Congress. A majority of 59 members, among whom are two from "Virginia" (now in part in West Virginia), will be the vote on every test vote has come up, and in classifying the Senators as "A." or "O." we have been governed by our knowledge of their antecedents, and partly by an examination of the votes recorded on the Senate journals, so we think that our list will be found nearly correct.

MEMBERS OF THE SENATE.

Anthony, R. R.	A.	Howe, Tim. O.	Wis.	Mich.	A.
Bayard, James.	Del.	O.	Howe, Tim. O.	Wis.	A.
Brown, B. Gratz.	Mo.	A.	Howard, Jacob M.	Mich.	A.
Bowden, L. J. Va.	O.		Lane, Henry S.	Ind.	A.
Buckalew, Chas. R.	Penn.	O.	Lane, Jas. H.	Kan.	A.
Carlile, John S.	Va.	O.	M'Dougall, J. Cal.		O.
Chandler, Zach.	Mich.	A.	Morrill, L. S.	Vt.	A.
Clark, Daniel.	N. H.	A.	Morrill, Lot M.	Maine.	A.
Conness, John.	Cal.	A.	Nesmith, J. W.	Or.	A.
Cowan, Edgar.	Penn.	A.	Pomeroy, S. C.	Kansas.	A.
Davis, Henry.	Md.	O.	Powell, Lazarus W.	Ky.	O.
Davis, Garrett.	Ky.	O.	Ramsey, Alex.	Minn.	A.
Dixon, James.	Conn.	A.	Riddle, A. G.	Del.	O.
Doolittle, Jas. R.	Wis.	A.	Saulsbury, Wm.	Del.	O.
Foster, Ed.	Or.	A.	Sherman, John.	Ohio.	A.
Fowler, Joseph S.	Tenn.	A.	Sprague, Wm.	R. I.	A.
Foster, L. V.	Conn.	A.	Sumner, Chas.	Mass.	A.
Grimes, Jas. W.	Iowa.	A.	Ten Eyck, J. C.	N. J.	O.
Hale, John P.	N. H.	A.	Trumbull, Lyman.	Ill.	A.
Harlan, James.	Iowa.	A.	Van Winkle, P. W.	Va.	A.
Harding, F. P.	Oregon.	A.	Wade, Ben.	Ohio.	A.
Harris, T. M.	N. Y.	A.	Wilkinson, M. J.	Minn.	A.
Henderson, J. B.	Mo.	A.	Willey, Waitman T.	Va.	A.
Hendricks, T. A.	Ind.	O.	Wilson, Henry.	Mass.	A.
Hicks, Thos. H.	Md.	O.	Wright, Wm.	N. J.	O.

MEMBERS OF THE HOUSE.

Allen, James C.	Ill.	O.	Lazear, Jesse.	Penn.	O.
Allen, William J.	Ill.	O.	Leary, John.	N. Y.	A.
Ancona, Sidney.	Penn.	A.	Littlejohn, D. G.	N. Y.	A.
Allison, Wm. B.	Iowa.	A.	Long, Benj. B.	Ohio.	A.
Ames, Adam.	Mass.	A.	Longyear, J. W.	Mich.	A.
Ancona, S. E.	Penn.	O.	Loomis, D. B.	Ohio.	A.
Anderson, R. C.	Ky.	O.	Lovejoy, Chas.	Ill.	A.
Arnold, Isaac N.	Ill.	A.	Mallory, Robert.	Ky.	O.
Ashley, John.	Ohio.	A.	Marcy, Randall.	N. H.	O.
Bailey, Joseph.	Penn.	O.	Marvin, Jas. M.	N. Y.	A.
Baxter, Portus.	Vt.	A.	Maynard, Horace.	Tenn.	A.
Baldwin, A. C.	Mich.	O.	M'Bride, J. R.	Oregon.	A.
Baker, John A.	Va.	A.	M'Clurg, Jos. W.	Mo.	A.
Beaman, F. C.	Mich.	A.	M'Dowell, Jas. F.	Ind.	O.
Beaman, Jas. M.	Mich.	A.	M'Indoe, Wm. D.	Penn.	A.
Blair, F. P., Jun.	Mo.	A.	M'Kissey, J. P.	Ohio.	O.
Blair, John R.	Va.	A.	M'Knight, Jas.	Penn.	A.
Bliss, George.	Ohio.	O.	Miller, Sem. F.	N. Y.	A.
Boyer, Henry W.	Penn.	A.	Moorhead, J. K.	Penn.	A.
Boutwell, G. S.	Mass.	A.	Morrill, Justin S.	Vt.	A.
Boyd, S. H.	Ky.	O.	Morris, Isaac N.	Ill.	O.
Brandegee, A. Conn.	A.		Morris, Jas. R.	Ohio.	O.
Brooks, Jas.	N. Y.	O.	Morrison, Wm. R.	Ill.	O.
Brownell, J. M.	Penn.	A.	Moorhead, J. K.	Penn.	A.
Brown, Jas. S.	Ky.	O.	Myers, Amos.	Penn.	O.
Brown, Wm. G.	Va.	A.	Myer, Leonard.	Penn.	A.
Calvert, C. B.	Md.	O.	Nelson, Homer A.	N. Y.	A.
Chandler, L. H.	Va.	A.	Noble, Warren P.	Ohio.	O.
Clarke, S. A.	Kan.	A.	Odell, Moses F.	N. Y.	O.
Clarke, A. W.	N. Y.	A.	Odell, Moses F.	N. Y.	O.
Cobb, Amasa.	Wis.	A.	Olin, Abram B.	N. Y.	A.
Cobb, Amasa.	Wis.	A.	O'Neill, John.	Ohio.	O.
Coffroth, Alex.	Penn.	O.	Orth, Godlove S.	Ind.	A.
Cole, Cornelius.	Cal.	A.	Patterson, J. W.	N. H.	A.
Conkling, Roscoe.	N. Y.	A.	Pendleton, G. H.	Ohio.	O.
Cox, Samuel S.	Ohio.	O.	Perham, Sid.	Maine.	A.
Creswell, J. A. J.	Md.	A.	Pike, Frederick A.	Maine.	A.
Creswell, J. A. J.	Md.	A.	Pike, Fred. A.	Maine.	A.
Cravens, J. H.	Ind.	O.	Price, Hiram.	Iowa.	A.
Davis, Thos. T.	N. Y.	A.	Price, Hiram.	Iowa.	A.
Dawson, J. L.	Penn.	O.	Pruyn, J. V. L.	N. Y.	A.
Dawson, J. L.	Penn.	O.	Radford, Wm.	N. Y.	O.
Delano, C.	Ohio.	A.	Randall, A. W.	Wis.	A.
Deshler, Chas.	Penn.	O.	Randall, Wm. H.	Ky.	A.
Dixon, H.	Conn.	A.	Rice, John H.	Maine.	A.
Driggs, John F.	Mich.	A.	Rice, John H.	Maine.	A.
Dumont, Ephm.	Ind.	O.	Robinson, John C.	Ill.	A.
Dumont, Ed.	Ind.	A.	Rogers, And. J.	N. J.	O.
Eden, John R.	Ill.	O.	Rollins, Edw. H.	N. H.	O.
Eden, John R.	Ill.	O.	Rollins, James S.	Mo.	O.
Edgerton, Sid.	Ohio.	A.	Ross, Lewis W.	Ill.	O.
Eldridge, C. A.	Wis.	O.	Schenck, R. C.	Ohio.	A.
Finck, Wm. E.	Ohio.	O.	Scofield, Glen. W.	Penn.	A.
English, Jas. E.	Conn.	O.	Scott, John G.	Mo.	O.
Farnsworth, J. F.	Ill.	A.	Shannon, Jas.	Cal.	O.
Fenton, R. E.	N. Y.	A.	Smith, Green C.	Ky.	A.
Finck, Wm. E.	Ohio.	O.	Spalding, Rufus P.	O.	A.
Frank, Aug.	Cal.	A.	Sloan, Hamner.	Wis.	A.
Gansen, John.	N. Y.	A.	Stevens, Thad.	Penn.	A.
Garfield, J. A.	Ohio.	A.	Starn, John F.	N. J.	A.
Goodwin, Ozias.	Me.	A.	Stebbins, Henry G.	N. Y.	A.
Gooch, Dan.	Mass.	A.	Stebbins, H. G.	N. Y.	O.
Grider, H.	Ky.	O.	Stebbins, H. G.	N. Y.	O.
Grinnell, J. A.	Iowa.	A.	Steele, Wm. G.	N. J.	O.
Grow, Galusha.	Penn.	A.	Stevens, Thad.	Penn.	A.
Hale, Jno. P.	Me.	A.	Stiles, John D.	Penn.	O.
Hall, Jas.	Iowa.	A.	Stiles, John D.	Penn.	O.
Harding, Aaron.	Ky.	O.	Stone, John T.	Ill.	O.
Harrington, H. W.	Ind.	O.	Strouse, J. D.	Penn.	A.
Harris, Chas. B.	N. Y.	A.	Sweat, Thos.	Me.	A.
Harris, Chas. M.	Md.	O.	Thayer, M. R.	Penn.	A.
Herrick, Anson.	N. Y.	A.	Thomas, Lorenzo.	Mich.	A.
Hickman, John.	Penn.	A.	Tracy, H. W.	Penn.	A.
Holman, Wm. S.	Ind.	O.	Train, Chas. R.	Mass.	A.
Hooper, Samuel.	Mass.	A.	Van Valkenburg.	N. Y.	A.
Hotchkiss, A.	N. Y.	A.	Van Valkenburg.	N. Y.	A.
Hubbard, John.	Iowa.	A.	Wadsworth, W. H.	Ky.	O.
Hubbard, J. H.	Conn.	A.	Walton, C. D.	Ohio.	A.
Hulburd, C. C.	N. Y.	A.	Washburne, E. B.	Ill.	A.
Hutchins, W. A.	Ohio.	O.	Washburn, W. D.	Minn.	A.
Hutchins, W. A.	Ohio.	O.	Webster, Jas. W.	Penn.	A.
Julian, Geo. W.	Ind.	A.	Wheeler, Chas.	Wis.	A.
Johnson, Philip.	Penn.	O.	Wheeler, Ezra.	Vt.	A.
Johnson, Wm.	Ohio.	O.	White, O. A.	Ohio.	O.
Kalbfleisch, M.	N. Y.	O.	White, J. W.	Ohio.	O.
Kasson, John A.	Iowa.	A.	Wilder, A. G.	Kansas.	A.
Kelley, Wm. D.	Penn.	A.	Williams, Thos.	Penn.	A.
Kellogg, F. W.	Mich.	A.	Wilson, Jas. F.	Iowa.	A.
Kellogg, O. N.	N. Y.	A.	Windom, Wm.	Minn.	A.
Kernan, Francis.	N.Y.	O.	Winfield, C. H.	N. Y.	O.
Knapp, Chas.	N. Y.	A.	Winfield, C. H.	N. Y.	O.
Kitchen, B. M.	Va.	A.	Wood, Benj.	N. Y.	O.
Knapp, Martin.	N. Y.	O.	Woodbridge, F. E.	Vt.	A.
Law, John.	Ind.	O.	Yeaman, G. H.	Ky.	O.

CONGRESS.

SENATE.—January 5. A message was received from the President, recommending that the payment of bounties to veteran soldiers be continued until the 1st of February; accompanying this were letters from the Secretary of War and the Provost Marshal General in favor of the bounty system as opposed to that of drafting; referred to Committee on Military Affairs.—The Secretary of the Navy sent a list of naval officers who have left the service and joined the rebels.—Several petitions were presented and referred.—Mr. Powell asked a bill prohibiting army and navy officers from interfering in State elections; referred to Judiciary Committee.—Mr. Wilson introduced a bill restoring the $300 bounty to veterans and $100 to volunteers who re-enlist, and offering $100 bounty to veterans of African descent residing in States now in rebellion.—Mr. Ten Eyck moved to take up the Indian bill.—Mr. Sumner, of that part of the President's Message relating to the restoration of the States; he spoke at length in favor of the President's plan; agreed to.

HOUSE.—January 5. Mr. Stevens introduced a bill providing for paying bounty and pensions to soldiers from Ohio and Kentucky.—A Message from the President transmitting the estimates for paying bounties till February 1 was received and referred to Military Committee.—Mr. Pendleton gave notice of a bill admitting loyal citizens for damages inflicted by the troops of the United States.—Mr. Dawson introduced a resolution inquiring into the services rendered and compensation received by Jay Cooke & Co. in the sale of Government bonds.—Speaker Mr. Harrington gave notice of a bill paying bounties to soldiers who have served two years.—Several bills have been honorably discharged. Several unimportant subjects were also introduced.

VIRGINIA AND TENNESSEE.

Our two great armies are enjoying a season of rest, which is necessary after the unprecedented exertions of the figures from the Potomac or the Tennessee.—The rebel press continues to represent the Confederacy as the refuse of the enemy to treat with General Butler in relation to exchanges, and the Administration refuses to do it. It is reported that measures are to be taken which must induce the authorities to consent to some other mode.

FIGHT IN THE CHEROKEE COUNTRY.

We have unofficial reports of an engagement on the 18th of December, which took place between 1000 rebels under Quantrell and our forces under Colonel Phillips, resulting, after several hours' fighting, in the complete defeat of the enemy, who scattered in all directions.

TEXAS.

All accounts represent that the expedition to Texas is meeting with great success; but the details are indefinite. We present a letter from Governor Lubbock.

Governor Lubbock, in his message, urges the enrollment of all males between the ages of 18 and 45. In the last census why able-bodied old men should not be required to defend the State. There are 90,000 persons in the State to arm, while its highest vote was 65,757. He estimates that the number of troops in the field will be in the field not more than 27,000, and of these a large proportion had since been drafted. He says that the State officers should be obliged to enter the ranks whenever their enemies had been driven from the border.—Indians on the frontier are troublesome; they murder and steal horses, instigated, he believes, by the rebels. "They are Lincoln's enemies, and the renegade whites among them." These Indians have been driven from Louisiana and Arkansas, in Texas must be forced into the army equally with citizens. Judge Oldham has returned from Richmond, and reports with their views. They should be welcomed. "It is better," he says, "to arm a negro than that they should fall into the hands of our abolition enemies, to be used against us. The refugee is more patriotic than the native citizen. The refugee's home is far more endeared." says Gov. Lubbock, "to our respect, sympathy, and support than the wretch who is content to remain within the enemy's lines taking the oath of allegiance in the vain hope of preserving his property. We have not the courage or patriotism to defend."—Texans sometimes desert, and it is recommended that the penalty of death be not had hitter in the penitentiary.—Distilleries ought to be closed; they are wasteful of provisions, corn meal and soldiers.—Nobody capable of bearing arms should be allowed to leave the State.—Conscription should be the rule without discount; something must be done to raise their value: the best thing to do with cotton is to export it and bring in the entire trade in cotton, tobacco, and naval stores.

General Magruder, writing from Galveston Dec. 27, announces to the citizens of Texas that a formidable invasion is threatened. The enemy is in possession of the Lower Rio Grande, captured Aransas and Corpus Christi Pass, and are in force at Brownsville. The recent organization of President Lincoln left no room for hope for any one to serve his purposes, "except as subjects of his usurpation. Moreover, the enemy had brought with him from Louisiana 5000 negroes, armed and drilled, to be used against their masters." General Magruder therefore recommends that every able-bodied negro capable of bearing arms, or within fifty miles of the coast, should, at any cost, and by any means, be impressed into service. "Let your negroes, he says, "and your lands will become comparatively worthless."

General E. Kirby Smith, commanding in the Department of Texas, has issued a proclamation to the people of that State, announcing the invasion of the State by the enemy. He has placed the matter in the hands of the Governor, and calls upon him for half of the ration, and pay for it in Confederate bonds or stocks, and that the Governor be empowered to remunerate from impressment. Any planter delivering to the Government one bale of cotton for every two consigned abroad, upon terms, will be allowed to remove and sell the other half to the best advantage. He calls upon the Governor, therefore, to say, "attempted to be moved without the protection of an overwhelming force, will be liable to the impressment for Government purposes; and any interference with the Government officers in the discharge of their duties of empties or by any of his agents, either by attempting to forcibly take property, or by offering or giving a still higher rate of freight than proposed by this office, will entail cabinet exemption.

GOVERNOR SEYMOUR.

The Legislature of New York convened on the 5th of January. Governor Seymour's Message received a decided majority in both branches: 73 to 50 in the House. The Message of Governor Seymour is in a great measure devoted to an attack upon the policy and measures of the National Administration. The Governor also has summarily removed the Police Commissioners of New York; basing his action solely upon the ground of a paragraph in their Report in which they imply that a majority of the voters of last June were in favor of drafting. The Governor claims that any the right of the Governor to remove them without a formal trial, and to appoint in their place persons who will execute the duties of their office. The new Board appointed by the Governor has assumed the duties, and has no measures to assume the direction of the police force.

FOREIGN NEWS.

FRENCH EUROPEAN PRESS is little of importance. The English journals continue to discuss the question of Prussia and Austria and Lincoln. They think the plans of the latter to be impracticable. The Emperor of Austria's reply to Prussia is not yet yielding.

In the French Senate there has been sharp debate, in which the foreign policy of the Emperor was called in question; but the Government commissioner, Baroche, replied, and the Emperor replied in a conciliatory manner.

No definite changes have taken place in regard to the Danish complication and the Congress of the rulers.

THE DANISH QUESTION, AND THE CONGRESS.

It is now affirmed that the Archduke Maximilian will not accept the Danish throne at this present moment, owing to the complicated grounds. Meanwhile the position of affairs is unchanged, and the negotiations of the rulers daily more perplexing.

The troops of Sweden, under General Floree, who invaded the States of Colombia, have met with a serious defeat. Mosquera, the President of Colombia, having succeeded in gathering about 4000 men, attacked Floree, who had 2500, and routed him after a sharp action, killing and wounding, according to report, 500, and taking 2000 prisoners. This action occurred on the 6th of December.

ARMY AND NAVY ITEMS.

THE following Union officers have died at Camp Groce, Texas, during December, in the hands of the rebels:

Lieutenant FRANK BAXLEY, Forty-second Massachusetts Volunteers, captured by Quantrell, Aug. 21, 1863.

Surgeon A. J. CHESTER, Forty-second Massachusetts Volunteers, captured Aug. 21, 1863.

Lieutenant JAMES W. INNERY (formerly a compositor in the New York Herald office), One Hundred and Seventy-fifth New York Volunteers, October 11, 1863.

Lieutenant MARTIN HATES, One Hundred and Seventy-fifth New York Volunteers, October 10, 1863.

Colonel J. F. PETERSON and Captain J. A. SCHNEIDER, belonging to the Sixth Louisiana, were captured at the recent meeting held at the Cooper Institute, to visit the Army of the Potomac, and, after an unsatisfactory fruitless search for bounties, etc., have left for the army. The total bounty received by each of the party will not be less than $217. Of this $400 will be paid by Government; $300, and in some instances more, by counties, and $20 by the State. Each man re-enlisting should receive from his mustering officer a paper showing to what town, city, and county he is to be credited. The State and county bounties will be paid when the men come home on furlough.

It has been ordered that but one passenger train shall run each day between Washington daily for the army of the Potomac—namely, at a quarter before ten in the forenoon. This arrangement is to expedite the delivery of soldiers' mail. Stamp-my their goods, provided their passes have been countersigned by provost-marshals.

Fifty of Forrest's guerrillas, a Colonel, Major, and Chaplain, were captured by General Dodge's mounted infantry, on the 27th of December. The Colonel has three of them in chains, charged with the murder of Federal soldiers in cold blood. The chains will be preferred men, placed as steamers on the muzzle-pieces, were found in the rebel camp.

The enlistments in this city under the last call have been 1911. In order to bring the troops to the number of enlistment-brokers, who enlist men here for other States, Governor SEYMOUR has issued the following order:

ALBANY, December 19, 1863.

SPECIAL ORDERS No. 561.—The Judge-Advocate-General is directed to take legal measures for the arrest and punishment of all persons who may, in violation of the laws of this State, be engaged in enlisting men in this State for the recruited and credited elsewhere. By order of Commander-in-Chief.

JOHN T. SPRAGUE, Adjutant-General.

A dispatch from Fredericksburg announces the enlistment of the Sixth Ohio Battery have been captured by the rebels, but that they have since gradually returned. Some have died or trees, shot, and their bodies thrown into the river.

Captain THOMAS WILSON has been appointed Chief Commissary of Subsistence, and on the staff of General Meade, with the rank and pay of Major.

The ordnance officer of the Monitor Patapsco has furnished the following data for the expenditures of ammunition of shot, shell, and powder by that vessel during her period of service in the attack on Fort Sumter:—Number of the Patapsco is one 8-inch rifle and one 15-inch Dahlgren (smooth bore). The number of shots that up to December 1 the Monitor expended, for the 8-inch rifle, 44 toss plus 640 pounds of powder; for the 15-inch, 103, 103, and 1440 pounds of powder for rifle gun, 14,970 pounds. For her 15-inch gun she expended 1439 pounds of powder for 139 rounds of shot. Expenditure of powder for 15-inch gun, 12,065 pounds. Shot for 15-inch gun, 139 rounds. Shows that the 8-inch rifle has fired 341 rounds (109,360 pounds of powder and shot), and the 15-inch gun 242 rounds (13,405), while the 15-inch gun has fired but 43 times—17,150 pounds of shot and powder. The 15-inch gun approximate weight of the shot of the 15-inch gun): that is, more than 400 rounds of shot have been fired from the Monitor rifle for every one from the 15-inch Dahlgren.

On account of the amount of work to be provided for, General MCCLELLAN'S report can not be issued for several weeks yet, as there are to be twenty maps engraved for it.

The Richmond Examiner says that the rebel army in East Tennessee is in a state bordering on mutiny.

At its late anniversary, the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church elected Governor Seymour a life member. Rev. J. F. MARTIN communicated the fact to Governor Seymour in the following letter:

DEAR SIR,—Through you permit me to express my thanks to the Board for the honor they have conferred, and to say for the compliment they have seen fit to pay me by electing me a life member.

I accept the election as a token of earnest support, by members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of the Christian Conference, to the cause of our country in this crisis.

I have the honor to be, very truly, your obedient servant, JOHN F. MARTIN, Corresponding Secretary.

MAJOR THOMAS D. ARNAST and Lieutenant DANIEL DAVIS, two rebel officers recently captured by Colonel Streight, and confined in the Union lines, were on Saturday conveyed to Fort Warren, sentenced to fifteen years' imprisonment.

The Legislature of Alabama has voted that the carpets of the State Capitol be appropriated to the use of the sick blankets for the Alabama soldiers in the rebel army.

The War Department has ordered that one hundred vessel in the service of the United States, which shall make a proper display on making a signal, shall be entitled to a prize-money as if she belonged to the navy—subject, of course, to the usual rules.

General ROSECRANS is to take the place of General SCHOFIELD in the Department of Missouri.

General FRANKLIN, Chief of the Cavalry Bureau, has, at his own request, been relieved of that command, and has been assigned to the command of the Nineteenth Corps. General GORDON has been placed in charge of the Bureau.

The Third, Fourth, Seventh, and Thirty-fourth Indiana regiments have re-enlisted for three years, to a man. They will have a short furlough, and will join Sherman. They were now at Chattanooga. Recruits from all portions of Indiana are pouring into Indianapolis. At least one hundred arrive daily, and are sent into the numerous camps.

Captain H. T. ANDERSON, Fifty-first Indiana Regiment, and J. T. BERDON, Seventeenth Iowa Regiment, escaped a short time ago from the Libby Prison at Richmond. They report that the prisoners are being removed and were sent in quantity and miserable in quality, but the best they could get.

General PEYTON has been sent on important order, previous to the departure of Longstreet's corps, to visit some of their families in the Department of Virginia and North Carolina.

MAJOR-GENERAL ANDREW A. HUMPHREYS.

GENERAL WILLIAM W. AVERILL.—PHOTOGRAPHED BY BRADY.—[SEE PAGE 34.]

GENERAL HUMPHREYS.

THIS veteran commander, whose portrait is given above, entered the Military Academy, from Pennsylvania, in 1827, graduated in 1831, and was appointed Second Lieutenant in the Artillery, but acted for a short time as Assistant-Professor of Engineering. He then served on the sea-board and in the Cherokee Country until assigned to duty with the Topographical Engineers. Afterward he served in the Florida war, and was specially mentioned for his gallantry in the engagement of June 9, 1836. In 1838 he was again assigned to the Engineers, and in 1844 was put in charge of the Central Office of the Coast Survey at Washington. In 1848 he was appointed Captain, and in 1850 was directed to undertake surveys and investigations upon the Mississippi River and Delta, the object being to determine the means of preventing inundations and increasing the depth of water on the bars. This work occupied nearly ten years, in the course of which he visited Europe. He had, moreover, the charge of the railroad explorations from the Mississippi to the Pacific. In 1861 he became Chief of Topographical Engineers on General M'Clellan's staff, and in April, 1862, was appointed Brigadier-General of Volunteers. In September he was placed in command of the Third Division, Fifth Corps—a new division, with which he made a forced march from Washington, performing 23 miles in one night, and joined M'Clellan early on the morning after the battle of Antietam, supposing that the battle would be renewed. The heroic charge of this division at Fredericksburg and its brilliant conduct at Chancellorsville are fresh in remembrance. When this division of nine months' volunteers was mustered out of service its gallant commander was appointed Major-General. At Gettysburg he commanded a division of the Third Corps, whose noble conduct needs no fresh mention. Since that time General Humphreys has acted as Chief of Staff to the commander of the Army of the Potomac.

THE "RUSH" IN THE TENNESSEE RIVER.—SKETCHED BY MR. THEODORE R. DAVIS.—[SEE PAGE 33.]

THE WRECK OF THE "AQUILA," AT SAN FRANCISCO.

THE WRECK OF THE "AQUILA."

THE Aquila was some months ago sent from New York to San Francisco, having on board, as freight, the "Monitor" Comanche. Surviving all the perils of the voyage around Cape Horn, the Aquila was sunk while lying at a wharf at San Francisco. Our correspondent furnishes us with a sketch of the vessel, taken as she lay on the 20th of November, just after the accident, which we give on this page. He writes: "Early yesterday morning it was announced that the Aquila, having the Comanche on board, had sunk in the night at Hathaway's wharf. It was too true. After surviving storms and escaping pirates, she had gone down within a stone's-throw of our business thoroughfare. I send you a sketch of her as she lies, with only about twenty-five feet of the after-hull and deck visible, the sea sweeping through and over her decks. The vessel was brought in and moored alongside the wharf, the wind blowing freshly down the bay, raising a heavy sea, to which the broadside of the vessel was exposed. Under her stern was a hard bottom, against which she beat, or rather was beaten, until a hole was made, and down she went. At high tide there is 37 or 38 feet of water above her bow.

THE ITALIAN IRON-CLAD.

WE present on this page a view of the iron-clad steam-frigate Re d' Italia, built for the Italian Government by Mr. William H. Webb, of New York.

THE IRON-CLAD SCREW FRIGATE "RE D' ITALIA.

Her length at the spar-deck is 258 feet, extreme breadth 56 feet, depth of hold 33 feet, draught of water 23 feet. She has two back-action horizontal engines, built at the Novelty Works, of 800 horse-power together, with cylinders of 84 inches diameter and 46 inches stroke of piston, supplied by six horizontal tubular boilers. Her engineer's trial trip was made on the 12th of November, and though not intended as an ultimate trial trip, her performance was so satisfactory that the vessel was at once accepted by the agents of the Italian Government, which had reserved the right of rejecting her if she failed to answer the stipulations of the contract. On the 30th of December she made an experimental trip down the bay of New York under the charge of her own officers. She ran ashore in a fog, but was got off in a day or two without serious damage. The vessel is in every respect one of the most beautiful specimens of naval architecture afloat. It is supposed that she will attain a speed of 12 knots an hour, being considerably greater than that of any other ironclad yet constructed. Her armament consists of 32 guns.

THE "SUCK" IN THE TENNESSEE RIVER.

The river at the "Suck" is about 300 yards wide and very deep, but the current is so rapid that steamers can not head against it, and are obliged to be pulled up by a windlass. The water runs comparatively smoothly until within a short distance from the "Suck," when it breaks into waves and dashes against a rock on the left, flinging the foam high in the air. Waldron's Ridge, on the left bank, resembles the Palisades on the Hudson; the trees, however, run nearly to the top. On the right is Raccoon Ridge.

THE ARMY OF THE POTOMAC.

THE picture on pages 40 and 41, sketched during the late campaign in Virginia, gives an idea of the appearance of this army when moving into battle. In the extreme distance the enemy's artillery is seen on a crest, his infantry below, disputing the advance. Between are our own guns supporting the troops. Brigades, recognized by their flags, are pressing on at double-quick; artillery, enveloped in dust, are galloping to a position. Near by is a group of ambulances. In the fore-ground are French and Birney, with their staffs. In the front is Meade's line; his generals Sykes, Humphreys, and Pleasanton, with Chief-Engineer Duane. The whole picture, though representing but a single division of action, gives a fair idea of an army going into battle.

THE PICKET.

WHAT ruddy stain is this?
Freshness of morning flowers—
Of dew-cups, whose fairy flowers
Did ever mother, ever maiden kiss,
On cheek of new-born dawn,
Or sat with bearded brown,
These flowers, and think the inner heaven of heaven
Had an exact hue?
It may be morning blooms are passing fair;
But since to human cheeks their tints were given,
The sweetest blooms are there.

A pale face motionless,
Close by the stain of flowers,
The stain of heat or flowers,
Did ever mother, ever maiden press
White fingers on the stone,
And think to be alone,
And not feel if were very far from heaven
And happiness?
It may be. Since white fingers once have pressed
Such sculpture, the quick pulse through them drives
Are very near to rest.

A grave dug in the sand,
Near to the stain of flowers:
The red stain, the red stain of flowers;
Shall ever mother, ever maiden stand
Within a lonely home,
And say, "When will he come
Out from strange parts?" How long he lingers
With his victorious hosts!"
It shall be. Tender, loving lips have kissed
Their last: not more shall thrill white fingers
For that one picket missed.

MISS SMITH.

I saw her in a photograph album, and my doom was sealed.

We were eating creams and jelly in Mrs. Paulding's parlor. I had done the usual amount of dancing, and had been merrily round in the waltz and redowa; but there was now a cessation in the music, and flirtations went on in a low tone over our tea-spoons. My partner set down her plate with a sigh of disappointment.

"It is vanilla, and I never eat any thing but chocolate. I can't trouble myself, Mr. Featherstonhaugh. Nothingmore for me but a small lady-finger. Shall we look through Mrs. Paulding's album? I dote on photographs."

She opened it, I don't know whether with malice prepense or not, but she opened it in the middle. A vignette, with dove-like eyes, angelic smile, curls à la Eugénie, and a white waist, looked me in the face. I bent rapturously forward for the second glance. Over went my tea and Charlotte on Miss Wigham's pink silk double-ruffled skirt. She screamed, I blushed and stammered, a crowd of sympathizing damsels gathered round. Miss Wigham was conducted, half-fainting, to the dressing-room, and I retreated in a cruel collision condition to the nearest corner. But the spell was already upon me. No matter whether I upset a pyramid or all destruction on the entire supper-table, I must get back to the album. The "Looners" struck up ife to cover my advance. Miss Wigham, pale b composed, with an eminent dampness in her dress, and a curl of her lip in my direction, swept forward to the head couple, while I, possessed with the one idea, edged toward the table.

The book lay open still. No cream had soiled, no Charlotte profaned it. On the opposite page sat a stout lady with an ugly cap and still uglier baby; but there on the right hand gleamed out the eyes of my enchantress. What grace! What loveliness! The arch of that snowy neck! that bewitching mouth! even the buttercup-leaves of the ribbon that circled the beautiful throat! Life without her was, I felt, a blank. I must find her; must woo and win and wear her as my bride and rule in her heart. My hostess, like a benevolent fairy, approached me. She was in the "grand chain," but I arrested her. "Mrs. Paulding, dear Mrs. Paulding, the name of this—this"—angel, "was on my lips —but in deference to the conventionalities of society I substituted "lady?"

"That?" said Mrs. Paulding, dancing past, "oh, that is my cousin, Mrs. Peck. A sweet child, is it not?"

The last sentence fell upon unheeding ears. I was stupefied, confounded, dashed into an abyss of woe. This Peri—this priceless Pearl, Mrs. Peck? The bride of another? Lost to me forever?

The book still rested in my unwitting hand. Still my eyes were fixed upon the fated page. Mrs. Paulding chuckled by again.

"Ah, Feathers!" said my friend Stokes —"Feathers" was the usual unpleasant abbreviation by which I was disrespectfully designated—"it's past midnight, I believe. Don't you mean to apologize to Miss Wigham? You'd better see her home. She could n't get a carriage now."

"Miss Wigham be hanged!" I returned, almost unconsciously.

Stokes stared.

"I mean I—I'm very sorry," I resumed, with a stammer, beginning to come to myself. "I'll send her a bouquet to-morrow." The conversation shone before me a vision of the bouquets—all forget-me-nots and blush roses—which I should send some day to Miss Smith. "Stokes, you see, Stokes; I must bid good-night to Mrs. Paulding."

"A delightful evening, my dear Madame!" I observed, with my politest bow. "In your rooms we find always the 'feast of reason and the flow of soul.' But the photograph which I was admiring. It is, it is"—what I say next? "I am uncommonly like a dear lost aunt of mine. Could you tell me where I should be likely to find Miss Smith?"

"Why, I scarcely know, Mr. Featherstonhaugh," returned the lady, dubiously. "I have never seen her myself; she is an acquaintance of my sister's, Miss Smith, Miss—yes, I'm positive of New York; but that is all I can tell you."

"Perhaps your sister—?" I suggested, pertinaciously.

"Oh, my sister is in Europe! Will he absent still next summer. You are sure you don't mean Mrs. Peck?"

I left in desperation.

Returning home I stirred up my fire, lit a cigar, and sat down, in the orthodox midnight fashion, with my feet upon the fender. Rosy dreams flitted through my brain. What were the "Pet" and the "Bachelor" compared with mine? Pshaw! had I written the book my lines would have glowed with the breath of Cupid. But my genius would be locked out from every page. Twelve editions in six months would have enriched the publishers, and given me a fortune to lay at her feet. As to my poems, even though not pecuniarily profitable, opened to me an Elysium. Miss Smith beamed out at me through the embers; Miss Smith cheered my evening, at three in the morning, I retreated to bed; Miss Smith awoke with me, and—metaphorically speaking—held my shaving cup; Miss Smith accompanied me to the banking-house, hovered beside my stool, and almost signed the bills. I lived and breathed in an atmosphere of Miss Smith. Broadway was peopled with her image.

For two days this luxurious delirium bore me up on the high tide of bliss; then my reason got a vacancy in the world around me. I must find her—must fly to her—must pour out the fullness of my heart! But whither should I fly? The East was wide, and Smiths abounded. Was my inamorata a daughter of John Smith, Esq.? What sacred spot, from Harlem to the Battery, should be to me the Mecca of my pilgrimage? It was, as you see, a cruel question; and I decided upon another application to Mrs. Paulding, as I reflected if the Atlantic Telegraph Company would not hasten its preparations, that I might draw through the briny waves the intelligence of Miss Smith. I had already been the message of Queen Victoria to the President compact with them? But the Company was dilatory. Cyrus W. Field had probably other knows Miss Smith; and I hastened up to Mrs. Paulding's, finding I must see her or die. I was ushered into the parlor. The Album, that shrine of my idol, lay upon the table. I seized it, of course, and feasted my eyes upon her image. I don't know how long the waiter staid up stairs—Time was swallowed up to me in Miss Smith!—but he came down again with Mrs. Paulding's compliments. She was to leave the city that afternoon, and was very much engaged; would the gentleman excuse her? The servant withdrew. I shut the book in despair, opened it again; cast one wild glance around; saw I was alone; and then—I blush to confess it, but even love's crimes are sacred—I stole the photograph, and didn't leave my card!

The lagging hours of the ensuing week were beguiled by all-potent Smith. Anticipating the expiration of that time fortune appeared to smile. I received an offer of a clerkship from a Wall Street broker, and, with very much the nonchalance of individuals who independently advertise "Salary no object," hastened to New York in person to signify my acceptance. It is true I seemed not much nearer the goal of my existence than before; but I breathed the same air as Miss Smith, perambulated the same pavements, and rode daily in the same omnibus. Omnibuses indeed afforded me one of my greatest hopes. From the Battery to Eighty-fourth Street I rolled daily and weary over Evangeline chasing her lover was nothing to my exploits; yet I cherished a fellow-feeling for Evangeline, and sympathized with her as she hung over a shaving-glass. The precious photograph was kept in my left vest-pocket next my heart. Also, alas! I kept the location of Miss Smith's every arrêt in the. I entered, for example, the Sixth Avenue cars; at the extreme end sat a lady with primrose gloves, black lace veil, and a cashmere. There was the dove-like eyes and drooping curls—ah, Eureka! I could it be Miss Smith? Or and on we glided. Yorkville was in sight. At last we alighted; I followed. She dropped her handkerchief; I picked it up. "Miss Smith?" I timidly murmured. "Sir!" she responded in a bass voice which I contrast with the curls, "Do you wish to insult me? My name is Van Thumpkin, Esquire!"

A love like mine must leave of course its impress. I began to grow haggard—even pale and thin. It may be well to mention that I had formerly appreciated a weight of two hundred. My eyes became of a hawk-like and prying. Our office-hours I walked and rode incessantly. I have said that I sympathized with Evangeline; I began also to sympathize with the Wandering Jew. My melancholy ambition surmised that I was a young man in the same office found his feelings moved toward me. I had not confided to him my secret, but he pityingly fancied me in love, and counseled me. "I say, Featherstone," he remarked one twilight, when gold was down and business dull, "what you need is cheerful society. Come home to-night to a little party. My cousin, Miss Smith—"

"Bless you! bless you! my dear fellow!" I exclaimed, falling upon his neck. "Let us go at once. Lead me, oh lead me to my adored Miss Smith!"

"Now, now, Feathers!" he repeated, soothingly. "Be calm! be calm! I don't know that it will be safe to trust you. If we had a dose of valerian!"

I will swallow it by the bottleful," I returned, excitedly. "Only take me to Miss Smith."

"But you will be sick, unless you're quiet," he expostulated in gentle tones. "Go home and rest yourself. Take nothing but weak black tea and valerian. I will call for you at eight. You are sure you will be quiet?"

"Any thing for Miss Smith!" I answered, with an effort at composure. "But you will not tell me?"

"No; punctually at eight. It is a small party, you know."

"And it is given by Miss Smith?"

"Precisely. I will get you an invitation. But do you know her?"

"You shall see, my dear fellow," I returned, collectedly. "But not a word to Miss Smith."

Briggs departed on my errand.

True to his promise, however, he entered my room at eight, and found me irreproachably attired in a dress-coat and white kids. I was pacing up and down with frequent pauses before the mirror, and a heart too full for words. We left. I presume, indeed, that I floated above over the Bass pavement; but to me we seemed wafted through translucent skies on the wheels of Apollo's chariot. We passed over my private avenue. I groaned. Briggs's arm convulsively. Another moment and we were ushered into the apartment where three Misses Smith, all in white, were in pink, and no other in blue, received their friends. The blue lady stepped forward to meet me with undisguised curiosity: To this one white? the pink blushed. Ah me! my heart sank down to zero. I might be among the Graces, perhaps I was; but none of them was my Miss Smith. I felt myself growing pale, but with one heroic effort controlled myself, and even though the usual wretched formula of a night's enjoyment. At the end, however, a glass of virtuous satisfaction rewarded me. I had done my duty by Briggs. He danced successively with his three cousins, and not betrayed my despair. But the mockery of pickled oysters and Champagne I could not keep down. I began to experience an insane desire to sup upon prussic acid; but taking refuge instead in a forlorn stoicism, I escaped myself early, refused all invitations to oysters, and went to bed. The next morning I began a novel in three volumes, entitled, "Miss Smith;" and while apparently engaged in my office, would be discount was in reality pondering the weighty question which publisher was most worthy to receive proposals for the publication of my work. It might be well, I thought, to step in in the afternoon at Harper's, and offer them the favor of advance sheets. But the more I reflected the more I passed by Stewart's a lady gilded before me and entered the store. A magnetic thrill trembled through my frame. A graceful figure met the eyes of my chaos beneath the flowery roofing of her bonnet; the dark curls rippled from her forehead down those peach-blossom cheeks. It was Miss Smith! Miss Smith! The discovery of the philosopher's stone, of the northwest passage, of the Garden of the Hesperides, was as nothing compared with mine. I followed her, of course; and naught but the proximity of policemen restrained me from throwing myself at her feet in the open yard of marble. Again —how well I remember it!—at 87 cents, and then tripped like a fairy into the street again—up, up, interminable distances, I close behind, till she ascended the steps of a Madison Avenue mansion, stopped to caress a King Charles spaniel—how I envied him—who whined for joy at her approach, rang the bell and went in, while I stood without, transmuted to stone, like the gate of Paradise, though blessed indeed with the transporting sight of "Josiah Smith" upon the door-plate. A little bundle lay upon the sidewalk. She had dropped it. I picked it up and pressed it to my lips; then, struck with a happy thought, took from my pocket my own carte de visite (I carried a package of them always about me), wrapped it in the bundle, collared a small boy and sent him up the steep with particular directions to leave it for Miss Smith. It was a bold stroke, perhaps, but the spirit of a Cæsar began to animate me. I could now say, "I came, I saw, I loved also and, "I conquered." At least if I didn't it shouldn't be my fault. One hour I remained, rooted to the spot, till the passers-by began to look upon me suspiciously, and the evening of nature drew me imperiously off to dinner. With the gaslight I returned again. How breathe to her

"To the front, Doctor!" and the brave fellow tried hard to stand firm and speak boldly as he saluted the surgeon.

"To the front! What! a man in your condition? Why, Sir, you can't march half a mile; you haven't the strength to carry yourself, let alone your knapsack, musket, and equipments. You must be crazy, surely."

"But, Doctor, my division are in the fight!—here he gesticulated the wheel of an ambulance to support himself—"and I have a young brother in my company. I must go."

"But I am your surgeon, and I forbid you. You have every symptom of typhoid fever; a little overexertion will kill you."

"Well, Doctor, if I must die, I would rather die in the field than in an ambulance."

The Doctor saw it was useless to debate the point, and the soldier went as he desired. On the evening of the next day it fell to my lot to bury him where he fell, his right arm blown off at the shoulder, and his forehead pierced by a Minié ball. His name we could never learn; we only know that he belonged to the Second Division of the Sixth Corps, and that mark we placed at the head of his grave.

Shortly after 5 o'clock the bugle sounded "Fall in." At once drivers of ambulances sprang to their seats, and the rank and file to their feet from the road-side where they had been reclining, all alike covered with dust. But little cared they for the graces of the toilet; the bugle called "Forward," and they stepped out gladly to their work. A march of considerably less than an hour brought us to Chancellorsville, in which we were drawn up by brigades, about a quarter of a mile in the rear of the centre of the Federal line of battle. Here we stacked arms and sat down in our places.

Here again the brave, indomitable temper of our boys found expression in a variety of ways. The duty of the surgeons found it almost impossible to prevent the men in the ambulances getting out and taking their places in the ranks. Some were found in even worse condition than the soldier already mentioned insisted, in spite of the protestations of surgeons, officers, and comrades, that they were not run no more risk in the field than in the hospital-train; and I saw three men whom the surgeon was obliged to place in an ambulance by force, and then put over them a guard with loaded muskets, so determined were they to go with their comrades into the fight.

Our rest in the ravine was by no means undisturbed. The enemy having observed our advance over the hill shot and shell very soon began to fly about us thick and fast, battering far and near like swift-winged hail. Right in the midst of the storm this exhibition of soldierly coolness met my observation. Some twenty-five feet from the right of our regimental line of muskets ran a ditch, or rather bordered on either side by large trees. A fallen tree served as a bridge or crossing. One of the drivers of the Ambulance Corps was stooping over this log washing his hands. A spent-shell came ripping through the trees behind him and buried itself just deep enough in the log to trouble the water. He turned about and with the heel of his boot kicked the shell into the water, saying, "Now, old screech-owl, hoot if you want to." And hoot it did; but a second or two after blowing one end of the log into splinters and completely deluging the driver with water, dropping himself and the rest of the remainder of the bridge, he surveyed himself coolly and exclaimed, "Well, I came here to wash my hands; but hang me if I expected a shower-bath to such an out-of-the-way place as this!"

The firing at the front continued, and the rebel reinforcements in the form of shells still drop over us casionally around us. At half past six the bugle sounded again "Fall in." Instantly every man grasped his weapon and took his position. The Second Division—but one division, the Third, had as yet been in the fight—moved off first. Our appearance on the hill was the signal for a storm of fire from the rebels; some of their heaviest guns were opened upon us; shell after shell came "singing its devilish song through the air;" but the soldiers kept straight on, facing the storm with unshrinking front. Presently we came to—but is called a "frightful place," and so known all over the field. Over this we had to climb. A sergeant in my company while getting over fell through. Picking himself up he turned to a comrade and said, "Do you know why I am like the President?" The comrade apparently had no disposition for joking; but the sufferer found the answer as he took his position: "I'll tell you," said he; "it's because I'm a rail-splitter." We laughed, and just then, not two yards behind me, a solid shot plowed its way through our ranks and the joking sergeant with three of his companions was killed almost instantly. The sergeant, with his joke lying nettlesome on his lips, was literally torn in two!

After this we entered a thick wood, upon the other side of which we could see our line of battle. The firing had abated considerably, the cannonading entirely. We were halted, and received the order "Rest" was given. A division—the Second of the Fifth Corps, I think—which had been all day in the fight, had been relieved by the Third Division of our corps, were going to the rear, taking many of their wounded with them. One man, who was supported by two comrades, had had his lower jaw taken off, and as he moved along held up in his hand the bloody bone, mischapen and splintered, with the teeth still remaining in it. Another, by a log upon a stretcher, had lost both feet by a solid shot. The bleeding stumps had not yet been dressed, and the stretcher was covered with the blood of the dying hero. Yet, for all this, amidst the roar of musketry, and with the pain his wounds must have caused, he was singing in a clear voice, with enough of the Irish accent to make the strain musical:

"The Star-Spangled Banner, oh long may it wave
Over the land of the free and the home of the brave."

While I was yet looking after the footless soldier, a little drummer-boy attracted my attention by saying, in a childish voice, as he held up his left arm from which the hand had been severed, while he held his drum with the other:

"Will you do as much as that for the Union?"

"Yes, my little fellow, if I must.

"Well, I'd do more," said he held up his right hand; "but then I would have no hands at all to work for mother, and father was killed at Antietam."

I should suppose, from the little fellow's appearance, he was not over twelve or thirteen years of age; he was a young hero, but a thousand one—a child worthy of the Republic, worthy of its inspirations, worthy of the Future in which, maybe, he shall sit crowned with honors.

Hardly had my notice been withdrawn from the drummer-boy when Corporal S—— turned toward me, and exclaimed, "Look here!" I did so, in the direction indicated, and beheld a sight at once so horrible and sublime that it will ever form a lively picture in my memory. A brave, stalwart fellow, with the chevrons of a sergeant on his arm, rugged and torn, was limping slowly toward us. The shoe on his right foot was covered with blood, and a large rent in his pantaloons, just above the knee, from which the blood was also trickling, solved the question of the location of his wound. He was hatless, his hair was disordered, his face and hands were begrimed with smoke and powder, and he looked altogether unmanned, ill and exhausted. But he had his colors with him! His regiment, or the greater part of it, had been either killed or captured; he had lost his colors, and was on his forward captured himself. He watched his opportunity, killed the rebel who held his flag, and escaped with it safely into our lines. Ought not the name of one so brave as he to be chiseled in monumental marble, that the ages as they go may read it and admire?

Night came at last—the next day passed—and the evening of the fourth settled down upon us, bringing to some of us a welcome hour of duty. Shortly after dark, as I was about to lie down in my blanket for a nap, I was directed to take charge of a squad of men and report to a superior officer for orders. Obeying, I was soon after ordered to proceed to the wood immediately in our front and there commence to bury the dead—to bury indiscriminately both the enemy's and our own; to do all in my power to obtain information likely to lead to the identification of the bodies, and to remain out until midnight. We procured a lantern, armed the men with shovels and pick-axes, and started.

Gaining the edge of the wood after wading some distance through a deep marsh, I lighted my lantern, and its first ray fell upon the bloated face of a rebel lieutenant. Either he had died systematically or some friend had placed him in the position in which we found him, for he was sitting with his back with his arms folded closely across his breast, and his lips tightly compressed. But, nicely as he had been arranged, the flies had done their work, we found a soft strip of land—elsewhere it was a rocky soil—and here we determined the rebel should have his last resting-place. The men stooped, and by candle in the dead man's haversack, lighted it, and went to work upon the grave. Meanwhile I took charge of the dead lieutenant's effects. These I found three of our men, but, as far as I went, could see no more of the enemy's dead. I came back; there was room for another, and, with a second two rails, placed one under the shoulders and the other under the legs, just below the knees, and thus the body of the dead rebel was laid away in the earth to wait the day of reckoning, in whose glare all of us must stand.

I told the men to dig a grave a little further on for three. They went at it, while I proceeded to examine the bodies I had discovered. The first was that of a lieutenant-colonel of the 18th Regiment of the Fifth Corps. His right hand was placed close to his mouth, and tightly clenched: a torn wad of the kind was his way in loading, and he bit off so tightly held in his teeth that it was impossible to withdraw it. His pocket had been cut out, his shoes and boots taken off, and all else missing whatever was to be found on his person by which to identify him except the corps mark on his cap.

About two feet from him lay a private, bateau, and stripped of shoes and stockings also. His pockets had been cut out, and his pantaloons, and found in his pantaloons a golden locket, with the picture of a fair young woman therein, and in the latest-conceived style of fashion of that period. person, with a card on which was a lady's address. I have since ascertained it was that of his wife.

The third body was that of a Rebel lieutenant of artillery; and how he came there in the woods was a mystery we could not solve. No battery was placed where he lay, consequently he was not gunner, either right or left. But be that as it may, there the body was, stripped of every thing in the shape of clothing except one solitary stocking, which was on by one end only. His little finger had evidently been cut off, as the print of a large sealing could be seen upon it; and his pocket-book, of course, was not caused either by a Minié ball or a fragment of shell.

As length the grave was ready, the three were buried, and again we passed on. As best we could we were making our way in the dim light of the lantern, when, suddenly, I found that I had thrown my arms in self-protection, my left hand came in contact with the cold forehead of corpse. My feet rested on another body, and my lantern was out. A fit for a match. I had none. But presently some one who was more provident than I struck a light, and the glare revealed a sight which I pray God your eyes may never look upon again. The body upon which my hand had fallen was that of a negro, but's legs were blown completely off. That over which I had stumbled was the body of a private with one arm severed, not entirely off, at the shoulder. Two trees of perhaps four inches diameter had been splintered, one about eight feet the other five feet from the ground, and had fallen right where the bodies lay. Within a circle of twenty feet from these trees I counted seventeen bodies, all, alas! of our own brave boys. The fight among so many to find some of the gray-backed ones.

How we buried these seventeen bodies you would not care to know. The lantern gone out, the candle which the men had procured lasted but a little time, but the moon had risen and the pale rays it cast through the trees aided us in our task, though they added much to the ghostliness of the terrible scene over which they fell.

We found one body, that of a young, light-haired boy, not over nineteen at the furthest, whose forehead was pierced by a ball; in his left hand he firmly grasped his rammer; his right hand or its forefinger was in the watch-pocket of his pantaloons. We examined the pocket, and found in it a small silver shield with his name, company, and regiment engraved upon it. We took possession of this memento, and fortunately finding a fragment of a cracker-box, marked upon it in pencil, by moonlight, the inscription found on the shield. We buried him with his comrades, one of whom belonged to the Fifth Corps, and placed the rude board at the head of his grave in the hope that it would one day enable some kind-hearted friend to find the body. Since that day the shield has been sent to the soldier's father; its inscription was, "S. L. Caldwell, Company D, 118th Pennsylvania Volunteers."

It was half an hour after midnight when we came into camp, and half an hour after lying with our feet across to the stars, dreams enfolded us, and we were as though no battle horrors had ever pained and no battle dangers had ever menaced us.

THE FALSE LOVE.

In sight of the starry sky,
In wood of the rustling sea,
With a beating heart and a tender smile,
Did my own true love kiss me.

Under the solemn sky,
Close to the throbbing sea,
With words of love, and vows of faith,
Did my own true love kiss me.

I gaze on the same bright sky,
I hear the same rustling sea,
But never again on earth, or in heaven,
Will my own true love kiss me.

True are the holy stars,
True is the restless sea,
True are the thoughts of my heart to him,
But my love is false to me!

Hear it, O changeful sky!
Hear it, O moving sea!
Ye are true to me, as true as eternal laws,
But my love is false to me.

Why should the moonlit sky,
Why should the moaning sea,
Recall the memory of the past,
When my love is false to me?

Pierce to his soul, O stars!
Thrill to his heart, O sea!
It may be, mid vows in sudden pang,
My love will come back to me!

BRAIN SPECTRES

Ture brain makes ghosts both sleeping and waking. A man who has lying in troubled sleep when a phantom, with the cold hand of a corpse, seized his right arm, awaking in horror he found upon his arm still the impression of the cold hand of the corpse, and it was only after reflecting that he found the terrible reality had to be due to the deadness of his own left hand in a frosty night, which had subsequently grasped his right arm. This was a real ghost of the brain, while the awakening of the senses and the understanding explained. M. Gratiolet narrates a dream of his own which is sincerely illustrative of how the brain makes ghosts in sleep. Many years ago, when occupied in studying the organization of the brain, he prepared a great number both of human and animal brains. He carefully stripped off the membranes, and placed the brains in alcohol. Such were his daily occupations, when one night he thought that he had taken out his own brain from his own skull. He stripped it of its membranes. He put it into alcohol, and then he looked at it. The brain out of the alcohol and replaced it in his skull. But, contracted by the action of the spirit, it was much reduced in size, and did not at all fill up the skull. He felt it rattling about in his head. This feeling threw him into such a great perplexity that he awoke with a start, as if frightened.

M. Gratiolet, every time he prepared the brain of a man, must have felt that his own brain resembled it. The idea of possessing a brain in a perfectly asleep, while neither the senses nor the judgment were active, the physiologist carried on an operation of his sleep which probably had often occurred to his fancy when at his work, and which had then been supremely dismissed very frequently.

A person who has for the last become one of routine, and the association of himself with his study, explain the bizarre and ghastly dream of M. Gratiolet. A person who is in the grips of a fever hand, misinterpreted by the imagination acting without the aid of the discerning faculties, accounts for the ghastly vision of the other sleeper.

Every one is conscious of a perpetual series of pictures, sometimes stationary, sometimes fleeting, generally shifting; not consciously fixed in his mind. Sleep is the period in which the nerves derive their nourishment from the blood. The picturing nerves, like those of the senses, are generally inactive in their functions at feeding times; and thoroughly healthy nervous systems dream very little or not at all. Dreams betoken troubled brains. The brain of a woman who had lost a portion of her cranium used to swell up and protrude when she was dreaming, and then contract and become tranquil again when she was sleeping soundly.

The wakeful dreams, the nightmares, and the will even of the strongest and soundest minds, are not always able to control the false and perverse impressions of the nerves. I knew once a commander in the navy whose left eye was shot clean out by a bullet in a naval action in the beginning of this century, and whom, forty years afterward. It was impossible to convince that he did not see all sorts of strange objects with his lost eye. "It is not impossible," he would quietly say; "I know it too well." Every body has known men who suffered amputation in legs long lost and replaced by wooden ones.

A nervous, dreamy, imaginative lad was walking one day with some comrades among rank grass. The place was noted for adders, and the youths talked about them. Instantly this lad felt something enter his leg of his pantaloons and twist itself with the swiftness of lightning round his thigh. He stopped terrified, and a careful examination proved that no adder was a creature of his imagination. The vividness of the fancy of this youth made his waking senses and his discerning faculties of no more use to him for the moment than if they had been asleep.

This condition of the brain is called by the savants hallucination. Mueller, the physiologist, and Goethe, the poet, have both described hallucinations to which they were subject, and which they compared in consequence together. The poet says Mueller, is that of an individual who, while perfectly healthy in body and mind, has the faculty, on closing his eyes, of seeing any object he wishes to see. History cites only a very few instances of this phenomenon. Carden and Goethe were examples.

Goethe says: "When I close my eyes and stoop my head, I figure to myself and see a flower in the middle of my visual organs. This flower preserves only for an instant its first form. It soon decomposes itself, and out of it issues other flowers, with colored and luminous leaves green. They are not natural but fantastic flowers, yet regular as the roses of the sculptor. I could not look fixedly at that creation, but it remained as long as I held without increasing or diminishing. In the same way when I imagined a dish full of various colors, I saw combined before me from the memory of the appearance new forms like those of the kaleidoscope."

Mueller talked this subject over with Goethe in 1823. In this interesting to them both. "Following," says Mueller, "that when I was calmly lying on my bed with my eyes shut, although not asleep, I often saw pictures which I could observe very well, he was very curious to learn what I then felt. I told him that my will had no influence either upon the production or upon the changes of these pictures, and that I had never seen any thing symmetrical or of the character of vegetation. They appeared at will, on the contrary, chosen his theme, which transformed itself forthwith in a manner apparently involuntary, but always displaying more symmetry and harmony. Mueller used to get rid of the figures which haunted him by turning his face to the wall. Although he did not see these figures, yet they were still before him, but they soon began to fade. Jean Paul recommended the observation of these phenomena as a cure for all thinking-sick.

These are hallucinations of sane minds. The delusive sensations of flying and falling are known to many persons. Young girls have often told me when sleeping and waking, at the epoch of life when their girlhood is growing into womanhood, are especially apt, like the religious enthusiasts, to dream of flying. And nearly every body is familiar with the hallucinations of falling from personal experience. When a leg is laid over the side of the full asleep, or to warm the cold sheets, the patient feels as if sinking through the floor, and stretches out his arms either to save himself; yet nothing has happened except the coincidence of a cold shiver with a complete expiration.

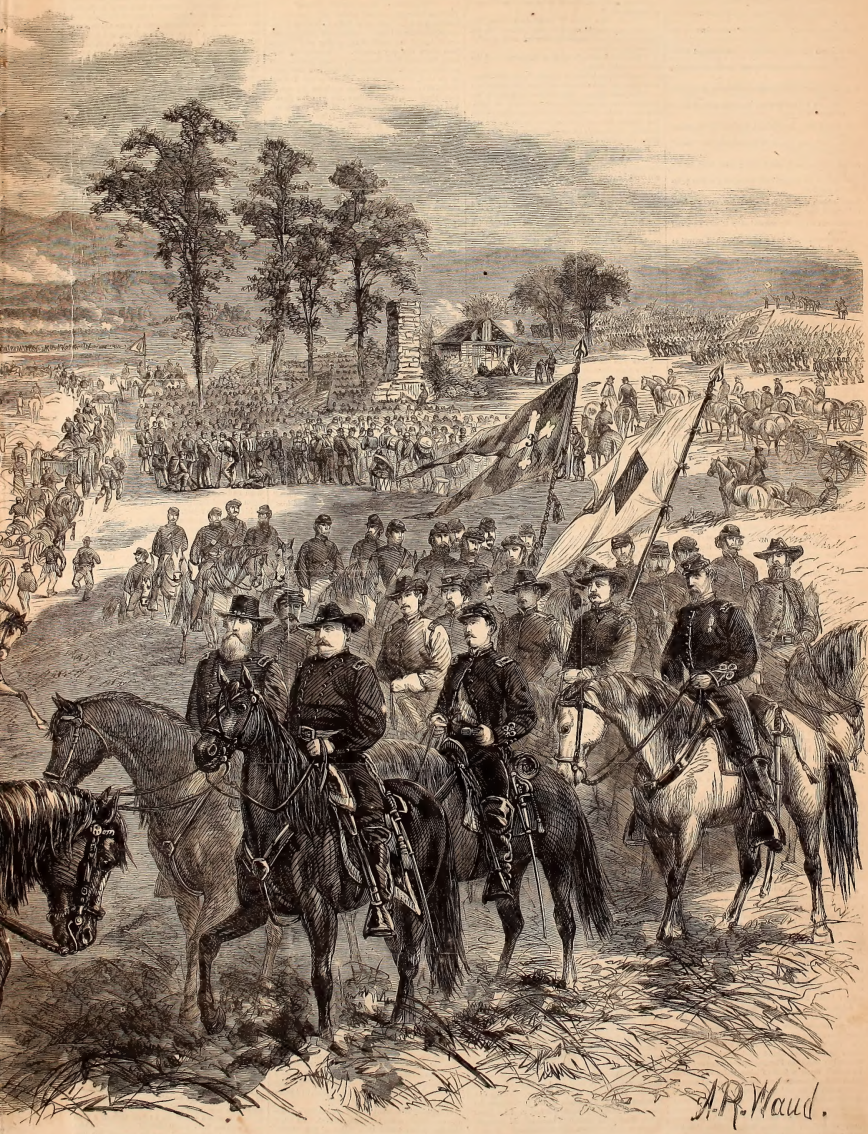
Physiologists and philosophers of authority say we are all mad in our dreams; and, if the absence of the control of reason is a true definition of insanity, there is no gainsaying the proposition. But madness means something more. In dreams the faculties which control the picturing or imagining powers are simply inactive; they are there but absent nor incapable. Far from identifying sleeping dreams with madness, I feel disposed to contend that voluntary and arbitrary hallucinations are owing by the blind, hearing by the deaf, the senses of smelling, touching, tasting things which do not exist—we do not say insanity when these faculties needful for correct errors of sensation are diseased. Persons unaccustomed to imaginary hearing are not insane, although for many minutes they often believe the train is going backward, because they are not capable of correcting the hallucination by watching the objects they are passing.

The senses are seeing, hearing, smelling, touching, and tasting instruments. The will and the judgment are the powers of intelligence nerves performing the functions of carriers. Even after the instruments are destroyed to carry impressions it continues to carry messages—false messages. When a man has lost an eye, during the inflammatory stage of suppuration the eye contains the complete images of fiery figures. It is the carriers who convey the pain of rheumatism from the lost limb.

A man whom we knew once long from typhus fever believed he had two bodies, one of which was toiling in pain on an unwieldy bed, and the other lying sweetly on a delicious couch. He was disposed to ascribe this hallucination to the duality of the brain, but to a conflict between the recollection of his sufferings and the experience of his present ease. If a patient should have been permanently unable to overpower memory by reality he would have been insane. His two bodies would have been found to be stalks of straw, or their bodies fragile as glass.

Pictures have produced hallucinations. Leering at the eyes of Madonnas, cases in which the power of religious ideas come into play, I may mention another instance of their effects on a mind keenly sensitive to the beauties of the fine arts. A French physiologist, while studying intensely an English engraving of Lawrence's "Beatrice Cenci," took horn burning, and fixed the idea in his mind for the moment that the small came from the foot of the horse in the engraving.

AN ADVANCE OF THE ARMY OF THE POTO



OMAC.—Sketched by Alfred R. Waud.—[See Page 33.]

SEND THEM HOME.

Send them home to his mother—mournful relics and few!
All that he left behind him, our soldier tried and true.
The cap with the Maltese cross, and badge of honor, the mark
Made by the cowardly bullet at the picket-post in the dark:

The uniform torn and mended by hands unused to the toil,
Faded by sun and by rain, browned by the dust and the soil.

Send them home to his mother—the pictures we found on his breast,
Her own, and his father's, and hers, the girl whom he loved the best.

Send it—the Bible he cherished, and read by the flickering light
Of the candle that burned in the tent, till the "taps" sounded at night.

Mother, weeping afar, and breaking thine heart for the boy
That God and his country have taken, we give thee treasures sing and joy!

Never a blush shall creep, like a shadow, over thy brow
For him—a man of worth, a saint in glory now.

Blessed art thou among women!—thy tribute pure and sweet,
Thine ointment costly and precious, thou hast poured at the Master's feet.

So softly, tenderly fold them, and send the relics away:
Mother, a mother was with him, and kissed the boy to-day.

The colors he loved are lying on the heart so lately thrown:
With dirge, and prayer, and weeping, we'll carry him to his grave.

Then go, little mournful packet, and by that desolate hearth
Tell that march and battle are over, and the soldier's "off duty" on earth.

CORP TYLER HUNTLEY, Bastrop, La.

MISS NILSON'S GAITER-BOOTS.

ADJUTANT AMES sat at Captain G——'s table, in the little library the Captain had turned into an office and reception-room since he had been appointed Provost-Marshal there. He sat bending over a memorandum-book, and writing rapidly to the Captain's dictation. Grier and Donovan were at the window smoking, idly observant of Ames and his work. All four had been old acquaintances long ago, in the old times of peace, when the opera, the club, and the ball-room had been chief topics of interest. Very old times these seemed to the four young men in their well-worn and a little shabby uniforms, with cords and ribbons and buttons, and faded stripe, a ru ty bit of gold-braid, a whitened seam, etc. These four, who had once stood full-less in wasteful cloths and multitudinous ties, waiting for the first step of a Redowa to come stealing out from the drum sounds, and the "flute violin basses," as then their ears had been attuned to different meanings when they stood waiting for the sounds of the drum; and their companions were no longer white-robed fairies, whose light weight rested on their arms like soft plumy down as they glided down the gay rooms; but men, worn and swart, and sometimes savagely in earnest, stood instead, and for all weight there was a gleaming sabre, or an interval the dead burden of a fallen comrade. Donovan, the quondam dandy of the party—the "carled darling," whose warm Irish blood throbbed at any touch of festivity—was perhaps remembering all these past scenes that offered their broad contrasts to the present; for as he smoked, a sudden flushing from his short pipe and burning a clean hole in his tawny beard gave him this ejaculation, with a grim smile:

"That I do, eh, for a bullet-hole, to take back for glory to Kate Morris's soldiers' party, Jack?"

Jack Grier laughed, answering lazily, yet not without a kindly interest in poor little dandy Tom Donovan, now turned into fighting Tom:

"Go in your waistcoat, Tom; that's riddled enough with bullet-holes already."

"Waistcoat!—then, that reminds me—good for you, Jack! I say, Ames, I want a new waistcoat. Will you just write to Young, eh? ditto for Brown, you know. Sievier has my measure. I'm not sure though, by Jove! I know the inches, however. Here—don't give glory out—hand the memorandum to me; I'll put it down."

Ames, who had finished his work, had risen, drawing on his overcoat. He tossed the book to Donovan at this, and sat down, waiting. Talking with the Captain, he didn't notice that Donovan, instead of immediately adding his commission to the list, was idly twiddling the pencil between his thumb and finger, while he ran his eye down the column: "Coat for Loring, eh? ditto for Brown; cap, coat, and trousers; shaving-soap, toothbrushes, nail-brushes, blank books, and blankets; Harper's Weekly and Magazine—that's jolly! watch for Latham, chain; um, um, um—how much more? In a low, running under-tone, which suddenly broke into a louder key, that brought all the rest to a clear knowledge of what he was saying—"Eh what? Miss Nilson's gaiter-boot?"

Adjutant Ames abandoned himself enough to keep his seat. He was sorely tempted at the first to dash from his seize the memorandum, and administer some sharp reproof as once to the offender. The next moment proved his wisdom. There was general laughter, good-natured, and gentlemanly; and then Fletcher Ames was very glad he hadn't made a fool of himself by overrating what was, after all, only a careless natural action. How many times had they pored over each other's memorandums when a week's furlough had sent one and another to the city laden with commissions for the others! He had never thought of himself annoyed before; but then before "Miss Nilson's gaiter-boots" hadn't been on the list. He flushed to the roots of his blonde hair as he pondered this. And Donovan was running on gayly:

"What a lucky fellow you are, Ames! I might go to the city twenty times, with a list of orders as long as your arm, all sorts of bearish thing to buy, but never such a duck of an order as 'Miss Nilson's gaiter-boots!'"

"Who is Miss Nilson?" asked Jack Grier, lifting his large shoulders out of the depths of the old leather chair, and bending forward with slowly-gathering interest.

"The prettiest little rebel in the whole country about here!"

The flush on Adjutant Ames's light skin deepened, and he broke hastily upon this assertion:

"No such thing. Miss Nilson may not be enthusiastic in the Federal cause, but she is no rebel. If you must make utterances of conclusions when you expect her to think of the South as we do. Besides, she doesn't know any thing, nor care any thing for politics any way."

Nobody had expected this earnest protest, and Donovan and Grier shouted; but over the face of the grave Captain a keen look shot, and he came out from heavy eyebrows a clear glance of scrutiny at the annoyed and flushing face of his Adjutant. In a moment, without being observed, he finished his scrutiny; the usual grave, calm mask dropped down over his features; and he said:

"Oh, I remember the young lady: lives with her aunt there, over in the Reynold mansion. She ought to be a good Union girl: the aunt is staunch as steel. What hinders Miss Nilson?"

"What hinders? oh, early association," laughed Donovan. "I know the whole story. The aunt is Northern, bone and sinew, and has only had a dozen years ago—a second wife to old Guy Reynold; first love or some sort of romance. Before the war broke out the Reynolds, including Miss Reynold with the guardianship of his niece, and her lot into this slave property that she must stay here, will be all mine. So there is the whole thing in a nut-shell. There's the reason why the aunt is a staunch, loyal, steel-true friend. Such early associations' you see of Miss Nilson to hinder."

This time Fletcher Ames kept silence; but the blonde cheek changed its color frequently as he conceal the deep interest he felt in the matter, and the uneasy gnawing of his lip gave signal of annoyance. In a moment other than he had gone, Captain G—— renewed the subject with Donovan, asking some leading questions. How long had she been there? and so forth.

"Oh, don't you remember that night when Mrs. Reynold was 'at home,' for the first time, last February, I think, and we all went? and you say our compliments and drink Johannisberger? I don't believe Ames has missed one of those 'evenings' since, if not the first, at least getting spoony on the niece at once. A pretty little creature to be sure; not a bit your idea of a Southern girl. A little thing—not over five feet—and very fair, with a skin like a wax-doll, and such a head of hair, as if she'd as lief you held your tongue as not."

Grier roused with a laugh here.

"No," he answered, "I don't think wouldn't like that, his tongue is his strong point."

So the subject passed off with a laugh for the time. When these later renewed it again, no one of them felt like laughing.

"What interested the Captain so much in Ames's flirtation?" you ask.

Yes, Grier had noticed, and did think it rather queer; but in half an hour they had forgotten all these apparent anxieties about "Miss Nilson's gaiter-boots," while he who had most to do with them was on his way to Washington.

And it did seem a very small item on his long list so quickly. Remembering it, he remembered a large pleasant parlor, where the deep embrasured windows looked out upon the dark flowing river and the distant hills. A room whose twilight gleams, where the musky odors of old wood, of cedar and sandal, of dried rose, cast the spell in memory, as indelibly as it had been stamped upon his young impassioned heart. Sitting there in the cool of the darkened parlor, he could see her on that first "evening," when he had stood with his brother officers in her presence. "A little thing to add to a life," explained Grier, "and yet, for that cool, serene silence which had baffled and held aloof the gay assembly Donovan, who dwelt in extremes, had called 'Fletcher Ames's infatuation,' a thrill had surprised him as he had met those dark lovely eyes—eyes which held his own for a moment longer than the calm of their gaze would have discovered a different nature in him; and then the few cool tones—Donovan would have called them a little chilly—had duly dropped like fine pearls before Adjutant Ames.

We have all of us, perhaps, at some time felt this sudden impression, this fascination for a stranger, that to others seemed cold and indifferent; and we all know how fascinating it is, and how it usually ends in arousing an answering and a certain relation which no amount of expressed cordiality could do.

He could do all this, and more, as the "stranger" was a woman youthful and fair. It would be difficult to tell why Adele Nilson thus specialized Fletcher Ames. Difficult, because what might appear so natural a thing for a girl whose eye was pleased, and whose sensibility was touched by the manly and spirited address of the young officer, united with that gentle air of deference, was a stranger and unaccountable one for Miss Nilson; because she was not impulsive nor enthusiastic, and became beneath that exterior as "soft as silk" there was a strong purpose and a strong quality, and an ambition that stopped at no slight barriers, and that stooped to nothing less than the loftiest places. It had been said of her too, that she had rejected some of the finest names in the State for these lofty reasons of hers, and had kept her heart under the strong control of her head all through. This was Adele Nilson at twenty-three. Does it seem strange that with this character one should question and marvel at her special favor to Ames? to look or tone, to young Adjutant Ames in the presence of as handsome men and superior officers? Perhaps, unconscious to herself, nature asserted itself for that time, and

"She looked at him as one who awakes."

Perhaps later she pleased herself with the youth, letting her heart out these lofty and simply, because unaware of herself, because she thought both too little and too much of this young man to suppose there was any danger. Whatever the reasons, from that first "evening," when her aunt, as a relief to the formal ceremony that had been performed, up so long, sent out to the officers of the Federal army, who now held the town, cards for her reception, these two, Adele Nilson and Fletcher Ames, had progressed more rapidly in their acquaintance than any of the others, though Donovan had essayed all his grace of pleasing, which was more than most men's, and even the General had paid deferential attention to his hostess's charming niece, who, accordingly, "Captain G—— ought to be a good Union girl, but who, by Donovan's assertion, was "the prettiest little rebel in the country round." But Fletcher Ames had a blender proof in his own experience of this assertion; and it was perhaps unjust for him to assert upon the garbled accounts of others. He did not think he had ever personally heard much more than a few things like this.

Standing one evening in the vicinity of his General, who was in conversation with Miss Nilson, the following bit of talk reached him:

"You were in Newport three summers ago?"

"Yes, and almost every summer previous. I never missed but one season, when I loved Newport locally. Ah me!" with a little sigh, "I don't know when I shall stand on those beaches again."

"Why not this summer? as a Unionist you are safer there than here;" and the courteous General smiled down the pensively interesting face.

"Am I?"

Just the two syllables; but Donovan facing a mirror caught a reflection of which the General lost. Long after, when subsequent events made every thing connected with that time a matter of deep interest, Donovan was fond to tell of "that look," which he called a "concealed sneer," "hard and triumphant." Then once, later than this, just a few of those words, in the drawing-room on a windy rainy night, drinking the rare Johannisberger, which Mrs. Reynold, in her zeal for the cause and hers, brought out from her well-stored cobwebs for their use. As before, they stood facing the mirror, and the General held the younger lady of the house by the talk.

"This is fine old wine," he said, as he lifted his glass to the light; "but you have none, let me—" as he took a step forward, but a motion stayed him, and the words,

"No; pardon me, I only drank this with my uncle."

"Ah yes, I can understand. I should be glad to drink this wine with the owner who had stored it for so many years, but I can understand; and even to one who has no nearer tie of association."

If the owner had been here you had never stood there drinking this Johannisberger, General."

Looking with a pleased sense of enjoyment into the face of the speaker, the conscious only of comfort in the warmly-lighted rooms, the sparkling fire, the General did not catch any bitterness in the tone. Donovan, who did observe a change in the serene girl-face. But looking into the mirror, Donovan averted that the beautiful face had changed, and that the voice was not smothered with hatred; but as he said, the General merely took it for a simple fact, and, laughing good-humoredly, answered:

"No, no; I suppose not: your uncle would have stranded on the State rights, you think?"

"A moment's reflection convinces me that I was observing her," continued this suspicious young historian, "and she spread her little hands with the natural gesture of the world, and in a voice declared she had no interest in politics; with did seem rights enough to her."

From this Donovan came to the conclusion that Miss Nilson was the prettiest little rebel in the country round, and that she had smiled upon him at first—if she had looked into his eyes at all—those alluring eyes of her own—if she had spoken to him with that special significance which appealed to Adjutant Ames—he would not have been so sharp-sighted. He might then have followed Fletcher Ames's lead, become of the garden set those early days of spring, feeling only the charm of her magic presence, and ready to "do or die for, sigh or swear" for her, as the latter; for who under these circumstances could ever doubt or disbelieve in Adele Nilson, could ever believe her on any other side than that of the broadest humanity? He might from some subtle magnetism have taken so much for granted, that like young Ames he would have been aware that never on any occasion had he ever heard Miss Nilson "commit herself" on the side of humanity, or indeed upon any subject at all, that she had not talked with him, approached with the simplest frankness, yet guarded or utterly silent on the grant question of the day. Major Donovan from his first had never been smiled upon, never been spoken to with special significance, therefore he was not spelled into unasking sympathy and belief like young Ames; and perhaps, too, readier to suspect from the little shadow of pique which might have been natural, Donovan observed Tom Donovan. But his thought went no further than this fact: That Miss Nilson, that "little thing as soft as silk," was a rebel sympathizer. Captain G——'s sent further.

"What interested the Captain so much in Ames's flirtation, eh?"

Something that went deeper than Ames's flirtation: as a simple matter of heart-interest. He knew Fletcher Ames better than either of the others. Knew him to be one of those single-minded, ardent-hearted persons, who will go straight on to death or into misery, without so much as suggestion, when his heart is roused. One of those earnest believers whose faith sometimes makes them blind. So when he sat there listening to the buildings about Miss Nilson, he suddenly caught a look on Ames's face that set him thinking. He knew that look, and all it meant. He remembered a time not so very long ago, when Ames was in college, and had got his head set the wrong way with the full belief that it was the right way; and when his friends opposed him he put his face resolutely against them, with just that pained determination for expression. It was an awful scrape at last, Captain G——, who was then one of the seniors, remembered, and throughout it that look had haunted him.

With this previous knowledge of him, of his warmth, his enthusiasm, his sincerity, and that blind devoteedness of character, he felt at once what depth of feeling the thinking check, the silence, the cleverly-veiled under-lip, meant at the discreet and light talk of Donovan and Grier on that day. He saw, or, by the wide reeds of attempted exculpation which he threw out for Miss Nilson, how really ignorant and in the dark he was with regard to her political sentiments. With his peculiar qualities, argued the Captain, that "little thing as soft as silk" may do infinite mischief. Not that he believed that Miss Nilson would be able to poison her admirer's mind with traitorous principles. "Go! forbid!" ejaculated the Captain as he brooded over the matter in his room; "but when once Ames gets to going it blind, there's no knowing what to expect; and so he'll believe in her any way she likes, and will even make an unconscious tool of him, and pump him for anything she wants to know." And every day he would find himself growing more and more interested by that small commission Donovan had read out: "Miss Nilson's gaiter-boots." "What sends that into my mind in persistency?" he thought. "Last night I dreamed of them; seven-leagued boots they were, transformed into them, and pounding away, with all sorts of capitals in place of ours, into the wind-cloud. And this morning the first thing I thought of when I awoke was, 'Miss Nilson's gaiter-boots.' Condemn it, why should I let it do with me for booty? She's not my fair enslaver. What ails me? Zounds!" The grave Captain got up and walked down the room with the excitement of his new thought, which at that moment flashed into his mind. The new thought gave him some trouble: he couldn't get reconciled to it. Being calm, sensible fellow, with no fanciful imaginings, this new idea looked suspicious to him. He looked at it from all quarters. He accused himself of over-acuteness, then laughed as he glanced at his physique; the healthy flesh and muscle. He smoked upon it; he slept upon it; and finally accepted it as something out of his power to reject.

"There's something on your Captain's mind more than ordinary," said Donovan to Lieutenant Grier. "It's something about Ames, I'm thinking. Heard any thing?"

No, Grier had heard any thing. Grier looked straight ahead, and smoked his pipe in peace like a steady healthy worker as he was.

This was the day before Adjutant Ames was expected back. The next afternoon Captain G—— went over to camp.

"I wish to Ames Ames when he returns," he had said to Lieutenant Grier as he was mounting his horse. "If I'm not here when he comes just send me orders by Grier. Directly he returns, you remember."

Donovan had come over from his quarters, and stood by, on the piazza. He gave a wink as when the Captain rode off, and said to Grier:

"I told you so." Turning into the house, he followed the Lieutenant into the Provost's little office, minded for a dish of chat; if he had been of the other sex, it would have come under the name of gossip.

But Grier had other employment—writing for the Provost-Marshal must be done; so there was no chat for Donovan there; and away he sauntered smoking his short pipe, and laughing good-humoredly at "that young rebel plods by so early."

Grier sat there writing until the town was dusted, throwing his head up occasionally when an iron wheel rang on the pia zza-walk or a shadow darkened the window: but twilight fell, and no Adjutant Ames had appeared, though a boat had sounded whistle down the river, and the scream of a locomotive had proclaimed the last means of arrival.

It was growing dark, and he was sending a servant for lights, when a head at a window-pane of voice stopped his meditations, and sent them flying into another channel.

"Jack, Jack, Ames has come."

"Where is he?" And up jumps Grier all alert.

"Gone down to Neale's quarters. He met the Colonel and Captain Lee, and they sent for waistcoat him to take tea with him. Here, where you going? Wait and hear the postscript. Coming up street who should I see but Ames with Nilson and her aunt. Ames dropped behind with the bright-eyed face you ever saw, and I heard him say, 'I shall have the pleasure of seeing you both round this evening, Miss Nilson.' The girl actually trembled, and turned red and pale as he spoke. I didn't think she had so much in her. By George, Jack, I believe it's a go there!" And Donovan, fairly started, was lounging in for his "gossip" when the Lieutenant vaulted over the sill and dashed past him, calling out to an orderly passing:

"Smith, find Captain G—— my horse and my sword, and give Captain G—— this!" handing Smith a slip of paper containing the intelligence of Ames's arrival. Finding Smith already attached for duty by the Colonel, and no other messenger in view, he mounted and rode off himself.

Incurious as Lieutenant Grier was, an emotion of surprise and wonder did come over him as he noted the eagerness which the Captain manifested in being desire to get back; and though a man of few words, Grier found himself repeating to him Donovan's "postscript." As he finished, his listener ejaculated, under his breath: "I shall be too late!" and the next moment was urging his horse to his topmost speed. The Lieutenant followed at a more leisurely pace, his wonder not lessened by that low-breathed sentence.

"Too late for what?" One would think it was a case of high treason," he mused.

And while they ride, in that old dark parlor, half lost in twilight gloom, Adèle Nilson waits for her young lover. Her young lover! Does she know herself at last? Does the head—that proud noble head—acknowledge so much to the heart? Her young lover?

There is certainly impatience in that waiting figure: the head bent, the eager eyes straining into the gathering dark, the unvented flush upon her cheek, the burning scarlet of her lips—these all denote the fever-pain. Will she dare to meet him with these signs? Will she confess so much to him? A step turning upon the stone-step, the muffled heel upon the doorway threshold, and the question is answered. She goes out to meet him with two hands extended, all the dark soft curls softened into her eyes, her lips parted into smiles, and a faint exhilarant excitement visible as she says,

"Ah, you have come!"

What lover could ask more than those words, in that tone, with that face?

He went down, and she felt a pressure warm and fervent upon the two hands he was holding; then the white hands of his fine beard fretted softly over her fingers as he lifted his head. She grew suddenly pale; an embarrassment that was not shyness oppressed her. Out of it she spoke quickly:

"You brought me something?"

He was not disconcerted nor troubled by this pallid embarrassment. The power of his nature was making its assertion; and still with his look holding hers, though nobody now, he answered her question:

"I have brought you Cinderella's shoes."

She flamed into color again as she touched the package, and her hand was unsteady and cold, that had lately been so firm and warm. He saw and felt all this; and there was a look in his face as if he would guard her from all confession for her pride's sake until he himself stood confessed before her. But what he thought perhaps was he entered the gateway that he should speak so soon, that the end was so near; but the night was full of promise. He—was it Fate?—led him there.

And filled with hope, which lacked nothing of modest manliness and reverence, but which was simply faith with love, those prophets of success that even here could not be disputed—even here were not false prophets, though success lay mutilated, done to death on the very threshold of fulfillment by a false foe than death.

But with only that sweet hope thrilling at his heart he handed her hand again:

"Come, the garden is too lovely to-night to lose any of its enchantments."

She hesitated a moment, only a moment, then yielded to his spell. They had in some mysterious hour changed places. She must do his bidding. But before she went he noticed, as he noticed every thing she did, that she turned and dropped the package—her Cinderella shoes—into the yawning mouth of an Egyptian bronze; a thing half vase, half idol, which somebody had brought from old scenes of splendid barbarism, to put here like an ugly blot of evil amidst the singing birds and flowers.

"Do you think they are quite safe there?" he asked, smiling.

She lifted a startled look; and again the hand he touched grew icy. He drew it without more ado over his arm, smiling still, though his heart went beyond his words, hardly heeding them indeed:

"Are you quite sure the old monster won't make a sacrifice of them?"

That was all; but it seemed to please her, for she laughed out some gay sweet response, and the warmth stole back into the cold palm.

Always while his own true single heart-beat he tested here, still through these sudden changes the breath of ice, the swift recall of flame and fire, he read her story, over and again, these same pages, till now, her memory mood settled into softer stillness than before. And so the summer night deepened: the twilight died into cloud and shadow. The wind came up, and through the gusts the thunder muttered distantly, and lightning played in vivid haste, as a storm stood beneath the blue of pity at the furthest range of the garden, whose bare branches soughed wildly in the wind; and all about them and the nearer coming lightning, when he found his words to tell her what she must have already known. But who would have dared, if he would have dared to tell her? Him, Adèle Nilson! Did she herself think he would be so bold? If she did—if on that night he carried her on to surprise, perhaps the surprise carried her out of herself.

For the blood beat upward into her brain, how swift her pulses ran, throbbing, throbbing, all through her being, as under the soughing pine: "I love you, Adèle, I love you!" sounded in her ear above the wail of the wind.

On that very hillock where they stood how many had she turned away from her in disdain! And this one, this young Adjutant with not half their claims, why did she not disdain him? Because for that moment nature rose up strong within her; and it was a rebellious nature breaking through the deadly crusts of the world's coldness and selfishness and ambition. Because, when he said, "I love you, Adèle," there was no place on earth but this where they stood; the "world" "reeled unheededly by;" and the tumultuous elements of the night seemed to enter into her blood as she listened to his pure masterful voice, which claimed her in his very confession. For a moment, as a longer, nearer gleam lit up the heavens, he met her eyes. They were full of all soft, tender, impassioned emotion. For a moment. In that moment, and the breathless rapture that followed, what held them apart? What silent mysterious power warned him away? As they stood thus a plunging footstep through the thicket, the panting of some one in haste broke into the "divinity that hedged them round." Then a voice broke farther yet. Some one was calling him, some dire necessity had arisen for him. He was as brave a fellow as ever fought on battle-field. He was never known to shrink from the most sudden alarm of action; but a sick shiver went shuddering through him as he heard this voice. Alas, poor prophetic heart!

Back by the same path he went, and she was by his side, and now and then her voice was in his ear, and once, in some dark moment, she slipped and her arm upheld her. And all that mysterious distance, and the sick shiver at his heart. At the door the light from within streamed out upon a really breathless, wild, stormy face, the riding boots splashed with mud, and great beads of perspiration standing upon his forehead. He had ridden hard.

"Captain G——!"

"Adjutant, just a moment, if you please;" and the Captain lifted his hat to Miss Nilson for apology as he drew her companion away.

Their conference was brief, but it had wrought a strange change upon the pallid and beauty that shone so joyfully a brief time since.

When had Adjutant Ames ever been known to hesitate in the service of an order? Never. But now he not only hesitated at the charge given him by his Captain and Provost Marshal, but he actually refused. His private relation and all military etiquette, as he had never done before, and expostulated in vehement under-tones that had a note like a repressed cry breaking through.

"It is absurd, preposterous, Richard!" he said, going back to their old relations of intimacy in expostulation.

"I will stake my own loyalty upon this."

But the Captain shook his head.

"No, no; it will not do. Something will do but what I have said. I have charged you with it, Ames, because I trust you in this matter. But it would be too painful for you to carry it out than to intrust it to any one else; for if it happened that I was mistaken in my belief, I should like to share his secret; but perhaps I have been wrong in assigning the task to you. If you prefer, I will—"

"No, no. If this must be, I will do it myself. You will see how absurd the whole suspicion will be proved, Richard." And he looked into his companion's face with the ghost of a smile before he left him.

Straight through the house to the opposite entrance he went. Miss Nilson, meanwhile, she now paced slowly up and down, singing an old love-song half unconsciously, he went to her.

His clear-headed loyalty, the world's duty echoed him, as he told her his errand. Her own chess caught his color, her eyes sprang up ablaze with wrath; then, as he spoke again, fell under the fiery storm settled into cold disdain. "Truly a pretty story," she said, icily, "that I carry about correspondence in my embroidered satin and silk garters-boots! Whose brain had the honor of conceiving so stupendous a fancy?" and she laughed a little low laugh of derision that curdled his blood to hear.

"And you are set upon the search? My Cinderella shoes are of great trouble to you, Adjutant Ames."

She flung a rapid glance at the Bronze looming up dark and Sphinx-like at her side. His glance followed hers, but he shuddered more at the satirical recurrence to his own words than at the dark and meaning look in her eyes. That he failed to interpret. For a moment space or two they stood there, motionless and silent. Then he stepped forward. He told her as he had told her when he first spoke, that it was his duty, were fate or duty; that he had no doubt of her; that he would stake his own loyalty upon the utter absurdity of this suspicion; and as he spoke again his hand touched the Bronze. The ugly features of the thing seemed to mock him with its sardonic grin. An awful fate seemed to have fallen in the

ARCHBISHOP HUGHES.

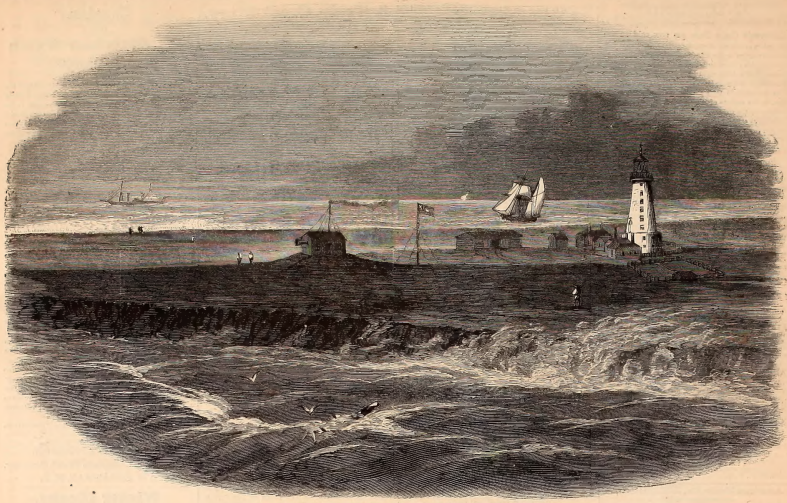
THE Catholic Archbishop of New York, the Rev. JOHN HUGHES, died on Sunday evening, January 3, aged about 67 years. Few men of his day exercised so wide an influence, social, moral, and political, and few men have exercised it, upon the whole, so honestly and wisely. He was born in Ireland in 1798, the son of a respectable farmer. He came to America in 1817, and soon after became a student at the Catholic College at Emmetsburg, Maryland. In 1825 he received ordination, and was appointed to the charge of a church in Philadelphia, and became recognized as a man of mark in his Church. In 1838 he was appointed coadjutor to the venerable Bishop Dubois of New York, who was fast sinking under age and infirmity. A fortnight had hardly passed before Bishop Dubois was struck down by paralysis, and the oversight of the Diocese fell upon Mr. Hughes, who four years later, upon the death of his superior, became Bishop of New York. In this position he had full scope for the exercise of his great administrative powers. To the general public he was best known by the various controversies in which he was at several times engaged, prominent among which were those with Dr. John Breckenridge, that upon the Public School Question, that with his fellow-countryman, Dr. Nicholas Murray (Kirwan), and one with the Hon. Erastus Brooks. But his true work was in the organization of the affairs of his diocese, and the establishment of its educational and religious concerns upon a firm basis. It would require a volume to detail his labors. It is sufficient to say that he gradually gathered into his own strong hands the entire control of the Catholic schools and churches of his Diocese. The amount of church property nominally vested in him has been stated at fully five millions of dollars. He found his Diocese weak and disjointed; he left it strong and consolidated. His position gave him great political influence; this he rarely used except when he thought the interests of the Church were in question, and then always with telling effect. In 1830 the Diocese of New York was divided by the erection of the Sees of Albany and Buffalo, while that of New York was raised to the dignity of an Archbishopric. After the breaking out of the insurrection, Archbishop Hughes, at the desire of our Government, went to Europe on a mission to aid the Union cause; for his exertions in this mission he received the official thanks of the authorities of the City of New York. Within a few months his health began to give way, and his public appearances became more rare. His last notable effort was his speech to the Catholics of New York, at the time of the riots of last July. This speech was sharply and, we think, justly criticised. Its intent was good; but we thought at the time, and must think still, that it contained some highly objectionable features. We apprehend that the mental, as well as the physical, strength of the Archbishop was impaired when he made this speech, which we are confident was heard or read with regret by the best and wisest of his friends. Apart from this speech, conceived and delivered when the venerable prelate was not his old self, we think it would be difficult to point to a single important act in his long administration that was not wise and politic, and which, viewed from his own standpoint, was not right and honorable. He died as he had lived, a true man, and a sincere Christian. There will probably be a sharp contest, open or concealed, as to who shall succeed to the post left vacant by his death. It will be well for the Church and the country if the second Archbishop of New York be, all in all, a worthy successor of John Hughes.

THE LATE MOST REVEREND JOHN HUGHES, D.D., ARCHBISHOP OF NEW YORK.—[PHOTOGRAPHED BY BRADY.]

THE "RAPPAHANNOCK."

THERE are some curious circumstances connected with the screw steamer Rappahannock, alias the Sylph, of London, alias her Majesty's steam-sloop Victor. The English Admiralty, a short time ago, disposed of her Majesty's screw gunvessel Victor, and, on being sold, she was permitted to undergo some repairs under the superintendence of the dock-yard officials. It was stated that she was intended for the China trade, and she was ostensibly fitted with that view, while her name was changed to the "Sylph, of London." Several suspicious circumstances, however, occurred, and the dock-yard officials made a report to the Admiralty. The result was the receipt of an order at Sheerness directing her to be stopped. The order, however, arrived a few hours too late. Those in charge of the vessel evidently suspected the intentions of the Government, and had her taken out of the harbor. She immediately afterward hoisted the Confederate flag, and she now sails under the name of the Rappahannock. On leaving the Nore the Rappahannock sailed direct for Calais Harbor, in France, which she entered as a Confederate privateer. The Customs authorities at Calais, in answer to a question, have received instructions from Paris to allow the Rappahannock to leave whenever her captain pleases. It is said that the English Admiralty have also sold the war steamers Aquitaine, Cyclops, and Phœnix to "private purchasers."

THE REBEL SCREW STEAMER "RAPPAHANNOCK, LYING AT CALAIS, FRANCE.



DABOLL'S FOG-TRUMPET IN THE BRITISH CHANNEL.

DABOLL'S FOG-TRUMPET.

WE give on this page an engraving of Dungeness Light-house, in the British Channel, where the English Government has recently stationed the FOG-TRUMPET invented by Mr. C. L. Daboll, of New London, Connecticut, and which is destined to produce a complete revolution in fog-signals for light-house purposes. An experiment on the trumpet, in connection with a bell and steam-horn previously put there, was made by the Trinity House Committee of London, on board their steam-yacht, on the 17th of November last, commencing at noon. The trumpet, bell, and horn were each tried in succession for three minutes; then they were all sounded together for the same period of time, and afterward made continuous until 2 P.M., when the bell and horn ceased, and the fog-trumpet continued to give its signals at intervals of ten seconds, with five seconds' length of blast, until 3 P.M., when the trial ceased, and the yacht then steamed away for Dover.

There was a strong wind at the time of the trial, with frequent squalls of rain, and a heavy surf on the beach, but the result was so satisfactory to the Committee that the English Government purchased the apparatus of Mr. Daboll, and have made it a permanent signal at Dungeness Light-house. It is placed in the smaller building, as shown in the illustration.

The American public have been made familiar with this signal through repeated discussions relative to its being placed on Cape Race. Captain Judkins, of the Cunard mail-steamer Scotia, in a speech at Liverpool on the removal of Captain Stone for allowing his vessel to get on shore in a fog at Cape Race, gave strong testimony in its favor. He said that but for the action and hostility of the British Government to this signal it would have been placed at Cape Race before this time, and not only the disaster of the Africa, but many others would have been avoided.

OBSTRUCTIONS IN CHARLESTON HARBOR.

AN occasional correspondent from before Charleston sends us a sketch of a Floating Battery now ashore near the beach, and of several obstructions to the harbor washed ashore during the late storm. They will be found below. He says: "The battery was built to carry four heavy guns. It broke away in the recent gale, and brought with it a portion of the rebel obstructions. These consist of large pieces of timber, 15 or 20 feet long, to some of which were attached pieces of railroad iron joined together by links. The timbers were badly worm-eaten."

REBEL BATTERY AND OBSTRUCTIONS IN CHARLESTON HARBOR.—[FROM AN OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENT.]

ADVERTISEMENTS.

MORTON'S GOLD PENS are now sold at the same prices as before the commencement of the war; this is entirely owing to the Manufacturer's improvements in machinery, his present large Retail Business and Cash-in-Advance System; for, until he commenced advertising, his business was done on Credit and strictly with the Trade.

The Morton Gold Pens are the only ones sold at odd prices, as the makers of all other gold pens charge the Premium on the Gold, Cents for Pens, and one a thousand has failed to reach its destination in safety; showing that the Morton Gold Pen can be obtained by any one, in every part of the world, at the same price, postage and insurance free.

Reader, you can have an enduring, always ready, and reliable Gold Pen, exactly adapted to your hand and style of writing, which will give you writing vastly cheaper than Steel Pens; and at the present almost universal High-Pressure Price of everything, you can have a Morton Gold Pen almost in proportion to the large sum spent in and material used, than any other Gold Pen in the World. If you want one, see "The Pen is Mightier than the Sword," in next column.

"THE PEN IS MIGHTIER THAN THE SWORD."

THE GOLD PEN—THE BEST OF ALL PENS.
MORTON'S GOLD PENS.
THE BEST PENS IN THE WORLD.

On receipt of any of the following sums in Cash, the Subscriber will send by return mail, or otherwise, as directed, a Gold Pen or Pens—selecting the same according to description, viz.:

THE GOLD PENS WITHOUT CASES.

For 25 cents, the Magic Pen; for 38 cents, the Lucky Pen; for 50 cents, the Always-Ready Pen; for 75 cents, the Elegant Pen; and for $1, the Excelsior Pen.—These Pens are not numbered, but correspond in sizes to numbers 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 respectively.

THE SAME PENS IN SILVER-PLATED EXTENSION CASES, WITH PENCILS.

For 50 cents, the Magic Pen; for 75 cents, the Lucky Pen; for $1, the Always-Ready Pen; for $1 25, the Elegant Pen; and for $1 50, the Excelsior Pen.

The Second Grade has the same Solid Gold Pens, with Iridomin Points, the average wear of every one of which will far outlast a great deal of the Steel Pens; although they are unwarranted, and, therefore, not exchangeable.

MORTON'S WARRANTED PENS.

The name "A. Morton," "Number" and "Quality," are stamped on the following Pens, and the points are warranted for the periods hereinafter mentioned.

The Numbers indicate size only. No 1 being the smallest, No. 6 the largest, adapted for Ladies'. No. 4 the smallest, and No. 10 the largest Mammoth Gold Pen, for the desk.

Long and Medium Nibs of all sizes and qualities. Short Nibs of Numbers 4, 5, and 6, are made only of first quality.

The Long and Short Nibs are fine pointed; the Medium Nibs are Broad, Coarse Business points. The engravings are fac-similes of the sizes and styles.

GOLD PENS, WITHOUT CASES.

For 9? 25 a No. 1 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 2d quality.

For $1 60 a No. 2 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 2d quality, or a No. 4 Pen, 3d quality.

For $1 25, a No. 3 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 2d quality, or a No. 5 Pen, 3d quality.

For $1 50, a No. 4 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 2d quality, or a No. 6 Pen, 3d quality.

For $1 75, a No. 5 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 2d quality.

For $2 25, a No 6 Pen; $2 75 a No. 7 Pen; $3 25 a No. 8 Pen; $3 75 a No. 9 Pen; $5 No. 10 Pen—all 1st quality.

THE SAME GOLD PENS, IN SILVER EXTENSION CASES, WITH PENCILS.

For $1 50 a No. 1 Pen, 1st quality; or a No 3 Pen, 2d quality.

For $1 75, a No. 2 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 3d quality.

For $2 00, a No. 3 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 2d quality, or a No. 5 Pen, 3d quality.

For $2 50 a No. 4 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 3d quality.

For $3 00, a No. 5 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 2d quality.

For $3 50, a No. 6 Pen, 1st quality.

GOLD PENS, ALL FIRST QUALITY, IN SILVER-MOUNTED DESK HOLDERS.

For $2 00 a No. 4 Pen; for $2 25 a No. 5 Pen; for $2 75 a No. 6 Pen; for $3 25 a No. 7 Pen.

For $4 00 a No. 8 Pen; for $5 a No. 9 Pen; and for $6 a No. 10 Pen.

The "1st Quality" are pointed with the very best Iridomin Points, manufactured at Office of Gold Pens, and are sold with the slightest imperfection which skill and the closest scrutiny can detect.

The "2d Quality" are superior to any Pens made by him previous to the year 1861.

The "3d Quality" he intends shall equal in respect to Durability, Elasticity and Good Writing Qualities (the only true considerations) any Gold Pens made elsewhere.

In regard to the Cheap Gold Pens, he begs leave to say, that, previous to opening his New and Patented Machines, he could not have made as Good Writing and Reliable Pens, for the price, had the Gold been furnished gratuitously.

Parties ordering must in all instances specify, the "Name" or the "Number" and "Quality" of the Pens wanted, and be particular to describe the kind they prefer—whether stiff or limber, coarse or fine.

All remittances sent by mail at Subscriber's letters are at my risk; and to all who send twenty cents (the charge for registering), in addition to the price of goods ordered, I will guaranty their safe delivery.

All communications by mail or otherwise will be allowed the full premium on the day received.

FIVE DOLLARS—Amount of 10 per cent. will be allowed on sums of $12, of 15 per cent. on $24, and of 20 per cent. on $36. Not to one subscriber, but to one family.

Address, A. MORTON,
No. 25 Maiden Lane, New York.

J. W. EVERETT & CO.

Will forward to any address, on receipt of order, Photographs from life of any of the prominent

OFFICERS OF THE ARMY AND NAVY,
STATESMEN, DIVINES,
ACTORS, ACTRESSES,
FOREIGN CELEBRITIES, ETC., ETC.

20 cents each. Catalogue of 200 by mail.
Address
J. W. EVERETT & CO.
Box 1614. N. Y. City.
☞ Send for a Circular.

$75 A MONTH! I want to hire Agents in every County in the country. Business pays. Sell my new chop Family Sewing Machines. Address
S. MADISON, Alfred, Maine.

"THE HUMAN FACE DIVINE," a new system of Physiognomy, Eyes, Ears, Nose, Lips, Mouth, Head, Hair, Hands, Feet, Skin, Complexion, with all Signs of Character, and How to Read Them," in This PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL, and ILLUSTRATED for 1864. Now ready. $1 50 a year. Address FOWLER & WELLS, N.Y.

Operatic Pearls,

A New Selection of Songs, Duets, and Trios, comprising the Vocal Embellishments of the Most Popular Italian, French, and Italian Words, and Piano-forte Accompaniments, arranged to go with the popular song books—"Home Circle," "Shower of Pearls," and "Silver Chord," and sold at the same price, viz.: Boards, $1; Cloth, $1 25; Full gilt, $3. Sent post-paid. OLIVER DITSON & CO., Publishers, Boston.

Cavalry and Artillery.

Solid Silver. $1 25. Solid Silver, $1 25.

Solid 18 k. Gold, $5 00. Solid 18 k. Gold, $5 50.

Sent by mail on receipt of Price. Also all kinds Corps, Co., and Division Flags, engraved to order, by the single piece, at 1000, and 100 per cent. less than usual rates. Terms cash in advance. Send for a circular. Address
DROWNE & MOORE,
Manufacturing Jewellers, 303 Broadway, New York.

A Truly Great Story.

NOW READY IN

The New York Weekly,

A STORY OF STARTLING INTEREST, ENTITLED,

The Neglected Warning;

OR, THE

Trials of a PUBLIC SCHOOL TEACHER.

From the pen of the gifted

MARY KYLE DALLAS,

whose name has become a household word wherever the English language is spoken.

The story in question is made up of mingled fact and fiction, and the heroine is a young lady who from affluence is reduced to poverty by the death of a father, who is rendered bankrupt by the schemes and machinations of a villain. Thus impoverished, the friendless girl looks to teaching in a public school for the means of support, and the authoress, with that nervous power which marks all her literary productions, carries her through the trying ordeals which ever beset the young and friendless girl who tries to obtain a situation as teacher. Having been a teacher herself, Mrs. Dallas is thoroughly familiar with her subject. She knows it in all its details, from the commencement to the finish, and she is posted, also, with regard to the characters of most of those who occupy prominent positions in relation to the management of the public school system. Where merit is due she freely accords it; but where censure is warranted, she applies it with an unsparing hand, and in a manner calculated to make the recipients of it wince.

Altogether, we doubt if a more exciting—and at the same time a more useful—story with the moral which it conveys—was ever offered to the public, and we shall be much mistaken if its publication does not lead to widespread commendation. The first instalment appears in Monday's issue of the New York Weekly, a large number of fine POEMS, and a variety of departments, of a useful and entertaining character, including "PLEASANT PARAGRAPHS," "NOTES AND COMMENTS," "KNOWLEDGE BOX," "ITEMS OF INTEREST," etc., etc., etc., the whole going to form a family newspaper which, as is freely admitted by all who take it, has not its equal either in this country or the old. Price, five cents for a single copy, $2 00 per year, and liberal terms offered to getters-up of clubs.

STREET & SMITH,
Editors and Proprietors,
No. 11 Frankfort Street, New York City.
☞ Specimen Copies sent free.

The Prettiest Present for a Lady is Gold Consumption Hunting Case Watch, Jeweled in 13 actions, beautifully engraved Hunting Case, by Rockell of Liverpool, $25. For a Gentlemen, THE OFFICER'S WATCH, Detached Lever Movement, with 15 Jewels, in Sterling Silver Hunting Case, with Second Hand, Seconds, just invented for the Army, the handsomest and most useful Watch ever offered, $20. Fine Gold Compensation Watches are also made medium size for Genls' Watches and for Presentation purposes. Descriptions of which can be seen by sending for descriptive Catalogue. Agents wanted in every Regiment and every County in the United States. ARNANDALE & CO., Importers of Watches, 212 Broadway, N. Y.

Elegant Christmas Presents for a Lady. Gold Composite Hunting Watch, Jeweled, excellent Timekeeper, $15. For a gentleman the Magic Railway Watch, with Time Patent Detached Lever, showing Time without opening Case, $15. Watches sent for inspection before purchase. Chains in great variety, newest styles, Ladies, $2 upwards; Gents, $3 upwards. Send for Circular. ARNANDALE & CO., Importers of Watches, 212 Broadway, N.Y.

MACMILLAN'S SKATE DEPOT.

No. 702 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

MACMILLAN'S CELEBRATED NOVELTY LADIES' SKATE, price $5. Sizes, 3, 8½, 9, 9½ and 10 inches. The Trade supplied.

25 made from 50 cents.
Send 50 cents for a sample to
F. COLLINS & CO.,
Cornwall Bridge, Conn.

$8 WATCH $11 AND CHAIN.

A Beautiful Engraved Gold-Plated Watch and Chain, fine Swiss movement, handsome dial and hands, warranted a perfect time-keeper, for $ Dollars. Engraved Silver, same as above, chain included, $ Dollars. A very heavy Hunting Cased Solid Silver Watch, full jeweled, and fine English movement, silver capped, warranted a perfect time-keeper, and a handsome Gold Plated Chain included, for 11 Dollars.

We will send, on receipt of the money, one of our Watches and a Chain, by mail, postage paid, to any address. These Watches are specially adapted to the Army, being heavily cased and perfect time-keepers, and in running order.

GEORGE A. ELY & CO.,
No. 208 Broadway, New York.

Caution
FROM
The American Watch Company.

In having come to our knowledge that imitations of the American Watch have been put upon the market in great numbers, calculated, by their utter worthlessness, to injure the reputation of our genuine products—to protect our own interests and the public from imposition, we again publish the trade marks by which our Watches may invariably be known.

The First Grade has the name
AMERICAN WATCH CO. engraved on the inside plate.
The Second Grade has the name
APPLETON, TRACY & CO." painted on the inside plate.

The Third Grade has the name
P. S. BARTLETT engraved on the inside plate.
All the above grades have also
AMERICAN WATCH CO. painted on the dial, and are warranted in every respect.
The Fourth Grade has
WM. ELLERY engraved on the inside plate, and has not the name "American Watch Co." painted on the dial.

All of these grades of Watches are made of various sizes, and are sold in gold or silver cases, as may be required.

It is hardly possible for us to accurately describe the numerous imitations to which we have alluded. They are usually inscribed with names so nearly approaching our own as to escape the observation of the unexamined buyer. Some are represented as made by the "UNION WATCH Co., of Boston, Mass."—no such company existing. Some are named the "Soldier's Watch," to be sold at our FORTY OR FIFTY DOLLAR grade, usually known as the "SOLDIER'S WATCH." Some are named the "AMERICAN WATCH Co.," others the "P. S. BARTLEY," instead of our P. S. BARTLETT, besides many varieties named in such a manner as to convey the idea that they are the veritable productions of the American Watch Company.

A little attention on the part of buyers will protect them from gross imposition.

ROBBINS & APPLETON,
Agents for the American Watch Company,
182 BROADWAY, N. Y.

Winter Cloaks.

BRODIE'S
Great Clearing Sale.
The Entire Winter Stock
Will be Sold without regard to Cost,
Before making Extensive Alterations for the Spring Trade.
BRODIE,
The Leader of Fashions!
300 Canal Street, New York.

SALISBURY, BRO. & CO.,
AGENTS FOR THE UNITED STATES FOR THE CELEBRATED
ALBERTINE
Extension Holders and Gold Pens,

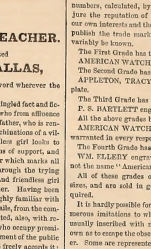
Of the most handsome and durable construction, put up in new fancy cases of elegant design, and not sold in any less quantities. They will retail for $3 each.

Price, per gross $25 00
Or 3 dozen for 25 00

Sent by mail or express. Address
SALISBURY, BRO. & CO., Providence, R. I.

$60 A MONTH! We want Agents at $60 a month, expenses paid, to sell our Revelation Clothes Wringer, Oriental Burners, and 13 other articles. 15 circulars sent free. SHAW & CLARK, Biddeford, Maine.

COMPETITION DEFIED!



AND ELEGANT TWO DOLLAR CHAIN

We offer to sell our WATCH, which is of the MOST SUBSTANTIAL MANUFACTURE, AN ACCURATE TIMEKEEPER, and in sterling Silver, Hunting pattern, at the low price of TEN DOLLARS.

We therefore recommend all wanting either an ELEGANT, GOLD or SILVER WATCH, Patent Lever Case, to refill us $10, when they will receive a handsome WATCH, warranted by ourselves, sent, sealed and post-paid, at our expense.

OUR CHAIN is the admiration of all those who have seen it. In beauty and cheapness it cannot be surpassed. ONLY TWO DOLLARS.

☞ Recollect, the OLD ESTABLISHED AND RELIABLE AGENCY, where all orders are executed with the utmost promptitude, carefulness and accuracy, and forwarded to their destination in the most compact, reliable and expeditious manner.

Address THOMAS ORMSBY,
General Purchasing Agent, 86 Nassau St., N.Y.

Salesmen Wanted.

$75 a month, or commission allowed. Apply to HALE & CO., Newburyport, Mass.

WANTED! WANTED!!

Do you want Splendid Whiskers or Moustaches?

HUNTER'S ONGUENT will force them to grow heavily in six weeks (upon the smoothest face) without stain or injury to the skin. Sent on Gold Heads, in two sizes. Two Onguents for $1. Postage free. Address
CHARLES BRIGGS, Milwaukie, Wis.

Union Playing Cards.

Colored for King, Goddess of Liberty for Queen, and Major for Jack. Fine enamelled cards to the pack. Spades, Hearts, Clubs, and Flags are the suits, and you can play all the usual games. Two packs, in cases, mailed free on receipt of price. The neat document to the trade. Send for a Circular. Address AMERICAN CARD COMPANY,
455 Broadway, N. Y., or 105 William Street, N. Y.

Just what every Family wants. Savage & Co.'s New Chamber Furniture Hand Lamps and Lanterns, burning Kerosene Oil with a brilliant light without chimney, smoke, or odor. Prices, $1 to $7 per card. Office 203 Pulton St., N. Y. Agents wanted. Send for circular. Sample sent free for 50 cts. American Institute awarded 1st Premium and Medal, 1863.

DO YOU WANT LUXURIANT WHISKERS OR MUSTACHES?—My Ongouent will force them to grow heavily in six weeks upon the smoothest face without stain or injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post free, to any address, on receipt of order. R. G. GRAHAM, No. 109 Nassau Street, N. Y.

Holiday Presents.

J. H. Winslow & Co.,

100,000

WATCHES, CHAINS, &c., &c.

Worth $500,000.

To be sold for One Dollar each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for till you know what you are to get.

SPLENDID LIST!!

OF ARTICLES TO BE SOLD FOR ONE DOLLAR EACH.

100 Gold Hunting Case Watches	$100 each.
100 Gold Watches	60 00 each.
100 Ladies' Gold Watches	25 00 each.
100 Ladies' and Gent's Silver Watches	15 00 each.
2000 Vest and Guard Chains	8 00 to 10 00 each.
2000 Gold Band Bracelets	5 00 to 10 00 each.
2000 "	3 00 to 5 00 each.
3000 Cameo Brooches	4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Mosaic and Jet Brooches	4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Lava and Florentine Brooches	4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Opal, and Etc. Brooches	4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Cameo Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Mosaic and Jet Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Lava and Florentine Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Coral, Em., and Opal Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00 each.
3100 Gent's Breast Pins	2 50 to 8 00 each.
3000 Watch Keys	2 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Fob and Ribbon Slides	2 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Sets of Bosom Studs	2 50 to 6 00 each.
3000 Sleeve Buttons	2 50 to 6 00 each.
3000 Finger Rings	2 50 to 6 00 each.
3000 Stone Set Rings	2 50 to 6 00 each.
1000 Lockets	5 00 to 10 00 each.
1000 Sets Ladies' Jewelry	5 00 to 10 00 each.
3000 Gold Pens, Silver Holders	4 00 to 7 00 each.
10000 Gold Pens, with Silver Extension	3 00.
Cases and Certificates	4 00 to 6 00 each.

All of the above List of Goods will be sold for one dollar each. Certificates of all the various articles, stating what each one is worth, will be put into envelopes, sealed up, and mixed; and when ordered, are taken out without regard to choice, and sent by mail, thus giving all a fair chance. On receipt of the Certificate, you will see what you can have, and then it is at your option to send the dollar and take the article or not.

In all transactions by mail, we shall charge for forwarding the Certificates, paying postage, and doing the business. Certificates sent, which must be inclosed when the Certificate is sent for. Five Certificates will be sent for $1; eleven for $2; thirty for $5; sixty-five for $10; and a hundred for $15.

AGENTS.—Those acting as Agents will be allowed ten cents on every Certificate ordered by them, provided their remittance amounts to one dollar. Agents will collect 25 cents for every Certificate, and remit 15 cents to us, either in cash or postage stamps. Great caution should be used by our correspondents in regard to giving their correct address, Town, County, and State. Address

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,

208 Broadway, New York.

HOSTETTER'S

CELEBRATED

STOMACH BITTERS

TO THE DEBILITATED AND THE DECREPID.—For general debility and exhaustion of the powers of nature, whether occasioned by sickness, fast living, constitutional decay, old age, or any other physical or mental cause, the only sure, speedy and indispensable is HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS. When the fire of life seems to be absolutely dying out in the system, and the mind, sympathizing with the body, is reduced almost to a state of imbecility, this mighty restorative seems, as it were, to lift the sufferer out of the Slough of Despond, and furnish and re-invigorate both the frame and the intellect. An old farmer, in the Valley of the Monongahela, writes thus to Dr. Hostetter: "I can compare the operation of your Bitters upon me to nothing but the effect of a rain after a long dry spell in the fall of the year. The rain falling on the meadows starts the second crop of grass, and your wholesome medicine seems to have started a second crop of life and spirits in me." And this is truly the effect of this grateful and powerful preparation. Ladies of weak constitution, or whose strength has been impaired by sickness or age, find it a most efficacious and delightful tonic, and it is admirably suited with great success in nurseries or wards of the sick, to young children. In fact, it is a much safer and surer cordial for the nursery than any thing advertised specially for that purpose.

Sold by all Druggists and Family Grocers.

Hostetter's Stomach Bitters,

PREPARED AND SOLD BY

HOSTETTER & SMITH, PITTSBURGH, PA.

DEPOT FOR NEW YORK, 478 BROADWAY.

Printing-Press for Sale.

One Taylor Double Cylinder, five Rollers, Table Distribution, Rod 38x51. Price $2000.

Apply to ADLEY & BROTHERS, 229 Pearl St., N.Y.

ALL ARTICLES FOR SOLDIERS

At Baldwin, Warrington, and all places occupied by Union troops, should be sent by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 14 Broadway. Sutlers charged low rates.

WATCHES!

$15. WATCHES. $15.

Genuine American Lever Watches, in 3 ounce coin silver heavy Hunting Case, warranted, for $15.

Genuine full Jewel American Lever Watch, in 5 ounce coin silver heavy Hunting Case, gold joints, warranted, for $25.

Any of the above Watches will be sent on receipt of price. All Orders from the Army must be pre-paid, as the Express Company will not take bills for collection on Sunday. All Orders from the Army will be promptly attended to.

C. L. BRIGGS, Importer, 237 Main Street, Dyer Block, Milwaukee, Wis.

$20! Circular sent free.

The Great Secret.

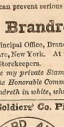
It is admitted by all physicians that the grand secret of health and long life lies in keeping the blood and various fluids of the body in a high degree of fluidity. When you feel continued pain in the head or bowels, or any continued uneasiness in any organ or other parts of the body, you can prevent serious sickness by taking

Brandreth's Pills.

Principal Office, Brandreth's Building and No. 4 Union Square, New York. At retail, by all Druggists and Country Storekeepers.

See my portrait Stamp upon each box, by permission of the Honorable Commissioner of Stamps. Observe B. Brandreth in white, which insures the genuine Pills.

Soldiers' Co. Pins and Corps Badges.



Annexed is a fac-simile design of our newest style Co. Pin, for Soldiers, made from the finest sterling coin in bold relief, and very appropriate for any Lady to wear on hand from A to M. Also for every Corps Badge used by the Army, enameled in Red, White, or Blue, to represent the different Divisions in each Corps.

Solid Silver,	Prices, handsomely engraved.
" Co. Pins	$1 00.
" in Gold Relief	1 50.
Corps Badges	2 00.
Cavalry Badges	3 00.

Terms, Cash in advance. Address

C. D. BALCH & CO., 229 Broadway, N. Y.

NOW READY. THE ILLUSTRATED PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL, for Beginnings, Fourteen of Gen. Rathbone's Indians, a Beautiful Phrenological Mountain, Sketches of Indians in a Scalping Dance, Wild Men, and Bears Chained. Rules learned by the Child. Mental Science, Moral Significance, Physiognomy, or Signs of Character, Love, Courtship and Marriage, Hereditary Descent. Phrenological Journal, 15 cents by first post. Address FOWLER & WELLS, 308 Broadway.

$200! $150! $100! $50!

PREMIUMS.

To Editors and Others!

I will pay the above-named amounts for the best four articles on either my Soap, Saleratus, or Concentrated Potash.

The article must state the writer's experience in using the goods, and must be not less than ten lines, and be published in the editorial columns of any good family newspaper.

Any party wishing to compete for the above, and desiring further information, may address the undersigned. Each person making and publishing one of the above, will mail a marked copy of the paper containing the notice to me, and also write me by mail, giving full address.

The Premiums will be awarded on the 20th day of July, 1864.

B. T. BABBITT,

64 to 74 Washington Street, New York.

What a Blessing to the Ladies.

For nearly half a century, amidst obstacles, toils, and disappointments, it has been my pleasure to devote my life to means of his extraordinary skill and industry in the investigation of chemistry and science, he will triumph his name to the latest posterity. It will stand on the tongues of distinguished ladies as soon as they have learned its qualities; it will be stamped on our American families, and be carried with them over every part of this mighty continent; it will be honored by three hundred millions of people—for that is the number which it is computed it will in future years contain. It will be carried to every stretching from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean, and from the Torrid to the Arctic regions. Happy the man who has contributed to the happiness and the temporal ease of our venerable ladies. There is no other way in which mortal man could more effectually secure immortality. Monuments of brass and marble are unimportant monuments seem as transient as the bubble of military reputation. No work of art can withstand the incessant wear of time, but the mighty and wonderful power of a polished marble, and which for more than two thousand years continued from the summit of the citadel of Athens, to cast its broad splendors across the plains below, and along the shores and hand-land of Greece, and remaining to ruins, after being despoiled of its most exquisite materials by savage war and heartless man. Even the Pyramids of Egypt, whose origin is hidden in the deepest recesses of antiquity, and which have always stood in awe-inspiring solitude and grandeur are now annoyed by the depredations of the sand which is steadily covering up its elements, and gradually sinking under the encroaching sands of the desert. Thus B. T. BABBITT'S New York City Soap and the quality which it embodies will also perish; but it will not be with the gorgeous palaces. It will go with the solemn temples and the great globe itself, and all the beautiful hides therein.

T. B.

500 more Agents Wanted.—Business never—yet $20 a day realized. Requires no capital. For particulars address, with stamp,

J. W. KEITHINS, Morristown, N. J.

Hoyt's Hiwatha Hair Restorative.—Superior to every other preparation for the hair or power to restore faded and gray hair to its original color and natural ease. It prevents the hair falling, and will overcome effect of previous use of preparations containing sulphur, impart a healthy growth, and to remove the impurities and humors of the scalp. Invaluable dressing for whiskers.

HOYT'S MINNEHAHA HAIR GLOSS,

unexcelled in keeping the hair in curl.

HOYT'S IMPERIAL COLORING CREAM,

oils and colors the hair at the same time; changes light and red hair to a beautiful brown or black.

HOYT'S EXCELSIOR TOILET POWDER,

imparted to the complexion, smoothness to the skin, and preserves youthfulness of appearance. Sold everywhere. JOSEPH HOYT & CO., 19 University Place.

"LOVE, COURTSHIP, AND MARRIAGE"—All born to love, and to be loved. Matches, Unhappy Marriages, The Remedy, Love—signs, in the face. Secret of Power to Please. Phrenological Keys to Love. To improve the Complexion—with numerous illustrations. Published—in the PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL. The first of a new vol. Only 15 cts. Or $1.50 a year. FOWLER & WELLS, N. Y.

WATCHES

FOR

THE ARMY.

Superbly finished watches, the beauty of which is only equaled by their cheapness.—N. Y. Weekly, July 23d.

Particularly valuable for officers in the army, and travelers.—Frank Leslie's, Feb. 21.

Brilliant, best and cheapest time-pieces ever offered. —N. Y. Illustrated News, Jan. 16.

Magic Time Observers,

The Perfection of Mechanism!

Being a Hunting, or Open Face, or Lady's or Gentleman's Watch combined, with Patent Self-winding Improvement.

A most pleasing novelty. One of the prettiest, most convenient, and decidedly the best and most unique watch for general and reliable use ever offered. It has within it and connected with its machinery its own winding attachment, rendering a key entirely unnecessary. The cases of this Watch are composed of two metals, the outer one being fine 16 carat gold. It has the imported ruby action lever movement, and is warranted an accurate timepiece. Price, superbly engraved, per case of half dozen, $204. Sample watches in neat morocco boxes, $35. If sent by mail, the postage is 25 cents; registering, 50 cents.

Silver Watches!

First-Class Hunting Time-Pieces.

FOR ACCURACY OF MOVEMENT, BEAUTY OF MATERIAL AND, ABOVE ALL, CHEAPNESS IN PRICE, THESE WATCHES ARE UNEQUALED.

UNIVERSAL APPROBATION!

An imitation so faultless that it can hardly be detected by the most experienced jewelers. The movements are of two metals, the outer one first quality Silver and the inner one German Silver, it can not be recognized by cutting or heavy engraving, making it not only in appearance, but in durability, the best imitations of Solid Sterling Silver in existence.

The Patent Lever action in the army is a source of enormous profit, retailing, as they very readily do, at $25 each upward. Any jeweler can make from $5 to $10 a single pay-day by any one of ordinary business tact!

AS WHOLESALE AGENTS for my handsome cases, beautifully engraved, white enamel dial, and fancy cut hands, in good running order, for half dozen, $66; gentes, $3 38; registering, 20 cts. Sold only by the case. Can be sold over by mail.

EF" TERMS CASH, INVARIABLY IN ADVANCE. No agents employed; buyers must deal directly with us. If not as represented, money refunded. Circular in a registered letter, if it is at our risk! Orders will meet the most prompt and faithful attention.

HUBBARD BROS, Sole Importers,

Broadway, cor. Courtlandt St., New York.

$50 for $20.

SOLDIERS IN THE ARMY.

For $20 we will forward by mail or express, pre-paid, the following list of Fine Gold-Plated Jewelry:—4 Vest Chains, 12 Gents' Pins, 3 Gold Pen and Extension Holders, 6 Vest Hooks, 4 Fancy Watch Keys, 12 Roses or Scarf Pins, 4 pair Sleeve Buttons, 3 Box and Glass Pins for Miniatures, 3 Double Glass Lockets, and 2 Cluster Scarf Pins. Address THOMAS CAFFERETY & CO., Providence, R. I.

A PRETTY PRESENT!—Send to your nearest, dearest, and most valued friend, the ILLUSTRATED PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL for 1864. It would be highly prized, and cost only 15 cents. FOWLER & WELLS, N. Y.

To Coin Collectors.—Administrator's Sale of Coins and Medals, American and Foreign, January 15, 1864, at 7½ o'clock P.M., at the Clinton Hall Sales Room, New York. Geo. A. Leavitt, Auctioneer. J. E. COOLEY, For Catalogues apply to the Auctioneer. Private Libraries' Catalogues, &c., &c.

Kind Friends are near Her; answer to "Who will Care for Mother now?" When the Boys come Home. On the Field of Battle, Mother. Each 25 c. Violin Strings 20 c., Sent Mail. Musical Instruments sent by Express to any part of country.

FREDERICK BLUME, 208 Bowery, N. Y.

Portable Printing Offices.

For the Army and Navy H. ALLEN & CO., Manufacturers, Druggists, and all who have to print Cards cheaply, and expeditiously, should send for Circulars, Sheets of Type, Cuts, &c., to the Union Type Foundry, 21 Park Row, N. Y., and 25 Lincoln St., Boston.

SOUND MAGNIFYING TUBES FOR DEAFNESS.

They can be concealed from view, and enable deaf persons to hear at public assemblies. Send for a descriptive pamphlet to E. HASLAM, cor. John & Nassau St., N. Y.

Elliot's New Repeaters

Are now ready. The most safe, compact, durable, effective, sure, and reliable Revolvers made. Carry large balls with great velocity. Are not liable to get out of order. Are decidedly carried in the vest—whole length five inches—four barrels—each rifled pistol forty. The Trade supplied. ELLIOT ARMS CO., 494 Broadway, N. Y.

VALENTINES

To the Trade.

Call or send to Head-Quarters. Catalogues sent free by mail. A full assortment always on hand. Also, a large variety of any other dealer can offer. Address

BENJ. W. HITCHCOCK, 495 Broadway, N. Y.

(Store and Manufactory.)

THE "RIDGEWOOD" PATENT

SMOKING CASE.

A Beautiful Holiday Gift.

Most ingenious in its combination of the Metallic Case, containing Pipe and Stem, Matches and Pipe Cleaner, with a handsome Tobacco Pouch attached, filling the Pipe by a valve, without use of the fingers or waste of Tobacco, the whole securing freedom from all odor, and portable as a Cigar Case. It is made for services, at wholesale, at $1 50, $2 00, $2 25, $2 50, and $3 00 to $3 75 and $5 00; the two latter richly plated and engraved. Nothing can excel its Comfort, Utility, and Economy for all Smokers, as Host or Among, in the Army and Navy. As a Present to Friends, as a Gift from the Ladies, nothing could be more acceptable. FOR THE SOLDIER OF ALL RANKS, in Camps or on the March, it is invaluable. Every Soldier, who commands the respect of his own Army, daily attest this fact. SKATERS add appreciate this Case.

"Also, The Ridgewood Smoking Tobacco,

Of superior quality and flavor, in packages to fill the pouch (about a week's smoking, $2 75 per doz.), and larger sizes for the General Trade. SMOKERS, DEALERS, and Sutlers invited to call and examine these Goods. Circulars sent on order. A liberal Discount to Dealers. Single Cases sent by mail, post, on receipt of price and 25 cents. Also half-pound Package of this fine Tobacco, full weight, sent carefully put up by mail, post, on receipt of $1 25. All Orders receive prompt attention.

RIDGEWOOD MANUFACTURING CO.,

Office 429 Broadway, cor. Howard Street, N. Y.

ANY WIDOW, or Parent, or Orphan, or Brother, or Sister of any Soldier, Sailor, Marine, killed, or who has died in the service of the United States, since the beginning of October, 1861, is entitled to a Gold One to Four Hundred Dollars ($100 to $400 Cash Bounty and all the arrears if pay due him, and all at law. Write to or call on H. DEVITT & CO., No. 421 Walnut St., Philadelphia. Also state pay, if there is any due.

RHEUMATISM.

USE THE ELECTRO-METALLIC INSOLES. BELTS, and ARMLETS. They are the only sure remedy for Rheumatism, Cold Feet, &c. METEAR & CO., No. 479 Broadway, N. Y. Insoles, 50 per pair; Belts, $2; Armlets, $1. Sent by mail for 20 cents additional.

H. A. HARVEY, 64 Maiden Lane, N.Y., TWINES. Hemp, Flax, Cotton, Jute, and Wire, for Printers, Bookbinders, CARPET WARP, Fish Lines, Blocking Cord, Lawn Cord and Sundries. Also, Twisting and Wrapping PAPER.

A Splendid Mother's or Bridal Present.

HARPER'S

Illuminated and Pictorial

BIBLE.

Including the Apocrypha. Superbly embellished by over Sixteen Hundred Illustrations, exquisitely engraved by Adams after designs by Chapman, exhibiting scenes of a Series of Rich Illuminations in Colors, comprising Frontispieces, Presentation Plate, Family Record, Title-pages, &c., &c., and forming a sumptuous Folio Volume.

Prices:—Morocco, gilt edges, bevelled and paneled sides, $26 00; Morocco extra, gilt edges, $32 50; Full Calf, marbled edges, bevelled, $35 00; Full Calf, Roan, marbled edges, $36 00.

Harper's Pictorial Bible is printed from the standard copy of the American Bible Society, and contains Marginal References, the Apocrypha, a Concordance, Chronological Table, List of Proper Names, Several Index Tables of Weights, Measures, &c. The large Frontispiece, Titles to the Old and New Testaments, Family Record, Presentation Plate, Historical Illustrations, and Initial Letters in the text are beautifully executed. The numerous original designs, made expressly for this edition, by J. G. Chapman, John Gast, Harvey, Weir, Huntington, &c., &c., are chaste and appropriate.

HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers, New York.

For sale by A. WILLIAMS & CO., Boston; SMITH, ENGLISH & CO., Philadelphia; DERBY & MILLER, Buffalo; HENRY T. CHILD, Washington; ROBERT CLARKE & CO., Cincinnati; KERR & WOOD, Chicago; J. C. DETMAS & CO., Chicago; DAWSON & BROTHERS, Montreal.

HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK,

Have Just Published,

VERY HARD CASH.

A Novel.

BY

CHARLES READE,

AUTHOR OF

"LOVE ME LITTLE, LOVE ME LONG," "NEVER TOO LATE TO MEND," &c., &c.

WITH ILLUSTRATIONS.

8vo, Paper, 75 Cents.

HARPER'S

NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE

TERMS.

One Copy for one Year $3 00

Two Copies for One Year 5 00

An Extra Copy, gratis, for every Club of TEN SUBSCRIBERS, at $2 50 each; or 11 Copies for $25 00.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE and HARPER'S WEEKLY, together, one year, $5 00.

HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers.

Circulation over 100,000.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

Single Copies Six Cents.

TERMS.

One Copy for One Year $3 00

One Copy for Two Years 5 00

And an Extra Copy will be allowed for every CLUB OF TEN SUBSCRIBERS, at $2 50 each, or 11 Copies for $25.

Terms to Clubs for Local Agents. Specimen Copies sent free for inside, and One Dollar per line for outside Advertisements.

HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers.

NEW YEAR'S GIFT TO LITTLE J. B.

UNCLE SAM (to Young John Bull). "There, JACKY—there's one of Isabell's New Fog-Whistles for you. You're always in a Fog about our affairs, you know. Now go and blow it upon Cape Race, and say it was UNCLE SAM sent you."

FISK & HATCH.

Bankers and Dealers in Government Securities,

AND

AGENTS FOR THE UNITED STATES

FIVE-TWENTY LOAN,

No. 38 Wall Street, New York.

Great Chance To Make Money!!!

We want Agents everywhere to sell the most splendid STEEL ENGRAVINGS ever published. Will furnish them so that a stock of $10 will yield $50; also STATIONERY PRIZE PACKETS, with which we give as Premiums Gold and Silver Watches. Full particulars in Circular mailed free. Address

G. S. HASKINS & CO., 36 Beekman Street, N. Y.

CLOTHING For the Holidays.

Prices Reduced.

Overcoats,

Fancy and Dress Suits,

Robes de Chambre,

Smoking Jackets,

AND

Furnishing Goods

FOR

Gentlemen.

Metropolitan Leonard

AND

Garibaldi Suits

FOR Children.

Devlin & Co.,

Broadway, cor. Grand St.

Broadway, cor. Warren St.

BILLIARD BALLS.

Patent compressed Ivory Billiard Balls, 2¼ and 2⅜ in., 8½ per set. 2 in. Bagatelle, $6 per set. 1¾ in. Bagatelle, $5 per set. 15 Ball Pool, $30 set. WM. M. WELLING, 507 Centre St., New York, sign of the Golden Elephant.

FOR

Holiday Presents,

SEE

J. H. Winslow & Co.'s

Advertisement on page 47.

Learn to Skate in One Hour by using The American Parlor Or Floor Skate, Hard Rubber Rollers, Anti-friction Axles. Frederick Stevens, 215 Pearl Street, New York 68 Kilby Street, Boston.

Dyspepsia Tablets,

For Indigestion, Heartburn, &c., manufactured only by S. G. WELLING, and sold by druggists generally. 50 cents per box. Depot No. 507 Centre St., New York. Sample free. Sent free by mail for 63 cents.

A Bad Breath—The Greatest Curse the human family is heir to. How many lovers it has separated—how many friends forever parted. The subject is so delicate, your nearest friend will not mention it, and you are ignorant of the fact. To effect a radical cure, use the "BALM OF THOUSAND FLOWERS." It is magical effects, night and morning. It also beautifies the complexion, removing all tan, pimples, and freckles, leaving the skin soft and white. Price 50 cents. For sale by all druggists.

The Trade supplied by HOWARD, SAWGER & CO., 208 and 207 Chambers Street, N. Y., and for sale by all Druggists.

VERMILYE & CO.,

Bankers, No. 44 Wall Street,

WILL CONTINUE TO FURNISH

U. S. FIVE-TWENTY BONDS

As long as issued by Government at Par and Interest.

To BANKS and BANKERS the usual commission allowed.

We also buy and sell at market rates,

U. S. One Year CERTIFICATES OF INDEBTEDNESS.

U. S. COUPON BONDS OF 1881.

U. S. 7-30 TREASURY NOTES.

U. S. QUARTERMASTER CHEQUES.

Maturing Certificates of Indebtedness collected on favorable terms.

VERMILYE & CO.,

BANKERS, No. 44 Wall Street, N. Y.

PREPARE FOR THE HOLIDAYS.

There is no Gift, or Present, which compares with the Curiosity Microscope and Mounted Objects. As a source of amusement and instruction they are unsurpassed. This Microscope will be mailed, postage paid, for $2 $5; or with 6 beautiful mounted objects, for $8; or with 24 objects, for $5.

Address HENRY CRAIG,

315 Broadway, New York.

A liberal discount to the trade.

NATIONAL BATTLE PIN.

McClellan, Grant, Rosecrans, Banks, Meade, Gillmore, Burnside, Hooker, Foster, and Sigel. All are the same pattern as the cut, only differing in the battle-grounds and date. Perfect photograph likeness in each pin. Plated back and front in fine gold. By enclosing $1, a sample will be sent by mail. Agents wanted in and out the army. The undersigned has the exclusive right of manufacture, and the inventor of this beautiful keepsake and record of battles, and is

LOUIS PHILIP, 609 Broadway, N. Y.

Lands. To all Wanting Farms.

LANDS.—TO ALL WANTING FARMS.—Large and thriving settlements, mild and healthful climate, 20 miles south of Philadelphia by railroad. Rich soil, produces large crops, which can be sent to New-York every day, fifty acre tracts, at from $15 to $20 per acre, payable within four years. Good business opening for MANUFACTURERS and others, churches, schools, and good society. It is now the improving place East of West. Hundreds are settling and building. The beauty with which the place is laid out is unsurpassed. Letters answered. Papers containing reports and giving full information will be sent free. Address CHAS. K. LANDIS, Vineland Post Office, Cumberland County, New Jersey.

From Report of Solon Robinson, Agricultural Editor of the Tribune:—It is one of the most extensive fertile tracts, in an almost level, healthful and variable condition for pleasant farming that we know of this side of the Western prairies.

A Household Word.—Buy your Housekeeping Articles at BASSFORD'S, Cooper Institute, New York.

Fogg's Double-Action Patent Lever SKATE BUCKLE,

Manufactured and for sale on Straps, at wholesale, by F. FOGG, Empire Factory of Clasps, Hooks and Eyelet Goods, 218 Pearl St., New York, 63 Kilby St., Boston.

FINE WATCH FREE,

And $15 Per Day Easy.

Agents should be careful in directing their orders for our Original and "only Genuine" Avers Large Size Stationery Prize Packages, which have become so popular through the fine quality and value of their contents. As we have several imitators, who copy our Styles, Advertisements, Premiums, &c., for the purpose of deceiving Agents, we are the only manufacturers of the "Celebrated Universal Prize Package," and none are genuine unless bought direct from us. Those parties who advertise to give a "Premium Watch" to agents will not do so unless the agent first pays them from $40 to $50 in cash. This "is a challenge any of them to deny." We will present a case of 100 of our Finest Packages to any agent who obtains a watch from them without first paying the above-named amount. Their attempt to present premiums, after our long-established custom, is in this case but a poor dodge. We still do as we have done for years past, present free to every one who acts as our agent a Fine Gold or Silver Hunting-Case Watch, "Genuine English Movements," and warranted a correct time-keeper. These watches are presented on the spot or sent with the first order. No one else does this. Our Wonderful Packages contain more really valuable articles than any half dozen others ever sold. Among the surprising contents of each package will be found Fine Stationery, Pens, Pencils, Envelopes, Ladies' Fashion Plates, Designs for Needle-work, Cottage Keepsakes, Household Companions, Letter-Writer's Instructor, Parlor Amusements, Grant's Pocket Calendar for 1864, Union Emblems, Camp Companions for Soldiers, Military Likenesses, Games, Army Advice, Rare Receipts, Many Ways to get Rich, Yankee Notions, Fancy Articles, Rich and Costly Presents of Fashionable Jewelry, &c. &c., all together worth many dollars, for only 25c. Agents make immense profits. 100 to 300 per cent allowed. We guarantee smart agents can make $15 per day. Our regular agents average that. Our Packages stand same as ever, above all others for quality and quantity of contents. Agents wanted in every camp and town in the country. Goods sent safe to all parts of the army. Send for our Great New Circular for 1864, containing Extra Premium inducements, free. S. C. HICKARDS & CO., 102 Nassau St., N. Y. Only Original and Largest and Oldest Prize Package House in the World.

Presentation Swords.

MILITARY and MASONIC Goods of every description, by EMANUEL & SILVER, 447 Broome St., 2d door West of Broadway, New York. Factory, Trenton, New Jersey.

The Swords for PRESENTATION constantly on hand. 125 Swords now on hand and finished at our Factory daily. All work warranted to give SATISFACTION.

THE MICROSCOPE.

Magnifying small objects 500 times. MARKED FREE eyeglowers for 50 CENTS. Five of different powers for $1 00. Address H. CO., Box 220, Boston, Mass.

How to make "Greenbacks" easy. By selling TAYLOR'S PATENTS. Only ONE AGENT for each County needed. Address with stamp A. L. TAYLOR, New Britain, Conn.

Having had frequent occasions to use PERRY DAVIS' PAIN KILLER we cause its success, and owing it used by others, I can say that I regard it as the best preparation extant, when tried in time, or in the first stages of that very prevalent complaint. I recommend all persons who have, or use Liquors, to have it constantly on hand for cases of emergency.

For the human family, both as an internal and external remedy, the Pain Killer is so favorably known that it is almost useless to say anything in relation to it.

Very truly yours, S. STEWART, Druggist,

Hennon, Ohio.

The Soldier's Gift To the Loved One at Home.

We will deliver, free of freight charge, at any Express Office East of St. Joseph, Mo., any of our beautiful Albums of the value of $5 or more, that may be ordered by members of the Army or Navy of the United State as Presents to friends at home. We manufacture elegant styles of all prices to $25, and higher.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY,

Manufacturers and Importers,

501 Broadway, N. Y.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

AGENTS, male or female, SOLDIERS, and all having some time to spare, are particularly requested, as a favor, to send us their address, and we will send in return, FREE, information for which they will be THANKFUL. We offer EXTRA INDUCEMENTS. From $5 to $15 per day AMONG EXPERIENCED AGENTS. We want Agents from every COUNTY in the U. S., and from EVERY REGIMENT in the Army. Address in full, RICHARDS & CO., 37 and 39 Nassau Street, Box 2151, N. Y.

Remington's

ARMY AND NAVY REVOLVER.

Approved by the Government.

Warranted superior to any other Pistol of the kind. Also Pocket and Belt Revolvers. Sold by the Trade generally.

E. REMINGTON & SONS,

Ilion N. Y.

(A CARD.)

TO PHYSICIANS AND INVALIDS.

The Rev. CHARLES E. KNOX, formerly Secretary to the London Evangelical Alliance, and recently consecrated, as resident Minister and Physician, with the Venezuelean Mission, will send FREE of Cost and the Prescription with which he successfully treated, while in charge of the large Mission Hospital, upward of one hundred cases of CONSUMPTION in the first, second and third stages.

The remedy is equally adapted to the treatment of Asthma, Catarrh Bronchitis, and all affections of the Lungs, Throat and Air-Passages; while it specially invigorates the enfeebled NERVOUS SYSTEM, and energizes the deranged functions of the Stomach, Liver and Blood.

Address, with stamp,

Rev. CHARLES E KING,

Station D, Bible House,

New York.

P. S.—I wish publicly to acknowledge the generosity of these publishers who, from a sense of humanity, have given this advertisement gratuitous insertion. Religious papers are rarely found so generous.

Friends. Send a stamp for my Circulars. Address L. M. HARRIS, Boston, Mass.

$35 WATCHES. $35

Genuine Full-Jeweled American Lever Watches, in 4 Ounce Coin Silver Hunting Cases, Gold Joints, for $35.

Also every variety of good Watches at equally low rates. All orders from the Army must be pre-paid, as the Express Companies will not take bills for collection on soldiers.

J. L. FERGUSON, Importer of Watches.

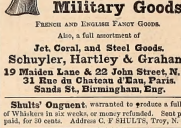
208 Broadway New York.

$7. WATCHES. $7.

A Beautiful Engraved Gold-Plated Watch, Lever Cap, small size, English Movements, perfect time-keeper. Sent free by mail, in neat case, for only $7. A Solid Silver, same as above, $7. Specially adapted to the ARMY. CHAS. P. NORTON & CO., 39 & 40 Ann Street, N. Y.

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper, of Aug. 23, says: "Messrs. NORTON & CO. have combined two very desirable things in a watch—cheapness and reliability. When it is known that for $7 a person can have an excellent timekeeper, there will be greater punctuality in all the affairs of life."

The only enameled "Turn-over" Collar made in metals. Send $1 for a "Turnover" or $3 for a "Gentlemen's," to Box 5123, and receive it by return mail. American enameled Metallic Collar Co., 94 Pine St., N. Y.



GUNS, PISTOLS, Military Goods,

FRENCH AND ENGLISH FANCY GOODS.

Also, a full assortment of

Jet, Coral, and Steel Goods.

Schuyler, Hartley & Graham,

19 Maiden Lane & 22 John Street, N. Y,

31 Rue du Chateau d'Eau, Paris.

Sands St., Birmingham.

Shults' Ongnent warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in six weeks, or money refunded. Sent postpaid, for 30 cents. Address C. F SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

AGENTS WANTED—$3 positively made from 20 cts.; an ingenuity needed by every person. Call and examine, or 6 cts. for sample sent free by mail for 20 cts.; retails for $3, by R. L. WOLCOTT, 160 Nassau Street, N. Y.

IMPORTANT

The public are respectfully informed that I have just received, per Steamer "Celtic," a fresh shipment of the Jules Mumm & Co.'s

Verzenay Cabinet

AND

Dry Verzenay Champagne,

of a new vintage, surpassing in richness, fineness, and delicacy of quality any Wines of the same grade ever before sent to this home. A trial of the same will convince the most fastidious.

The following houses have a supply of this shipment on hand:

CHAS. BELLOWS.
W. S. CORWITH & CO.
H. D. FELTER.
MACY & CO.
W. H. JACKSON & CO.,
PERDY & SCHUYLER.
J. F. VAN ROSSUM.

JAMES MEYER, JR.,
43 Beaver Street.

Sole Agent in the U. S. for Jules Mumm & Co.'s Champagnes.

"GET THE BEST."

Webster's Unabridged Dictionary.

A BOOK OF PERMANENT VALUE FOR ANY LIBRARY.

GET the best.—Prov. Walker, of Harvard.]

GET the most complete Dictionary of the Language.—Hon. Horace Mann.]

THE best guide of students of our Language.—Hon. John G. Whittier.]

THE it will transmit his name to latest posterity.—Chancellor Kent.]

THE tymological part surpasses anything by earlier lexicographers.—George Bancroft.]

BE caring relation to Language the Principia does to Philosophy.—Hon. Daniel Webster.]

BE excels all others in defining scientific terms.—Professor Agassiz, of Harvard.]

BE s far as I know, best defining Dictionary.—Professor Benjamin Silliman.]

TH ake is altogether, the surpassing work.—Professor Edward Robinson, of Union Theological Seminary.]

THE best guide to correct spelling, pronunciation, and definition of words.—Professor Stowe, of Andover Theological Seminary.]

THE best authority in the use of words.—Professor Hadley, of Yale College.]

THE best English Dictionary for the scholar.—Professor Whitney, of Yale College.]

THE best practical Dictionary.—Professor Goodrich, of Yale College.]

THE best Dictionary for the family.—Professor Upham, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the counting-room.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the author.—Professor Fowler, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the editor.—Professor Young, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the teacher.—Professor Cleaveland, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the pupil.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the clergyman.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the lawyer.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the physician.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the mechanic.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the merchant.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the farmer.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the sailor.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the soldier.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the statesman.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the judge.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the jurist.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the legislator.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the governor.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the president.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the king.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the queen.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the prince.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the princess.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the duke.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the duchess.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the earl.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the countess.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the baron.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the baroness.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the knight.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the lady.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the gentleman.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the lady.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the child.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the infant.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the baby.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the nurse.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the doctor.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the patient.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the undertaker.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the corpse.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the coffin.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the grave.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the tombstone.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the epitaph.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the obituary.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the funeral.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the mourner.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the widow.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the widower.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the orphan.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the heir.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the heiress.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the executor.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the administrator.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the guardian.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the ward.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the trustee.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the beneficiary.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the benefactor.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the philanthropist.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the misanthrope.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the hermit.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the recluse.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the anchorite.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the monk.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the nun.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the abbess.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the abbot.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the prior.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the prioress.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the vicar.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the vicaress.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the curate.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the curatess.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the rector.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the rectoress.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the bishop.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the bishopess.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the archbishop.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the archbishopess.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the pope.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the papess.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the cardinal.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the cardinaless.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the archdeacon.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the archdeaconess.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the deacon.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the deaconess.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the elder.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the elderess.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the minister.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the ministress.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the preacher.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the preacheress.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the evangelist.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the evangelistess.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the apostle.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the apostless.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the saint.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the saintess.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the martyr.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the martyress.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the confessor.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the confessoress.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the virgin.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the virgin.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the angel.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the angeless.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the archangel.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the archangeless.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the seraph.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the seraphess.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the cherub.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the cherubess.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the throne.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the throness.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the dominion.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the dominioness.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the principality.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the principaless.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the power.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the poweress.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the virtue.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the virtuess.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the vice.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the vicess.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the sin.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the sinness.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the devil.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the deviless.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the demon.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the demoness.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the fiend.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the fiendess.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the hell.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the hellness.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the heaven.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the heavenness.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the God.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Goddess.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Jesus.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Jesuitess.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Christ.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Christess.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Holy Ghost.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Holy Ghostess.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Trinity.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Trinitess.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Unity.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Unitess.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Universe.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Universess.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the World.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Worldess.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Nature.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Natureless.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Science.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Scienceless.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Art.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Artless.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Literature.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Literatureless.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Philosophy.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Philosopheress.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Theology.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Theologyless.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Medicine.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Medicineless.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Law.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Lawless.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Justice.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Justiceless.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Mercy.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Mercyless.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Peace.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Peaceless.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the War.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Warless.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Liberty.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Libertyless.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Slavery.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Slaveless.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Freedom.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Freedomless.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Bondage.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Bondageless.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Union.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Unionless.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Disunion.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Disunioness.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Secession.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Secessioness.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Rebellion.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Rebellioness.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Traitor.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Traitress.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Treason.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Treasonless.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Loyalty.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Loyaltyless.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Disloyalty.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Disloyaltyless.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Patriotism.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Patriotless.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Treachery.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Treacheryless.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Faithfulness.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Faithfulless.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Unfaithfulness.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Unfaithfulless.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Honesty.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Honestyless.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Dishonesty.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Dishonestyless.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Truth.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Truthless.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Falsehood.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Falsehoodless.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Lie.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Lieless.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Liar.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Liaress.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Perjury.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Perjuryless.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Perjurer.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Perjuress.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Forgery.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Forgeryless.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Forger.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Forgeress.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Counterfeit.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Counterfeitless.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Counterfeiter.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Counterfeitress.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Swindle.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Swindleless.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Swindler.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Swindleress.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Robbery.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Robberyless.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Robber.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Robberess.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Murder.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Murderless.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Murderer.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Murderess.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Suicide.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Suicideless.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Suicider.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Suicideress.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Manslaughter.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Manslaughterless.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Manslaughterer.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Manslaughteress.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Homicide.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Homicideless.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Homicider.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Homicideress.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Infanticide.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Infanticideless.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Infanticider.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Infanticideress.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Matricide.—Professor Packard, of Bowdoin College.]

THE best Dictionary for the Matricideless.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION.

VOL. VIII.—No. 369.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, JANUARY 23, 1864. [$1.00 FOR FOUR MONTHS. $3.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1864, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

SUFFERINGS IN A SNOW-STORM ON THE MICHIGAN CENTRAL.—[SEE PAGE 59.]

FOUND DEAD.

"Found dead, an unknown man." How trite the phrase!
And yet God knows what volumes may be said
Of bitter suffering or of crime's dark ways,
In that one short epitome—"Found dead!"

When haggard poverty from famine flies
To seek for labor, or to beg for bread,
And in the streets from cold and hunger dies,
Its only epitaph is this—"Found dead!"

Grim murder gripes his victim in the night—
A quick, fierce struggle, desperate and dread—
A quivering soul shrieks out in sudden flight,
Yet all is summed up in two words—"Found dead!"

The wretched suicide, whose broken heart
Its final hope and ritual had shed—
Priestless—considered love—dishonor's smart—
'Tis briefly told—"An unknown man found dead."

"Found dead!" What hopes are blighted—what, woes drowned—
What's lost or gained when human life has fled
Who knows or cares? The selfish world goes round:
'Tis but another "unknown man found dead."

O ye whose thoughtless case brooks not to scan
Death save with loving friends around your bed,
Seek out and bid your unknown fellow-man,
Lest ye to God be "unknown" when "found dead!"

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 23, 1864.

WILLIAM MAKEPEACE THACKERAY.

"Christmas is here!
Winds whistle shrill,
Icy and chill,
Little care we:
Little we fear
Weather without,
Sheltered about
The Mahogany Tree.

"Evenings we know
Happy as this,
Faces we miss
Pleasant to see.
Kind hearts and true,
Gentle and just,
Peace to your dust!
We sing round the tree."

WHILE those who knew and loved him with the most intimate knowledge of Thackeray's, the kind heart and true that first sang the song was lying stilled forever. He has taught us how to speak of him, not only in the simple, tender appreciation with which he spoke of the dead, but by the many works in which his shrewd insight, kind heart, mobile wit, and searching satire, held the mirror up to nature, and pleaded for humanity and truth. He was a man of heroic simplicity and candor, with the profoundest hate of all kinds of hypocrisy—a hate which became indignation from his consciousness that neither he nor any man could entirely escape the influence of the social atmosphere he was compelled to breathe. "I is in the air, gentlemen," he always seems to say; "we all have the disease more or less. I have no doubt that I should be very glad to be seen walking down Pall Mall with a duke on each arm." It was this impatience of falsity which the more that it was gilded was the more repulsive to him, because more dangerous, that made him often blunt, rough, stern in his manners, although he lived in the most courtly circles. He ranged through British clubs and drawing-rooms, a Berserkir in the mask of Mephistopheles, refusing to accept amiability for fidelity, or politeness for humanity. He was called a cynic by the snobs, and a snob by the cynics. He was in reality a preacher—moralist, preaching trenchant sermons from the most familiar texts; honoring love and truth, full of pity and charity and wisdom, loving the noblest men and women under all conditions, and not afraid to describe the weaknesses and faults of either.

As a pure novelist, or delineator of manners, he is not surpassed. He constantly reproduced certain types of character within the same range of society; but with such incisive skill and completeness of portraiture that they take a prominent place among the creations of human genius. He chose deliberately the profession of literature, worked steadily and faithfully in it, honored its illustrious chiefs, and won and wore its laurels. But to him it was a noble profession; and his task in it, at which he labored until the hand that held the pen fell forever, was to make men better by every kind of stern, sweet, witty, wise, sarcastic, or humorous representation of the life and character he saw around him. When Miss Bronte declined to him the second edition of "Jane Eyre," she did so in the strongest and most unqualified words of praise; but they express the final and mature verdict upon the character and power of his genius. Not the least of his charms as an author is the sweet, sinewy English of his style, which is nervous, transparent, picturesque, and exquisite.

The death of every great story-teller is like a personal loss to the world; but the American friends of Thackeray who personally knew him probably were not aware how much they loved him until they saw that he was dead. It seems as if there were less life in the world now he is gone. He enjoyed so fully; his great, blithe nature came ringing out in song and jest in genial festive hours so exuberantly, yet so tenderly still, that feasts will always be less festal hereafter to the guests who eat with him. His social sympathy, his love of children, his universal charity, and his constant allusions to the delightful season, especially associated him with Christmas, and he died, a month ago, on the day before it came. Farewell, great, generous soul, kindly teacher, faithful friend, true, tender, honest man! How sadly and solemnly and fitly now sound your own Christmas words!

"My song save this has little worth;
I lay it on your side,
And with you health, and love, and mirth,
As fits the solemn Christmas tide.
As fits the holy Christmas birth.
Be this, good friends, our carol still:
Be peace on earth, be peace on earth
To men of gentle will."

THE GOVERNOR'S MESSAGE.

GOVERNOR SEYMOUR'S Message has been thoroughly discussed; but, as its main purpose is to express in the most plausible way all the bitter hostility of extreme partisans throughout the country toward the Administration, it is worth considering. If it were possible to forget that Mr. Seymour early declared against the war, and charged its responsibility upon the head of the Free States; that he expressed his willingness to see the Union perish rather than slavery; that he insisted, while the rebels had their hands at our throats, that we should offer them the olive branch; it it could be forgotten that in every way, under pretext of saving the rights and dignity of the State, he has endeavored to embarrass the National Government, always in smooth phrases fiercely denouncing it, while treating the rebellion as the work of honorable men goaded into violence—if it were possible not to remember that he was the warm advocate of Thomas Seymour for Governor of Connecticut, and of Vallandigham for Governor of Ohio, and that all bitter partisans, under the thinnest veil of candor, Horatio Seymour is the chief—it might also be possible to believe that his criticisms of national affairs are friendly to the country and to the Union, and that he sincerely prefers patriotism to party. But with his record it is simply impossible. His official messages are a mere expansion of his manifestoes as the speeches of Vallandigham or Wood. And there is probably no heartily loyal Union man in the country who does not consider Mr. Seymour just as hostile and unfriendly as Vallandigham, and just as fervent a Unionist as Mr. Wood.

The Governor undertakes to argue the cause of the draft against the Government, declaring that "the safety of our country demands that the sympathy between our citizens and our soldiers should be kept alive." The sympathy is there of it. But, as the soldiers are our citizens, the Governor need not be alarmed. Does he think it a promising way of maintaining that sympathy to bar out the distrust of the citizens toward the minds of the soldiers? "The army must not be estranged from our people," he repeats. Very true. Does he think it promotes mutual sympathy to stand in the Academy of Music, while that army is fighting and falling, and "twit" it with the victories it has not won? "We were promised Vicksburg on the 4th of July," and proceed the Governor to the "citizens" on that day. The army gave it to us while he was sneering. It gave us Gettysburg also, and Port Hudson, and parts of a whole people, that field of heroic death was consecrated as holy national ground, one of the chief newspapers in the interest of Governor Seymour calls the army "a grand national wake." Is this the way to prevent estrangement? So also when it is proposed that the citizen fighting in the field as a soldier for the Union shall have the same rights at home that Governor Seymour says that he shall, and interposes his veto. This is his method of keeping alive sympathy between our citizens and our soldiers. If there is any man in the country who has done his little all to estrange the citizen in the field and the citizen at home, it is the author of this Message. We beg every soldier to watch the Governor's action when a bill is again presented to him empowering the soldiers to vote.

In the next place the Governor also undertakes his own defense in the matter of the July riots. He quotes his proclamation to the people of New York, and celebrates his vigorous efforts to preserve the peace. The whole question lies in a nutshell. Governor Seymour had done his full share in inciting the riots by his speeches; by his vehement denunciations of the Government and the draft; by his appeals to the best prejudice against colored citizens; and by his open menace that the national authorities must beware, for a mob could use pretenses as well as a Government. The riot began. Its pretext was opposition to the draft. Mayor Opdyke tells us that the vigorous policy agreed upon before the Governor came was not superseded by him because of the unanimity of the civil and military authorities of the city. But the Governor did all he could to prevent the policy to any thing, to supersede that policy. He deliberately told the rioters that he had asked the suspension of the law, which they made the pretext of their bloody crimes. Of course he had. It was his plan of treating the rebellion in the South: to excuse it, and do what it commands. The July riots should never be mentioned by the Governor or his friends.

The rest of the Message is an assertion that the policy of the war, which the Governor concedes that the people have approved, is national. The only hope for the country, in his estimation, is returning to the original policy of the war. That policy, as this is very simple, now it is that there has been but one policy in the war from the beginning, namely, to restore the authority of the Government, and consequently to overcome every obstacle to that restoration. He quotes the resolution of July, 1861, that the war is not waged to subjugate people or to overthrow institutions. No, and it never has been. Neither has it been waged to take a single life, or destroy a single dollar's worth of property. Yet thousands of lives, millions of dollars' worth of property, and at last slavery, have fallen and are falling in the process of maintaining the Constitution and restoring the Union. Slavery is destroyed, precisely as supplies, and cities, and lives are, in obedience to military necessity. That a partisan politician chooses to misrepresent the fact does not alter the truth. That he chooses to say that the Union is lost, civil liberty destroyed, and the nation ruined, because the American people, in saving their nationality, overthrow by the way the system of human slavery which has always threatened their existence, and now seeks to destroy it, is but another of the melancholy proofs with which History teems, that the extreme party public peril will not extinguish party malignity.

THE POLICE REPORT.

OF all the messages and reports with which the year opens the most simple, direct, and lucid is that of the Metropolitan Police Commission. It should be carefully read and pondered by every citizen as the record of the most diligent and faithful public service, and, in itself, the ample justification of a system which gives a peace and security to the great city hitherto unknown.

It appears that the population of the whole district which the force of the Commission is about 1,000,000 in the city of New York and 350,000 in Brooklyn. The authorized number of patrolmen for the former city is 1,800; in the latter, 200. This gives to New York one patrolman to every 527 inhabitants; to Brooklyn, one for every 1620. This proportion the report justly represents as heavy, because Brooklyn covers nearly as large a territory as New York, which has nine times as many patrolmen. It recommends that the number in Brooklyn be increased to 500.

In the regular course of their duty the patrolmen pass over every portion of the graded streets of the city every hours of the day and night, and, without serious increase of labor they could perform the duties of health wardens, sanitary inspectors, and inspectors of weights and measures. And, as one of the City Inspector's Department the police force could do without increase of numbers or pay. In view of Mayor Gunther's statement that the present expenses of the city are larger in proportion than those of any city in the world, this is a very significant suggestion.

The report wisely recommends the establishment of a Morgue, or dead-house, for the identification of bodies found drowned. It also suggests that as police officers, with the exception of a whole police force, are entirely useless in the plan of making mock-auctioneers refund their robberies has proved to be futile, the conviction of fraud should operate per se as a revocation of license. The Board having failed to abate the nuisance of concert saloons—dens of drunkenness and prostitution—the report declares them illegal, and licence in numbers until the Legislature shall authorize a thorough prosecution in every case. It also recommends that, as thieves and burglars are generally but the servants and receivers of stolen goods, the system of rewards by which the banks have so successfully suppressed counterfeiting shall be adopted, and the Board be authorized to offer rewards not exceeding $500 for the conviction of receivers of stolen goods. The case of truant children, growing up in the practice of every crime, should be met, as far as possible, by a truant school.

The report sums up the operations of the Sanitary Company of the Police, under Captain Lord, the object of which is to keep the city clean, and so to prevent disease. 20,942 cases of nuisance have been abated during the year, of which 584 were dangerous. The law should be amended so as to provide collecting the expense of cleaning his premises from the owner when he refuses or neglects to do it.

The successful use of steam fire-engines requires a new organization of the Fire Department. The members should be paid for their services or released from duty, for the voluntary system is unjust, oppressive, and not always trust-worthy. The members are brave and daring, and were formerly exempted from military service, but the interest of the public has no right to demand or enjoy their service without reward. Only a small skilled force is now required, and it is but just that the Insurance Companies should help bear the burden of supporting a department which is mainly useful to them.

The experience of the July riots has shown the value of a large and trusty police force armed and drilled as a military command, to be used, as an armed force only, under the same circumstances that would authorize the calling out of the militia. A fourth of the police could be so organized at small cost, and often save the expensive necessity of summoning the militia.

Finally, in a few calm, moderate, and perfectly truthful words the report depicts the circumstances of the July riots. They had a political motive and direction. They received sympathy and encouragement from influential partisans and papers. The militia were absent. The Police Board had been threatened with summary removal. Many of the force desired the removal, and there were some instances of insubordination. A large part of the force were of the same nationality and of the same political and religious faith as the rioters. There was therefore fear of failure in united action, or of embarrassment from sympathy with the mob. But the apprehension proved to be entirely groundless. The force acted as a unit, with the utmost heroism and success. Neither political, religious, nor national feeling impaired their efficiency. Eighty were wounded in the terrible conflict, but three only have died.

Could any statement be simpler, truer, or more manly? Could faithful officers make any other report of facts which are historical and known to all men? Could any thing be juster or more creditable to the members of the police force? The Commissioners may well say of a system which has produced these results: "The marked fidelity, vigilance, and efficiency of the Police in ordinary occasions is the legitimate fruit of the system. Instead of fearing or despising the Policeman, the public have learned to trust him as the defender and protector of social order. The Policeman's labors, risks, and deprivations are great—he earns and deserves not only public respect but just compensation; and the only reason that, with the enhanced rates of living, increased pay is not recommended, is the hope that there may soon be a return to the former scale of prices, and that the injustice of small pay to the Policeman may not be of long duration."

It is hard to believe that the report of which we have given a faithful abstract was made the excuse for the removal of the Police Commissioners. If every officer in the State were as faithful to duty, as loyal to the nation, as firm, unbesitating, and heroic as the Metropolitan Police, from the Commissioners to every patrolman engaged during the terrible July days proved themselves to be, it would be well for the State and an imperishable honor to the officers.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

THE late Archbishop Hughes was a man of irreproachable character and of acknowledged ability, who had justly earned the highest honors of his profession, and was greatly beloved by the people of his Church. But he was in no other sense a public man than every bishop of every Church and every able and worthy clergyman is. By its resolutions of respect to his memory, passed under the pressure of the previous question, the New York Legislature has established the agreeable precedent of observing with respectful mention the death of all good and eminent citizens. We do not remember that the late Bishop Wainwright's decease was so observed; but unquestionably that of all other distinguished clergymen and men of other professions will be. And if they are passed as these were, by force of the previous question, they will have exactly the same weight as these. But the utterly unobjectionable of such resolutions would seem to be to allow opportunity for the expression or respect and admiration from various minds. But the previous question summarily shuts debate, and also, as it seems to us, the intended respect.

Mr. Lyon said that he supported the resolutions because of the distinguished services rendered the country by the Prelate. But as he did not mention what they were, and as Archbishop Hughes conspicuously confined himself to his ecclesiastical duties, the public services must be left to conjecture. If Mr. Lyon referred to the Archbishop's visit to Europe, it is for Mr. Lyon to show what public service he did there.

Certainly we do not cavil at any respect shown to the memory of good men. But of the seventy-six members who carried the resolutions, twenty-six members who carried the resolutions, twenty-six members, as a citizen, or because he was an Irishman and the head of the Romish Church in this State; and whether they mean to honor all virtuous New Yorkers in the same way? for the ecclesiastical office, as Mr. Douglas truly said, has nothing to do with the State.

Good men, distinguished clergymen, able lawyers, skilful physicians, and men noted in every sphere, are constantly departing from us; but we submit that only citizens who have conspicuously served the State, like Generals and Magistrates, are the proper subjects of legislative resolutions of respect; and that to disregard that rule is to set a most inconvenient precedent.

THE OLD SOPHISM.

MR. RUSSELL, of the London Times, says that when he was in this country he met Mr. Horatio Seymour at dinner, and regret for the war was the topic that was being talked over, that the National Government had no power to coerce States. It was by such a subterfuge that the more reckless of the Northern friends of the rebels hoped to paralyze the Government, and convince at the success of the rebellion. And in his "Life of General Butler," Mr. Parton tells a story, of course derived from the General, that in February, 1860, Butler was in Washington on visit with the leaders of his party, and that the Southerners contemplated war. They told him that the North would not fight. He said it would. They smiled, and said they had friends enough here to prevent it. Why did it not occur to them that for every Seymour there would be a Butler; for every Vallandigham, a Logan; for every Wood, a Grant; for every Fierce, a Burnside?

The sophism by which these gentlemen hoped to do the work of the rebellion in the North has just been repeated by Governor Seymour in his Message. "If the draft is revolutionized," he asks, "its property devastated, its industry broken up and destroyed, will this benefit the North?" But that is no more question upon the coercion of States was in the beginning. The Government is maintaining its authority over rebellious citizens, and the whole question is not whether the North will be benefited by the success of the Government, but whether it is better for the country that the rebellion shall be suppressed by every means known to honorable warfare, or whether the war shall be infamously prolonged and shuttlecock holding out olive branches to men who spit at them. The difference between a man like Davis and one like Seymour is, that one is loyal and earnest and the other is playing a political game. When the rebel chiefs drew the sword they had at least the courage to say, "Let this decide between us." They will be destroyed by it, and their section sadly blasted by the war they have invoked, but they will leave cursing and whimpering to others.

RAILROAD ANNOYANCES.

WHILE the railroads in the South are going, and the means of keeping them have already gone, our own are worked beyond precedent. The enormous increase of freight, the passage of soldiers, and the immense profits which the fruit now added, charge all times and trains, so that it is hazardous to count upon making any connection or upon arrival within hours of the appointed time.

The recent delay, most vexatious if not dangerous, in the Susquehanna, and the constant complaints and frightful disregard of the comfort and health of passengers upon the single route between New York and Washington, may persuade Congress that something should be done for the relief of the public. But relief in the winter passage of the Hudson River at Albany seems to be beyond hope. Even if something ludicrous, if it were not outrageous, in the helpless way in which hundreds or thousands of people are daily and nightly shut out of civilization upon the river, in all winter weathers, rainy, snowy, sleety, blowy; when the ice is hard, and you may ride or walk; when it is soft and unsafe, and you must plank across the floating boards and in slush with the chance of breaking through, so that an inconvenience and exposure so barbarous is to be found in all our civilized travel, except, in another form, upon the Washington route.

And this is upon the great Northern line between the East and the West. The only reason urged in the confusion of the enormity is that Troy is opposed to a bridge at Albany, and that a paper Albany fear the loss of the business of transhipment. That reason is not one that long prevails with this country over the public convenience. The former is surely one that ought not to prevail, since it is enough to build a bridge which should neither obstruct the river nor navigation. As it is, the winter-crossing at Albany is a disgrace to our civilization.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

CONGRESS.

SENATE.—January 6. Select Committee on Pacific Railroad appointed, as follows: Chandler, Wade, and Howe. To prevent army and navy officers from interfering in elections more effectually than contained, in the course of a day. Saulsbury asserted that in the State of Delaware a majority of the votes had been driven from the polls because they were not in favor of the Administration. Mr. Trumbull defended the Government. The bill was finally referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, to report back to the Senate after the recess, who denied that it should be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.——January 7. Resolutions were presented and disposed of. Mr. Carlile offered a series of resolutions defining the relations of the General and State Governments, declaring that both lie in the exercise "that is to competent for the General, or any military commander in any State, to impose obligations interfering with the State laws;" and that "the true power of the Government should be used against the rebel States, as such, but against the citizens of the States only as they take part in the rebellion." The first was defeated and referred to the Committee on Finance. The second was adopted, and the third indefinitely postponed. Mr. Howe offered a series of resolutions for the relief of our soldiers now held as prisoners. The substance of which is that the President be requested to call for a million of volunteers for sixty days, and to issue a proclamation; that General Grant be placed in command of them; that Congress adjourn until the 4th of March, and that each member under fifty years of age join the army, and be elected to the House of Representatives.——January 8. Morrill offered resolution that notice be given to Great Britain of the termination of the Reciprocity Treaty.——The Committee on Military Affairs reported the bill of thanks to Generals Hooker, Meade, Banks, and Burnside, with their officers and troops.—Mr. Wilson introduced bill to promote enlistments; the chief features are that all enlistments in the regular army shall be for three years, and colored soldiers receive the same pay, etc., as white.—Mr. Grimes introduced bill fixing the pay of officers in the army.—Mr. Hale submitted a resolution for a Committee to inquire into the condition of the navy, and especially into the efficiency of the steam engine lately built. Debate ensued, in the course of which Mr. Hale assailed the management of the Navy Department, and Messrs. Chandler, Wade, and Grimes defended it. Mr. Davis also took part in the debate, assailing the Administration generally. Foster offered a resolution for the expulsion of Senator Davis, of Kentucky, on the ground of a series of resolutions passed by him on the 8th of January, from which the following phrase was taken: "That the people of the North are not fighting against the war leaders, and take the matter into their own hands." Saulsbury said Mr. Wilson's speech was "to the people of the United States to revolt" against the Government.——January 9. Senate rejected warmly declining, by the Senator's interpretation of my resolution is false in letter and spirit, and false in fact."——Without disposing of the resolutions for expulsion, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the Army Appropriation Bill. Sumner moved that the $300 commutation clause, Mr. Sumner proposed an entirely new system; commutation should be furnished only by Government; commutation to be fixed at $300; no one drafted man seeking exemption by hiring substitute, and if his income exceed $500 an additional sum as follows: On incomes between $500 and $600, ten per cent.; on incomes from $600 to $800, twenty per cent.; on incomes over $800, thirty per cent. Debate ensued upon this proposition. Mr. Wilson said that, though interested in the proposition to repeal the law authorizing the commutation clause, he was in favor of its retention, and proposed to vote against the repeal. Mr. Wilson's coming to debate action on this subject, the Senate adjourned.——January 11. Senate resumed the bill. Mr. Johnson offered a resolution requesting the Secretary of War to furnish information regarding the commutation of certain soldiers from Minnesota at Jefferson City, Missouri. Mr. Wilson's amendment was rejected. Mr. Powell's bill to muster bad entered the Confederate service, and that his name and children were not to be struck from the roll of pensioners. Some of the soldiers went to the care, and liberated the prisoners on their parole. The prisoners were arrested and thrown into prison. Mr. Lane, of Arkansas, stated that the case was one for the Executive rather than for the Legislature of Missouri; the officers appointed by Governor Gamble were responsible for the outrages committed by patriarchs with treason.——Mr. Brown, of Missouri, indorsed the statement of Mr. Lane. Mr. Loan, the commander of General Schofield, the commander in Missouri: resolution agreed to.——January 12. Resolutions were offered by Mr. Davis came up; Mr. Davis wished for immediate action; other none should be taken at present.——January 13. Mr. Henderson proposed amendments to the Constitution. He would prohibit slavery, or involuntary servitude except as a punishment for crime, shall not exist in the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction; the Constitution shall be proposed and adopted.——The Senate then proceeded out of executive session.——January 14. Session of Virginia.——January 12. The Committee on Finance reported back the House bill extending the time for the payment of duties on Sugar. Mr. Fessenden from the Secretary of the Treasury setting forth the necessity imposed by the failure of increased duties on Sugar.——The House bill for paying Missouri troops was reported by the Committee on Military Affairs: a communication received from the President in answer to Mr. Lane's inquiry of December 16, relative to the arrest of certain State prisoners. It inclosed letters from General Halleck and the Secretary General of War, stating that no order had been issued authorizing the arrest of persons for opinion's sake, and that the Government had no desire to violate the Constitution.——January 15. Debate ensued in regard to the enlistment of colored soldiers. Mr. Johnson said that slaves were considered property, as well as persons. Mr. Saulsbury said that he thought they were liable for their master's debts; as persons were liable for taxes if found in the State.——January 16. It learned that in Maryland slaves had been recruited without the consent of their masters, and that a protest against this procedure. No vote was taken on the bill.

HOUSE.—January 6. Resolution was offered to report our railroad from Washington to New York adopted: Mr. Pendleton introduced resolutions declaring that the Committee on Election reported a bill fixing a uniform time for filling vacancies in Congress, and providing for special elections to vote.—The Committee on Military Affairs reported a bill extending the time for paying bounties, which passed unanimously. The Appropriation bill was passed, after general debate. Mr. Arnold made a set speech upon the state of the country. Mr. Brooks criticised Mr. Arnold's view of the course of the President, and urging the entire defeat and crushing of the spirit of slavery. Mr. Arnold said of Mr. Lincoln, "he said, "to carry out the regeneration of the country by force of arms, and to overthrow by force the whole fabric."—Mr. Blaine offered a resolution declaring that the rebellion created by the slaveholders of the present insurrection should be assumed by the General Government.——Mr. Baldwin introduced a resolution for the adoption of "any proposition to negotiate with the rebel leaders at Richmond, or elsewhere, for the restoration of the Union, which should be rejected. The resolution, after some opposition from Mr. Cox, was adopted by 78 to 64.——Mr. Brooks moved which declares that "the organized treason which has its capital at Richmond exists in fact and in law outside of the Federal Constitution, and has no claim to be treated otherwise than as an armed enemy of the United States, and no contrary vote.—The Committee on Naval Affairs were instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a navy-yard and depot for the construction and repair of iron-clads.——Mr. Kalbfleisch introduced a resolution declaring that the rebellion is wicked; that the war against it is wicked; that the policy of the Administration is desirable; and that therefore commissioners should be appointed to confer with rebel commissioners upon the subject. Mr. Stevens moved to lay the resolution on the table, which was agreed to by 86 to 64.——January 7. Resolutions were introduced and referred.—The use of the Hall was granted to the Union Association, and to the Art Union for the funds of the Freedmen's Aid Association.—Mr. Fernando Wood offered a resolution that the House will not legislate into the conduct of General Butler while in command of the Department of Virginia.——Mr. Stevens called up the bill of thanks to the Army and Navy Departments, in the Treasury Department, which was passed.——January 8. The bill was taken up and passed by a vote of 77 to 65.—On motion of Mr. Paxton a resolution was adopted requesting the return of information in the New York Custom-house to the Committee on Public Expenditures.—Mr. Brownell offered a resolution to the effect that the Government endeavor to induce the rebels to lay down their arms by offering to pay for so doing them full pay and bounties, and by guaranteeing them freedom and protection when they do so.—Mr. Cox moved that the resolution on the table unless the mover would consent to its immediate consideration.—Mr. Brownell declined to do so. The motion to lay on the table was refused. 73 to 74.——Mr. Stevens offered a resolution requesting that the Military Affairs inquire into the expediency of paying to soldiers the money withheld from them on account of clothing, etc., thrown away by command of their officers; adopted.—The Committee on Ways and Means reported bill to reimburse to Pennsylvania the amount expended by her in calling out the Militia during the late invasion.——The House adjourned out of respect to the memory of the late Senator Bowden.——January 11. The Judiciary Committee reported bill for revising and consolidating the laws of the United States.—The Committee on Ways and Means reported bill for increasing the revenue. The main provisions are: a duty of 60 cents a gallon on distilled spirits; a duty of 5 cents a pound on tobacco; a stamp such as is sold by the United States; a drawback of 2 cents a pound on tobacco upon goods exported if manufactured from cotton which has paid the duty.—The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole, and on motion of Mr. Colfax came up, and was debated at length. The House adjourned without any definite action upon this bill.

THE BATTLES IN THE CLOUDS.—A CORRECTION.

AN important error seems in General Meigs's graphic account of the "Battle in the Clouds," near Chattanooga, as published. By a mistake of the telegraphic reporter, the name of General Thomas was substituted for that of General Sherman in the paragraph describing the pursuit of the Tennessee and the seizing and fortifying the position on Missionary Ridge. General Meigs, in a letter to General Sherman, says, "I wrote your name, and it was sent to the telegraph." The approval of General Thomas have been many and great, but the credit of this achievement belongs to Sherman, and he should not be deprived of it through the error of the telegraph.

GRANT'S CONGRATULATORY ORDER.

GENERAL GRANT, in General Order dated December 16, returns "his sincere thanks and congratulations to the brave troops of the Army of the Cumberland, the Tennessee, and their comrades from the Potomac, for the recent splendid and decisive successes achieved over the rebel host. Since you have recovered from him the control of the Tennessee River from Bridgeport to Knoxville. You dislodged him from the mountain fastnesses of Lookout Mountain, drove him from Chattanooga Valley, wrested from his possession Missionary Ridge, and followed his shattered forces with heavy loss to him his repeated assaults upon Knoxville. Closing the campaign in the midst of winter, with all its points, utterly routed and discomfited, beyond the reach of further hope, you have exhibited a valor and endurance not courage you have most effectually defeated the plans of the enemy for the conquest of Kentucky and East Tennessee, and relieved the loyal citizens of East Tennessee and Kentucky and Tennessee. You have secured positions from which no rebel force can drive or dislodge you."

WESTERN VIRGINIA.

A detachment of two hundred and eighty men, commanded by Major Wells, marched on the 24 of December at Jonesville, in Western Virginia, by a large Confederate force, numbering from 1,500 to 2,000 men. After the resistance, in which we lost 30 killed, and as many wounded, the detachment of the command were made prisoners.

The enemy, under General Early, by way of reprisal for Averell's raid, undertook a great expedition into Western Virginia, Pennsylvania, Maryland and Ohio Railroad, and other important points. A dispatch from General Early, dated Salem, Va., December 21, says: The rebel force has retreated toward the Shenandoah Valley. The force of Averell's command, consisting of three brigades, under the command of General Fitzhugh Lee. Deserters report that it was the intention to capture the entire garrison at Petersburg, take New Creek and Cumberland, destroy our bridges, break the railroad, burning the bridges. The great rain has thus far resulted in a complete failure. An attempt was made to surround Averell's command, but was turned by a portion of the enemy's force. With this exception they have not been able to intimate pursuit in any injury.

On the 19th of January a battalion of Maryland cavalry was attacked by Mosby's guerrillas. After severe fighting for an hour and a half, the enemy was driven off and wounded on the field; among the dead were four officers. We lost two killed and eleven wounded.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

AN expedition under Colonel M'Cherney, of the First North Carolina Cavalry, left New Berne, North Carolina, on 20, for Greenville, met the enemy near Washington and defeated them. The lieutenant-colonel in China troops in charge was killed. The loss on the other side was not lieutenant and five men. The troops engaged on our side were ingrams.

CHARLESTON.

Our direct intelligence from Charleston to the 7th of January. On that day General Gilmore had thrown twenty shells enough into the city to set it on fire, but no such result was achieved. A week before, however, the same number had been thrown into the city, and had set fire to the city, causing an extensive conflagration. Heretofore, it is said, the shells generally struck the earth and rebel batteries, and thus their object. This fault is said to be remedied by the use of the Parrott shell, by which the explosion takes place at the proper moment.

NEW ORLEANS AND TEXAS.

THE Department of the Gulf, by General Orders dated January 5. Information had been received from various sources of a combined movement of the rebels organized on the part of the rebels. It was said that all the rebel troops who have been operating on the Mississippi, on the west side of the Mississippi and other points, were gathering for Central Texas, and subsequently, with a heavy army, to attack or new acquisitions on the coast of Texas, and would probably be a number of thousand men. Preparations have been made to meet this rebel force as well as possible with the number of troops at his command.

A SOUTHERN VIEW.

The Richmond Inquirer, of December 31, says that the gloomiest view of the situation has been conducted; that neither the hopes of intervention, nor the fall in the spirits of the rebels in 1861, nor the victory of Fredericksburg in 1862, checks them, at the conclusion of the past year. It admits that the check given to General Sherman's advance and that the successful defense of Vicksburg, etc., are a poor set-off to the severe loss of Tennessee, and to the fall of the mountainous assault of Knoxville.

FRAUDS IN THE CUSTOM-HOUSE.

Fraudulent transactions by persons occupying important positions in the New York Custom-house are reported to have been detected. Several arrests have been made, and the alleged culprits have been sent to Fort Lafayette. The following is the list of persons thus committed:

THE CASE OF THE "CHESAPEAKE."

The case of the Chesapeake before the British Admiralty Court at Halifax, Judge Stuart said he was of the opinion that the vessel should be given up to her owners. The counsel for the Confederates asked him to contemplate the possibility of an application for the vessel on the part of the Confederate States. Judge Stuart said he would not. The Advocate-General for the Crown also expressed his opinion that the vessel should be given up to the owners. The case is still open.—Several persons have been under examination relative to the matter, charged with receiving the three prisoners taken on the Chesapeake from the U. S. steamer Ella and Anna, in New York; but they must be legally decided, and should be handed over to the Crown officers. They were privately sent away to avoid for their appearance before the Supreme Court.

FOREIGN NEWS.

EUROPE.

No intelligence of special importance has reached us during the week. Advices from Poland to the 31st of December are hardly characteric.—No collision had occurred between the Russian troops and the insurgents.—Field-Marshal Prince Friedrich had been proclaimed sovereign in opposition to the King of Denmark, and at least five votes had been illuminated in consequence. This town was evacuated on the 24th of December by the Danes, at the approach of the Federal forces.—It is said that the Monarchland, the builders of the Confederate ram in Great Britain, had refused to sell them, though they had received several offers.—The United States Ministers at London and Paris were making strenuous efforts to prevent the escape of the rebel steamer Rappahannock, then lying at Calais.—An incendiary movement in Hungary, with Kossuth at its head, is reported to have been commenced.

INDIA.

The hostilities in India, the breaking out of which was noted in our number for January 9, have assumed an alarming aspect. The first accounts merely stated that some of the Hill Tribes attacked an English position, drove it, broke, but finally repulsed, the British garrison, leaving 158 men, in killed and wounded, most of them being native troops. Subsequent accounts speak of a series of engagements, from October 30 to November 24, in which the British lost 1,000 men, more than 600 being killed and wounded. The Indian papers consider the affair serious. One says, "We are no longer engaged in an insignificant row with a few men in a few mountains, but with a powerful force, in an almost inaccessible country. It is difficult to overrate." Another says, "It is clear that our position there is a critical one, and that the most effective measures must now be adopted to save our force from annihilation."

MEXICO.

From Mexico our accounts, derived from various sources, are utterly conflicting. The general tenor of those which appear to be most reliable represent the French and "patriotists" as meeting with almost uniform success in the progress of their movement through the country.—Under the 8th of December they took possession of Guanajuato. The Mexicans, under Doblado, retreated toward Zacatecas, having destroyed the aqueduct, water reservoirs, mining works, and burning and leaving the country a desert. They were pursued by a division of the French army.—On the 9th of December they, at the approach of the French, was defeated near Guadalajara by the loyalists, under General Ogazon, with about 500 prisoners. The numbers on each side are stated at 3,000.—On the 17th of that month the Mexicans attacked the rear guard of the French, attacked them at Morelia, where they were strongly intrenched. The fight continued for five days, in the course of 2000 killed and wounded, out of an entire force of 3500. A letter from Senor Juarez, dated January 1, 1864, has been published, in which he says that he trusts, when our war is ended, we may be prepared to aid you in the Mexicans, for the purpose of driving the French from the continent. In the mean while the Mexicans can only carry on a guerrilla war.

ST. DOMINGO.

Some months ago the Spanish Government took formal possession of and "reannexed" to Spain the Republic of St. Domingo, which was founded by the negroes in the insurrection against the Spaniards broke out not long after, and a desultory warfare has since been carried on, apparently being in favor of the Spaniards. Present appearances indicate that this war is drawing to a close.

ARMY AND NAVY ITEMS.

A GENERAL court-martial, held in the Army of the Potomac, has recently passed the following sentences:

Major Le Roy Sunderland, Ninth Regiment cavalry, for absence without leave, misbehavior before the enemy, and conduct prejudicial to good order and patriotism, dismissed the service of the United States.

First Lieutenant Charles Wilson, Third Indiana Cavalry, for drunkenness and conduct to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, to be dismissed the service of the United States.

Captain William D. Fauldino, Fifty-sixth New York Volunteers, for drunkenness, to be cashiered, and be dismissed.

Second-Lieutenant Lafayette Cashion, Fifty-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, knowingly making a false return of the clothing of his company, to be cashiered.

First-Lieutenant John Galvin, Seventy-first New York Volunteers, for drunkenness on duty, etc., to be cashiered.

First-Lieutenant Reuben R. Wynn, One hundred and Fourth New York Volunteers, for disobedience of orders and absence without leave, to be dismissed.

Second Lieutenant Charles W. Gaskin, Fourteenth Connecticut Volunteers, disobedience of orders, drunkenness on duty, and neglect of duty, to be dismissed from the service, and to be forever disqualified to hold any office of trust or profit under the Government of the United States.

Second Lieutenant Urib. D. Bullos, One Hundred and Twenty-sixth New York Volunteers, misbehavior in the face of the enemy, to be dismissed with loss of pay and allowances.

Private Joseph Richardson and Corporal David M'Gahan, Forty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers; Private Lieutenant Wm. Ellis, Fifth Maine Volunteers; Private and Private Peter Chatelaynt, Twentieth Massachusetts Volunteers, for desertion, to forfeit all pay which they were sentenced to be shot.

General Orders No. 1 has been reported, it to be given a command in Texas.

General Grant has been ordered to report to General Grant at Knoxville.

Major-General Curtis has been assigned the command of the Department of Kansas, which consists of Kansas, Colorado, Nebraska, and the Indian Territory.

Governor Brough, of Ohio, has issued a proclamation ordering military commandants, where a loyal citizen is liable to be drafted or conscripted, to assist the rebel sympathizers in the vicinity of the outrage.

Captain Semmes has been appointed to the service on account of his difficulty with Lieutenant Cuyes, at Cincinnati, but he declined to take any position.

There were 10,529 Federal prisoners in Richmond on the 18th ult. There were eleven deaths among them on the same day.

About $7000 have been collected lately at Paris for the Salisbury Committee. A concert by the choir of the Madeleine Church, and a fancy fair in aid of this fund, at which the performers will sell, will take place in January.

The Confederate army of the Southwest has gone into winter-quarters at Dalton.

The following list of sick soldiers have died in Washington since the 1st of January and been buried by the Government: Isaac Hoffman, 72d Pennsylvania; Jacob Cavin, 6th New York; Henry Warners, 4th New York Artillery; Thomas Lowry, 79th New York Volunteers; Henry Cooney, 150th New York; Geo. C. Sweeny, 1st New York Artillery; Wm. Lewis, 1st New York Artillery; Wm. Ryan, 38th New York; Henry Wiggins, 4th New York Artillery; Jos. Lowry, 79th New York.

Rebel prisoners, spies, and guerrillas, are being sent in small parties to Fort Lafayette. At the latest dates there are now in this institution nine hundred and ninety-seven inmates.

General Thomas has issued an order assessing $10,000 on rebel sympathizers living within ten miles of the encampments of soldiers sent into Kentucky to collect the money to be divided between the families of the soldiers killed.

HEAD-QUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC, Jan. 18.

In pursuance of sentence by General Court-Martial, Lieutenants Isaac N. Whitehead, Nineteenth Indiana; Thomas A. Dunn, Fourth Michigan; Edward Hastings, Pennsylvania; Edward F. Conway, Seventy-first New York; Owen M. Sullivan, Sixty-second New York; Lieutenant Mc-Mee, Forty-seventh New York; and Adjutant Ezekiel Fitzgerald, Fifty-fifth New York Volunteers, were dismissed the service.

The total cost of the Monitors built and being built, will be $25,100,000.

The Seventy-eighth and Fifty-first New York Volunteers are on their way home from the West.

COLORED TROOPS, UNDER GENERAL WILD, LIBERATING SLAVES IN NORTH CAROLINA.—[See Page 54.]

UNDER THE FLAG.—[SEE PAGE 54.]

NEGRO SOLDIERS LIBERATING SLAVES.

GENERAL WADE'S late raid into the interior of North Carolina abounded in incidents of peculiar interest, from which we have selected a single one as the subject of the illustration on page 52, representing the liberation by the negro battalion of the slaves on Mr. Tarebee's plantation. As the reader may imagine, the scenes we both novel and exciting in all its features. General Wild having scoured the peninsula between Pasquotank and Little Rivers to Elizabeth City, proceeded from the latter place toward Indiantown in Camden County. Having encamped overnight, the column moved on into a rich country which was covered with wealthy plantations. The scene in our sketch represents the colored troops on one of these plantations freeing the slaves. The morning light is shining on their bristling bayonets in the back-ground, and upon a scene in front as ludicrous as it is interesting. The personal effects of the slaves are being gathered together from the outhouses on the plantation and piled, regardless of order, in an old cart, the party meanwhile watching themselves in a promiscuous manner of the Confiscation Act by plundering hens and chickens and longer fowl; and after all of these preliminary arrangements the women and children are (in a double sense) placed on an eminence above their chattels and carted off in triumph, leaving "Ole Massa" to glory in solitude and secession.

UNDER THE FLAG.

The above is the title which we have given to an illustration on page 53, adapted from an exquisite drawing by Thomas, a well known English artist. The original sketch represents the little girl holding a sprig of heather over her grandfather's coffin—for a Christmas emblem not popularly understood in this country. For the misletoe we have substituted a miniature flag of the United States, as an emblem which will be understood and appreciated by all of our readers. The picture, in every other feature unaltered from its original, will speak for itself both to the eye and heart. Let us hope that another New-Year's may find not only our own households under the flag, but also those of our enemies—turned friends.

[FROM CHARLES DICKENS'S "All the Year Round."]

A WHITE HAND AND A BLACK THUMB.

IN THIRTEEN CHAPTERS.

CHAPTER I.

On the twelfth of March, one thousand seven hundred and seventy-seven, Mr. Basil Humpage, merchant and banking-agent, departed from his mansion, shaded by three big elms, in the rural precinct of Jermyn Street, London, and never returned.

It may illustrate his unexampled regularity to mention that, at the expiration of four minutes from the usual time of the merchant's appearance at his office in Cripplegate, the old head clerk turned pale, slid feebly down from his stool, and became temporarily incapacitated from business. He tottered up and down with nervous steps, pausing at every turn, now to gaze half incredulously at the clock, now to gape through the glass partition which fenced off his chief's apartment from the general office, as if he thought it less improbable that that good man should have shot up furtively through the cellarage than be missing altogether from his place. For it was a well-known fancy of the worthy old merchant, who was frequently before, never after, his time, to loiter about the door, in such a manner that, with the last stroke of nine from the neighbouring clock, he might insert his latch-key, and with a general nod, and a "Good-morning, Middlemiss!" to the head clerk, assume his accustomed seat, and commence the duties of the day.

Although Mr. Middlemiss was not a man given to superstitious fancies, it might certainly arise from his bearing on this occasion that the prophetic whisper which sometimes reaches us—who knows from what unearth-place?—far outgoing the ordinational argument for anxiety, had awakened in him a conviction of misfortune with which his reason refused control. At all events, as the minute hand sates past nine the head clerk summoned his best messenger, usually reserved for hurried and important missions, dispatched him, on foot (indeed, but at double hackney-coach pace, to the house of Three Elms.

We shall get there before him.

Mr. Humpage had risen, that long-remembered morning, at his accustomed hour—half past six. There was nothing remarkable in his demeanor or conduct, except that, on rising, he kissed his wife—a circumstance which that lady attributed to their having had a little tiff overnight. The morning standing had not been of a serious character, having nothing worthier to ,,e question whether Polly-my-Lamb should be condemned to wear frilled pantaloons for six months longer, c- pass at once into long short-waisted gowns like her mother. Sleep had interposed, and left the point undecided.

Polly-my-Lamb was the only child of Basil and Alethea Humpage. The name was of her father's sole invention, but had been adopted, first cautiously, then freely, by the entire neighborhood.

The chocolate was ready at half past seven. Mr. Humpage not appearing, a maid went to his dressing-room door and announced that her mistress was waiting breakfast; to which he returned no answer. Another ten minutes, and maid Kezia went again, knocked, and repeated her message. Still no reply.

Polly-my-Lamb was the next embassador. The maid had met her on the stairs, and begged her to speak to master, as she, Kezia, could not make him hear.

The little girl came flying back, with her violet eyes swimming in tears—she could hardly tell why; perhaps it was from peeping through the keyhole; perhaps it was because, for the first time in his life, papa had been deaf to the voice of his darling. At all events, he had locked his door, and would make no audible reply. Was he there? Yes, certainly. He could not have been seized with any sudden illness; for she had heard his familiar step move steadily across the room, and had further recognized the peculiar creaking accompanying a particular drawer in his dressing-table, as he opened and reclosed it.

Past eight o'clock. It had now become a matter of impossibility for the punctual merchant to eat his breakfast and appear at his office at the accustomed time, and a message was dispatched to extend through the household. Even deaf Stephen, the footman-butler, whose great red ears had for the last thirty winters been considered sentimental, and who was in the habit of relying for his knowledge of passing events purely upon his own skill in physiognomy, perfectly understood that something was amiss, and pulled off his coat, with the view, it was surmised, of being in a state of general preparation and armament for whatever might ensue.

A thrilling scream from above brought matters to a crisis below. The alarm was re-echoed by the cook, and although to Stephen she only appeared to yawn, the movement that followed quickly understood him. Up-stairs he bounded then, Stephen after. Mrs. Humpage was on her knees at the dressing-room door, knocking, screaming, imploring, in frantic terms, that her husband, himself, she declared, from the clothes-hook on the door. She could hear his boot-heels kicking against it—forgetting, poor lady, that if her supposition were correct he could hardly be expected to comply with her hysterical requests to open the door. The servants' network of their matters' affairs is close. Does it seem strange that every body was so suddenly plunged into consternation? Mr. Humpage had been but half an hour behind-hand in getting over his dressing. But this was the first infraction of a custom of two-and-twenty years. Self-imposed laws have the best observed. Habit is the most orderly establishment, if questioned, that human conduct can suggest—a more reasonable explanation necessary than that they are "master's way."

Mrs. Humpage, making an eager gesture which might be interpreted as an order to break in, Stephen the strong, without further ceremony, put his broad knee against the door, which, secured only by a slight catch, yielded instantly.

The first moment with it served to convince them that no one was in the apartment. The next, Stephen caught his mistress by the arm, and somewhat peremptorily insisted on her leaving the room. His quick sight had managed to sweep in details he did not wish her to be among the first to investigate. With the like determination he had ordered the other women to quit the room, and then, putting a strong restraint upon his own anxious curiosity, secured the door on the outside, and stood on guard like a police officer in Bow Street as fast as his legs would carry him.

A shrewd and able man was Sir James Pothill, at that time chief magistrate; and he, after receiving a hasty communication from Stephen, dispatched a sturdy officer, Bob Ryves, with white neckcloth, and long red waistcoat—called a "runner" because they always walked—to the house of Three Elms.

Isaac Surtees, the constable-runner, subsequently deposed that, from information which had been conveyed to him, and from certain directions he had received (Stephen had reported "Sam at wrong corner our way," and the magistrate had ordered him to "see about it"), he proceeded to Jermyn Street, Saint James's, where he observed a crowd of persons assembled at the house of Basil Rose, Number Twenty-seven, by the three great hellens, opposite the public, next the chapel, round the corner, left-handside. Information was obtained in the neighborhood, especially in and about the Three Jolly Coonsters, partly owing to what had transpired at Number Twenty-seven, and in the precincts of the miscuous implement of a little boy—by the trowser—on the spikes of the hairy, Number Twenty-seven aforesaid. Admittance was sought, and was admitted in the ordinary way. ("Well, man, we don't suppose you got down the chimney," growled the magistrate.) Servants' hall shoes. There was a large Tom cat in the passage.

"Got on, officer. You need not be too precise," said the magistrate.

Likewise a door leading to a back staircase, conducting to apartments on the first floor, through a pantry and anti-room. Pantry locked, and all one, whereby you come to another room, whereof Stephen Gould, the butler, which has lived in the family half twenty years, was in charge by his hearing complete in the great fog of 'twenty-seven, produced from the left-hand pocket of his peach-colored reference inexpressibles, the key.

The apartment—to condense Mr. Surtees's report—was in much the same sort of confusion a gentleman might believe his premises were in, if the burglars were thrown about. In the middle of the room was a large pool of blood—other traces being noticeable in a direction toward the window. The sash of the latter was up, one pane broken, and one cut clean out, as if by a principle diamond. Two towels, on which bloody hands had been wiped, lay near the washing-stand, on the floor. But the most significant trace of all presented itself in the shape of a lock, or tuft of grizzled hair—pronounced by Stephen to be his master's—which was picked up, soaked in blood, and placed in a drawer. There was nothing, apart from this, to indicate that a murderous struggle had taken place, nor, indeed, was that compatible with circumstances at a later period deposed to. The murder—if such it was—must have been effected completely and suddenly, by surprise.

The motive? The closest scrutiny failed to establish the fact that any article of value, with one exception, had been taken away. That exception was the merchant's watch: a chronometer worth, as he had been accustomed to declare, one hundred pounds sterling. Not a drawer, chell, or cupboard, had been disturbed. Gold and silver money was scattered on the table—a massive gold snuff-box, gold pencil-case, and other things of undoubted value—all these were safe. The outrage, whatever its nature, and by whomsoever perpetrated, had been either directed against the person, not the property, of the missing man.

The singul rity of the circumstances, even at a period too much stained with desperate crimes, attracted unusual attention. The merchant had been held in high esteem by a very large circle of acquaintance. A magistrate himself, Sir James Pothill, had been of the number of his friends.

After hearing the testimony of the officer Surtees, and, also, of other witnesses, Sir James took with him two of his most astute thief-catchers, and went down in person to examine the premises.

The visit was barren. Nothing must have been effected was twenty-five feet from the ground. It was at the side of the house fronting the elm-trees, and looked down upon a narrow but well-frequented thoroughfare, faced on the off-side by an iron railing, and leading into Piccadilly.

To believe that through such a window, in broad daylight, a gentleman murderously assailed in the very midst of his family and dependents, could have been taken away secretly and successfully smuggled, and borne safely away, was more than the magistrate, familiar with the modus operandi, and the usual haunts of crime, could school his mind to do. It seemed absolutely incredible that no alarm should have been given. Presuming that a sudden and well-delivered blow had rendered the victim insensible, how lower and transport away the insensate body, without exciting the curiosity and suspicion of the passengers, from whom the presence the alley was scarcely for a moment free?

Sir James Pothill was leaning from the window, revolving the matter in his mind, and wondering, casually, how far a slender leaden water-pipe which passed up to the roof almost within arm's-reach might have been concerned with the burglar's successful entrance, when a squabble of the boys in the back-way attracted his attention.

A little burlesque of a highly popular ceremony appeared to be in progress.

The assistants were of the group, with his elbows pinioned, his hands tied, and a dirty Welsh nightcap half concealing his blubbered face, was lifted on the shoulders of a porter, by way of ladder, while an amateur Ketch in corduroys endeavored to adjust a fragment of rope round his neck. A fourth performer, with a long, frouzy hair ensconced down over his face, and a sheet of street-ballads in his hand, enacted the part of reverend ordinary.

The spectacle was, however, rendered a decidedly impenitent and contentious frame of mind. It was clear that he repudiated the whole proceedings, and now rebelliously, and bowed to an extent that had already filled the narrow thoroughfare with deeply-interested spectators, who, with an instinctive reverence for the more majestic aspects of the law, offered no interposition whatever.

Annoyed, as well he might be, at this unbecoming travesty of one of the most venerable and cherished institutions, the excellent magistrate shouted angrily to the boys to disperse, making signs, moreover, to one of the mounted fellows, whose figure, in the distance, to scatter the tumultuous assemblage. The condemned urchin was quickly reprieved, and the latter, mounted on his back, was in the act of joining with the executioner and chaplain in a savage dance round his deliverer, when the latter was seen to pause upon and recognize him.

After a minute, during which certain inquiry of much interest seemed to be proceeding, the officer entered the house, accompanied by the boy, from whose neck he had taken the piece of cord. The boy had been the first to find the watch early in the morning, saying that he had picked it up under the window of the dressing-room. It bore at that time fresh marks of blood, and there was a noise at the end, which circumstance had perhaps suggested to the juvenile populace the idea of playing the little instrument that had just been interrupted.

There was no reason to doubt the boy's statement. After the most cursory view of the premises, suggesting nothing more than a supposition that the cord might have been a portion of that used in venetian-blinds, the boy, with his hearing complete in the great fog of 'twenty-seven, produced from the left-hand pocket of his peach-colored reference inexpressibles, the key.

The apartment—to condense Mr. Surtees's report—was in much the same sort of confusion a gentleman might believe his premises were in, if the burglars were thrown about. In the middle of the room was a large pool of blood—other traces being noticeable in a direction toward the window. The sash of the latter was up, one pane broken, and one cut clean out, as if by a principle diamond. Two towels, on which bloody hands had been wiped, lay near the washing-stand, on the floor. But the most significant trace of all presented itself in the shape of a lock, or tuft of grizzled hair—pronounced by Stephen to be his master's—which was picked up, soaked in blood, and placed in a drawer. There was nothing, apart from this, to indicate that a murderous struggle had taken place, nor, indeed, was that compatible with circumstances at a later period deposed to. The murder—if such it was—must have been effected completely and suddenly, by surprise.

The motive? The closest scrutiny failed to establish the fact that any article of value, with one exception, had been taken away. That exception was the merchant's watch: a chronometer worth, as he had been accustomed to declare, one hundred guineas. There were the points of a good partisan leader about Lord Lob. Alas! that he had never skirmished against any thing but law and justice. He wanted nothing but social order, dispelled no foe but his peaceful fellow-citizens!

The pillage of a bank, an opulent City warehouse, a goldsmith's shop, the waylaying of a distinguished band of travelers, the forging and uttering of notes of startling amount occasionally (by way of variety), the running a perfect agency full of silk and spirits under the very noses of the excise officers—these were the meanest matters to which Lord Lob's genius would nothing but descend.

He had no need of much money. He had wretched of smaller vices. Such poor excesses as drink and play he had long since abandoned to those aristocratic bloods of the day; but when he had absolutely not a great remaining, my lord would quietly step into his carriage, and, sallying forth on the fashorite preserve, the Lincoln road, take the first purse he judged weighty enough for present necessities. He did this at his pleasure, on the leader's sole prerogative; all other proceedings of the gang being carried on in concert, and with a common end.

These gentlemen, who had given themselves the name of the "Black-Thumbs," numbered about thirty, seldom more, as it was thought that any larger circle might include a traitor or two; seldom fewer, for no sooner did the insatiate maw of justice devour a member of the brotherhood than another stepped eagerly into the shoes kicked off at the gibbet. Such casualties, however, were far from numerous, even in those regretted "good old days," when nothing in the range of sublavar was considered by the people bonded; for every well-known Black-Thumb was adored as he was daring, and there was, moreover, a law—which being the only one recognized by the fraternity was complied with the more fidelity—that no member of their little commonwealth should imperil his valuable existence by the commission of crimes so long as any greater action was impending.

To their leader one and all were heartily devoted, executing his every command—whatever it was—both with that blind and absolute confidence which goes far toward insuring the rapidity of success.

Lord Lob, it will be seen, was a man of very startling outrage, marked with peculiar features, was added to the daily catalogue of crime, suspicion, as to the author, naturally turned upon the dreaded Black-Thumbs, and hence the worthy magistrate believed he saw the impression of these sooty digits in the hall he was investigating.

As yet, he felt, the conclusion was premature, and suggested by the mysterious and motiveless character of the outrage.

What, in the first place, was its real nature?

It must have been one of three things: a planned assassination, an interrupted burglary, or a vindictive supervening. A simple abduction, or kidnapping.

That it was a purposed assassination seemed the least probable of all. The generous, frank old man had not an enemy on earth. It was beyond the pale of likelihood that such a deed could have been attempted under such circumstances, by day, in the victim's own dwelling, when the slightest scuffle would be unavoidably heard. And then, no murderer would multiply the chances of detection tenfold by seeking to remove the mutilated body?

The theory of an interrupted robbery was surely negatived by the fact that those who carried off the body might with infinitely greater facility have possessed themselves of the money and valuables they came to seek. Such things, it has been stated, were left untouched, and they could not escape notice, and in the very drawer that had been heard to open and reclose there was found, on examination, a banknote of large amount, and twenty-three guineas and a half in gold.

As touching the abductional hypothesis, had the object been that of possessing little Master, Polly-my-Lamb, the enterprise, though lawless, were at least intelligible, but what advantage commensurate with the hazard could be realized by assailing him in the possession of the portly person of her excellent father?

After an interview with Mrs. Humpage—a kind but weak-minded woman, whom alarm and anxiety had rendered nearly imbecile—and with Polly-my-Lamb, who, being looked on as a lily, but sensible wept nor lamented, the magistrate returned to his office in a moot of unaccustomed depression. He was about to recall from some important country service an officer named Henry Armour, distinguished no less for his bull-dog courage than the sagacity that he should be tracked like a wild beast. Mr. Armour, however, was beyond recall. The game he had been hunting had, for once, given him the slip in Liverpool, and away for North America. Without a moment's hesitation the stanch pursuer had flung a brace of pistols into his valise, and had started in chase by a ship then in the act of clearing out. So, for some months, Henry was not available.

The affairs of the missing gentleman were found to be in perfect order and high prosperity. For the last two or three years, as much of his private business as could be done profitably restricting the sphere of his commercial operations, with the intention of withdrawing altogether from business as soon as practicable. This circumstance greatly facilitated the scrutiny that took place. The result of it went to show that Mr. Humpage had been in a position to retire with a fortune of upward of ninety thousand pounds.

By the time this conclusion was established poor Mrs. Humpage was no longer in a condition to take much interest in the matter. Many months had now passed since her husband's disappearance, and yet her health, whether bodily or mental, showed no symptom of recovering from the shock it had sustained. On the contrary, as hope faded, her feebleness of frame and disturbance of spirit augmented together. She was rapidly sinking into imbecility, and presently conceived an idea that her husband was not only alive, but in his own house, observing, however, some peculiar line of conduct which she could not comprehend. She was perpetually hearing his voice or eyes. Sometimes caught sight of him as he passed from room to room, and on one occasion believed that he had entered her dressing-room, and bitterly upbraided her with failing to send aid to him in the deadly scuffle in which his life was taken (such was her incoherent story), and now with employing insufficient means for the detection of his murderers. It was in vain to combat these hallucinations, in which she was at last permitted to indulge. Before the expiration of a twelvemonth from the fatal day the poor woman had sunk into a state which admitted no hope of amendment.

The change that had come over Polly-my-Lamb's mind was, though widely different, scarcely less remarkable. Those months of feverish anxiety had dealt with her as might an unnaturally fervid atmosphere with blossoms of another kind, and had led to a forced maturity. Gone, gone forever, was the merry, saucy little romp, whose whole existence was like a continuous laugh; from whom sweet fun sprang itself could scarcely chase away the smile; whose small feet, decorated with the well-known frilled pantaloons, came twinkling down street, sending thrills of delight and jealousy to the hearts of the susceptible youthhood of the precinct, whose idol and empress she had been. In place of her, there sat beside the mother's bed a calm, stern, self-reliant, jealous-judging little woman.

Between Polly-my-Lamb and her kind papa there had existed a degree of attachment rarely witnessed even in that dear relationship. Except in those hours when the elder play-fellow was immersed in business, the two were seldom seen apart; and it is certain that the merchant would have grudged even that momentary interval of separation from his darling, had it not been devoted to the work of building up for her a fortune it was his intention to tender, according to the estimate of that time, liberal.

That state of amusement with which youth receives the first fuller in the battle of life, like a wound that stuns, came mercifully to deaden the actual smart of the child's wound at first. Polly-my-Lamb could not at all realize the fact that her father was gone. Her heart seemed to grope round in a bewildered way, seeking something that was missing from its daily sensible existence. Then, after a little time, the child rallied her reasoning powers—proceeded to deduction from by the necessity of attending much to her mother, whose grief, loud and incessant, importuned all within its reach. Strength is gained by helping the weak. The child then began to reflect, and to be strong. Bitter as was her grief, and deep the wound that was galled and irritated by every sight and object the household circle supplied, the sentiments of rage and revenge were entirely dominant. Polly-my-Lamb would have marched to the fiery stake (women did so, in her day, for counterfeiting crown pieces in pewter), if she could by no other means have included in that torture the assassins of her father.

Before the close of the year a second victim was borne from the mansion of the Three Bells. Mrs. Humpage yielded up her life and sorrows, and was laid to rest in the neighboring vaults of Saint James the Martyr.

CHAPTER II.

So poor Polly-my-Lamb was left in the rich desolate house alone. Neither of her parents possessed any near relations. As for friends, the sad mischief rebelled every attempt to comfort her, every offer to bear her company, in her affliction.

Two weeks only, after a short time, were admitted, Mr. Bellamy, the family solicitor, and Sir James Pothill, the chief magistrate. The former laid before her her father's will, in which he had bequeathed one half of his large fortune to his wife, with remainder to his daughter, the other moiety to trustees, for the benefit of the latter until her marriage or coming of age. Thus the whole property, producing, in those days, nearly six thousand pounds income, would likely to centre shortly in the little young mistress, now just fifteen, of the house of Three Elms. Sir James could with difficulty repress a look of complete a transformation had for last two or three months effected in the appearance and demeanor of his young friend. He had come to visit the little thing, as on former occasions, in a sort of cressing, comforting, head-patting way, and here was a young woman with set features and chill blue eyes, waving him to a somewhat distant seat, and awaiting with polite frigidity the explanation of his visit.

Sir James found himself stammering words of commonplace condolence, and general offers of service, and was scarcely astonished when she cut him short:

"You can neither help nor comfort me, Sir, nor can you even recompense for this injury"—(little benevolent look stopped her as though he had held up a warning hand)—"interruption of the grief I prefer to indulge in privacy, except in one case. Tell me that the law has overtaken the—murderers."

A deadly paleness overspread her face as she ground the last word, almost inaudible, between her set teeth.

"Such tidings, my dear young lady, we hope shortly—"

"I know, I know!" burst in the child, clutching her fingers together, and beating them impatiently against her bosom. "Always the same, always the same!"

"We—we have done our utmost," replied Sir James, rising.

"I am glad to hear you say so," was the unexpected answer. "It is time, then, that others began."

"My dear?"

"It can never be meant that this wicked murder should go unpunished, even in a world that can not, as it seems, administer the laws it makes as well as that it is to be found out, and it shall—yes, it shall," she added, her eyes wide open, and gleaming like a sibyl's. "If you can not trace these wicked men, I—child as you think me—will do it. For me other and will I breathe. The wealth he left will help to secure it. Henceforth I know no hope, no care, no pleasure, but to revenge his death. If you will to be assured that I am in earnest, read this."

And she put into his hand a copy of the Newsman, published that day.

The magistrate read:

"A reward of one thousand pounds sterling will be paid to whosoever shall furnish reliable information touching the disposal of the body, living or dead, of Basil Humpage merchant, of Kenyon Street. Address the Police-office, Bow Street."

"This is tempting, indeed," said Sir James. "When was this notice sent?"

"Yesterday."

"And your friends—do they approve this offer?"

"I have no friends—and I want no father."

"Well, well, my dear," said the good magistrate, "I, at least, have no right to thwart your plans, though we can not delight in your action. You are a young lady of remarkable energy and self-reliance. If these be well directed, good results may no doubt follow; as strongly they had been the fruits of greater experience. I was about to tell you, a moment since, that I hope to-morrow to introduce a new auxiliary, for whom I have been waiting somewhat anxiously. For the present, farewell."

Polly-my-Lamb sat at the window this day, for the first time since her mother's death, and looked out with orphan eyes upon the world. It was dreary, dripping weather. At intervals the wind swept the street, which was filled with staggering chairs, the bearers hardly able to make good their way against the storm and the load of mud strewn.

The poor child's eyes were hot and dry, but her heart was full of tears. One thought possessed her wholly, raged within her, consumed her, as either. But, how to obtain it? Scheme after scheme was revolved and dismissed, as being too-contrived grasp, but from the difficulties that attended every attempt to reduce them to detail. Thus it was not so easy, in practice, to realize a project of dispatching men, each sworn, upon enlistment, to spend the last drop of his blood in the quest of Humpage. There were, again, the difficulties lying in the way of fitting out a vessel for the purpose of visiting every country in the world, and ransacking its jails for any relentless villain within it, for months to come. Polly-my-Lamb might have been kneeling before the portrait of her father, pledging herself to Heaven, by the most solemn vows and with fearful earnestness, to yield her hand and fortune only to him who should discover and make known to her her father's fate.

She was happier after that. Polly-my-Lamb resented herself in the window, and once more gazed out upon the dreary street.

What object can that be that first enchains her eyes with a fixed and wondering gaze, then makes her reckless, flings every thought away, and yet again steal back for another wistful look?

Nothing more extraordinary than a little white face, under yellow ringlets, and a little yellow hair, through which two large heavy-lidded eyes gaze sadly out, as if answering for the fate of the world at large. A little girl about her own age, supported by pillows, in the window of the opposite house. The little lady's first impression on seeing her was that her worst invalid was one of pity—her second, of mingled wonder and interest, as the singular beauty that even such trying circumstances could not wholly reveal itself. Divided from him only by a few yards, she could easily distinguish the change of expression that each hour wrought upon it; up every lineament, as he faintly put back the clustering locks, and fastened his large eyes upon his young neighbor, as if to make sure that for which alone he had fought successfully with death.

"If it were not sick, I should have imagined it an angel," thought Polly-my-Lamb, simply.

She had shrunk, with instinctive delicacy, from the fixed gaze, but now crept back for a moment. The sick face had returned the languid gratify again at sight of her, light and color reappeared, while the large eager eyes feasted hungrily as before. The girls next began to talk—challenging counsel of reason or will—replying at once to this strange homage. Who and what could he be?

THE TWO TRAVELERS.

SOME years ago two gentlemen and a lady had taken their places in the diligence from Paris to Havre. One of the gentlemen, M. Malleput, a merchant of the capital, as indolent in mind as in body, slept profoundly from the commencement; the other, M. Lussac, a commercial traveler, a person of a very animated character, did not allow his tongue to rest a minute. Among other things which he mentioned he let it escape that he had on him fifteen thousand francs in bank-bills, and that the greater part of the sum was intended for the purchase of colonial produce, and the rest as a present for his wife.

M. Malleput, on the contrary, during the rare intervals when he was sufficiently awake to speak, said simply that he was going to Havre.

The diligence arrived at Honfleur, where the horses were changed. As the road from that point ascends, the conductor proposed to the travelers that they should walk up hill. Lussac embraced the proposal with pleasure, and Malleput, from politeness, affected to be no less delighted, though, in fact, he had no desire to put his legs in movement.

They both started up the hill, then, and the diligence followed them.

Soon darkness came on. But the travelers continued to hear the diligence rolling behind them. At the end of some time they both remarked that they had wandered from the right road. They wished to return, but, the sound of the wheels being no longer reached them. The indolent Malleput grew afraid. Muttering a few oaths he began in much of a more rapid rate, and this sudden change gave birth in the soul of M. Lussac to a soubre pervertissant. Remembering his imprudent avowal about the fifteen thousand francs which he had with him, the most lugubrious ideas agitated his mind. He asked himself whether his companion and the conductor to rob him in some solitary place. Perhaps, he also thought, another accomplice might be lurking in some spot near, ready to pounce on him. In truth poor Lussac deemed himself a lost man; he determined, therefore, to be on his guard.

With regard to Malleput, when he saw Lussac become suddenly silent, he at once conceived similar suspicions of the disposition of his companion. He had not, it is true, like Lussac, been guilty of any indiscretion endangering his own interests; but his pockets were filled with important papers, and the avowal of his companion appeared to him now only an adroit trick to inspire him with confidence. Keeping at a great distance from the other on each other, the two travelers watched each other's movements. At last a march coming in the way forced them into contact with one another, even partly. Their alarm and distrust went on increasing. Malleput raised his hand to wipe his brow, bathed with perspiration. He took this movement to think that he saw in his companion's hand an instrument of murder. Then, he resolved to engage in a fight, he likewise raised his hand to take a pinch of snuff. Malleput, seeing this, stooped down to the muddy pavement, and picked up a pebble.

After some time passed in the anguish of these mutual suspicions, Lussac determined to give vent to his fears. "My dear sir," he said, in a low tone, "be thoroughly on our guard here. It is the very demon himself who has thrown us thus on the high-road in the midst of the night. Fortunately if we meet with any misfortune or attack there is nothing to be found on me but empty pockets."

"Indeed," replied Malleput, "you surely forget the fifteen thousand francs which you have with you."

"Oh! that was all nonsense," cried Lussac; "my words on this point were the merest wind, of course I was only joking."

This speech did not fail to increase the terror of Malleput.

"Well, whatever happens," he said, after a few moments' reflection, "I am determined not to yield till I have fired my pistol as often as I can."

"Pistol!" exclaimed Lussac; "but do you not know that it is useless to carry arms?"

"Forbidden, do you say?" continued Malleput, assuming an air of great courage: "there are resolute fellows, however, who do not much regard—who, in fact, laugh at—such prohibitions."

This conversation was interrupted by the trot of the horse; the driver, in addition, who told our travelers that they had gone astray, and that they had, at least, a walk of two hours to the nearest posting-station. At this unwelcome news, Lussac sought relief in furious oaths.

Presently a carriage passed; Malleput and Lussac rushed toward it, but Lussac wanted to get up behind, but the coachman struck him so fiercely with his whip that he was forced to let go his hold. He and his companion, then dragging their weary limbs anew along the high-road.

A light gleamed in the distance. Our travelers drowned in perspiration and crushed by fatigue, marched toward the spot where the light was shining. It was a house of entertainment, and a country-house; but they at last succeeded in discovering an inn.

Fresh mishap! All the rooms were occupied but the landlord, yielding after a while to their passionate requests, gave them the room which he had reserved for himself, and which was, however, the two companions felt the irresistible need for some food. The delay caused by the repast was marked by a new incident, and in exactly the same silence Malleput and Lussac prepared with their exhausted frames to taste the sweets of repose.

"The moment is critical," thought Malleput.

"I shall pretend to be asleep. I shall even snore with tolerable emphasis if needful; but I shall keep myself alert for the least sign of danger."

As for M. Lussac, after having slipped his portfolio under his pillow, wished his companion good-night, and blown out the candle, he placed himself as coolly in the bed as he could, but kept his eyes fixed in the darkness on the corner of the room where the traveler lay.

Two hours passed away, marked by the most complete immobility on both sides. The first feeble light of the dawn was beginning to peep through when M. Lussac perceived his neighbor rising with precaution, and approaching his own bed on tip-toe. Malleput then stopped close to M. Lussac's face. M. Lussac's heart beat like a steam-engine. Fortunately, however, he had his knife opened and ready under his pillow. He asked himself whether he ought not to be beforehand with the assassin. But a little cowardice, and the excess of his emotion, forced him to wait, without stirring, the development of events. M. Malleput again gathered some assurance from the air of tranquility which he, who deemed himself a victim, simulated. He went back to bed with contented heart. And the result was, that neither of the travelers having slept, but neither of them also having suffered any greater harm than a good fright, they set out in the course of the afternoon in arm for Rouen. They became intimate friends, and ended by forming a commercial partnership. The house Malleput and Company still prospers at Paris, and each of the partners amuses himself with telling the singular circumstances which led to their business relations. It is never, however, without emotion that M. Malleput hears M. Lussac speaking of the moment when the knife was kept under the bed-clothes for a fatal stab.

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

THE WAYS OF LIFE.

THERE'S a right way, and there's a left way, and there is, also, a middle way. The latter course is apparently the most defined, for meet a decent people in the course of the day, and the chances are that eleven out of the twelve will, if you ask them, "Which are you going on?" instantly reply, "Oh! middling, thank you." There are some middle men in this world than any others.

The other day, one John Double was convicted of bigamy under extenuating circumstances, and sentenced to one month's imprisonment. That was not much; but still, if Double is worthy of his name, has he not a right to have two wives?

"The reason why ladies' watches are made of the diminutive size they are, is because time is generally such a very small object in a lady's eyes.

ODE TO MY WIFE'S MILLINER.

Dearer to me than I dared to think:
Dearer to me than the flowering Pink!
Dearer to me than many a Rose
Of the little Milliners now full blown.
Yet, When she sends me for her bill to call,
Then, then I found she was dearer than all.

LITERARY NOTICE.—Books for every Month.—The Bankers' Book, illustrated by the Bank of England. The Bankers' motto, "The times are out of joint." "Some suits for a Barrister, with a long account of the Same," by our own Tailor.

"Masters and mistresses are fond of calling every one 'the best servants or life.' We are extremely curious to know what servants are in the habit of calling their masters and mistresses? Depend upon it, it is something extremely endearing!

If the clerk were to burn a pastille in church, what would be the effect?—That the congregation would be incensed, and the parson in a fume.

A CONTRADICTION IN TERMS.—The very bluntest observations are often pointed.

SUBSTITUTE FOR EAU SUCRE.—Take a quantity of chalk, and sweeten it with charcoal.

A man attains his majority at twenty-one, but it is difficult to say when a woman attains hers. There are different opinions on the subject. For instance, whoever heard of a lady spoken of as being "under age?"

USEFUL FAMILY RECIPES.

To Stuff a Hen.—First cook the bird; next then invite him to your table, and stuff him with all the good things that you are able. In pressing them upon him do not be rebuffed, and if your heir be young he will soon be nicely stuffed.

To Dish a Bore.—Invite your bore to dinner, and, as the usual invitations must be kept to be sure to come, just drop a casual hint that you intend to have some turtle. This you will be certain to forget to order, and if you tell your cook to send up nothing in its place, and then let your bore sit down to a cold shoulder of mutton, with no pudding to follow, you will find his speech an arrow-minded one.

Economic Curse.—Cut away as much of your corns as you are able, then place your kitchen poker in the fire, and when it is white hot, apply it gently ready to each corn in succession, until you feel quite certain that they are all removed.

QUEER QUERIES.

Ought a pair of trousers which have been obtained on credit to be considered as breaches of trust?

When a man happens to speak with a quiver in his voice, is it right that his speech-an-arrow-minded could?

Would a promissory note which is made payable at sight be a legal tender to an inmate of a blind asylum?

PLAIN TRUTHS FOR PLAIN PEOPLE.

Clean is nothing unless it is played on the square.

Small talk is like small beer—little of it goes a very great way.

Love talk, unlike the pure truth, is good for nothing when drawn from the well.

Time is money, that is, but no man of the name of Smith likes being joked about it.

Talking of dogs, the late Mr. Job Caudle was wont to remark, in his quaint way, that children, that Ma's tiffs were utterly, destructive of Pa's time.

Never interrupt ladies when speaking—you may beg of something to be allowed to finish the sentence.

To the Editor.—Sir, I am about to write a letter on this rule, is it perhaps where one of the interlocutors is a Solicitor-at-Law.

THE NEAREST APPROACH TO THE MILLENNIUM.—If we would only love others one half as much as we love ourselves, what a happy world it would be!

Pearls are found in oysters, and oysters rarely cost more than a shilling a dozen, but still it strikes us that a man would have to go out to a pretty considerable extent before he could expect to meet with a single pearl.

At Abbotsford a little child's cradle is shown, not as belonging to the great poet, but as being actually Sir Walter's Cot!

Mrs. Grundy says she can't abear that nasty prize-fighting, because it sometimes occasions the employment of Lynn Wiggins.

A COMMERCIAL TRUTH.—Money, like a boot, when it's tight, is extremely trying.

EXTRAVAGANCE IN DISTRESSED LIFE.—When pretty women are in at the door, the Turkey carpet hangs out of the window.

POOR DYING.—Why is a selfish man a good Christian? Because he loves his neat-money that is, himself.

A short time ago there was in vogue a hand-dress called the sugar-loaf bonnet. Young ladies generally considered it a sweet thing.

DOMESTIC ECONOMY.—The best thing you can do with measly pork is to cure it.

Grow before meat—as the young lady said when she heard herself too tall to be swallow.

CURE FOR BALDNESS.—Onions rubbed frequently on the head are said to restore the hair. They will certainly make it grow strong.

RETURN OF VETERAN VOLUNTEERS ON FURLOUGH.—[From a Drawing by Mr. Daniel R. Knight.]

THE GREAT STORM IN THE WEST.

THE Western papers come to us full of the most thrilling accounts of the recent great snow-storm in the West, which covered an area of three thousand miles, and was of unparalleled severity. Those who were completely buried against the extremities of cold easily avoided the stinging punishment of this great calamity; but what hurricanes could be between it and exposed poverty! The recital of the sufferings of those on board the Western trains is peculiarly affecting. The Chicago Times of the 3d instant tells the story of a single train on its way to that city, and the fearful extremities to which it was reduced. The page is one we give as illustration representing the disastrous incident.

The Michigan Central, due at Chicago at half past 10 o'clock in the evening, reached with considerable difficulty for seven miles—a distance which it was able to reach only at a crawl, the next morning, when the train plunged into an immense drift, which barred all further progress. The situation was one of great peril, and the only hope of rescue lay in the arrival of the Michigan Southern train, which must cross the track of the Central head at a distance of four hundred yards from where the train was imbedded. But who could tell but that this expected train might also be in a like situation? Over a hundred passengers occupied the three passenger cars, and many of them were women and children, besides two wounded soldiers. The fires were almost out, and it not replenished there was no escape from a frozen death. The wood was the only element for the emergency, and, digging through snow-banks ten feet in depth, found some few rails, which they brought on board for fuel. But out of this momentary relief arose a fresh disaster. The widest door of the wood-house being burning, one son brought the stoves and pipes to a red heat, and the roof of one of the cars soon caught fire above. What was to be done? If the flames were not put down every car was doomed, as it was impossible to remove the passengers. The question of life or death rested between the strength of the passengers and the fire. Men, women and children fought the flames with snow, until at length they were thoroughly subdued, when, after the necessary and ornamental bookbinder for the murdered man. Through his influence, not only brother, but the two younger brothers, Ralph and Gerald, received into the same establishment, and worked under him at the bookbinding. Gerald, however, left after a certain time to time, until George could furnish the cottage he had taken, which was somewhat larger and better than Ralph's, and contained a set of rooms and fastidious tastes, which had been cultivated and fostered by the beauty of our employments. Besides, George was a bachelor, without some relative to ask, and though the murdered man was always considered very close and miserly, still he had business sense enough to pay well for the labor he received, and by which George brought repute and money to his establishment.

The last embroidery I ever traced was an altar-cloth of crimson velvet, upon which I had just finished working the letters "I. H. S." with rays of golden glory for the sacred name. Ralph Denning rushed in, ghastly and almost breathless, and followed closely by a policeman. He said, though his white lips scarcely moved, that my father, that old Mr. Saxon had been found dead in the paper-room, and that Willie was missing. Though his voice shook, he spoke distinctly enough to me, police-man could check him, as if to give me a hint to conceal any thing I knew. But I knew nothing. All the money missing had been in a bank-note, and on urgent want of a stitching-woman, but he also required one who would live in the house, as his family were in the country for the winter; and that no person who had applied for the place would consent to that arrangement. To me, on the contrary, it contained a promise of success, which I seized instantly.

"Sir," I said, "I know all the circumstances; but I am willing to live there, and I shall be willing to agree to your terms. I am not easily frightened; and I have been used to living in a house alone for many years."

He seemed relieved by my words and steady tone; but he regarded me with a slight air of surprise and curiosity, owing to my being only a very ordinary person, dressed in the plainest garb of a work-woman. Such terms he proposed were liberal enough, and I agreed to them; the spot; only stipulating him to let me look over the work-rooms and dwelling-place. Mr. Saxon called his assistant to take charge of the shop, and then led the way himself. The house was empty of furniture, save a few articles of the most plain kind. It was to inhabit, and in a kind of office for Mr. Saxon's use directly behind the shop. Passing through the empty chambers—we used the terms he proposed over and entered the binding-room, a large, low, unceiled workshop, containing an old unused printing-press, and the binding-stone and tools that fatal attic, where the daylight lingered some half-hour after it had forsaken the streets below; and amidst the countless pages of blank paper, wondered whether any of them would ever be employed in sending forth the haunting secret to the world. These walls which I could touch; yonder eye-like window with its beam of disclosing light; those bed sheltered and alone upon the murderer in his deed, as they sheltered and shone upon me. This dead and secret closet, lying in accumulated darkness like a lurking-place for crime, what could not it tell us were the oppressive silence of the tainted attic once broken? The deep shadows always dwelling in the corners and on the steep rafters were only a degree less ghastly, for they seemed still to curtain it, than, the murderous scene itself; yet they were there, as a constant reminder will before my eyes, from morning till evening.

At first there was been expectation to keep me up. Every morning, when I heard George Denning's foot upon the stair, my heart beat with the hope that to-day he would break through his awful reserve. Every evening, as he tarried until all the work-men had left the premises, sometimes lingering and loitering about with a restless step and uncertain air, I felt certain that now he was about to speak. All day long he was in the same room with me. I could look at my moment into his set face, or compel him to reply to my questions about the work; but it was not possible to tear this secret from him after he had sealed it down in his unseen heart. It always seemed so near to me, so close to my possession; not a minute but it was in his power to utter it into my bewildering ears, but no coercing, no supplication of mine could force that minute, or that utterance to come. With a dreary fellowship of despair and bitter regret, we were stifling day after day the love, which had been more the steady and long-tried affection of a man and woman than the fond fancy of a boy and girl. There was in his manner a grave and sufficiently-slight, but also a hopeless silence. It was as if some mute, mar-tirelom had created a knowledge that was essential to me, and I could read at times a faint hint of it in its troubled eyes, but could never hear it in its urgent tongue.

After twelve months of this desperate conflict between us, I was told he was going to be married. The girl was young, silly, pretty creature, who took a fancy to him, and did all the wooing perceivingly herself. The knowledge of it in the way of gossip from the other workmen; but he told me himself a day or two before his wedding, speaking in a low and trembling voice, while his face was turned away from me over his work. I had nothing to say, and my silence provoked him. He threw down his tools, and drew nearer to my table, but slowly and doubtingly.

"Have you no pity?" he cried, with an undertone of suppressed fierceness: "you are sacrificing yourself and me for a wild fancy. I have no secret to tell you; yet you haunt this place with your pale, sickly face, till I shall rather see the ghost of my dead man himself. Rachel, I will marry you now, if you will have me. Or I will pay your passage over to America, if you'd leave this place. Do not torment me with your everlasting presence."

"No," I said; these twelve months my suspicion has been proving, and I'll remain here till I've proved it. Maybe I am ordained to be the avenger of that murder, and I shall find it out in time; in the appointed time. Marry you, George Denning? Marry you, when you know, and I know, that there is a guilty secret on your soul, perhaps even to the crime of murder? We are fellow-workpeople, and we will remain so till the end comes. If there is no consciousness of sin in you, you will at least tolerate my presence."

"I can not," he groaned, "I can not!" and he strode across the floor, and mounted the winding staircase into the paper - room, where he remained during the rest of the day, being busy, as it seemed, with the crowded rooms of paper, with which our present employer overstocked himself until the attic was filled to the roof. I made an errand once to follow him, and found him toiling, with all his great strength, at arranging the heavy packages; and when the time for leaving work came, and he passed through the binding-room where I was waiting for me, he looked darker and haggard with exhaustion. During the past winter I had left off lighting my fire in the kitchen, choosing to sit by the one kept burning in the workroom; and all that night I fancied I heard again the heavy sounds of his day's toil in the attic overhead.

He was married on a Sunday, and came back to work the next day, not allowing himself a full silly young wife even a brief holiday; and once, when in the folly of the first month of marriage she made some effort to follow him to his work-shop, she went home in tears from his stern chiding. I thought his marriage would not touch me; yet it made a sad difference. Hitherto there had been a subtle hope underlying all my suspicion, that the secret was less deadly than I feared, so that once known to me by the extenuating circumstances there might still be a possibility of loving him again, but its confession or its discovery now could never remain so. That was over; and only for Willie's sake, who wrote piteous and heart-broken letters from his place of banishment, I would persevere to the end. A new form of my life began, with no hope in it; only a feverish anxiety in its stead. We were together day after day; more together than he and his wife. As I sat at my sewing-press, stitching the sheets that he bound into books, there was both the perpetual consciousness of the other's presence. Almost every word that varied the quiet of that dreary room was spoken by his voice or mine. Few footsteps crossed the floor save ours. Every movement of the one was heard, seen, felt by the other. I had only to glance aside from my press, and my eye caught his face, grim and stony, yet with flashes of despair under my scrutiny. It was necessary for him to speak to me often, to give instruction or to ask questions about my work, and his voice always faltered as he spoke, but never changed in tone as it did if he were compelled to utter my name. On my side I was very calm, but always watching. Whenever he mounted the corner staircase his last glance showed him that I was noticing and listening to every movement. I knew every expression of his face, and every tone of his voice, so as to measure accurately every emotion that thrilled through his heart and soul. Sometimes for a few words from the pages under my hand, or by a softly sung verse —he used to love my singing—I'd come hymn of pity, burst and tenderness, I could read in his stern features quiver like those of a child in dread of punishment. At him come a day in the middle of the morning, I was seated at my press before him; and in the evening he left me still sitting by side the work-counter. There was no interval of his working life, the daily hours of toil in which he earned his bread, but I was beside him, haunting him—the embodiment of his secret suspicion, set against him as a living sign of an unuttered and as yet undefined accusation.

But this was not all. From his early youth George had been a member of a Methodist congregation, holding a somewhat honorable position among them; and in his religious life I was with him, at his side; noticing, listening, catching up every word he suffered to fall from his lips. All the professions required of a man that were sealed up for from the wrath to come; and if ever hopeless wretches needed to escape from coming wrath, he, George Denning, was one, and I, Rachel Ashley, was another. In our weekly meetings, where each in turn gave an account of his inner life during the past week, I, placed with George, where each in turn gave an account of his inner life during the past week, I, placed with George, where my face could be fixed upon him in that circle where all else sat with closed or downcast eyes, while he gave utterance to his soul's trouble, communplace empty words he dared to speak before me, let his heart burn within him as it would. I was the monitor of his self-condemnation, the dead image of a living fellowship. Twice he broke out into wild, ungovernable lamentations, full of accusing bitterness against me, when others who join in every nerve, and left him without strength or speech; while it was in my power, by a chance statement read here and there, some awful threatening, some dread suggestive verse which hinted at an unknown sin, to have set his pale face in fear, and his quivering conviction, while his strong frame heaved with groans he dared not utter.

But the bitterness of all his—scarcely more has than mine. Alas for the dreary dying away of all the hope and bloom of womanhood! Only seven years of loneliness and forgetfulness, and the seventeen remaining burdened with one maddening thought. I marveled to myself, as day after day I dredged at my task, that I had ever fancied that possessed me against this man, who had been the object of my most tender love. Was it he and I who had wandered hand in hand by the quiet dusk or sleeping moonlight, with low-toned voices and twined hands and half stolen kisses—was it he and I, truth, and love, and confidence had been together? Or was it not some dreamy Paradise, some deception of my crazed brain? Then I scarcely ventured to look at him, lest I see his face looking at me; now it was he whose eyelids fell before my glance, and who turned aside his head and shrunk away from my approach. Even when, as years rolled on, I saw the strong frame showing tokens of early age and incurable decline from the imprisoning air of his mind, I permitted no relenting from my fell purpose. I was rather jealous lest disease should snatch from me this wavasting man, who had stolen my love, and hurt the secret for which I had sacrificed all my womanliness, and for which my brother yet pined in miserable banishment. I also rejoiced in the agonies of despair before this speechless possessor of a secret that had robbed me of all the hopes and joys and love of life.

But it came to pass that after seven years of ceaseless watching, when I had grown old and worn, from into a mere shadow of the substance of my condition, there awoke within me one Eastertide a strange and vehement desire. Through my native town, where I had left no trace of myself, except a vague rumor that I was soon going to join my brother in America, I found myself on my return to take holiday from the eve of Good Friday until Easter Monday, and started forth a gray, nerveless, hollow-eyed woman, to enjoy the sensation of the solitary house into the noise and bustle of the world. Once more, with shaking heart, I trod the doorway of my long-shut-up home. I had left behind me there the eyes and whispers of our two brothers and sisters; and once more I stood before the threshold crossed by my mother's feet and those upon paralytic Sunday evenings I had watched Willie and George going away with many backward glances and gestures of farewell. I had left behind me a home, I'd empty, and deserted like the house I came from, and that I might have wandered alone through the rooms again; but there was the same old familiar window, and the shadows of flitting figures upon the lighted curtains, and I turned away to seek the only spot I had visited for seven years.

It was one of a row of poor alms-houses built amidst the graves of the church-yard, and under the shadow of the church tower. A short flight was trodden down over the little mounds, and I was guided across it by the glimmering from the windows of the small dwellings. Again I turned on a threshold, listening; for I did not know that my father and aged friend was still living, and my heart bounded as the sound of a cheery voice, shrill with years, like the high notes of an old flute, came like music to my ear. It was a voice I remembered well, if the aged woman had done forever with fear or distrust, and was ready to welcome the whole world to her poor hearth.

"Charlotte," I said, faintly, "I am Rachel Holland." Don't you know me? Willie Holland's sister?"

In a moment the withered hand had caught mine, and led me in from the dark night, and seated me in her own chair by the fireside, with many muttered words of delight and amazement. The poor desolate old creature rejoiced over me as if I had been her daughter, and spread her scanty meal for me with the finest edge of hospitable gladness. For a little while, as I looked round the tiny room, unchanged since the time when as a child I came here on busy days at home, to be out of my mother's way, and had played at keeping house, compelling my old dame-woman to leave the work to me and let me wait upon her—for a little while I felt that if but one more shade of forgetfulness would come over my brain, I could be content. I could be once again a buoyant, thoughtless girl. It was not till Charlotte settled herself on the colder side of the hearth and began assiduously from behind her spectacles that the bitterness of the present returned.

"Has thee come across the seas?" she asked, with a woman's keen glance at my poor dress.

"No; I've been at work," I answered; "I've never been in Wales yet."

"Thee has been ailing," she continued, "and fallen behindhand, maybe, with the world. Why did thee not come home to me for a bit, Rachel? Eh! I've thought of thee many a night and day, thee and Willie. Lass, Willie never did that; there's nothing he is said it out loud to satisfy myself; little Willie never could do. But it will be made clear, Rachel, in its own time."

Weeping, she rose from beside me; but I wept then, with old Charlotte's shriveled arm round my neck and her broken voice speaking homely words of comfort. Placed upon my vacancy came ever, and a strange sense of soothing; in being once again cared for and wept with. The alms-woman's simple, cheery attendance contained with, with those rows of polished tins, the sanded floor, the low bed, where I lay down to fitful slumbers, on a level with the window-sill, and looked at the church-yard, and its quiet graves asleep in the moonlight—all seemed to restore me to my childhood. Only now and then, in the midnight silence, there crossed my fancy visions of the empty, echoing, haunted house left behind, with the dead man in the attic, and the locked-up, glass, and ghostly feet gliding to and fro with a silence worse than the sounding of my own steps.

In the morning—the morning of the emblematic passover from the house of bondage—I went to church with Charlotte, and found that I had a chance upon the seats set apart for the alms-women. There was a sense of freedom, a deliverance from a corroding secret, in my joy. I could pray; for George Denning was not in the same house of prayer. Before me, beneath the fair white lines both which crossed and connected elements, was the altar-cloth of crimson velvet with its sacred initials, and the golden lab round them, which had been made by the slender fingers on that horrible doomday that had fallen upon us. The "I. H. S." was just beneath the edge of the snowy cover, and I saw the golden ravage side of the solemn service. Dimly and vaguely, but irresistibly, these words had hold of my thoughts, "Jesus, the Saviour of men."

A profound peace—"peace on earth, and goodwill toward all"—possessed me as I left the church with the aged woman, and while the alms-women, in her simple faith, remained for the concluding service, I paced to and fro in the church-yard, past the graves of my parents, with this peace deepening, mingled a strong yearning for action, for returning once more to my house of bondage, and freeing myself at once and forever from the doleful captivity. Even the thought that I should set George Denning free was pleasant to me, for here, close to the lanes and fields where I had played as children, and loitered as lovers, I remembered him as he was before the sear and blight came upon our lives. He, too, should be free on this day of accomplished sacrifice. He also should be forgiven, if he knew not what he did.

The alms-house the aged woman gave me leave to depart; though my face, long set into sorrow, was beginning to soften into a shadowy smile. The day was fine and bright, when I returned to the streets through which I had crept, a bard and desolate woman, the night before; but I had tasted love again, human and divine. I had stooped to taste it, and in my hidden heart I blessed the groups of happy beings whom I passed. The bells of the churches chimed together overhead, making a gladsome music all the way along, as I pressed on to the central street, where my father's house was waiting for me, with its tainted attic and empty chambers. Under a lamp I met George Denning's silly young wife, with a child in her arms, and talking gayly with some companions; but though my heart stopped in its rapturous throbbing for a moment, I moved gently on with my head, and did not permit her laughter, for little mirth had she with her stricken husband. She might have been coming from the house I had left forever, and it rose before me on the opposite side of the street, with its steep roof overtopping all the others; and there in the little dormer-window, unchanged, like a feeble glowworm, there shone the palest, faintest mote of light from within, just visible in the gathering darkness of the night.

I understood the tell-tale beam, and a sudden tingling ran through all my veins. At the very moment it was lighted I comprehended the purpose of my life. I was to receive its fulfillment. I entered the house as silently as death. The smouldering fire upon my hearth was not kindled by me, nor the light for the sounder—at slippers, with which I could steal unheard upon the busy laborer, who was at work upon an universal holiday. Doors that would be creaked under less careful and less steady fingers turned noiselessly upon their hinges as they admitted me; and the smoldering floors gave no warning of my stealthy approach. Only my heart beat, and my pulses throbbed clamorously in my ears, until I had to tarry for a minute underneath the attic, where there was the dull heavy thud of weights and measures being thrown down in bulk, crept partly up the winding stairs, and stood still in the deep shadows where I could see him, myself unseen, at the furthest end of the crowded room. He had been toiling long, for the sweat and white of exhaustion were upon his haggard face, and his white lips were pinched for breath; but still he labored, bearing piles of paper, upon which the dust of years had gathered, out of the dark closet into a scanty space he had cleared, upon the very spot where the murdered man had lain. Each packet he unwrapped and examined carefully, laying it down with a growing pallor and a deeper sigh, and then replacing behind the dark closet door which hid him from my sight. At last he staid so long that I stole on warily over the piled-up papers to see opened door of the secret closet. He had sunk to his knees, and was holding to the feeble light of his candle a yellow page, with writing almost effaced by time—the one stained paper among thousands of blank and empty sheets. His thin and wasted fingers grasped it with a desperate clutch, but he trembled throughout his whole frame, until he could not steady himself to read it. One step forward and I stood beside him, leaning over him, and in a moment detecting that the time-stained lines were in his own handwriting.

"My God!" he gasped, as he felt the touch of my dress, and looked up straight into my bending face; but his painful breath failed him, and he fell prostrate at my feet, only drawing under him the paper which he grasped so desperately. I stood motionless, for before me were passing, in dreary procession, all the years; every day that I had dragged through waiting for this moment; my seared life, and months, and years, crossed in funeral pageant across my bewildered memory, until had all came the vague and dim but heavenly vision, when on the morning of this day I bowed my head in prayer, and, lifted, was my soul, my beautiful thought, "I. H. S." and heard a secret voice in my soul whispering, "Jesus, the Saviour of men."

Kneeling by his side, and stooping over him, and laying my hand gently upon the gray head at my feet—

"George, I came back to tell you I would leave this place to-day, and now," I said, "to-day and yesterday Heaven has shown me that there is yet love for me. I have waited for vengeance too long. Now it is made clear to me that I am worse than you, even if you are a murderer; for I have given your destruction body and soul."

"That is true!" he cried, hoarsely, though his voice was very low; "help me, Rachel; I can not rise alone. Help me up."

I lifted him up in my arms and rested his head against me, fanning the stifled air about us to bring him back from his quivering faint. As he revived, he came back a little I supported him over the scattered packets, and opened the narrow window for the refreshing night air to breathe upon us. The streets below were dark and quiet, as with a Sabbath rest from labor, and no illumination rose up from open doors. The stars were come out in their glory, and the moon was shining, though we could not see her own dusters gleaming still the written paper. Yet the dimness of the changes that had come and trouble had made; and in that confused glimmering the features I looked upon were the features of my playmate of two years gone by, my betrothed husband, to whom I had linked myself for life.

"It is fit for me to die here," he muttered; "I have only fifteen inches more and I shall be at fit for me to be buried off at last. Take the paper, Rachel; it is found to late. There, take it; it is no paper to read now. You have waited for it, Rachel."

He thrust the paper in my hand, making a helpless effort to close my fingers upon it, but I let it flow and fall unheeding on the floor. There was no thought in my mind but of the days of old, when he and I were boy and girl together. This hideous secret would be over now, and I should wake to his morning call under my window, and my fearful fancies would be half-laughed and half-caressed away.

"I'd no thought to do it," he said, speaking painfully: "it was only a bond of mine for a hundred pounds, and he never let me rest. I was fitting up my house for Rachel, and he was threatening me with a prison. I was in my mine that night in the closet yonder, and when he found that I had seen him go to it—it was late, and he believed every one in the house to be fast asleep at me like a madman. I never meant to murder him."

The moon had gone under a cloud; and behind us the candle in the attic had burned out, but his face was only a blank whiteness, with two burning eyes in which the light of life glimmered fitfully; and his hands moved slowly and feebly, as if even to glance round the attic, where the evening wind was fluttering and rustling many a sheet of paper, until the whole place seemed alive with restless sounds and movements. I drew his head down again upon my bosom, and laid my cheek against his clammy forehead.

"I was so strong," he murmured, clenching his feeble fingers, "I did not know that death could be so feeble. Rachel, I wrote a confession—it is there on the floor; take care of it when I am gone —and I placed it in a room of which nobody would be opened shortly, only giving me time for a sure escape. But Willie had come back to seek me, and had seen and met fled, for my sake and yours. If the lad had been convicted I would have saved him at the price of my own life; but there was nothing against him, and there would have been every thing against me. When we searched for a trace of the murderer I hid the paper far back in the closet under hundreds of other papers, thinking to secure it when a safe time came. But you have been ever watching me."

Down in the quiet street below there came the patter of children's feet upon the pavement, and the chatter of children's voices. The dying man heard them, and tried to raise himself.

"I have had children," he sighed, "but they never laughed and clapped their hands for me. Another morning it came from their voices to look upon your face, Rachel; and there was always a curse in it. Now the sin of the father will be visited upon them. You have shut me out from prayer and penitence; you have been a living doom against me. Yet I am dying at last in your arms."

While he whispered, the words falling with difficulty and pain from his faltering tongue, there came to me once more a sense of ineffable peace and love brooding over us. By some subtle and finer influence the dying man shared it, and opened his eyes again to meet mine looking down upon him with that mysterious renewal of affection. All the long-known consolations, which had been to us only as a very pleasant song, or as good failings for others from which we ourselves were shut out, entered into our souls in the hour of their extremest need. The pale evening star, steady but very far away, pointed the beginning of the immeasurable distance that was about to separate us; and from my lips, lying close to his dull ear, there fell, almost unconsciously to myself, the words that had dwelt all day in my heart, "Jesus, the Saviour of men."

I descended into the Easter streets from the fatal room, which had been the starting-point of both the murdered man and his murderer, into the boundless eternity. No one knew that I had been there; and without distinct aim or design, only hiding in my bosom the sullied and time-worn paper, I wandered back to the poor alms-house. There, with my face turned to the quiet church-yard, which offered me no refuge, though I longed for it greatly, I lay still and silent through weeks of illness, with the treasured paper in his handwriting lying under my pillow, or held for safety in my feverish hands. Afterward I remember, though vaguely, voyaging over miles of voiceless waters, and hailing Willie, not a heart-broken exile, but happy in a new house, and renouncing the land of his troubles and mine. But I was restless there, and must return; and returning found that the old empty house, with its death-stained attic, had been pulled down as an accursed dwelling, and not one stone of it remained upon another. Yet for me at every Eastertide it is erected again, and the tragedy of my life is acted out once more. Whatever else I forget, or whatever else my mind refuses to receive, there abides with me ever and ever the memory of my fell, remorseless purpose, and of my cruel hatred, darker in its sin than George Denning's unmeditated crime.

HON. LELAND STANFORD, PRESIDENT OF CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD.

EX-GOVERNOR STANFORD, OF CALIFORNIA.

WE present our readers this week with an accurate Portrait of LELAND STANFORD, President of the Central Pacific Railroad of California, and late Governor of that State. The Company of which Mr. Stanford is President was organized in 1861. In 1862 the Pacific Railroad Bill was passed by Congress; and under the provisions of this law the Company are pushing their end of the proposed road across the Sierra Nevada Mountains into the Great Basin, with the permission to continue it until it shall meet and unite with the Eastern section. We need not speak of the importance of this road, which connects the East with the gold-producing region on the coast of the Pacific, and will only say that Governor Stanford has been intimately connected with the enterprise from the first, having at an early period appreciated its value, and having devoted to it much of his time and energy.

THE STEAMER "BRAZIL" FIRED UPON BY GUERRILLAS.

ON this page our readers will find a sketch representing an attack made upon the steamer Brazil by a band of guerrillas on the banks of the Mississippi, the 11th of last December. The scene is two miles below Rodney. Two ladies were killed in this attack, and three men wounded. The event has been one of frequent occurrence for several months, though it is hoped measures are already being taken by Government to prevent its repetition.

WILLIAM M. THACKERAY.

WILLIAM MAKEPEACE THACKERAY, one of the great English novelists (whose portrait we give on page 61), was born in Calcutta, in 1811, and died in London on the 24th of December, 1863. His father was a civil officer in the service of the East India Company, and died when Thackeray was in his seventh year. The boy was soon after carried to England, but he never forgot the scenes of his earliest childhood, and in his novels the characters and circumstances of Anglo-Indian life vividly reappear. Mr. Jos. Sedley, the Begum, and Colonel Newcome, one of the tenderest and most beautiful characters in fiction, all—as it were—smell of bamboo and camphor trunks. On his way to England the ship touched at St. Helena, and the boy, strolling in the charge of his attendant, saw the Emperor Napoleon, an incident which was always fresh in his memory, and to which he alludes in one of his lectures upon the Georges. In London he was sent to the Charter House School, which he has described in "The Newcomes;" and went afterward to the University at Cambridge, which he left without a degree. His recollections of university life supplied him with the material of delightful chapters in "Pendennis." Soon after leaving Cambridge he came into possession of a pretty fortune of twenty thousand pounds; and to pursue his studies in Art, for which he had much love but less talent, he lived upon the Continent for several years.

THE STEAMER "BRAZIL," FIRED UPON BY GUERRILLAS ON THE BANKS OF THE MISSISSIPPI.

THE RUSSIAN FLEET AT THE UNITED STATES NAVY YARD, MARE ISLAND, CALIFORNIA.

Abandoning the profession of an artist, however, in which he felt that he was not likely to excel, and losing much of his fortune by unlucky speculations, he returned to England and devoted himself to literature. His first essays were in the London Times, where he wrote a paper upon Fielding, whom he always considered the great master of English fiction; and he contributed to Fraser's Magazine a great variety of essays and sketches, sparkling with exuberant humor and satire, under the names of Michel Angelo Titmarsh and George Fitz Boodle. The first, which was his favorite pseudonym, is itself a stroke of his peculiar humor, for he had a Michel-Angelesque nose, and his frame was large and tall, and he assaulted with tremendous vigor what are called the little things of society. In one of the author-portraits of Fraser called "Our Contributors" (which is reproduced in Bohn's edition of Father Prout's Reliques), there is the head which we publish in this paper—a score of years younger, but with the same clear, penetrating expression—as of a mind on the scent—and the same unshrinking sincerity and humor—a Saxon Rabelais. Yet so little impression was made by Thackeray's earlier writings that Horne's Spirit of the Age, published in 1848, which contains sketches of many authors now forgotten, does not even mention Michel Angelo Titmarsh.—

THE LATE WILLIAM MAKEPEACE THACKERAY.

"Jeames's Diary" and "The Snob Papers," published in Punch, to which he was one of the most constant and the cleverest contributor, made his reputation.

But "Vanity Fair," begun serially in 1847, the preface of which is dated June 28, 1848, and for which he found a publisher with difficulty, established Thackeray's position among the chief English authors.

"Vanity Fair" was followed by "Pendennis" and "Henry Esmond," and by the Lectures upon the English Humorists, which were delivered in 1851, to great and delighted audiences in London and elsewhere in Great Britain, and subsequently in this country. They were, in many respects—as delivered by him—the most delightful lectures ever heard. His American visit was altogether agreeable and profitable to him. Upon his return to England he published "The Newcomes," the ripest and finest of his works, and the best novel of English society since Fielding's "Tom Jones." This was followed by the Lectures upon the Georges, which were delivered in Great Britain and in America, to which he made a second visit in 1855–6. They were even more popular at home than the earlier series.

Upon his second return to England, mindful of Addison and Prior, Thackeray was not unwilling to try his political chances, and offered himself as a liberal Parliamentary candidate for Oxford in 1857. He was defeated by a majority of 67. He immediately began the serial publication of "The Virginians," a story of English and American life during the Revolution. But his heart was clearly not in the work, and it was less successful than its predecessors. In January, 1860, the Cornhill Magazine began under his editorship. He remained in charge of it for two years, and contributed to it "Lovel the Widower," "The Adventures of Philip," and the charming essays lately collected, and the last book of Thackeray, called "The Roundabout Papers." A new novel by him was already announced in the Cornhill, but on the day before Christmas, 1863, after but a day's illness, he was found dead in his bed, not having completed his fifty-third year.

We but mention here a few names and dates, which are of permanent interest and significance in English literature. Elsewhere in these pages we endeavor to say something of the character and genius of a great author, of a tender, true, and generous man.

PARIS FASHIONS FOR JANUARY, 1864.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

MORTON'S GOLD PENS are now sold at the same prices as before the commencement of the war; this is entirely owing to the Manufacturer's improvements in machinery, his present large Retail Business and Cash-in-Advance System; for, until he commenced advertising, his business was done on Credit and strictly with the Trade.

The Morton Gold Pens are the only ones sold at old prices, as the makers of all other gold pens charge the Premium on the Gold, Government Tax, &c.; but Morton has in no case changed his prices, Wholesale or Retail.

Of the great assortment sent by mail to all parts of the world during the past few years, not one in a thousand has failed to reach its destination in safety; showing that the Morton Gold Pen can be obtained by any one, in every part of the world, at the same price, postage only excepted.

Reader, you can have an enduring, always ready, and reliable Gold Pen, exactly adapted to your hand and style of writing, which will do your writing vastly cheaper than Steel Pens: and at the present almost universal High-Premium Price of everything, you can have a Morton Gold Pen cheaper, in proportion to the labor spent upon it and material used, than any other Gold Pen in the World. If you want one, send "The Pen is Mightier than the Sword," in next colonna.

"THE PEN IS MIGHTIER THAN THE SWORD."

THE GOLD PEN—THE BEST OF ALL PENS.

MORTON'S GOLD PENS,

THE BEST PENS IN THE WORLD.

On receipt of any of the following sums in Cash, the Subscriber will send by return mail, or otherwise, as directed, a Gold Pen or Pens—suitable for him, after describing to description, viz.:

GOLD PENS WITHOUT CASES.

For 25 cents, the Magic Pen; for 38 cents, the Lucky Pen; for 50 cents, the Always-Good Pen; for 75 cents, the Elegant Pen; and for $1, the Excelsior Pen.—These Pens are not considered, for Mailing, a size to number 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 respectively.

THE SAME PENS IN SILVER-PLATED EXTENSION PENCILS.

For 50 cents, the Magic Pen; for 75 cents, the Lucky Pen; for $1, the Always-Good Pen; for $1 25, the Elegant Pen; and for $1 50, the Excelsior Pen.

The Pencils are Gold-Finished, Good-Writing Gold Pens, with Iridomin Points, the average wear of every one of which will far outlast a dozen of the best Steel Pens: although they are unwarranted, and, therefore, not exchangeable.

GOLD PENS, WITH GOLD CASES.

The name "A. Morton," "Number," and "Quality," are stamped on the following Pens, and the points are warranted for six months, except against accident.

The Numbers indicate size only: No. 1 being the smallest, No. 6 the largest, adapted for the pocket; No. 4 the standard, and No. 10 the largest Mammoth Gold Pen for the desk.

Long and Medium Nibs of all sizes and qualities. Short Nibs of Numbers 4, 5, 6, and 7, and made only of first quality.

The Long and Short Nibs are fine pointed; the Medium Nibs are Broad, Coarse Handwriting Points. The engravings are fac-similes of the sizes and styles.

FOR GOLD PENS, WITHOUT CASES.

For $0 75 a No. 1 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 2d quality.

For $1 00 a No. 2 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 3d quality.

For $1 25 a No. 3 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 3d quality.

For $1 50 a No. 4 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 3d quality.

For $2 a No. 5 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 2d quality.

For $2 50, a No. 6 Pen; $2 75 a No. 7 Pen; $3 25 a No. 8 Pen; $4 a No. 9 Pen; $5 a No. 10 Pen—all 1st quality.

THE SAME GOLD PENS, IN SILVER EXTENSION CASES, WITH PENCILS.

For $1 50 a No. 1 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 2d quality.

For $1 75, a No. 2 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 3d quality.

For $2 00, a No. 3 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 3d quality.

For $2 50 a No. 4 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 3d quality.

For $3 00, a No. 5 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 2d quality.

For $3 50, a No. 6 Pen, 1st quality.

FOR PENS, ALL FIRST QUALITY, IN SILVER, MOUNTED DESK HOLDERS.

For $3 00 a No. 3 Pen; $3 50 a No. 4 Pen; For $3 75 a No. 6 Pen; for $5 00 a No. 7 Pen.

For $4 00 a No. 8 Pen; $5 00 a No. 9 Pen: and for $6 a No. 10 Pen.

The "Lucky" are pointed with the very best Iridomin Points, carefully selected, and none of this quality are sold with the slightest imperfection which will aid the closest critic and fastidious writer.

The "Always-Good" and "Elegant" are pointed with the very best Iridomin Points, carefully selected, and none of this quality are sold with the slightest imperfection which will aid the closest critic and fastidious writer.

The "Excelsior" are pointed with the very best Iridomin Points, carefully selected, and none of this quality are sold with the slightest imperfection which will aid the closest critic and fastidious writer.

The "Always-Good" Pencils are Gold-Finished, Good-Writing Gold Pens, with Iridomin Points, the average wear of every one of which will far outlast a dozen of the best Steel Pens: although they are unwarranted, and, therefore, not exchangeable.

The "Lucky" Pencils are Gold-Finished, Good-Writing Gold Pens, with Iridomin Points, the average wear of every one of which will far outlast a dozen of the best Steel Pens: although they are unwarranted, and, therefore, not exchangeable.

THE GOLD PENS, WARRANTED SIX MONTHS.

The name "A. Morton," "Number," and "Quality," are stamped on the following Pens, and the points are warranted for six months, except against accident.

The Numbers indicate size only: No. 1 being the smallest, No. 6 the largest, adapted for the pocket; No. 4 the standard, and No. 10 the largest Mammoth Gold Pen for the desk.

Long and Medium Nibs of all sizes and qualities. Short Nibs of Numbers 4, 5, 6, and 7, and made only of first quality.

The Long and Short Nibs are fine pointed; the Medium Nibs are Broad, Coarse Handwriting Points. The engravings are fac-similes of the sizes and styles.

FOR GOLD PENS, WITHOUT CASES.

For $0 75 a No. 1 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 2d quality.

For $1 00 a No. 2 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 3d quality.

For $1 25, a No. 3 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 3d quality.

For $1 50 a No. 4 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 3d quality.

For $2 a No. 5 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 2d quality.

For $2 50, a No. 6 Pen; $2 75 a No. 7 Pen; $3 25 a No. 8 Pen; $4 a No. 9 Pen; $5 a No. 10 Pen—all 1st quality.

THE SAME GOLD PENS, IN SILVER EXTENSION CASES, WITH PENCILS.

For $1 50 a No. 1 Pen, 1st quality; or a No 3 Pen, 2d quality.

For $1 75, a No. 2 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 3d quality.

For $2 00, a No. 3 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 3d quality.

For $2 50 a No. 4 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 3d quality.

For $3 00, a No. 5 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 2d quality.

For $3 50, a No. 6 Pen, 1st quality.

FOR PENS, ALL FIRST QUALITY, IN SILVER, MOUNTED DESK HOLDERS.

For $3 00 a No. 3 Pen; $3 50 a No. 4 Pen; For $3 75 a No. 6 Pen; for $5 00 a No. 7 Pen.

For $4 00 a No. 8 Pen; $5 00 a No. 9 Pen: and for $6 a No. 10 Pen.

The "Lucky" are pointed with the very best Iridomin Points, carefully selected, and none of this quality are sold with the slightest imperfection which will aid the closest critic and fastidious writer.

The "Always-Good" are pointed with the very best Iridomin Points, carefully selected, and none of this quality are sold with the slightest imperfection which will aid the closest critic and fastidious writer.

The "Excelsior" are pointed with the very best Iridomin Points, carefully selected, and none of this quality are sold with the slightest imperfection which will aid the closest critic and fastidious writer.

In regard to the Cheap Gold Pens, I hope I have no very great reason to apologize for them. I have no fear but that, previous to operating his New and Patented Iridomin Process, he could have sold them at Double and Treble Pens, for the price, had the Gold been furnished gratuitously.

Parties ordering must in all instances specify the "name" or the "number" and "quality" of the Pens wanted, and be particular to describe the kind they prefer,—whether of Number, or name of Pen.

All remittances sent by mail in registered letters are at my risk; and to all who send money by mail, and charge for registering, in addition to the price of goods ordered, I will send a Pen of the same value delivery.

Parties sending Gold or Silver will be allowed the full premium on the Gold received.

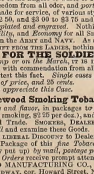
TO CLUBS.—A discount of 10 per cent. will be allowed on sums of $5, of 15 per cent. on $10, and of 20 per cent. on $40. If sent to one address at one time.

Address, A. MORTON,

No. 25 Maiden Lane, New York.

THE "RIDGEWOOD" PATENT

SMOKING CASE.



Most ingenious in its combination of the Metallic Case, containing Pipe and Stem, Matches and Tobacco, with a handsome Tobacco Punch attached, filling the Pipe by a valve, without use of the fingers or waste of Tobacco, the whole wearing freedom from all odor, and portable as a Cane Case. It is made for either of various sizes, at $1 00, $2 00, $2 25, $2 50, and $3 00 to $3 75 and $5 00; the two latter richly plated and engraved, and being excellent Cash, Liability, and Economy for all Smokers, as Home or Abroad, in the Army and Navy, and for all who eat to Friends, as a Grey mare the Laziest, nothing could more completely. FOR THE HOLIDAYS they are in demand. At BANKS, in Camp or on the March, it is invaluable. Sent by mail, or otherwise, to any part of the country, on receipt of price. Address

THE RIDGEWOOD SMOKING TOBACCO,

Of superior quality and flavor, is packed by us to fill the punch about a week's smoking, $2 25 per doz.), and larger sizes for the Trade. Sent by mail, Express, Stages, and Sutlers invited to call and examine these Goods. Circulars sent on application. Address as above.

$\frac{1}{2}$ A half-pound Package of this fine Tobacco, full weight, sent carefully put up by mail, postage paid, on receipt of $1 25. All Orders receive prompt attention.

RIDGEWOOD MANUFACTURING CO.,

Office 429 Broadway, cor. Howard Street, N. Y.

Just what every Family wants. Savage & Co.'s No Chimney Burner for Hand Lamps and Lanterns, burns Kerosene Oil with a brilliant light without chimney, smoke, or odor. Saves 25 per cent. Office 203 Fulton St., N. Y. Agents wanted. Send for circular. Sample sent free for 60 cts. Factory at Newark. Awarded 1st Premium and Medal, 1863.

If the Wonderful Qualities of Brandreth's Pills

were understood, few families would be without

SO GREAT A REMEDY IN THE HOUSE.

This medicine is a certain cure for Sick-Pain, and no person having that terrible disease should for a moment delay their use. Authenticated cures will be furnished all who desire by application at the principal office, Brandreth House, New York.

A lady of 56 was out of health generally: no food agreed with her—she suffered pain in the stomach after eat. ing. All the remedies she took did her no good, until at last she took Brandreth's Pills and she followed for fifteen months, which restored her health completely.

A young lady was obliged to leave school because of a constant severe pain in the region of the heart when she read aloud or spoke, or sang in choirs or walked quickly. Her case was nearly a fatal one, by the remedies employed, of which bleeding was one. But at length she used Brandreth's Pills, which in one year cured her, and now her health is fully restored.

TUMOR OF THE NECK CURED.

A young gentleman had a tumor on the side of his neck, which had been growing for years. It was pronounced a cancer. Dr. Brandreth expressed the opinion that perseverance with his Pills would cure it. They were used according to the printed instructions which accompany each box, and soon the tumor began to give way. In a little over one year, they cured it perfectly, and the gentleman is now in the enjoyment of health and vigor.

Is it any wonder BRANDRETH'S PILLS are so largely patronized?

Principal office, Brandreth House. Sold also at No. 4 Union Square, and by all Dealers. Get new style.

10 for One Dollar.

The finest Portraits At the Lowest Price.

Card Photographs of

Celebrated Literary and each of his Cabinet.—Senators—Statesmen—all the Major-Generals of our country. All other noted soldiers of our Army and Navy, living and dead.

Eminent Men of all Ages.

AUTHORS, ARTISTS,

ACTORS, ACTRESSES,

and all prominent persons, male and female.

Fancy and Miscellaneous Pictures, &c., &c.

Send your orders to the Original Gift-Book Store,

for all Pictures for Albums, and they will be sent free per return of mail, Ten for $1; Single Copies 15 cents.

Address

G. G. EVANS, Publisher,

Philadelphia, Penn.

N. B. A Classified Catalogue of over 2000 different books, copyrighted by myself, will be sent free per return of mail on receipt of Five Cents. SEND FOR IT. Premium certificates of my new Steel Engravings of Watches, Jewelry, Vest Chains, &c., &c., sent on receipt of Ten Cents.

Military and Naval

COLLECTION AND BANKING OFFICE.—SOLDS. BOUNS & CO., No. 2 Park Place, New York, adjust and collect every description of just claims against the Government or States. Hand-Books containing laws, &c., sent by mail, free.

It's all up in Dixie. New Song by TUCKER, Author of "Up in the Country Will be Free." Price 25 cents. Also MEMORY BELLS, by the same author. Price 30 cts. Copies sent by return postage paid. WM. A. FOND & CO., No. 547 Broadway, New York.

Diamond Parlor Watches.

In Round and Side Bases.

66 Courtlandt Street, N. Y.

Head-Quarters for Army Corps, Company, and Division Flag of every size this County Will Produce. For $1, I will send you a Solid Silver Shield, or either Army Corps, Division, or Co. (if with your Name, Regt., and Co. handsomely engraved upon it, or a fine Gold Pen with Extension Case and Pencil, or a neat Gold Pencil Case and Chain, or a California Diamond Ring or Pin, or a Seal Stone Ring; and for $1 50 I will send you a Solid Silver new style CAVALRY Pin, engraved as above. Agents wanted—for 10 or more Pins at one time will be allowed 25 cents each.

E. T. HAYWARD,

Manufacturing Jeweler, 208 Broadway, N. Y.

Sportsmen, Tourists, and Army and Navy Officers.

Powerful and Brilliant Double Glasses.

Portability combined with great power in Field, Marine, Tourists', Opera, and general out-door day and night double perspective glasses, will show distinctly a person known to him at from 2 to 6 miles. Equally good for objects at short distances. The most transparent power to strengthen the sight, and preserve it without the distressing result of frequent change. Catalogue sent by mail, free.

SEMMONDS, Oculists—Optician,

609 Broadway, New York.

Union Playing Cards.

Colonel for King, Goddess of Liberty for Queen, and Major for Jack. 52 enamelled cards in a box. Eagles, Shields, Stars, and Flags are the suits, and you can play all the usual games. Two packs, in a box, mailed free on receipt of $1. The usual discount to the trade. Send for a Circular. Address AMERICAN CARD COMPANY,

650 Broadway, N. Y., or 165 William Street, N. Y.

RHEUMATISM.

USE THE ELECTRO-METALLIC INSOLES, BELTS, AND ARMLETS. GUARANTEED REMEDY FOR RHEUMATISM, COLD FEET, &c. METALLIC INSOLE CO., 497 Broadway, N. Y. Insoles, $1; Belts, $3; Armlets, $1 50 each. Sent by mail for 50 cents additional.

Caution

FROM

The American Watch Company.

It having come to our knowledge that imitations of the American Watch have been put upon the market in great numbers, calculated, by their utter worthlessness, to injure the reputation of our genuine products—to protect ourselves in all cases that prove imposition, we again publish the trade marks by which our Watches may invariably be known.

We manufacture four styles of Watches:

The FIRST has the name

"AMERICAN WATCH CO., Waltham, Mass.," engraved on the inside plate.

The SECOND has the name

"A. APPLETON, CROSBY & CO., Waltham, Mass.," engraved on the inside plate.

The THIRD has the name

"P. S. BARTLETT, Waltham, Mass.," engraved on the inside plate.

All the above styles have the name "American Watch Co." painted on the dial, and are warranted in every respect.

The FOURTH has the name

"WM. ELLERY, Waltham, Mass.," engraved on the inside plate, and is not named on the dial.

All the above described Watches are made of various sizes, and are sold in gold or silver cases, as may be required.

It is hardly possible for us to accurately describe the numerous imitations in which we have alluded. They are usually inscribed with names so nearly approximating our own as to escape the observation of the unaccustomed buyer. Some are represented as made by the "UNION WATCH Co., of Boston, Mass.," which no such company existing. Some are named the "Soldier's Watch," to be sold as our FOURTH or WM. ELLERY grade, usually known as our "SOLDIER'S WATCH;" others are named the "APPLETON WATCH CO.," others the "P. S. BARTLEY," instead of our P. S. BARTLETT, besides many varieties named in such a manner as to convey the idea that they are the veritable productions of the American Watch Company.

A little attention on the part of buyers will protect them from gross imposition.

ROBBINS & APPLETON,

Agents for the American Watch Company.

182 BROADWAY, N. Y.

To Compositors.—Wanted, three strictly first-class Compositors, used to Book-work. Apply to MI. MARSH, Foreman of HARPER & BROTHERS' Composing Room, N. Y.

J. W. EVERETT & CO.,

Will forward to any address, on receipt of order, Photographs from life of any of the prominent

OFFICERS OF THE ARMY AND NAVY,

STATESMEN, DIVINES,

ACTORS, ARTISTS,

FOREIGN CELEBRITIES, ETC., ETC.

99 cents each. $8 per dozen. Postage paid by mail. Address

J. W. EVERETT & CO.

Box 1614. N. Y. City.

$\frac{1}{2}$ Send for a Circular.

$75 A MONTH! I want to hire Agents in every county at $75 a month, expenses paid, to sell my new cheap Family Sewing Machine. Address

S. MADISON, Alfred, Maine.

"THE HUMAN FACE DIVINE," a new system of Physiognomy, Eyes, Ears, Nose, Lips, Mouth, Head, Hair, Forehead, Feet, Skin, Complexion, with all Signs of Character, and How to Read Them," in THE PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL for 1864, now ready. Commences with January number for 1864. Now vol. $1 60 a year. Address FOWLER & WELLS, N.Y.

Attention, Soldiers!

Every soldier should have a NAME WITH HIS NAME MARKED DISTINCTLY upon it. The Subscribers will forward to any address, for Army a solid Silver Badge, with his Name, Company, and Regiment engraved upon it, on receipt of One Dollar. The above cut represents size and style of Badge furnished. It can be fastened to any garment. Address

DROWNE & MOORE,

Manufacturing Jewelers, 208 Broadway, New York.

N. B.—All kinds of Corps and Co. Flags, Emanuel, 16 Red, White, and Blue, by the one, 100, or 1000.

Exterminates Catarrh, Foot and Branch, forever. Price $1. Send stamp for pamphlet. Depot, 613 Broadway, N. Y. NOTICE.—Beware of Counterfeits.

DO YOU WANT LUXURIANT WHISKERS OR MUSTACHES?—My Onguent will force them to grow heavy in six weeks upon the smoothest face without stain or injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post free, to any address, on receipt of an order. R. G. GRAHAM, No. 159 Nassau Street, N. Y.

H. A. HARVEY, 64 Maiden Lane, N. Y.; TWINES. Rope, COVERAGE and Yarn, Steam Packing, Wick, Sail Twine, Oakum, Tarpaulin, Awning, and Tent Lacing Cord and Surgeons' Tow. Writing and Wrapping PAPER. Envelopes and Paper Bags.

HARPER & BROTHERS

Have Just Published:

JOHN MARCHMONT'S LEGACY. A Novel. By M. E. BRADDON, Author of "AURORA FLOYD," "Eleanor's Victory," &c. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

DR. HOOKER'S CHEMISTRY. Science for the School and Family. Part II. CHEMISTRY. By DR. WORTHINGTON HOOKER, of Yale College, Author of "HUMAN Physiology," "Child's Book of Nature," "Natural History," "First Book of Chemistry," &c. Illustrated by Numerous Engravings. 12mo, Half Leather, 75 cents.

Beware of Nonsense.

SAVE ONE HALF THE FUEL; exclude COLD, WIND, RAIN, and DUST from DOORS and WINDOWS. LOCAL AGENTS WANTED EVERY WHERE. Address THE PATENT METALLIC WEATHER STRIP CO., 644 Broadway, N.Y.

Broker's Stock of unreclaimed goods for sale at 8 to 25 per cent. for each article, consisting of a variety of rich and valuable goods, worth from $5 to $300 each. Any one person sending 25 cents, we will inform them in advance what article they will receive. For other information, send 3 cents for a circular. Address

HOWARD & CO., 108 Sudbury St., Boston, Mass.

Portable Printing Offices.

For the Army and Navy Hospitals, Merchants, Druggists, and all who wish to print neatly, cheaply, and expeditiously. Circular sent free. Depots of Type, Cuts, &c., at once. Adams Press Co., 21 Park Row, N. Y., and 93 Lincoln St., Boston.

PHOTOGRAPHIC MAGNIFIER, a charming accompaniment to photographic albums. $1 50. Godfrey, 281 Fulton St., N. Y.

Holiday Presents.

J. H. Winslow & Co.,
100,000
WATCHES, CHAINS, &c., &c.
Worth $500,000.

To be sold for One Dollar each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for till you know what you are to get.

SPLENDID LIST!!

OF ARTICLES TO BE SOLD FOR ONE DOLLAR EACH.

100 Gold Hunting Cased Watches.....	$100 00 each.
100 Gold Watches.....	60 00 each.
500 Ladies' Gold Watches.....	35 00 each.
500 Ladies' and Gents' Silver Watches....	15 00 each.
2000 Vest and Neck Chains.....	5 00 to 10 00 each.
2000 Gold Band Bracelets.....	5 00 to 10 00 each.
3000 " "	3 00 to 5 00 each.
3000 Cameo Brooches.....	4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Jet and Jet Brooches.....	4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Mosaic and Florentine Brooches..	4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Coral, Opal, and Em. Brooches..	4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Gold Pencils.....	4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Mosaic and Jet Ear Drops.....	4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Lava and Florentine Ear Drops..	4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Coral, Em., and Opal Ear Drops..	4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Gents' Breast Pins.....	2 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Watch Keys.....	2 00 to 6 00 each.
5000 Fob and Ribbon Chains.....	2 00 to 6 00 each.
5000 Sets of Studs.....	2 00 to 6 00 each.
5000 Sleeve Buttons.....	2 00 to 5 00 each.
6000 Finger Rings.....	2 00 to 5 00 each.
6000 Stone Set Rings.....	2 00 to 5 00 each.
6000 " "	2 00 to 10 00 each.
5000 Sets Ladies' Jewelry.....	2 00 to 10 00 each.
10000 Gold Pens, Silver Mtd Holders	4 00 to 6 00 each.
10000 Gold Pens, with Silver Extension
and Case.....	4 00 to 6 00 each.

All of the above list of Goods will be sold for one dollar each. Agents will sell at the various articles, stating what each one can have, are first put into envelopes, sealed up, and mixed; and when ordered, are taken out without regard to choice, and sent by mail, thus giving all a fair chance. On receipt of the Certificate, you will see what you can have, and then it is at your option to send one dollar and take the article or not.

In all transactions by mail, we shall charge for forwarding the Certificate, 2 cents postage, and doing the business, 25 cents each, which must be inclosed when the Certificates are sent for. The Certificate will be sent for $1; eleven for $7; thirty for $5; sixty-five for $10; and a hundred for $15.

AGENTS.—Those setting as Agents will be allowed ten cents on every Certificate ordered by them, provided their remittance amounts to one dollar. Agents will collect 25 cents for every Certificate, and remit 15 cents to us either in cash or postage stamps. Great caution should be used by our customers in regard to giving their correct address, Town, County, and State. Address

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
208 Broadway, New York.

The Great Rural and Family Weekly!

NEW VOLUME—NEW FEATURE—NEW TYPE.

MOORE'S RURAL NEW YORKER, long known as M the Best and Most Popular AGRICULTURAL, HORTICULTURAL, LITERARY, and FAMILY NEWSPAPER in the country, will enter upon its Fifteenth Year and Volume on the 1st of January, 1864. The new volume will at least equal either of its predecessors in CONTENTS, STYLE, and ATTRACTIVENESS. We have resolved to spare no effort or expense to enhance the reputation and standing of the paper as the BEST NEWSPAPER OF ITS CLASS

ON THE CONTINENT!

Always Loyal, Practical, and Progressive, THE RURAL is the FARMER'S FARM AND FIRESIDE JOURNAL—largely read and admired in both Town and Country. Its ample pages comprise Departments devoted to, or treating upon

AGRICULTURE, HORTICULTURE,
ARCHITECTURE, RURAL ECONOMY,
ORNAMENTATION, ARTS AND SCIENCE,
LITERATURE, GENERAL NEWS,

With various minor Departments, and including numerous Illustrations, Tales, Sketches, Music, Poetry, Enigmas, &c., &c.—rendering the whole paper Instructive and Entertaining to the various members of the Family Circle.

In addition to the above variety, the RURAL for 1864 will comprise a New and Valuable Feature—a Department exclusively devoted to

Sheep Husbandry,

Conducted by Hon. HENRY S. RANDALL, LL.D., author of "The Practical Shepherd," &c., who is conceded to be the most reliable writer on the subject in this country.

P. BARRY, Esq., author of "The Fruit Garden," and formerly editor of the Horticulturist, will also contribute to the RURAL for 1864—enriching its Horticultural Department with the results of his great experience.

THE RURAL NEW YORKER MARKETS, &c.,

Receive special attention—the RURAL containing Reports of the principal GRAIN, PROVISION, CATTLE, WOOL, and PAPER STOCK Markets of the country. Remember that the RURAL emanates from one of the very best cultivated sections of America, and that its Editors, Contributors, and Correspondents strive to promote the Pecuniary Interest and Home Welfare of the thousands of readers. Also that it is not a monthly of only 12 issues a year, but a Large, Beautiful Weekly Visitor.

STYLE, FORM, TERMS, &c.

VOLUME XV. for 1864, of the RURAL NEW YORKER, will be published in SUPERIOR STYLE—with New Type, good white Paper, and numerous Illustrations. Its Form will continue the same as now—Double Quarto—with an Index. Title Page, &c., at close of year, complete for Binding.

TERMS, Always in Advance—$2 a year; 3 copies for $5; 4 for $7; 10 for $15; 20 for $25. Single specimen free. Any of six or more. ☞ Now is the Time to Subscribe and Form Clubs. Ancient Look wanted in all parts not reached by the United States and Canada mails, to whom we offer handsome premiums. ☞ Specimen numbers, Premium Lists, &c., sent free to all disposed to benefit their neighbors and community by introducing the paper to more general notice and support.

Address D. D. T. MOORE, ROCHESTER, N. Y.

SALISBURY, BRO. & CO.,

AGENTS FOR THE UNITED STATES FOR THE CELEBRATED

ALDERTINE

Extension Holders and Gold Pens.

Of the most handsome and durable construction, put up in new form of Rubber Patent Box, and sold only in sets of four qualities. They will retail for $3 each.

Price, per Set..... $10 25
Or 3 dozen for..... 25 00

Sent by mail or express, prepaid. Address
SALISBURY, BRO. & CO., Providence, R. I.

$60 A MONTH! We want Agents at $60 a month, expenses paid, to sell our Entertaining Family, Pictorial Bazaars; and 13 other articles. 15 circulars sent free. SHAW & CLARK, Biddeford, Maine.

Salesmen Wanted.

$75 a month, or commission allowed on sales. Apply to HALE & CO., Newburyport, Mass.

Winter Cloaks.

BRODIE'S
Great Clearing Sale.
The Entire Winter Stock
Will be Sold without regard to Cost.
Before making Extensive Alterations for the Spring Trade.
BRODIE
The Leader of Fashions!
300 Canal Street, New York.

$200 $150, $100, $50 PREMIUMS. To Editors, Ladies, and Others. I will pay the above-named amounts for the best four articles on either my Soap, Saleratus, or Concentrated Potash. The article must state the writer's experience in using the goods, and must be not less than ten lines, and be published in the editorial columns of any good family newspaper. Any party wishing to compete for the above, and desiring further information, may address the undersigned. Each person writing and publishing a notice as above, will mail a month's supply of either article, post-paid, to notice, and also write me by mail, giving full address. The Premiums will be awarded on the fourth day of July, 1864.
T. BABBITT, 64 to 74 Washington Street, New York.

T Y the description of Babbitt's soap kettle in which HE SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN one would suppose that when
S abbitt put one foot on the North Pole,
B and the other on the south, so bold,
T e the comments he could see upon the journals of the universe.
B atch after batch, in this mammoth kettle is immersed;
T stands four stories high and is a tremendous establishment.
T he tallow per batch costs $30,000, purchased by dint
B he large quantity it holds is 300,000 pounds—Industry
S atisfied are all the customers that 'tis truth, and bold,
T he 64-hundred folks buy it because 'tis splendid.
B it good that they have all recommended.
T o cultivate is the quality unsurpassed.

S aleratus is always ranked first-class;
B it the hand made firm is composed of flour, salt,
and water;
T he same quantities of this article are manufactured by workers;
S ach day produces fifteen tons of saleratus.
B ardly do we see such quantities displayed among us;
T he oil of vitriol is used in the kind of goods.
B e beautiful girls, with tiny fingers, are displayed;
T ain't nice unless it's made by the Babbitt's.
B saleratus is packed in red and looks very neat;

S OAP

B otash in tin cans by all is said to be complete,
T over all this territory Babbitt's soap will be competent.
B y all the people what beautiful soft soap it makes,
T nd certainly you will not hesitate a quantity to take.
B Babbitt are all who buy this potash, for soap to make,
T o save some to the consumer that they can make no mistake,

S AVE

B oxed or packed put up in one-pound-tin-lacquered
cans;
T very housekeeper knows it is good, so does every man.
B ut I know who use it do declare;
T ach biscuit and bread they never see anywhere.
B ig be lost in the shuffle—this kind of goods.

P OWDER

T ersonally know they are very good.
B a hand Babbitt always keep a good stock.
T hen remember all the above are signed by the box;
B ottom surely say they make the best of bread.
T hey are very pleasant to handle, and will not spread.
B urely do the people know of what Babbitt's yeast is made?
T o salt is truly the base, so out the secret goes.

T. B.

Soldiers' Co. Fins and Corps Badges.

Annexed is a fac-simile design of our newest style Co. Pin, which is manufactured in the finest manner by us, from sterling silver, and every letter on band from A to M. Also every Corps Badge used in the Army, enameled in Red, White or Blue, for wearing over the different Divisions in each Corps:

Solid Silver	Prices, handsomely engraved,
" Co. Fins.....	$1 50.
" " in Gold Relief.....	1 50.
" Corps Badges.....	2 00.
" Cavalry Badges.....	3 00.

Terms, Cash in advance. Send for circular.
Address C. BALCH & CO., 208 Broadway, N. Y.

NOW READY. THE ILLUSTRATED PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL, 40 Engravings, Portraits of Gen. Banks, Lyndhurst, Beautiful Women, Egyptian Mummies, Wild Indians in a Scalping Dance, Wild Men, and Beast Children. Baboo nursed by the Wolf. Brooms, their Significance, Physiognomy, or Signs of Character, Love, Courtship and Marriage, Hints to the Married, Phrenological Items, 15 cents by first post. Address FOWLER & WELLS, 308 Broadway.

$15. WATCHES. $15.

Genuine American Lever Watches, in 2 ounce coin silver heavy Hunting Case, warranted, for $15.

Genuine full jewel American Lever Watch, in 5 ounce coin silver heavy Hunting Case, gold pilate, warranted, for $25.

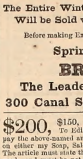
Any of the above Watches will be sent on receipt of price. All Orders from the Army must be pre-paid, as the Express Companies will not collect. Send for collection or Orders. All Orders from the Army will be promptly attended to.

C. L. BRIGGS, Importer, 237 Main Street,
Drawer III. Milwaukee, Wis.
☞ Circular sent free.

EMPLOYMENT

At your own home. It is the greatest discovery of the age. From $5 to 10 per day. Sample sent by mail, free. Full particulars sent free, on receipt of five stamps.
Address C. MUNRO BROWN, 74 Bleecker St., N. Y.

WATCHES
FOR
THE ARMY.



Superbly finished watches, the beauty of which is only equaled by their chronometers.—N. Y. Weekly, July 25d.

Particularly valuable for officers in the army, and travelers.—Frank Leslie's, Feb. 21.

Prettiest, best and cheapest time-piece ever offered. —N. Y. Illustrated News, Jan. 10.

Magic Time Observers,
The Perfection of Mechanism!
Being a Hunting, or Open Face, or Lady's or Gentleman's Watch combined, with Patent Self-winding Improvement.

A new principle recently. One of the prettiest, most convenient, and decidedly the best and cheapest timepieces for general and reliable use ever offered. It has within it, and connected with its machinery, its own winding attachment, rendering a key entirely unnecessary. The cases of this Watch are manufactured of five metals, the color or case being like 10-carat gold. It has the improved ruby action lever movement, and is warranted an accurate timepiece. Price, superbly engraved, per case of half dozen, $30. Magnetic watches in same morocco cases, $35. If sent by mail, the postage is 36 cents; registering, 20 cents.

Silver Watches!
First-Class Hunting Time-Pieces.

FOR ACCURACY OF MOVEMENT, BEAUTY OF MATERIAL, AND, ABOVE ALL, PERFECTION IN FINISH, THESE WATCHES MUST INSURE

UNIVERSAL APPROBATION!

An imitation or fabrication that it can hardly be detected by the most experienced judges. The material being of two metals, the outer one first quality Silver and the inner one German Silver, is can not be recognized by cutting or heavy engraving, consequently it is not in appearance, but in durability, the best resemblance of Solid Sterling Silver in existence.

The sale of these watches in the army is a source of enormous profit, retailing, as they very readily do, at $25 each upward. Over 1,000 dollars can be made in a single pay-day by any one of ordinary business tact!

Any Watch sent by mail, C. O. D., subject to examination, handsomely engraved, white enamel dial, and fancy cut hands, in good running order, and free from bad dents, $24; postage, $3 38; registering, 20 cts. Sold only by the case. Can be safely sent by express.

☞ TERMS CASH, INVARIABLY IN ADVANCE. No agents employed, and goods sent direct from the city. If money is sent us by express or mail in a registered letter, it is at our risk. Orders will meet the most prompt and faithful attention.

HUBBARD BROS, Sole Importers,
Broadway, cor. Courtlandt St., New York.

$50 for $20.

SOLDIERS IN THE ARMY.

For $20 we will forward by mail or express, pre-paid, the following Box of Fine Gold-Plated Jewelry—1 Vest Chains, 12 Gent's Seal Rings, 3 Gold Pens and Extension Holders, 6 Vest Hooks, 4 Finger Watch Keys, 12 Bosom or Scarf Pins, 4 pair Sleeve Buttons, 2 Box and Glass Pins for Whiskers, 3 Double Glass Lockets, and 3 Cluster Stone Pins. Address THOMAS CAFFERTY & CO., Providence, R. I.

Printing-Press for Sale.

One Taylor Double Cylinder, Five Rollers, Table Distribution, Steam Fixtures. Price $350.
Apply to HARPER & BROTHERS, 329 Pearl St., N.Y.

ALL ARTICLES FOR SOLDIERS

At Baldwin's Washington Depot, and all places occupied by Union troops, should be sent by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 74 Broadway. Sutlers charged low rates.

Hoyt's Hayahtis Hair Restorative.—Superior to every preparation for the hair in the power to restore faded and gray hair to its original color and natural appearance, to prevent falling out, to overcome all effects of previous use of preparations containing sulphur, sugar of lead, &c., and to render the luxuriant hair and infuse more of the scalp. Invaluable dressing for whiskers.

HOYT'S ACCLIMATED HAIR GLOSS,
unexcelled in keeping the hair in curl.

HOYT'S CELEBRATED SHAVING CREAM,
oils and colors the hair at the same time; changes light hair to dark brown and black. Sold by druggists.

HOYT'S EXCELSIOR TOILET POWDER,
for the toilet and nursery, unobjectionable to the skin, and preserves youthfulness of appearance. Sold everywhere. JOSEPH HOYT & CO., 112 University Place.

L OVE, COURTSHIP, AND MARRIAGE."—All born to love, and to be Loved. Mistakes, Unhappy Marriages, The Remedy, Love—signs, in the face. Secret of Beauty. A Woman's Experience. Failing in Love. To improve the Complexion—with numerous illustrations Portraits—in the PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL. The first of a new vol. Only 15 cts. Or $1 50 a year. FOWLER & WELLS, N. Y.

Elliot's New Repeaters

Are now ready. The most safe, compact, durable, effective, sure, and handsome weapon made. Carry loaded (No. 32 cartridge), are rapidly loaded and fired—conveniently carried in the pocket, whole length 6½ inches—four barrels—each rifled gain twist. The Trade supplied.

ELLIOT ARMS CO., 404 Broadway, N. Y.

☞ A PRETTY PRESENT."—Send to your nearest, dearest, and most valued friend, the ILLUSTRATED PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL for 1864. It would be highly prized, and cost only $1 50. FOWLER & WELLS, N. Y.

Kind Friends are near Her: whenever to "Who will care for Mother now?" When the boys come Home. Visits On the Field of Battle, Mother. Each 25 c. Visits Refugee 30 c. most popular Illustrated Publications. Agents Express to pay part of country.
FREDERICK BLUME, 208 Bowery, N. Y.

Strategy and Tactics.

BY GEN. G. H. DUFOUR,
Lately an Officer of the French Engineer Corps, and Chief of Staff of the Swiss Army.
Translated from the latest French edition, by Wm. P. Craighill, Captain United States Engineers, late Professor of Civil and Military Engineering and Science of War at the United States Military Academy, West Point, with numerous Illustrations, in one thick 12mo volume, neat cloth. Price, $2 50.

Copies sent free by mail on receipt of price.
Just published by D. VAN NOSTRAND,
No. 192 Broadway, New York.

Works by W. M. Thackeray.

VANITY FAIR. A Novel. With Illustrations. 8vo, Cloth, $2 00.

THE NEWCOMES. Illustrated. 8vo, Cloth, $3 00.

PENDENNIS. A Novel. With Illustrations. 2 vols. 8vo, Cloth, $3 00.

THE VIRGINIANS. With Illustrations by the Author. 8vo, Cloth, $3 00.

THE ADVENTURES OF PHILIP. A Novel. Engravings. 8vo, Cloth, $2 00.

HENRY ESMOND. A Novel. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

LOVEL THE WIDOWER. A Novel. With Illustrations. 8vo, Paper, 75 cents.

THE ROSE AND THE RING. A Fireside Pantomime. Numerous Illustrations. Small 4to, Cloth, 75 cents.

THE GREAT HOGGARTY DIAMOND. A Novel. 8vo, Paper, 75 cents.

ROUNDABOUT PAPERS. With Illustrations. 12mo, Cloth, $1 25; Half Morocco, $2 00.

THE ENGLISH HUMORISTS OF THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY. 12mo. Cloth, $1 25; Half Morocco, $2 50.

THE FOUR GEORGES. Illustrations. New Edition. 12mo, Cloth, $1 25; Half Morocco, $2 50.

Published by HARPER & BROTHERS,
329 Pearl Street, New York.

☞ Sent by mail, postage-free, on receipt of price.

HARPER & BROTHERS
Have Just Published:

I.
CHARLES DICKENS'S NEW CHRISTMAS STORY.
MRS. LIRRIPER'S LODGINGS. 8vo, Paper, 10 cts.

II.
THE BOYHOOD OF MARTIN LUTHER; or, The Sufferings of the Reformer. By JANE E. WORCESTER. The author became the great German Reformer. By HENRY MORTIMER, Author of "Little Stephen," "Schoolmaster," &c. Beautifully Illustrated. 12mo, Cloth, $1 00.

III.
MR. WIND AND MADAM RAIN. By PAUL DE MUSSET. Translated, with Formation of the Author, by EMILY MARKPEACE. Illustrated by CHARLES BENNETT. Square 8vo, Cloth, gilt, $1 00 each.

HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.
Have Just Published:

VERY HAD CASH.
A Novel.
BY CHARLES READE,
AUTHOR OF
"LOVE ME LITTLE, LOVE ME LONG," "NEVER TOO LATE TO MEND," &c., &c.
WITH ILLUSTRATIONS.
8vo, Paper, 75 cents.

A Splendid Mother's or Bridal Present.

HARPER'S
Illuminated and Pictorial
BIBLE.

Including the Apocrypha. Superbly embellished by over Sixteen Hundred Illustrations, exquisitely engraved by Adams after Designs by Chapman, exclusive of a Series of Rich Illuminations in Colors, comprising Frontispieces, Presentation Plate, Family Record, Title-pages, &c. The whole forming a sumptuous Folio Volume.

PRICES.—Morocco, gilt edges, beveled and paneled sides, $20 00; Morocco, full gilt edges, $22 00; Full Calf, marbled edges, blank stamped, $18 00; Full Roan, marbled edges, $15 00.

Harper's Pictorial Bible is printed from the standard copy of the American Bible Society, with Marginal Readings, the Apocrypha, a Concordance, Chronological Table, List of Proper Names, Explanatory Table of Weights, Measures, &c. The large Frontispieces, Title to the Old and New Testaments, Family Record, Presentation Plate, Historical Illustrations, and Initial Letters, are printed in Colors, Illuminated in Gold, are from original designs, made expressly for this edition, by J. G. Chapman, Esq., of New York. The Engravings to which there are numerous large Engravings, from designs by distinguished modern artists in France and England; to which a full index is given.

HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers, New York.

For sale by A. WILLIAMS & CO., Boston; STEIN, EGGERT & CO., Philadelphia; CORNING & BAILEY, Baltimore; CHARLES T. EVANS, Washington; JAMES CAMPBELL & CO., Cincinnati; KEITH & WOODS, St. Louis; S. C. GRIGGS & CO., Chicago; and booksellers generally throughout the country.

HARPER'S
NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE

TERMS.

One Copy for one Year	$3 00
Two Copies for One Year	5 00

An Extra Copy, gratis, for every Club of TEN SUBSCRIBERS, at $2 50 each, or 11 Copies for $25.00.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE and HARPER'S WEEKLY, together, one year, $5 00.

HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers.

Circulation over 100,000.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.
Single Copies Six Cents.

TERMS.

One Copy for One Year	$3 00
One Copy for Two Years	5 00

And an Extra Copy will be allowed for every Club of TEN SUBSCRIBERS, at $2 50 each, or 11 Copies for $25.

TERMS TO ADVERTISERS.—Subscription Cents per line for inside, and One Dollar per line for outside Advertisements.

Vols. I., II., III., IV., V., VI. and VII. for the Years 1857, 1858, 1859, 1860, 1861, 1862 and 1863 of "HARPER'S WEEKLY," handsomely bound in Cloth extra, Price $5 00 each, are now ready.

HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers.

THE RECRUITING BUSINESS.

VOLUNTEER-BROKER (to Barber) "Look a-here—I want you to trim up this old chap with a flaxen wig and a light mustache, so as to make him look like twenty; and as I shall probably clear three hundred dollars on him, I sha'n't mind giving you fifty for the job."

FISK & HATCH.
Bankers and Dealers in Government Securities,
AND
AGENTS FOR THE UNITED STATES
FIVE-TWENTY LOAN,
No. 38 Wall Street, New York.

Great Chance
To Make Money!!!

We want Agents everywhere to sell the most splendid STEEL ENGRAVINGS ever published. Will furnish them so that a stock of $10 will yield $50. Also, STATIONERY PRIZE PACKETS, with which we give as Premiums Gold and Silver Watches. Full particulars in Circular mailed free. Address
G. S. HASKINS & CO., 56 Beekman Street, N. Y.

VALENTINES
To the Trade.

Call or send to Head-Quarters. Catalogues sent free by mail. A better assortment, on more liberal terms, than any other dealer can offer. Address
BENJ. W. HITCHCOCK, 455 Broadway, N. Y.
(Store and Manufactory.)

$8 WATCHES $11
AND CHAINS.

A Beautiful Engraved Gold-Plated Watch and Chain, fine Swiss movement, handsome dial and hands, warranted a perfect time-keeper, for $ Dollars. Engraved Silver, same as above, chain included, 9 Dollars. A very heavy Hunting Cased Solid Silver Watch, full jeweled, and fine English movement, silver cased, warranted a perfect time-keeper, and a handsome Gold Plated Chain included, for 11 Dollars.

We will send, on receipt of the money, one of our Watches and a Chain, by mail, postage paid, in any address. These Watches are especially adapted to the Army, being heavily cased and perfect time-keepers, and in raising order.
GEORGE A. ELY & CO.
No. 599 Broadway, New York.

STAMMERING

And Stuttering cured by Bates's Patent Scientific Appliances. For Testimonials of deceptive Pamphlets and Drawings, address H. C. L. MEARS, 377 W. 23d St., N. Y.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

AGENTS, male or female, SOLDIERS, and all having some time to spare, are particularly requested, as a favor, to send us their address, and we will send in return, very information for which they will be THANKFUL. We offer EXTRA INDUCEMENTS from $4 to $10 per day over EXPENSES. We want addresses from every county in the U. S., and shall want many assigned to the AGENCY in full. RICHARDS & CO., 37 and 39 Nassau Street, Box 5130, N. Y.

Friends. Send a stamp for my Circulars. Address L. M. HARRIS, Boston, Mass.

The Soldier's Gift
To the Loved One at Home.

We will deliver, free of freight charges, at any Express Office East of St. Joseph, Mo., any of our beautiful Albums of the value of $15 or more, that may be ordered by members of the Army or Navy of the United States or Freemen to friends at home. We manufacture elegant styles of all prices to $35, and higher.
L. & H. T. ANTHONY,
Manufacturers and Importers,
501 Broadway, N. Y.

BILLIARD BALLS.

Patent compressed Ivory Billiard Balls, 2¼ and 2⅜ in., $16 per set. 2 in. Bagatelle, $9 per set. 1¾ in. Bagatelle, $7 per set. 1½ in. Pool Balls, $6 per set. WM. H. WHITING, 307 Broadway, New York, opp. the Old Custom Hou

A Beautiful Complexion free from Tan, Pimples and Freckles, may easily be procured by using the "BALM OF THOUSAND FLOWERS." For showing it is unsurpassed. It is composed of palm oil, honey, and other valuable articles, highly perfumed by its own ingredients, and when used for washing, night and morning, renders the skin soft and white, and free from blemish. Price 25 cents.

The Trade supplied by HOWARD, SANGER & CO., 105 and 107 Chambers Street, N. Y., and for sale by all Druggists.

SEE
J. H. Winslow & Co.'s
Advertisement on page 63.

VERMILYE & CO.,
Bankers, No. 44 Wall Street,
WILL CONTINUE TO FURNISH
U. S. FIVE-TWENTY BONDS
As long as issued by Government at Par and Interest.
TO BANKS and BANKERS the usual commission allowed.

We also buy and sell at market rates,
U. S. One Year CERTIFICATES OF INDEBTEDNESS.
U. S. COUPON BONDS OF 1881.
U. S. 7.30 TREASURY NOTES.
U. S. QUARTERMASTER'S CHECKS.

Maturing Certificates of Indebtedness collected on favorable terms.

VERMILYE & CO.,
BANKERS, No. 44 Wall street, N. Y.

PREPARE FOR THE HOLIDAYS.
There is no Gift, or Parent, which compares with the Craig Microscope and Mounted Objects. As a source of amusement and instruction they are unsurpassed. The Microscope will be mailed, postage paid, for $2 25; or with 6 beautiful mounted objects, for $3; or with 24 objects, for $5.
Address, HENRY CRAIG,
259 Broadway, New York.
A liberal discount to the trade.

A Household Word.—Buy your Housekeeping Articles at BASSFORD'S, Cooper Institute, New York.

Fogg's Double-Action Patent Lever
SKATE BUCKLE,

Manufactured and for sale on Stores, at wholesale, by F. STEVENS, Manufacturer of Skates, Stoves, and Iron Work, 27 Goode, 215 Pearl St., New York, 65 Ridge St., Boston.

The Beard Oil.

IN cases of scanty, retarded growth, where the person is over 18, by its remarkable nourishing and stimulating properties, Tetlow's Compound Extract of Jaborandi has been found infallible, in exciting the Beard, Moustache, or an eyebrow, to full and luxuriant growth. The history of this Balsam, with a small sample box, will be sent gratis, on receipt of return postage.
JOHN RAWLINS, 315 Broadway, N. Y.

To all who wish to make Money.

Send your address to J. A. STINSON, Syracuse, N. Y., and you will receive, by return mail, a sample of VALUABLE SECRET PLAN OF OUR COMMON AND MILITARY FREE STATIONERY DEPARTMENT, 47 CHESTER.

THE BOWEN MICROSCOPE.

Magnifying 1000 objects 500 times. MILITARY SIZE everywhere for 20 CENTS. Four of different powers for $2 00. Address F. C. BOWEN, Box 5750, Boston, Mass.

TYPE PHOTOGRAPHIC ALBUM BUTTON (Patent applied for), with perfect likenesses of the President, Hardee, all Men and Generals, $1 00 per pair. Also fine Ivory Brooches, $3 00; Earrings, to match, $2 00. Wrists and Imitation of Ivory and Pearl. Manufactured and for sale by WM. M. WELLING, Agent, 707 Canton Street, New York, Rear of the Golden Hydrant. Send Stamp for circular of this great Novelty.

NOW READY.
"SECOND YEAR OF THE WAR."
By E. A. POLLARD, Editor of RICHMOND EXAMINER, And Author of "First Year of the War."
1 vol. 8vo, 400 pages, Cloth, $2 50.
With Portraits on Steel, recently taken, of Vice-Pres. STEPHENS, Generals LONGSTREET, HILL, BRAGG and JOHN STON. PLANS OF BATTLES.
This volume brings the History of the War in the Southern view, down to the close of the late invasion in July of Pennsylvania.
Written with clearness, independence, and ability, and, as the only connected account of all the civil, military, and naval operations in the South, it is of great importance and interest. It gives a thrilling narrative of campaigns which are filled with historically incidents and brilliant action.
The first edition of 5000 copies has been entirely taken up in advance. Therefore the Publisher would request the Trade to order early.
C. B. RICHARDSON, Publisher, 596 Broadway, N. Y.

FINE WATCH FREE,
And $15 Per Day Easy.

Agents should be careful in directing their orders for our Original and "only Genuine" EXTRA Large Size Stationery Prize Packages, which have become so popular through the fine quality and value of their contents. As we have several imitations, also copy our Styles, Advertisements, Premiums, &c., for the purpose of deceiving Agents, we are the only manufacturers of the "Celebrated Rectorial Prize Packages," and none are genuine unless bought direct from us. Those parties who advertise to give a "Premium Watch" to agents will not do so unless the agent first pays them from $40 to $50 in cash. This "is a challenge any of them to deny." We will present a case of 100 of our Finest Packages to any agent who obtains a watch from them without first paying the above-named amount. Their attempt to present premiums, after our long-established custom, is in this case but a poor dodge. We still do as we have done for years past, present free to every one who acts as our agent a Fine Gold or Silver Hunting-Case Watch, "Genuine English Movements," and warranted a correct time-keeper. These watches are presented as the gift or sent with the first order. No samples done this. Our Wonderful Packages contain more really valuable articles than any half dozen others ever sold. Among the surprising contents of each package will be found Fine Stationery, Pens, Pencils, Jewelry, Ladies' Fashion Plates, Designs for Needle-work, Cutlery, Keepsakes, Handsome Companions, Letter-Writers, Lawmaker, Parlor Amusements, Gent's Pocket Calendars for 1864, Union Emblems, Camp Companions for Soldiers, Military Likenesses, Games, Army Advice, Rare Recipes, Many Ways for Making Money, Sentiments, Fancy Articles, Rich and Costly Presents of Fashionable Jewelry, &c., &c., all together worth many dollars, but only 25c. Agents make immense profits. 100 to 200 per cent allowed. We guarantee smart agents can make $15 per day. Our regular agents average that. Our Packages stand same as ever, above all others for quality and quantity of contents. Agents wanted in every camp and town in the country. Goods sent safe to all parts of the army. Send for our Great New Circular for 1864, containing Extra Premium Inducements, Rules for Agents, &c. HASKARDS & CO., 102 Nassau St., N. Y. Only Original, and Largest and Oldest Prize Package House in the World.

$7. WATCHES. $7.

A Beautiful Engraved Gold-Plated Watch, Lever Cap, small size, English movements, perfect time-keeper. Sent free by mail, in neat case, for only $7. A Solid Silver, same as above, $9. Engraved and adapted to the ARMY. CHAS. P. NORTON & CO., 28 & 40 Ann Street, N. Y.

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper, of Aug. 29, says: "Messrs. NORTON & CO. have combined two very desirable things in their enterprise—cheapness and reliability. When it is known that for $7 a person can have an excellent time-keeper, there will be greater punctuality in all the affairs of life."

The only enameled "Turn-over" Collar made in metals. Send 6? for a "Turn-over" or 75 cents for a "Choker," to Box 5130, N. Y. P. O., and by return mail. American enameled Metallic Collar Co., 94 Fine St., N. Y.

Remington's

Approved by the Government.
Warranted superior to any other Pistol of the kind. Also Pocket and Belt Revolvers. Sold by the Trade generally.
E. REMINGTON & SONS,
Ilion N. Y.

IMPORTANT.

The public are respectfully informed that I have just received, per steamer "Celtic," a fresh shipment of the Jules Mumm & Co's

Verzenay Cabinet
AND
Dry Verzenay
Champagne,

of a new vintage, surpassing in richness, fineness and delicacy of quality the Dry Wines of the same grade ever before sent by this house. A trial of the same will convince the most fastidious.

The following houses have a supply of this shipment on hand:

CHAS. BELLOWS,
W. S. GURNEY & CO.
H. B. FLETCHER.
MAVY & CO.
W. H. JACKSON & CO.,
PERRY & SICKELS.
J. D. VAN ROSSUM.
JAMES MEYER, JR.,
42 Dewey Street.
Sole Agent in the U. S. for Jules Mumm & Co's Champagnes.

Learn to Skate in One Hour by using The American Parlor Of Floor Skate. Hard Rubber Rollers, Anti-friction Axles. Frederick Stevens, Sole Manufacturer, 215 Pearl Street, New York. 68 Kilby Street, Boston.

Dyspepsia Tablets,

For Indigestion, Heartburn, &c., manufactured only by S. G. WELLING, and sold by druggists generally. 59 Cedar Street. Depot for St. Ild Cognac in New York, corner Broad. Send for Circular.

$35 WATCHES. $35
Genuine Full-Jeweled American Lever Watches, in 4 Ounce Coin Silver Hunting Cases, Gold Joints, for $35.

Also every variety of good Watches at equally low rates. All orders from the Army must be prepaid, as the Express Companies will not take bills for collection on soldiers.
J. L. FERGUSON, Importer of Watches,
209 Broadway, New York.

GUNS, PISTOLS,
Military Goods,
FRENCH AND ENGLISH FANCY GOODS.
Also, a full assortment of
Jet, Coral, and Steel Goods.
Schuyler, Hartley & Graham,
19 Maiden Lane & 22 John Street, N. Y.,
31 Rue du Chateau d'Eau, Paris.
Sands St., Birmingham, Eng.

Shults' Onguent, warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in six weeks, or money refunded. Sent postpaid, for 30 cents. Address C. F SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

UNIVERSAL
CLOTHES WRINGER
OVER 50 000 SOLD IN 1863.
BOTH SELF-ADJUSTING AND ADJUSTABLE.
The only wringer with the patent
COG-WHEEL REGULATOR,
which positively prevents the rolls from
BREAKING OR TWISTING IN THE SHAFT.
A GOOD CANVASSER WANTED
in every town. We offer liberal inducements, and guarantee the exclusive sale.
Descriptive circular sent free.
R. C. BROWNING, No. 347 Broadway, New York.

Prose and Poetry
From the best writers in America may be found in every number of the

Atlantic Monthly

Subscription price $3 00 per year, postage p.id. Club Rates liberal. For full Prospectus address TICKNOR & FIELDS, Boston.

The Pain Killer—"a just application of which was introduced to the public several years ago, and now enjoys a popularity un-equaled by any other medicine. For the cure of Dysentery, Cholera Morbus, Rheumatism, Colds, Coughs, Sore Throat, Burns, &c., it is without an equal. Sold by all the principal druggists.—Daily Plaindealer, Cleveland, Ohio.

Putnam Clothes-Wringer.
THE ONLY reliable Self-Adjusting Wringer.
No wood-work to swell or split.
No thumb-screws to get out of order.
WARRANTED NOT TO CRUSH OR TEAR BUTTONS.
It took the First Premium at Fifty-Seven State and County Fairs in 1863, and is, without an exception, the best Wringer ever made.
Try it, and Judge for Yourself.
It will wring any thing from a thread to a bed-quilt without alteration.
Patented in the United States, England, Canada, and Australia. Agents wanted in every town.
No. 2, $5 50; No. 1, $6 00; No. A, $8.
Manufactured and sold, wholesale and retail, by
The Putnam Manufacturing Co.,
No. 13 Platt Street, N. Y., and Cleveland, Ohio.
S. C. NORTHROP, Agent.

BALLARD PATENT BREECH-LOADING RIFLES AND CARBINES,

Carrying the copper water-proof cartridge, and also using percussion primed cartridges. Five only to be admitted by all competitors to be superior to any other ever tried at the public trials. Simple construction and perfect workmanship are a sure guarantee against getting out of order. The great advantage of holding with either fixed or loose ammunition alone makes it superior to all others. These arms are made for both carbine and military purposes, and have been adopted both by the General Government and a number of States. We have the highest testimonials of their efficiency and durability.
We are now ready to fill orders for rifles and loose ammunition holding revolvers. This arm has an equal as a belt or pocket weapon. No one wishing a first-class arm should be without one.
For further particulars send for descriptive circular.
P. S. Do not forget that both Rifles and Pistols may be used with either copper cartridge or loose ammunition.
MERWIN & BRAY, Sole Agents,
102 Broadway, N. Y.

Straight Hair made Wavy!! without bathing. Try this Patent Hair Waver. For sale at Variety Stores.

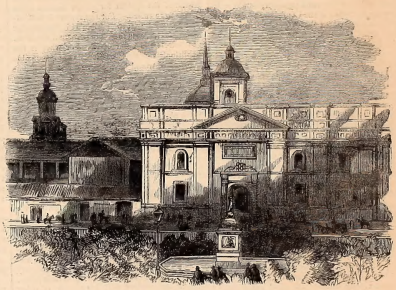
HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION.

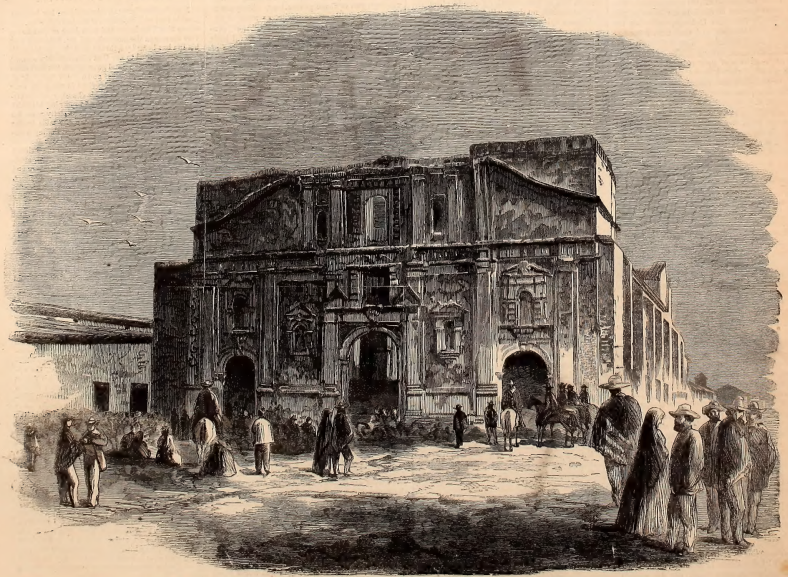
VOL. VIII.—No. 370.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, JANUARY 30, 1864. [$1.00 FOR FOUR MONTHS. $3.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1864, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

THE CHURCH OF THE COMPANIA IN THE DISTANCE.



THE CHURCH OF THE COMPANIA.



RUINS OF THE CHURCH OF THE COMPÁNIA, AT SANTIAGO, CHILI, AFTER THE CONFLAGRATION.—[SEE PAGE 71.]

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 30, 1864.

REBEL PROSPECTS.

WHAT are the prospects of the rebellion? The year opens upon our firm hold of our advanced lines, but from beyond them comes no sound or sign of submission from the leading rebels. These leaders, of course, contemplate exile as the last resort. But in the mean while what are they waiting for?

The actual situation of affairs within the Confederacy, as we may conveniently call the area of the rebellion, is easily comprehended from any intelligent witness. We had lately the pleasure, for instance, of talking with a Mississippi merchant who left his home at the end of last September. He says that the despondement in the result of the rebellion is universal. The Southern people had been deluded into the belief that secession was the easiest thing in the world, and that peace and prosperity would wait upon the unfolding of the Confederate flag. But they have discovered that a war, which is now more hopeless for them than ever, has already ruined them. Trade is at an end. Money is worthless. All industrial activity of every kind is devoted exclusively to the army. In every little hundred throughout the spare population of the South there is a perfect system of military despotism—the Provost Marshal and his guards exercising a direct supervision over the conduct of men who are individually known, so that the Union men have a tacit understanding only, and every man must always seem zealous in support of the rebel Government. The conscription has swept away every body who can go, and our informant left to avoid being forced into the rebel army. The slaves, who are not ignorant of the reason, are drawn toward the interior; and throughout the rebel domain a terror prevails as absolute as that of France in the worst days of the French Revolution.

Meanwhile the leaders, seeing these things, knowing that general gloom is settling upon the hearts of their followers, that their army is suffering, emaciated, and deserting; that the tenacity of the North begins to tell fatally upon the ardor of the South; that the English Government clearly believes the rebel cause to be hopeless, and no other friend yet appears—still doggedly persist, nor even try the experiment upon the North of a bold offer of negotiation.

What is the ground of this persistence? The late correspondent of the London Times in this country, the Chevalier Galenga, said that the rebels were desperate, and that is the reason men who work miracles. But their position is not difficult to comprehend. The leaders know that the condition of their section could not be more wretched than it is. Their army is now the supreme dominant power, and that removes the fear of popular disturbance. While the army is faithful they are safe from revolution; and as the entire industry of the section is tributary to the army, and the army, composed of the poor whites, is well subordinated to its chiefs, so long as those chiefs are faithful the fidelity of the army is tolerably secure. The pledge of the chiefs' fidelity is in their allegiance to their own class, the slaveholders, for whose interest the war is waged, and in their personal peril. The rebel leader of the rebels, therefore, is General Lee, who is called "the great Captain;" and if he should declare himself Dictator there is no personal hold upon popular affection or enthusiasm which could save Jefferson Davis, who is regarded as a cold, aristocratic man, whose ability has not been demonstrated by the event of the war.

The rebel leaders, thus comparatively sure of the army, and consequently of the domestic quiet secured by military despotism, count further upon the ultimate fatigue of the North in waging so costly a war, upon the natural reaction which always follows a prolonged tension of the public mind, and upon the financial confusion which they believe will presently overtake us, as it has already overwhelmed them. They count upon the prejudice against color, and the name Abolitionist, to which the Northern allies of the rebels constantly appeal in the effort to prove the war an "Abolition war;" and upon Copperhead success in persuading the people that if the war is constitutionally waged it is impossible to subdue "our Southern brethren," while if it is not constitutionally waged, then the rebels are no more traitors than we.

To these grounds of rebel persistence must be added the expectation of aid from Louis Napoleon, from the necessities of which the Mexican conquest. For if the Government of the United States subdues the rebellion the French Emperor can not suppose it will remain utterly indifferent to the success of an enterprise undertaken in the full expectation of the overthrow of that Government. But snubbed abroad by Earl Russell in the affair of the European Congress, politely threatened at home with a stoppage of supplies by Thiers, can he retire from Mexico without a loss of prestige fatal to his future? On the other hand, can he remain there upon any terms so sure as the division of this country; and can that be secured so effectively as by direct recognition, treaty as a preferred power, and forcing the blockade? If Europe were likely to assent to such a course he would hardly be deterred under the circumstances by the prospect of a war with this country, because he would rather take the chance of helping the rebels fight us, than of withdrawing from Mexico and losing Europe to recover his prestige. In pondering the question, the struggle of England when he beheld the immediate aggrandizement of France if she assented, and the threatening victory of republican principles in this country if she refused to assent. Her political instinct leads her to fear our success; but her present position seems to imperiled for a policy which planted France upon this continent, giving her the mines of Mexico and the cotton of our Southern States. And as England always acts upon present and not upon future contingencies, we may believe that she would not favor French interference in our struggle.

It is in such considerations that we find the explanation of rebel persistence after their cause is apparently lost. And they point very plainly to our duty. It is to destroy their armies in the field, and the system for whose defense those armies were raised. For the system is radically and absolutely incompatible with free popular government, and is therefore a personal rebellion. The war is the proof of it. For whether the Abolitionists or the Secessionists are responsible for it, there would have been no rebellion Abolitionists nor Secessionists without slavery. Every good man and faithful American citizen, therefore, rejoices that to save the Union it was necessary to destroy slavery, and, destroying slavery to pierce the heart of rebellion.

THE NEW UPRISING.

"IF you can succeed in putting your new army in the field," said a rebel Georgia officer lately to a loyal Captain, "we shall have nothing to put against it." If the Georgia prisoner could take a run through the western part of the State of New York he would not doubt that the new National army was coming; for the enthusiasm of enlistment is as great and universal as it was at the beginning of the war. At every military post the crowds are constantly arriving, and the men who are joining the army are of the very best kind. This is true not only in the States, but, as our readers will have seen, of other States, from Vermont to Indiana. The prolongation of the time for paying the bounties is a wise deference to the financial fatigue of the people, and unless something should check the present feeling, no draft will be needed.

What a splendid and imposing testimony this is to the character of the people! What an evidence, which no foreign statesman and no student of men and history can overlook, of the tenacity and strength of a popular Government! It is the third year of the war; we have spent enormous sums; we have endured disasters, delays, and dangers of every kind; we have seen the noblest and best of the land lay down their lives for the country and human liberty; every call of the lawful authorities has been seconded by the popular heart; the draft, a measure always distasteful, however necessary, precipitates a desperate movement of resistance in the city of New York, which was utterly quelled—has been ostensibly submitted to—and whenever we go to terms;—and now the whole people rises to respond to another call, cheering for the American Union and Liberty until the air rings from the Lakes to the Mississippi.

Let us hope that the great shout may be heard by the hearts of the betrayed and deluded citizens of the Southern States, who feel that the load of despotic chiefs, have taken up arms against the Government of their country. For however deep and just and enduring may be the national indignation with those leaders, however firm may be the national resolution that the cause of rebellion shall be destroyed at the same time with its armed hand, in order that the great mass of Southern men, of every kind and color, may enjoy all their rights and peace be permanent, there is not, we sincerely believe, even in the hearts that have been most deeply broken by the chances of this war, any feeling of hostility to the citizens of the South. Of slavery, which they perceive the Government, by which had left those citizens poor and ignorant and wretched, there is now an intelligent and therefore an immortal hate in the breast of the American people. But the cause of the masses of the country in the North and the South is really one, and therefore it is that we hope the present may be not only an uprising of the North, but an awakening of the South, and consequently a final victory of the people over oligarchs and traitors.

SLAVE CHILDREN.

WHEN the war began two things were inevitable: first, that the loathsome secret history of the slave system in this country would be exposed; and, second, that the appalled and indignant common sense of the people would see that no honorable peace was possible except upon condition of the annihilation of the system. Indeed all that the friends of liberty and human rights in this country have ever asked is the freedom of speech. In the days when the Abolitionists were hunted as wild beasts they said calmly that if they were only allowed to speak and tell the truth their victory was sure. And because through fires of hate and rage they persisted in speaking they are the saviours of American liberty. The slaveholders and their political allies at the North knew equally well that if the constitutional right of discussion were allowed the horrors of the system would be known, and the outraged decency and humanity of the American people would sweep away the iniquity in a flood of wrath. So at the South these gentry hung, and tarred, and feathered, and mobbed every citizen who chose to speak or was suspected of wishing to speak; while at the North the panders of slavery denounced the discussion of the subject, incited mobs against the speakers, and drivled through all their papers and speeches, smooth and dreary slop about the Christianity, and fraternity, and simplicity of "the institution," until people who were prevented by these same efforts from hearing the facts of the case really believed that a society planted upon slavery was a kind of scriptural idyl and patriarchal Arcadia.

The moment these genuine saw political power torn from their hands they knew that the terrible truth would be told, and annihilate their "institution," and therefore they made their grand and desperate movement to destroy the Government and involve us all into common ruin. And they are right so far as they anticipated the consequences of a popular knowledge of slavery. The war has brought the people of this country face to face with the unspeakable infamy of slavery. The working-men of the Free States, now soldiers in the field, no longer owe their knowledge as to what Governor Seymour, or Mr. S. F. B. Morse, or Judge Woodward, or Bishop Hopkins, or any newspaper chooses to say of it to advance a political party: they see for themselves. Here is Mrs. Kemble describes it, as Mr. Olmsted describes it, as Thomas as Jefferson describes it, as John Randolph describes it; there is the record, as no human pen can describe it, exactly as General Butler, so long its apologist through ignorance and partyspirit, found it in New Orleans, and as it is in every State, in every child, on every plantation, a double-handed curse, smiting both slave and master.

A terrible illustration of this truth of the outrage of all natural human affections we present to-day in the engravings, from photographs, of slave children upon page 69 of this paper. These are, of course, the offspring of white fathers through two or three generations. They are as white, as intelligent, as docile, as most of our own children. Yet the "chivalry," the "gentlemen" of the Slave Oligarchy, and the awful logic of the system, doom them all to the fate of swine; and, so far as they can, the parents and brothers of all such children deprive the light of humanity in their souls. Then, lest the "chivalry" that sells its children, and the "gentlemen" who seduce the most friendless and defenseless of women, should withdraw their custom, the St. Lawrence Hotel, in Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, turns the children—flying not for life only, but the girls for their honor, and the boys for their manhood, into the street; upon which they were received and kindly welcomed at the Continental. At a time when, to perpetuate the system which defies the law of God and the instinct of man, the slaveholders are destroying loyal men, noble sons of Philadelphia and Pennsylvania with the rest, the St. Lawrence Hotel proposes to emancipate those in South who do this iniquity, and those at the North who support them in it, by refusing to receive the children whose portraits we give. So every where humanity fails at the touch of this "institution." And so, by God's blessing, the humanity and wisdom of the American People is at this moment touching Slavery to its destruction. Little children like these in the picture this country no longer turns away into untold horrors and despair; but its heart whispers to them, gently, "Suffer little children to come unto me!"

DELAYS ON THE NEW HAVEN RAILROAD.

THE passengers from Boston by the night train on Saturday the 16th January were due in New York early on Sunday morning. The train reached New Haven at half past two in the morning, where it should have met the train upon the Shore road, and the same locomotive would have drawn both to New York. The Shore train was not there. It did not arrive for more than five hours; and during all that time the passengers were detained in the cavern called a station at New Haven, simply because the New Haven Company does not choose to provide for the most common occurrence, namely a delay upon the Shore road. Arriving in New York toward Sunday noon, about six hours late, there was not the slightest provision at the station in Twenty-seventh Street for the convenience of the passengers. There was not a carriage to be found, and even the luggage was carried off into the Harlem station. ''

The overcrowding of the cars upon this road is notorious, and is the subject of indignant but fruitless complaint in the daily papers; but such an outrageous delay as that of Saturday night, caused by the stinginess and total want of consideration for the public convenience upon the part of the management of the New Haven Company, ought to be universally exposed. The poor conductor was badgered with every form of impatient complaint, but his instructions, he said, were imperative, and he could not disobey them. Some of the passengers, hearing that one of the directors or managers of the road lived in the city of New Haven, proposed a call upon him before light on Sunday morning; but the conductor declined to tell where he lived. There was in fact no remedy whatever; for the instructions are that the Shore train shall be waited for on Saturday night at New Haven until two hours' delay enables the conductor to push on to New York in time to return on Sunday evening.

We doubt if there be another great line in the country which acts with such a want of knowledge enterprise; and we warn every passenger who proposes to make the journey on Saturday night by rail from Boston to New York, that he is exposed to the risk of this grievous delay at New Haven.

LICKING BOOTS.

LET us hope that Mr. Randall, of Pennsylvania, and all other gentlemen in Congress and elsewhere, will spare us any further propositions that the Secretary of the United States Navy shall ask the rebel chiefs what kind of Union prisoners they are willing to exchange. For the rebels have but one kind of prisoners, namely, United States soldiers. To allow them to say that they will not exchange young men, but that we may have all the old men; that they will not exchange Irishmen, but that we may have as many Irishmen as we want; that they will not give us white men, but we may take as many colored men as we choose, or vice versa, is simply to offer to the rebel leaders a decision, which, until a Government is utterly humiliated, it always retains. It is for us to show clearly that when we choose to accept the service of a soldier we guarantee him a respect and protection exactly equal with that of all other soldiers. Mr. Randall and his friends will probably learn that truth before long, as well as Mr. Jeff Davis and his friends.

THACKERAY'S GRAVE.

MR. JOSEPH DURHAM, the sculptor, has begun a marble bust of Thackeray for the Garrick Club. It seems that Thackeray had been long subject to severe pneumonia in the stomach, and he says that his life has hung by a thread, and that, in his smiling way, he used to say that his machinery seemed at such times to stop and go on again, but that some day it would stop and not go on. On the night of his death his widow, who slept in the room over him, heard him moving in his chamber, as she often did when he was ill. In the morning his valet found him and saw Thackeray quietly resting on his back. He put some coffee upon the table by the bedside, and upon entering again and finding it untouched, saw that it was not sleep but death.

The funeral was a noble tribute to the beloved friend, the great author, the simple-hearted, affectionate man. All the famous men in literature and art were there; and his daughters broke through what the Spectator truly calls a "senseless and degrading etiquette," and came with their mother's body to the grave, and saw the last that human eye shall see of the kind parent. Long ago, in his first burial service, he took out his purse one day, and holding up a bright gold dollar, said, tenderly, "That is the first money that I touched in America in his death. That goes to my little girl. I wish to see them!"

Thackeray was buried in Kensal Green. It was general feeling that Westminster Abbey should have been his monument, as it is of so much else that has been illustrious in England. But it was not meet. His grave will be a shrine of affectionate pilgrimage wherever it is. Could there be better epitaph written than the inscription upon those he wrote in the beginning of his lecture upon Swift? "The humorous writer professes to awaken and disturb your love, your mirth, your kindness—your scorn for untruth, pretension, imposture—your tenderness for the weak, the poor, the oppressed, the unhappy. To the test of his means and ability he comments on all the ordinary actions and passions of life almost. He takes upon himself to be the weekly preacher to many persons. Accordingly, as he finds, and speaks, and feels the truth best, we regard him, esteem him—sometimes love him. And, as his business is to preach other people's lives and peculiarities, we moralize upon his life when he is gone—and yesterday's preacher becomes the text for to-day's sermon."

THE GOOD SAMARITAN.

DEAR MR. EDITOR,—We often hear of the good Samaritan—I saw him the other day in a Jersey ferry omnibus. When I took my seat, I found on the floor, near the door, there was a sick soldier. Very ill, was, and emaciated he looked, with dark circles round his eyes, and the cape of his overcoat put up over his cap to keep off any breath of air, while his thin hands were bare to the winter cold.

Some one got out who sat next him; immediately the place was taken by a man from the opposite side, who pulled off his own warm gloves and handed them to the soldier. He feebly attempted to decline them, but the other insisted, and he gratefully put them on and looked at his well-covered hands with a sigh of satisfaction. The man was a plain, quiet-looking person, and did the little act of kindness without the slightest ostentation, as if it were a matter of course with him to clothe the naked. Nor was this all, he asked where the soldier was going. I could not hear the reply, but caught only the word "Albany." At the corner of Warren Street the good man got down and lifted the poor fellow out in the arms with the greatest care, readjusted the cape of his coat over his head, and supported him to the sidewalk, and the last I saw of him as he went marching down Warren Street. I was deeply touched, and said in my heart, God bless him! for had I not two brothers soldiers? and one I was to meet the other is still in the service of his country; and I thought I would tell you, dear Mr. Editor, that through you others might perhaps be prompted to "go and do likewise."

E.

LITERARY.

The first number of the North American Review (Crosby & Nichols, Boston), under the editorship of James Russell Lowell and Charles Eliot Norton, appeared punctually with the first of the month, and has been read with the interest and curiosity which are naturally great over oldest Quarterly, with which the names of our most illustrious authors and eminent scholars are associated, and which now proposes to take its part in the work of national regeneration. By this we do not mean that the Review intends to act as a party-politics; but the present number is the sufficient proof that it does intend to discuss with the utmost ability, earnestness, and good temper the fundamental principles of society and government which are presented by our war: of course this will not be done to the exclusion of its purely literary discussions. In this January number, for instance, there is a very thorough transcription and reduction of Mr. Parkman's life of the friend of Sebastian Foscarli, and a very skillful paper upon Mr. Winthrop's early Life of his great ancestor, John Winthrop. The article upon Bremer's "Life at Home" is the most genial and delightful in spirit that we have seen. It exposes the undue sentimentality of the popular idea, and the frequent dullness of his argument; but it is just to the idyllic charm of the work and the sincerity of the author, while it establishes its own difference from the more good-humored scholarly courtesy. It is a model paper for the gentle and generous tone in which it discusses a very serious difference. The article upon the Ambulance System and the Sanitary Commission, written by the most competent hands, are of immediate practical value, and the three political papers grapple vigorous points of our great public debate with a cheerful vigor, insight, skill, and grasp which are the best proofs that North American among the leaders of American thought. The copious literary notices are neither puffs, sneers, nor commonplace reviews, but are genuine opinions. As an illustration we may refer the reader to Lieutenant Heath's History of the Sioux War and Massacres. The book and notices are not only useful to the short but valuable to the public. The North American is but a quarterly visitor: and there is no Review, outside of Europe, that we could more heartily commend to universal favor.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

CONGRESS.

SENATE.—JANUARY 11. The Committee on Military Affairs reported back the bill authorizing the appointment of an Assistant Secretary of War. Military Committees were instructed to inquire whether any obstacle had been thrown in the way of access of officers men, not liable to military duty; if so, by whom and by what authority.—Mr. Lane of Kansas introduced a bill prohibiting the sale of gold at a higher price than that paid in the regular market in New York for United States 6 per cent. bonds, and for the purpose of ascertaining the payment of debts, or for the purpose of paying interest upon United States bonds. The penalty is a fine of not less than $1000 or more than $10,000, and imprisonment for not less than twelve months nor more than two years.—The resolution for the expulsion of Mr. Davis came up and was discussed by Senators Dixon, Powell, Sumner, and Wilkinson. No vote was taken.—January 14. The bill authorizing the appointment of an Assistant Secretary of War for one year, at a salary of $5000, was passed.—The Enrollment Bill was taken up. The amendment of the Committee exempting any person who should pay $300, until the first day of October next, from the draft, was agreed to by the exhaustion of the enrollment under which the draft was made, and inserted in place of $500; and then the whole amendment was not agreed to. Various amendments of $500 should be made to exempt clergymen and non-combatants were finally passed.—January 15. An appropriating $300,000 to pay the paying officers and men in the Western Department of Missouri, and also other current business, the Enrollment bill came up. An amendment making persons who have resided in the United States two years, and who have voted, liable to draft, was adopted. The substitute amendment was then adopted carried, by 32 to 19, the question being fixed at $300. The final question, therefore, is that upon the passage of the bill as thus drafted under the previous call is exempt from this draft, but is liable for any future draft.—January 18. Mr. Morgan introduced a petition from citizens of New York, remonstrating against the exemption of persons drafted from the draft. The Enrollment bill was taken up and debated, the discussion turning upon the paying qualities of certain cities.—Mr. Grimes offered an amendment that the word "white" should be inserted into the bill, so that colored men should not be accepted as substitutes for whites. Mr. Hale moved to amend by striking out the word white, and could be employed with the same results as whites. The colored men should not be accepted as substitutes for white men. Mr. Davis said that a great proportion of the labor in Kentucky was performed by slaves, and he could not be reconciled to substitutes, stripping the border States of their laboring classes, or substitutes for Northern laborers who remained at home. Mr. Johnson said that it was not believed in Maryland that colored troops could do the duty of white. Mr. Grimes's amendment was rejected, 28 to 18. Amendments were adopted providing that veteran troops re-enlisting should be credited to the quotas of the districts from which they originally enlisted; and that commutation money should be applied to procuring substitutes. Amendments were offered that colored troops be credited to the States from which they enlist.—Mr. Trumbull offered a resolution that the President call out 300,000 men for 100 days, for the sole purpose of driving the rebels from Virginia; rejected.—The Senate adjourned till Monday, 18th.—January 19. After voluminous business the joint resolutions offering thanks to Hooker, Meade, Howard, and the Army of the Potomac, and to Burnside and Banks, and their officers and men, were adopted.—The resolution for the expulsion of Mr. Davis was referred to the Judiciary Committee.—Mr. Pomeroy introduced a bill to incorporate the North American Land and Emigration Company," with a capital of $1,000,000, with privilege to increase it to $5,000,000. The object being to promote the sale and settlement of emigrants upon the lands of the Confederate and agricultural resources of the country; referred to Committee on Agriculture.—The Enrollment bill was taken up. Various officers amendments were passed, by 29 to 10.—A resolution of thanks to Admiral Dahlgren, U. S. N., for assuming to command of the steamer Vanderbilt, was passed.—January 20. Resolutions of thanks were passed to Generals Thomas and Sherman and to troops for services at Chattanooga, and to Admiral Dupont and the officers of Admiral Rodgers, and officers and men of the frigate Sabine.—The Finance Committee reported a bill to authorize the Secretary to increase the pay of certain inspectors of customs, not exceeding one dollar a day.—The rule requiring an additional oath from Senators came up. Mr. Bayard, of Delaware, spoke at length in opposition to it. As he was the only Senator who had not taken the oath this rule was aimed at him. He questioned the constitutionality of the rule; and said, in conclusion, that by loyalty he understood steadfast adherence to the principles as defined by the Constitution, and an honest support of the guarantees thereof and of liberty which it was the design of the framers to perpetuate. If loyalty meant anything else than adherence to the letter and let of the Constitution he wished to be considered disloyal; and thus it was as decided he would stand in the issue to become his dignity as an American Senator. Mr. Collamer rose to reply, but gave way to a motion for an order that the Senate might go into executive session.

HOUSE.—January 13. The Committee on the Judiciary reported a joint resolution explanatory of the Confiscation act; it provides that the forfeiture of slaves shall be a forfeiture except during the lifetime of the offender, as provided in the Constitution, with a proviso that no warning shall be required except the President's Proclamation of July 25, 1862; the resolution to be in force "if it be the resolution was laid over.—After some business of detail the Judiciary Committee reported a bill "to enable the President to carry into immediate effect the Emancipation Proclamation of September 22, 1862, in relation to certain persons as slaves in designated States.—Debate arose on the bill.—Mr. Yeaman of Kentucky denied that the States could be restored to their former position by the President's proclamation and confession should be left to Congress.—Mr. Thomas, of Massachusetts, said that the rebellion by force of arms; but rebellion did not work forfeiture of the rights of property. The bill was to be a declaration of the rights of people to resume the functions of sovereignty in the States of the Confederacy, and to be loyal States. The ordinances of secession were the most unconstitutional law ever framed by any Congress.—The use of the flail was granted to the Christian Commission of the anniversary of the birth of Washington.—Mr. Cox, who animadverted severely upon Miss Dickinson's address on the evening of the 19th, in which she offered a series of resolutions to the effect that the President be requested to recommend to Congress that a law of retaliation shall submit all hostilities against it shall cease, and it shall be competent for the President to confederate with its local laws and institutions: laid on the table by a to 56.—Mr. Ashley offered a resolution requesting the President to appoint Commissioners to negotiate with the Southern authorities for an armistice of ninety days, and that "the negotiation be withdrawn from the hands of Jefferson Davis.—Mr. Ashley, of Ohio, introduced a bill from cases connected with his pass military conduct; to add intercourse with those in arms against the United States.—January 14. The bill was taken up and passed. Mr. Ashley's bill to amend the act of 1862, and repeal the act of 1863, was passed by 86 to 56.—The Military Committee reported back the bill to establish a Joint Select Committee to report on the conduct and expenses of the war; joint resolutions were presented. The House was agreed to by 106 to 33.—Mr. Harding offered a resolution that the policy of each party to the present contest in own local affairs is essential to the balance of power on which our political system depends; laid on the table.—Reports on Rebellious States.—The Military Committee were instructed to inquire into the expediency of authorizing Robert Anderson, with full pay and allowances.—Mr. Ashley, of Ohio, introduced a bill to abolish slavery in the political, civil, moral, and sacred duty of the people to insist the rebellion.—Mr. Ashley's bill to abolish slavery establishing perfect and unalterable liberty" a motion to lay on the table was negatived by 78 to 69, and the resolution passed by 112 to 16.—Mr. Holman offered a resolution condemning the practice of appointing civil and military officers with undefined leave of absence, and instructing the Military Committee to report a bill remedying the evil.—January 19. The joint resolution explaining and amending the Confiscation act was taken up and passed by 82 to 64, on which the House went into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. Schenck in the chair, on the tax upon distilled spirits. Various sums, ranging from 50 cents to $1.75, were proposed as the amendment to increase the tax 50 cents per gallon was rejected. Mr. Morrill said that the tax proposed by the Committee was $1 per gallon.—Yea, was the opinion that spirits would bear as a revenue measure. The Committee rose without coming to any definite conclusion.—January 20. The Committee on the bill to reimburse the city of New York for expenses incurred in calling out troops to suppress the riots.

THE ARMY OF THE POTOMAC.

No active operations of any consequence have disturbed the quiet of our army in Virginia. On the 15th, a force of Stoart upon Leesburg is proved to have existed only of rumor. On the same day a reconnoissance through mountain forces in Virginia exhibit a good degree of activity. The rebel force was found to be under General Jones, which they have been fortifying ever since last April, with a view to the defense of the passes of the Shenandoah Valley. Our army is in the most excellent condition, and is about to be divided into two grand corps, preparatory to the active reorganization in respect of its command. General Meade will retain the command of the Fifth Corps, which is constituted by the flotilla, has lately made a raid upon Westmoreland County, Virginia, and has been successful in destroying large quantities of provisions, burning a bridge at Fairbanks's Creek, and capturing five prisoners.

EAST TENNESSEE.

A cavalry fight took place on Sunday the 10th inst. at Strawberry Plains, between Knoxville and Morristown. General Longstreet has been strongly reinforced from the armies of Lee and Bragg, and is reported to be now making a tour of his department, having erected references at the chief points of interest. He has made the objective point toward which the enemy will be most likely to move. Burnside has been reinforced by troops, and is now engaged in strengthening the Border States of their laboring classes, or substitutes for Northern laborers who remained at home. Mr. Johnson said that it was not believed in Maryland that colored troops could do the duty of white. Mr. Grimes's amendment was rejected, 28 to 18. Amendments were adopted providing that veteran troops re-enlisting should be credited to the quotas of the districts from which they originally enlisted; and that commutation money should be applied to procuring substitutes. Amendments were offered that colored troops be credited to the States from which they enlist.—Mr. Trumbull offered a resolution that the President call out 300,000 men for 100 days, for the sole purpose of driving the rebels from Virginia; rejected.—The Senate adjourned till Monday, 18th.—January 19. After voluminous business the joint resolutions offering thanks to Hooker, Meade, Howard, and the Army of the Potomac, and to Burnside and Banks, and their officers and men, were adopted.—The resolution for the expulsion of Mr. Davis was referred to the Judiciary Committee.—Mr. Pomeroy introduced a bill to incorporate the North American Land and Emigration Company," with a capital of $1,000,000, with privilege to increase it to $5,000,000. The object being to promote the sale and settlement of emigrants upon the lands of the Confederate and agricultural resources of the country; referred to Committee on Agriculture.—The Enrollment bill was taken up. Various officers amendments were passed, by 29 to 10.—A resolution of thanks to Admiral Dahlgren, U. S. N., for assuming to command of the steamer Vanderbilt, was passed.—January 20. Resolutions of thanks were passed to Generals Thomas and Sherman and to troops for services at Chattanooga, and to Admiral Dupont and the officers of Admiral Rodgers, and officers and men of the frigate Sabine.—The Finance Committee reported a bill to authorize the Secretary to increase the pay of certain inspectors of customs, not exceeding one dollar a day.—The rule requiring an additional oath from Senators came up. Mr. Bayard, of Delaware, spoke at length in opposition to it. As he was the only Senator who had not taken the oath this rule was aimed at him. He questioned the constitutionality of the rule; and said, in conclusion, that by loyalty he understood steadfast adherence to the principles as defined by the Constitution, and an honest support of the guarantees thereof and of liberty which it was the design of the framers to perpetuate. If loyalty meant anything else than adherence to the letter and let of the Constitution he wished to be considered disloyal; and thus it was as decided he would stand in the issue to become his dignity as an American Senator. Mr. Collamer rose to reply, but gave way to a motion for an order that the Senate might go into executive session.

HOUSE.—January 13. The Committee on the Judiciary reported a joint resolution explanatory of the Confiscation act; it provides that the forfeiture of slaves shall be a forfeiture except during the lifetime of the offender, as provided in the Constitution, with a proviso that no warning shall be required except the President's Proclamation of July 25, 1862; the resolution to be in force "if it be the resolution was laid over.—After some business of detail the Judiciary Committee reported a bill to "to enable the President to carry into immediate effect the Emancipation Proclamation of September 22, 1862, in relation to certain persons as slaves in designated States.—Debate arose on the bill.—Mr. Yeaman of Kentucky denied that the States could be restored to their former position by the President's proclamation and confession should be left to Congress.—Mr. Thomas, of Massachusetts, said that the rebellion by force of arms; but rebellion did not work forfeiture of the rights of property. The bill was to be a declaration of the rights of people to resume the functions of sovereignty in the States of the Confederacy, and to be loyal States. The ordinances of secession were the most unconstitutional law ever framed by any Congress.—The use of the hall was granted to the Christian Commission of the anniversary of the birth of Washington.—Mr. Cox, who animadverted severely upon Miss Dickinson's address on the evening of the 19th, in which she offered a series of resolutions to the effect that the President be requested to recommend to Congress that a law of retaliation shall submit all hostilities against it shall cease, and it shall be competent for the President to confederate with its local laws and institutions: laid on the table by a to 56.—Mr. Ashley offered a resolution requesting the President to appoint Commissioners to negotiate with the Southern authorities for an armistice of ninety days, and that "the negotiation be withdrawn from the hands of Jefferson Davis.—Mr. Ashley, of Ohio, introduced a bill from cases connected with his pass military conduct; to add intercourse with those in arms against the United States.—January 14. The bill was taken up and passed. Mr. Ashley's bill to amend the act of 1862, and repeal the act of 1863, was passed by 86 to 56.—The Military Committee reported back the bill to establish a Joint Select Committee to report on the conduct and expenses of the war; joint resolutions were presented. The House was agreed to by 106 to 33.—Mr. Harding offered a resolution that the policy of each party to the present contest in own local affairs is essential to the balance of power on which our political system depends; laid on the table.—Reports on Rebellious States.—The Military Committee were instructed to inquire into the expediency of authorizing Robert Anderson, with full pay and allowances.—Mr. Ashley, of Ohio, introduced a bill to abolish slavery in the political, civil, moral, and sacred duty of the people to insist the rebellion.—Mr. Ashley's bill to abolish slavery establishing perfect and unalterable liberty" a motion to lay on the table was negatived by 78 to 69, and the resolution passed by 112 to 16.—Mr. Holman offered a resolution condemning the practice of appointing civil and military officers with undefined leave of absence, and instructing the Military Committee to report a bill remedying the evil.—January 19. The joint resolution explaining and amending the Confiscation act was taken up and passed by 82 to 64, on which the House went into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. Schenck in the chair, on the tax upon distilled spirits. Various sums, ranging from 50 cents to $1.75, were proposed as the amendment to increase the tax 50 cents per gallon was rejected. Mr. Morrill said that the tax proposed by the Committee was $1 per gallon.—Yea, was the opinion that spirits would bear as a revenue measure. The Committee rose without coming to any definite conclusion.—January 20. The Committee on the bill to reimburse the city of New York for expenses incurred in calling out troops to suppress the riots.

THE ARMY OF THE POTOMAC.

No active operations of any consequence have disturbed the quiet of our army in Virginia. On the 15th, a force of Stoart upon Leesburg is proved to have existed only of rumor. On the same day a reconnoissance through mountain forces in Virginia exhibit a good degree of activity. The rebel force was found to be under General Jones, which they have been fortifying ever since last April, with a view to the defense of the passes of the Shenandoah Valley. Our army is in the most excellent condition, and is about to be divided into two grand corps, preparatory to the active reorganization in respect of its command. General Meade will retain the command of the Fifth Corps, which is constituted by the flotilla, has lately made a raid upon Westmoreland County, Virginia, and has been successful in destroying large quantities of provisions, burning a bridge at Fairbanks's Creek, and capturing five prisoners.

EAST TENNESSEE.

A cavalry fight took place on Sunday the 10th inst. at Strawberry Plains, between Knoxville and Morristown. General Longstreet has been strongly reinforced from the armies of Lee and Bragg, and is reported to be now making a tour of his department, having erected references at the chief points of interest. He has made the objective point toward which the enemy will be most likely to move. Burnside has been reinforced by troops, and is now engaged in strengthening the Border States of their laboring classes, or substitutes for Northern laborers who remained at home. Mr. Johnson said that it was not believed in Maryland that colored troops could do the duty of white. Mr. Grimes's amendment was rejected, 28 to 18. Amendments were adopted providing that veteran troops re-enlisting should be credited to the quotas of the districts from which they originally enlisted; and that commutation money should be applied to procuring substitutes. Amendments were offered that colored troops be credited to the States from which they enlist.—Mr. Trumbull offered a resolution that the President call out 300,000 men for 100 days, for the sole purpose of driving the rebels from Virginia; rejected.—The Senate adjourned till Monday, 18th.—January 19. After voluminous business the joint resolutions offering thanks to Hooker, Meade, Howard, and the Army of the Potomac, and to Burnside and Banks, and their officers and men, were adopted.—The resolution for the expulsion of Mr. Davis was referred to the Judiciary Committee.—Mr. Pomeroy introduced a bill to incorporate the North American Land and Emigration Company," with a capital of $1,000,000, with privilege to increase it to $5,000,000. The object being to promote the sale and settlement of emigrants upon the lands of the Confederate and agricultural resources of the country; referred to Committee on Agriculture.—The Enrollment bill was taken up. Various officers amendments were passed, by 29 to 10.—A resolution of thanks to Admiral Dahlgren, U. S. N., for assuming to command of the steamer Vanderbilt, was passed.—January 20. Resolutions of thanks were passed to Generals Thomas and Sherman and to troops for services at Chattanooga, and to Admiral Dupont and the officers of Admiral Rodgers, and officers and men of the frigate Sabine.—The Finance Committee reported a bill to authorize the Secretary to increase the pay of certain inspectors of customs, not exceeding one dollar a day.—The rule requiring an additional oath from Senators came up. Mr. Bayard, of Delaware, spoke at length in opposition to it. As he was the only Senator who had not taken the oath this rule was aimed at him. He questioned the constitutionality of the rule; and said, in conclusion, that by loyalty he understood steadfast adherence to the principles as defined by the Constitution, and an honest support of the guarantees thereof and of liberty which it was the design of the framers to perpetuate. If loyalty meant anything else than adherence to the letter and let of the Constitution he wished to be considered disloyal; and thus it was as decided he would stand in the issue to become his dignity as an American Senator. Mr. Collamer rose to reply, but gave way to a motion for an order that the Senate might go into executive session.

HOUSE.—January 13. The Committee on the Judiciary reported a joint resolution explanatory of the Confiscation act; it provides that the forfeiture of slaves shall be a forfeiture except during the lifetime of the offender, as provided in the Constitution, with a proviso that no warning shall be required except the President's Proclamation of July 25, 1862; the resolution to be in force "if it be the resolution was laid over.—After some business of detail the Judiciary Committee reported a bill to "to enable the President to carry into immediate effect the Emancipation Proclamation of September 22, 1862, in relation to certain persons as slaves in designated States.—Debate arose on the bill.—Mr. Yeaman of Kentucky denied that the States could be restored to their former position by the President's proclamation and confession should be left to Congress.—Mr. Thomas, of Massachusetts, said that the rebellion by force of arms; but rebellion did not work forfeiture of the rights of property. The bill was to be a declaration of the rights of people to resume the functions of sovereignty in the States of the Confederacy, and to be loyal States. The ordinances of secession were the most unconstitutional law ever framed by any Congress.—The use of the hall was granted to the Christian Commission of the anniversary of the birth of Washington.—Mr. Cox, who animadverted severely upon Miss Dickinson's address on the evening of the 19th, in which she offered a series of resolutions to the effect that the President be requested to recommend to Congress that a law of retaliation shall submit all hostilities against it shall cease, and it shall be competent for the President to confederate with its local laws and institutions: laid on the table by a to 56.—Mr. Ashley offered a resolution requesting the President to appoint Commissioners to negotiate with the Southern authorities for an armistice of ninety days, and that "the negotiation be withdrawn from the hands of Jefferson Davis.—Mr. Ashley, of Ohio, introduced a bill from cases connected with his pass military conduct; to add intercourse with those in arms against the United States.—January 14. The bill was taken up and passed. Mr. Ashley's bill to amend the act of 1862, and repeal the act of 1863, was passed by 86 to 56.—The Military Committee reported back the bill to establish a Joint Select Committee to report on the conduct and expenses of the war; joint resolutions were presented. The House was agreed to by 106 to 33.—Mr. Harding offered a resolution that the policy of each party to the present contest in own local affairs is essential to the balance of power on which our political system depends; laid on the table.—Reports on Rebellious States.—The Military Committee were instructed to inquire into the expediency of authorizing Robert Anderson, with full pay and allowances.—Mr. Ashley, of Ohio, introduced a bill to abolish slavery in the political, civil, moral, and sacred duty of the people to insist the rebellion.—Mr. Ashley's bill to abolish slavery establishing perfect and unalterable liberty" a motion to lay on the table was negatived by 78 to 69, and the resolution passed by 112 to 16.—Mr. Holman offered a resolution condemning the practice of appointing civil and military officers with undefined leave of absence, and instructing the Military Committee to report a bill remedying the evil.—January 19. The joint resolution explaining and amending the Confiscation act was taken up and passed by 82 to 64, on which the House went into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. Schenck in the chair, on the tax upon distilled spirits. Various sums, ranging from 50 cents to $1.75, were proposed as the amendment to increase the tax 50 cents per gallon was rejected. Mr. Morrill said that the

SNOWY MORNING—ON PICKET.

Wilson Chinn. Charles Taylor Augusta Bourg y. Mary Jonnson. Isaac White. Rebecca Roger. Robert Whitehead. Rosina Dowse.

EMANCIPATED SLAVES, WHITE AND COLORED.—THE CHILDREN ARE FROM THE SCHOOLS ESTABLISHED IN NEW ORLEANS, BY ORDER OF MAJOR-GENERAL BANKS.—[SEE PAGE 71.]

(From Charles Dickens's "All the Year Round.")

A WHITE HAND AND A BLACK THUMB.

IN THIRTEEN CHAPTERS.

CHAPTER III.

Polly-my-Lamb rang the bell for Mrs. Goodall, her mother's old attendant and housekeeper, and, pointing out the little pale figure, inquired if she knew by whom that house was tenanted.

"It's little Arthur Haggerdorn, as I live!" ejaculated Mrs. Goodall, holding up her hands. "If I didn't think he was dead, poor boy, and buried with his mother!"

She then informed her young mistress that the house was let in lodgings. Some weeks since a lady and her son had arrived, it was supposed from abroad, and had taken up their abode there. Both —the lady especially—were suffering from indisposition, which, after a few days, resulted in what was a dangerous kind, and horrified the poor woman to her grave, whether the boy had nearly followed her. Indeed, Mrs. Goodall, too much excited with the troubles at home to keep her usual vigilant eye upon her neighbors, imagined that he had really died.

Little or nothing was known of the pair beyond their name, which had an outlandish sound; but the lady having left behind her, among other things, several rich jewels and at least a hundred guineas in money, the worthy landlady, Mrs. Ascroft, saw no insecurity in exercising her kindly feelings, and had accordingly nursed the youth, with the greatest solicitude, through his illness up to his then present point of convalescence.

"If you please, miss," concluded Mrs. Goodall, "I'll pop over presently, about tea-time, and ask the good lady of the house something about him, poor orphan!"

If, however, "popping over" implies speedy return, as well as rapid movement, that portion of the plan was not adhered to. It was nearly three hours before Mrs. Goodall popped back. But, then, she was, like Jonah, "full of matter."

"If you please, miss," she began, "Mrs. Ascroft says you've been and saved his life."

"Saved his life!"

"Before he was ill, that's Arthur, he used to make Mrs. Ascroft tell him all about our misfortunes here. He would sit at the table together, neglecting his lessons and every thing else, and watching for you, though he could only catch a glimpse now and then, because you never went near the window, only walked wild-like up and down the room. He couldn't help crying sometimes (for you see, miss, his only a child, and weak with his long illness), because he could do nothing for to help and comfort you; and then, the day he thought to too, and made them promise that when they knew he had only a few more hours to live they would pray him up in his window, that he might see you once perfectly, if God would give him that comfort. And strange enough, you did come; and, what's stranger still, his sickness took a turn, and to-night the doctor said if the boy's kept quiet, and soothed, and let sleep, he will live. I went up and saw the poor thing—that's left of him, that is. He's like the ghost of an angel," concluded Mrs. Goodall, with vague psychology. "Such a beautiful countenance I never set eyes on!"

Polly-my-Lamb said little that evening, but her thoughts were not idle. The great purpose of her soul stood firm, strong and dominant as ever; but a new idea had become associated with it. This boy, with his deep sympathy, and patient, persevering will, fathed even to the very threshold of success by his orphan, like herself, endowed with similar resolution—might be not, boy as he was, be the predestined instrument in the hands of that Providence which works by means unlooked-for by the wise to assist her in her filial purpose?

The thought never fact trembled somewhat as they bore her, more slowly than she had ever walked before, toward the window, on the morrow, and for a moment she could not raise her eyes. When she accomplished this, a warm blush—which must have been lying in ambush, so promptly did it appear—spread upward to the very roots of her auburn hair. There sat, or rather reclined, the beautiful boy, white and wasted indeed, but with light and life in his eye, and a gay smile on his parted lips, his bright glossy hair dressed and curled as if for a holiday.

"It is a child, as Goodall said," soliloquized Polly-my-Lamb, half amused at her own agitation, half disappointed as the prospect of an efficient ally melted into air. "He looked so much older yesterday, the little thing!"

As she gazed the lad inclined his head respectfully, and did not raise it again for a moment, during which Polly-my-Lamb debated hastily with herself whether she should return his greeting. Just as she had resolved to indulge him by doing so, Stephen entered the room, and announced Sir James Polhill, who presently appeared, followed by another person. This second individual was a very slender man, with a bronzed face, and bright intelligent eyes. He bowed to the young lady, and remained near the door.

"Good-morrow, my dear young friend," said Sir James. "I hold you yesterday that I hoped to introduce into our plans a new and very important auxiliary. Here you see him—Henry Armour—our most capable, and I may add, successful officer, for he has never yet been foiled in any of the cases (and they are not a few) confided to him. He has been in England but a few days, and yet, strange to say, has managed to hit off the track which has evaded the rest of us, till your patience, like our own, has all but failed."

"Do you mean, Sir, that you have got upon the track of the murderers?" said Polly-my-Lamb, clasping her hands.

Mr. Armour bowed distinct assent.

"Oh!" she continued, hurriedly. "Oh, never leave them! Why are you here now? They may escape the while."

"Calm yourself, my dear," said the magistrate, "and you shall know as much as we know. Tell her every thing, Armour."

Thereupon Mr. Armour produced a small packet and, opening it, displayed a richly enamelled snuff-box, in the centre of the lid of which appeared a gold shield bearing heraldic devices, and surmounted by an earl's coronet. This he placed upon the table, as if it were to be his text, and, in clear and quiet tones, delivered himself as follows:—

"Sir James has been pleased, Madam, to pay me a compliment, of which, in this case at least, I am wholly undeserving. It is to about second fortune, and sagacity, we owe this clew. After having been made acquainted with all the circumstances of this case, and satisfied myself that no sort of suspicion attached to any of your household, while, at the same time, it was clear that the habits of your father had been ascertained by the assassin, it occurred to me that strict inquiry should be made in the immediate vicinity, with a view of learning whether any new person or persons had been noticed watching the house and its inmates, prior to the occurrence. At the very first place—a lodging-house —exactly opposite—"

"Mrs. Ascroft's!"

"You know her, Madam? A very respectable, honeywitted woman. She told me at once that, about the period we were speaking of, a person of gentlemanly demeanor, with light bushy hair, and rather pretty beard, engaged two rooms, front and back, on her second floor. He took a dislike to the back room, complaining of stable noises, and so took, instead, the back room on the third floor, certainly far less quiet, apartment, and there, though to all appearances in the enjoyment of perfect health, he passed the greater portion of his days, and probably all the nights, in bed! Occasionally he walked out in the evenings, always carefully muffled up. Although he had, apparently, so little satisfied with her lodger's singular ways that she was rather pleased than otherwise to receive a note from him, on the very morning that thought he had engaged his lodging for another week he did not purpose to return; and requested that his luggage might be forwarded to the address from which his communication was dated. Now, what was the date of this man's occupancy? Unfortunately, Mrs. Ascroft was unable to determine within several days. It was certainly in March, and, as nearly as she could remember, just previous to the pressure murder. His departure, leaving only of a small quantity of clothes and linen—the latter marked with the initials "H. L."—"were sent to Sim's coffee-house, as he had directed."

But now came the important feature. That back room, abandoned by the lodger, Mr. Smith, whose few days, been denoted of its principal furniture, preparatory to some repairs in the wainscoting, when, between the boards and the clothes-press, was discovered the snuff-box now submitted to the young lady's inspection. Well, it was but a snuff-box; but certain circumstances connected with it rendered it a clew of no ordinary consequence."

As it chanced, no one had since occupied the room, excepting for a few days, the deceased Mrs. Haggerdorn, and hers the box could not be, since her son, who had the charge of all the possessed, remembered no such article.

"Our inference is," concluded the officer, "that the mysterious lodger, Lord Lyndhurst, in one of the disguises in which he excels; that the snuff-box accidentally slipped out of his sight and memory, and was consequently supplied a clew of which we will never let go."

"You see, therefore, my dear," said the worthy magistrate, as the officer ceased, in defiance of his subordinate, "there is, at length, every probability of success attending our efforts. Your liberty, I own, the suspicion of the real murderer, the leader of Black Thumbs were not sufficiently defined to justify the risks that must be run in getting hold of him. Armed with this little talisman—[he touched the snuff-box], we shall be no longer trouble with such scruples; though I warn you that we have to deal with, the first, of London, is the most crafty, as well as the most daring of outlaws, and must be encountered with qualities like his own—ingenuity and hardihood. If Armour succeeds—"

(Mr. Armour smiled slightly, and his lips mutely assumed that form which would be necessary to pronounce the word "if.")

"—he will have well earned the most liberal reward your generosity has proposed for him. You look pale and agitated, and no wonder. Leave, I beg my dear, for the present. When I come again, I trust it will be to bring you important tidings."

Why does the girl pace her room again and up and down the room; and, stopping at length, sinks on the window-seat, and looks intently on the boy whose life had so lately recorded her solemn vow?

In the afternoon Polly-my-Lamb made up her mind to send for Mrs. Ascroft, and question her further on the subject of her lodger and her snuff-box.

That lady came, and not only related at considerable length what she could bring to bear on this topic, but further touched upon the subject of her late lodgers; and, receiving no check, launched out boldly into praises of the poor boy, whom she had nursed and cared for, till she was as fond of him as though he had been her own.

"He thinks of you all day, and I am confident dreams of no one else all night. Whatever you may call it, this fancy of his will be his life or death, according as you please to behave.

"Behave!" repeated Polly-my-Lamb, aghast at this plain speaking.

"Well, miss," continued Mrs. Ascroft, "last night, for the first time, he slept so quietly it was a treat to look at him; and he was up to-day as fresh as a rose; you might see him getting well under your very eyes! I wish, ma'am—if I might make so bold" (dropping a courtesy), "you would be so kind, now and then, as just to look out of the window!"

Polly-my-Lamb blushed scarlet, and executed a frown, which, however, having no consolation to speak of, faded presently away. The blush, conscious of itself, remained.

"Just to look at him, you see," pleaded Mrs. Ascroft, earnestly.

Polly-my-Lamb smiled, and the landlady, with a woman's quick perception, saw it was a favorable moment to take her departure.

"It will be the saving of an innocent young life, if you should, miss."

This shot was fired from the door, and Polly-my-Lamb was alone. Suppose we leave her so? What do you think? She is a dear, good girl, and may be trusted. Goodness forbid that we should be guilty of the meanness of watching her!

All we know is that, about three o'clock that same day, Master Arthur Haggerdorn rallied considerably: so much so that if, in the morning, he appeared a little worse, or a trifle less bright, in the evening, have been easily mistaken for a peony.

CHAPTER IV.

Sir James Polhill sat in council with his vizier.

"Yes, I do think it will," said the chief. "After all, however, we want motive, eh?"

"We have that also, Sir James, as I will shew you, with proofs positive. I found a memorandum, this morning, to have some talk with the clerk Middlemiss. He has always been persuaded that his principal had private dealings with the Amsterdam house, Dietrich & Co., who failed about a year since under circumstances which rendered them liable to the charge of fraud. Middlemiss believes that Mr. Humpage, from motives of generosity, assisted the house with considerable advances, though, as he thinks, not securities in their names can be found among his papers. The clerk's belief is grounded upon other circumstances with which I am not yet acquainted. Some suspicion of the rectitude of these people—Dietrich & Co.—may have induced Mr. Humpage to discontinue his correspondence with them, and to transact none of his former loans—and, in revenge, or to evade such claims, this crime may have been devised or perpetrated. Middlemiss's book is known to the Dutch police as one of the most reckless scoundrels unhanged—a commercial pirate. However, this latter part, as well as Dietrich's character, is only our conjecture, since no record exists of Mr. Humpage's transactions with them beyond the payment of their bills, without apparent consideration, are at least of which passed through the hands of their agent in London."

"If we can identify Lord Lyndhurst, in one of the disguises in which he excels; that the snuff-box accidentally slipped out of his sight and memory, and was consequently supplied a clew of which we will never let go."

"You see, therefore, my dear," said the worthy magistrate, as the officer ceased, in defiance of his subordinate, "there is, at length, every probability of success attending our efforts. Your liberty, I own, the suspicion of the real murderer, the leader of Black Thumbs were not sufficiently defined to justify the risks that must be run in getting hold of him. Armed with this little talisman—[he touched the snuff-box], we shall be no longer troubled with such scruples; though I warn you that we have to deal with, the first, of London, is the most crafty, as well as the most daring of outlaws, and must be encountered with qualities like his own—ingenuity and hardihood. If Armour succeeds—"

(Mr. Armour smiled slightly, and his lips mutely assumed that form which would be necessary to pronounce the word "if.")

"—he will have well earned the most liberal reward your generosity has proposed for him. You look pale and agitated, and no wonder. Leave, I beg my dear, for the present. When I come again, I trust it will be to bring you important tidings."

Why does the girl pace her room again and up and down the room; and, stopping at length, sinks on the window-seat, and looks intently on the boy whose life had so lately recorded her solemn vow?

In the afternoon Polly-my-Lamb made up her mind to send for Mrs. Ascroft, and question her further on the subject of her lodger and her snuff-box.

That lady came, and not only related at considerable length what she could bring to bear on this topic, but further touched upon the subject of her late lodgers; and, receiving no check, launched out boldly into praises of the poor boy, whom she had nursed and cared for, till she was as fond of him as though he had been her own.

"He thinks of you all day, and I am confident dreams of no one else all night. Whatever you may call it, this fancy of his will be his life or death, according as you please to behave.

"Behave!" repeated Polly-my-Lamb, aghast at this plain speaking.

"Well, miss," continued Mrs. Ascroft, "last night, for the first time, he slept so quietly it was a treat to look at him; and he was up to-day as fresh as a rose; you might see him getting well under your very eyes! I wish, ma'am—if I might make so bold" (dropping a courtesy), "you would be so kind, now and then, as just to look out of the window!"

Polly-my-Lamb blushed scarlet, and executed a frown, which, however, having no consolation to speak of, faded presently away. The blush, conscious of itself, remained.

"Just to look at him, you see," pleaded Mrs. Ascroft, earnestly.

Polly-my-Lamb smiled, and the landlady, with a woman's quick perception, saw it was a favorable moment to take her departure.

"It will be the saving of an innocent young life, if you should, miss."

This shot was fired from the door, and Polly-my-Lamb was alone. Suppose we leave her so? What do you think? She is a dear, good girl, and may be trusted. Goodness forbid that we should be guilty of the meanness of watching her!

All we know is that, about three o'clock that same day, Master Arthur Haggerdorn rallied considerably: so much so that if, in the morning, he appeared a little worse, or a trifle less bright, in the evening, have been easily mistaken for a peony.

CHAPTER IV.

Sir James Polhill sat in council with his vizier.

"Yes, I do think it will," said the chief. "After all, however, we want motive, eh?"

"We have that also, Sir James, as I will shew you, with proofs positive. I found a memorandum, this morning, to have some talk with the clerk Middlemiss. He has always been persuaded that his principal had private dealings with the Amsterdam house, Dietrich & Co., who failed about a year since under circumstances which rendered them liable to the charge of fraud. Middlemiss believes that Mr. Humpage, from motives of generosity, assisted the house with considerable advances, though, as he thinks, not securities in their names can be found among his papers. The clerk's belief is grounded upon other circumstances with which I am not yet acquainted. Some suspicion of the rectitude of these people—Dietrich & Co.—may have induced Mr. Humpage to discontinue his correspondence with them, and to transact none of his former loans—and, in revenge, or to evade such claims, this crime may have been devised or perpetrated. Middlemiss's book is known to the Dutch police as one of the most reckless scoundrels unhanged—a commercial pirate. However, this latter part, as well as Dietrich's character, is only our conjecture, since no record exists of Mr. Humpage's transactions with them beyond the payment of their bills, without apparent consideration, are at least of which passed through the hands of their agent in London."

"If we can identify Lord Lyndhurst, in one of the disguises in which he excels; that the snuff-box accidentally slipped out of his sight and memory, and was consequently supplied a clew of which we will never let go."

"No, Sir James," said the officer, with his accustomed coolness. "When do you want him?"

"No occasion that you can put the needful amount of salt on his tail."

"I shall take him to-night."

"To-night, Armour! Humour, you're a wizard!" cried Sir James, rubbing his hands, and becoming infected with the other's confidence. "But what's your plan?"

"There's a row among the gangs—a split. What it is I can not make out, but our luck is certainly in the country party. Last night, after we left Bow Street, and while I was getting my chop in the Haymarket, up comes a fellow dressed like a country gentleman, as they say, and tells me that my old pal son wouldn't wear, and sits down opposite. When the waiter's back was turned he took off his left-hand glove, and showed his thumb—black as the ace of spades. He's the revered gentleman. 'Hem!' says he. 'You want an audience of my lord?' says the country party. 'Well, 'tain't my lord, you're to pick: 'I—well—I should like to have a couple o' words with him; but it ain't pressing, or I could easily prevail on his porter, or one of the hackeys, to show me up.'

"'You're a liar,' replied the reverend gentleman, but not rudely. 'You couldn't do nothing o' the sort, and you knows it. Think you can gammon me?'

"'Would take a sharper chap than me to do that, Mr.—— Smith,' says I, civilly (for he's open to flattery, is that gentleman). 'But about this said porter. I still think—'

"The porter's come to see, Master Armour,' says he, interrupting me, 'to tell you that if you want my lord, you must look for him to-night, or not at all. Our establishment's broke up. The lease expires to-morrow. The butler's sold the lush and bolted with the money. There's a paragraph gone to the Newsman—you'll see it to-morrow!' 'Fush!' cries the gentleman—Lord Lob, he's giv' up his princely establishment in the Adelphi, and left London with his suite, for a prolonged tour.'"

"Are you telling me the truth?' I says, as a matter of form.

"'Yes, I am,' says he, grinding his teeth savagely. 'He's a tyrant and—and a thief!'

"No! Nonsense!' says I. 'You can't mean that.'

"'You come to-night,' he says, 'that's all. Nine o'clock, punctual. Here,' and he writes an address on a card. 'Bring a hundred redbreasts if you like, only keep 'em dark till the'r're wanted.'

"'All right,' says I. 'What's the porter's fee?'

"'Gratified revenge,' said the fellow, patting his mouth close to my ear, and was off before I could get out another word."

"A fortunate split," said the pleased magistrate, "Success attend you!"

About nine that evening, Mr. Armour, in seedy attire, with two brace of pistols in his pockets, naunted cautiously along the lonely thoroughfare. A very close observer might have been aware of other five seedy figures, moving in a like direction, and gradually diminishing their intervals between each and each other as all converged toward the entrance of a dark court, or narrow side-street in the Adelphi.

An individual in rusty black, walking in the same direction, here brushed past the officer, who turned and looked after his receding figure.

"Watch the house, number nineteen; come to shot or whistle. If I don't reappear in twenty minutes, force entrance."

The man in black halted at the bottom, before a corner house, one face of which apparently looked up upon the river. As Armour closed up to him he muttered, interrogatively,

"You've enough?"

"Nine," replied the other, coolly, throwing in the additional four as a compliment.

"Get them closer. Are you mad? Follow me."

Armour made a signal to the folks in darkness, then boldly entered the robbers' den.

"How many?" he asked, glancing up the dark and narrow stair.

"Alone," was the answer. "In the lumbergarret, at the very top of the house; no retreat but by this stair, or a jump of eighteen feet into the Thames."

Armour's pale face had brought quicker. He could hardly suppose that the redoubted robber would be captured so easily. He griped a pistol with one hand, and his conductor's arm with the other.

"Look you, my friend, if you play me doubles on me, you, at least, shall not live to brag of it."

"Trust me in an infernal hell!" was the reply. "Keep quiet. We're within ten steps of his door. I'm going in. Stand close, and, when you hear me stumble over a chair, dash in. I'll help you, if necessary."

Toward the top the staircase became so narrow that no person alone could well have passed. Above was a small landing, and at the back of it a door, through the cracks of which light was streaming.

The officer stood aside, in the darkness, while his guide made a signal at the door, and, without awaiting an answer, quietly entered. There was a low murmur of voices, in question and answer, but though they occasionally rose high enough for the alert listener to distinguish words, he could make no sense into a connected sentence. Then there was a pause. Some one paced the room; perhaps the traitor, preparatory to bidding adieu for his plunder to the shelves of his agent in London.

If he were a likely lawyer, Armour; and Lord Lob was a man exactly to their hand," said Sir James, a smile playing on the fact had been of the most providential character. "But now, mind what you are about in tackling this fellow. You'll find it a tougher job than you suppose. I have my ears on his each matters, as you will allow, but I don't mind owning that I shall not be entirely at ease in this till I hear that Lord Lyndhurst is safely lodged in a whole skin. You may smile, Armour, but I can not afford to have a vacancy in the police body, which, upon your own showing, will be at a loss."

"No fear, Sir James," said the officer, with his accustomed coolness. "When do you want him?"

"No occasion that you can put the needful amount of salt on his tail."

"I shall take him to-night."

"To-night, Armour! Humour, you're a wizard!" cried Sir James, rubbing his hands, and becoming infected with the other's confidence. "But what's your plan?"

"There's a row among the gangs—a split. What it is I can not make out, but our luck is certainly in the country party. Last night, after we left Bow Street, and while I was getting my chop in the Haymarket, up comes a fellow dressed like a country gentleman, as they say, and tells me that my old pal son wouldn't wear, and sits down opposite. When the waiter's back was turned he took off his left-hand glove, and showed his thumb—black as the ace of spades. He's the revered gentleman. 'Hem!' says he. 'You want an audience of my lord?' says the country party. 'Well, 'tain't my lord, you're to pick: 'I—well—I should like to have a couple o' words with him; but it ain't pressing, or I could easily prevail on his porter, or one of the hackeys, to show me up.'

"'You're a liar,' replied the reverend gentleman, but not rudely. 'You couldn't do nothing o' the sort, and you knows it. Think you can gammon me?'

"'Would take a sharper chap than me to do that, Mr.—— Smith,' says I, civilly (for he's open to flattery, is that gentleman). 'But about this said porter. I still think—'

"The porter's come to see, Master Armour,' says he, interrupting me, 'to tell you that if you want my lord, you must look for him to-night, or not at all. Our establishment's broke up. The lease expires to-morrow. The butler's sold the lush and bolted with the money. There's a paragraph gone to the Newsman—you'll see it to-morrow!' 'Fush!' cries the gentleman—Lord Lob, he's giv' up his princely establishment in the Adelphi, and left London with his suite, for a prolonged tour.'"

"Are you telling me the truth?' I says, as a matter of form.

"'Yes, I am,' says he, grinding his teeth savagely. 'He's a tyrant and—and a thief!'

"No! Nonsense!' says I. 'You can't mean that.'

"'You come to-night,' he says, 'that's all. Nine o'clock, punctual. Here,' and he writes an address on a card. 'Bring a hundred redbreasts if you like, only keep 'em dark till the'r're wanted.'

"'All right,' says I. 'What's the porter's fee?'

"'Gratified revenge,' said the fellow, patting his mouth close to my ear, and was off before I could get out another word."

"A fortunate split," said the pleased magistrate, "Success attend you!"

About nine that evening, Mr. Armour, in seedy attire, with two brace of pistols in his pockets, naunted cautiously along the lonely thoroughfare. A very close observer might have been aware of other five seedy figures, moving in a like direction, and gradually diminishing their intervals between each and each other as all converged toward the entrance of a dark court, or narrow side-street in the Adelphi.

An individual in rusty black, walking in the same direction, here brushed past the officer, who turned and looked after his receding figure.

"Watch the house, number nineteen; come to shot or whistle. If I don't reappear in twenty minutes, force entrance."

The man in black halted at the bottom, before a corner house, one face of which apparently looked up upon the river. As Armour closed up to him he muttered, interrogatively,

"You've enough?"

"Nine," replied the other, coolly, throwing in the additional four as a compliment.

"Get them closer. Are you mad? Follow me."

Armour made a signal to the folks in darkness, then boldly entered the robbers' den.

"How many?" he asked, glancing up the dark and narrow stair.

"Alone," was the answer. "In the lumbergarret, at the very top of the house; no retreat but by this stair, or a jump of eighteen feet into the Thames."

Armour's pale face had brought quicker. He could hardly suppose that the redoubted robber would be captured so easily. He griped a pistol with one hand, and his conductor's arm with the other.

"Look you, my friend, if you play me doubles on me, you, at least, shall not live to brag of it."

"Trust me in an infernal hell!" was the reply. "Keep quiet. We're within ten steps of his door. I'm going in. Stand close, and, when you hear me stumble over a chair, dash in. I'll help you, if necessary."

Toward the top the staircase became so narrow that no person alone could well have passed. Above was a small landing, and at the back of it a door, through the cracks of which light was streaming.

The officer stood aside, in the darkness, while his guide made a signal at the door, and, without awaiting an answer, quietly entered. There was a low murmur of voices, in question and answer, but though they occasionally rose high enough for the alert listener to distinguish words, he could make no sense into a connected sentence. Then there was a pause. Some one paced the room; perhaps the traitor, preparatory to bidding adieu for his plunder to the shelves of his agent in London.

If he were a likely lawyer, Armour; and Lord Lob was a man exactly to their hand," said Sir James, a smile playing on the fact had been of the most providential character. "But now, mind what you are about in tackling this fellow. You'll find it a tougher job than you suppose. I have my ears on his each matters, as you will allow, but I don't mind owning that I shall not be entirely at ease in this till I hear that Lord Lyndhurst is safely lodged in a whole skin. You may smile, Armour, but I can not afford to have a vacancy in the police body, which, upon your own showing, will be at a loss."

"No fear, Sir James," said the officer, with his accustomed coolness. "When do you want him?"

"No occasion that you can put the needful amount of salt on his tail."

"I shall take him to-night."

"To-night, Armour! Humour, you're a wizard!" cried Sir James, rubbing his hands, and becoming infected with the other's confidence. "But what's your plan?"

"There's a row among the gangs—a split. What it is I can not make out, but our luck is certainly in the country party. Last night, after we left Bow Street, and while I was getting my chop in the Haymarket, up comes a fellow dressed like a country gentleman, as they say, and tells me that my old pal son wouldn't wear, and sits down opposite. When the waiter's back was turned he took off his left-hand glove, and showed his thumb—black as the ace of spades. He's the revered gentleman. 'Hem!' says he. 'You want an audience of my lord?' says the country party. 'Well, 'tain't my lord, you're to pick: 'I—well—I should like to have a couple o' words with him; but it ain't pressing, or I could easily prevail on his porter, or one of the hackeys, to show me up.'

"'You're a liar,' replied the reverend gentleman, but not rudely. 'You couldn't do nothing o' the sort, and you knows it. Think you can gammon me?'

"'Would take a sharper chap than me to do that, Mr.—— Smith,' says I, civilly (for he's open to flattery, is that gentleman). 'But about this said porter. I still think—'

"The porter's come to see, Master Armour,' says he, interrupting me, 'to tell you that if you want my lord, you must look for him to-night, or not at all. Our establishment's broke up. The lease expires to-morrow. The butler's sold the lush and bolted with the money. There's a paragraph gone to the Newsman—you'll see it to-morrow!' 'Fush!' cries the gentleman—Lord Lob, he's giv' up his princely establishment in the Adelphi, and left London with his suite, for a prolonged tour.'"

"Are you telling me the truth?' I says, as a matter of form.

"'Yes, I am,' says he, grinding his teeth savagely. 'He's a tyrant and—and a thief!'

"No! Nonsense!' says I. 'You can't mean that.'

"'You come to-night,' he says, 'that's all. Nine o'clock, punctual. Here,' and he writes an address on a card. 'Bring a hundred redbreasts if you like, only keep 'em dark till the'r're wanted.'

"'All right,' says I. 'What's the porter's fee?'

"'Gratified revenge,' said the fellow, patting his mouth close to my ear, and was off before I could get out another word."

"A fortunate split," said the pleased magistrate, "Success attend you!"

About nine that evening, Mr. Armour, in seedy attire, with two brace of pistols in his pockets, naunted cautiously along the lonely thoroughfare. A very close observer might have been aware of other five seedy figures, moving in a like direction, and gradually diminishing their intervals between each and each other as all converged toward the entrance of a dark court, or narrow side-street in the Adelphi.

An individual in rusty black, walking in the same direction, here brushed past the officer, who turned and looked after his receding figure.

"Watch the house, number nineteen; come to shot or whistle. If I don't reappear in twenty minutes, force entrance."

The man in black halted at the bottom, before a corner house, one face of which apparently looked up upon the river. As Armour closed up to him he muttered, interrogatively,

"You've enough?"

"Nine," replied the other, coolly, throwing in the additional four as a compliment.

"Get them closer. Are you mad? Follow me."

Armour made a signal to the folks in darkness, then boldly entered the robbers' den.

"How many?" he asked, glancing up the dark and narrow stair.

"Alone," was the answer. "In the lumbergarret, at the very top of the house; no retreat but by this stair, or a jump of eighteen feet into the Thames."

Armour's pale face had brought quicker. He could hardly suppose that the redoubted robber would be captured so easily. He griped a pistol with one hand, and his conductor's arm with the other.

"Look you, my friend, if you play me doubles on me, you, at least, shall not live to brag of it."

"Trust me in an infernal hell!" was the reply. "Keep quiet. We're within ten steps of his door. I'm going in. Stand close, and, when you hear me stumble over a chair, dash in. I'll help you, if necessary."

Toward the top the staircase became so narrow that no person alone could well have passed. Above was a small landing, and at the back of it a door, through the cracks of which light was streaming.

The officer stood aside, in the darkness, while his guide made a signal at the door, and, without awaiting an answer, quietly entered. There was a low murmur of voices, in question and answer, but though they occasionally rose high enough for the alert listener to distinguish words, he could make no sense into a connected sentence. Then there was a pause. Some one paced the room; perhaps the traitor, preparatory to bidding adieu for his plunder to the shelves of his agent in London.

doubled up as no living man could lie, as he had been flung headlong from the window. The struggle he had overheard was fearfully accounted for.

"The fool forgot the window!" sneered the robber, his fair face distorted like a fiend's. "Let other fools take warning. Look here!"

He made a sudden movement, as though to leap through the window; but, checking himself suddenly, slipped under the officer's uplifted arm, and, making one bound toward the door, disappeared. Quick and unexpected as the action was, the ready officer had drawn a pistol and fired, even as the door was flung in his face. Then he dashed after. There was an alarm below; there were shouts, and the rattle of fire-arms, as the latter, roused by the attack of the police upon the house, hastened to contribute their quota of noise if not of execution. The alarmed inhabitants of the place, which were the appearance of a low lodging-house, ran to and fro in wild confusion. They were collected, and placed in custody for the moment, while the house was searched from top to bottom. All, however, was in vain. There was no trace of the fugitive nobleman. By what outlet he had escaped no one could divine. Gone he was—and there an end!

Burning with rage and disappointment, Armour hastened round to the rear of the house where he had seen the body of the murdered spy. There it still lay. They lifted it up. The bullet-wound was sure enough, but the body was represented by a brown pillow. Lord Lob had himself enacted the part of one of his own gags.

"Done, and doubly done!" growled Mr. Armour, as he moved disconsolately home.

HOSPITAL AND CAMP INCIDENTS.

THE SANITARY COMMISSION AMONG THE SOLDIERS.

No. I.

Or the many beneficent organizations with which the spirit of sympathy with the army has originated undoubtedly the Sanitary Commission possesses by far the greatest capabilities for usefulness, and has accomplished the largest work in the direction of relieving the wants and promoting the comfort of the soldier. Comprehensive and minute in its operations, beneficial to a fault, reaching every want, and for the most part extending its aid where no other agency could penetrate, it watches over and cares for the sick, the wounded, and the suffering with the solicitude of parental affection; provides for the comfort and health of the soldier in camp, flies to his relief after every battle, nurses him in the hospital, brings to him in every relation something of the comforts of home, and everywhere is felt that his country is not forgetful of his necessities nor indifferent to his services. Co-operating in every thing with the Government, this Commission is yet peculiarly the representative of the popular instinct and purpose. It is emphatically the PEOPLE'S minister and almoner in the work of administering relief and consolation. It distributes their clothing, medicines, fruits, vegetables; it repeats their words of cheer and encouragement; it receives the spectacle of their noble sympathy to the soldier's waiting eye. From every corner of the land contributions have poured into and flowed out from this, to those whose valor has given a new lustre to our flag. The rich have given their thousands; the poor, where money could not be sent, have bestowed such supplies of clothing as they could spare from their scanty wardrobes; the gifted have lent their pens and voices, the unlearned the labor of their hands to the promotion of the common object. From the backwoods the adventurous settlers, in suits of homespun, have driven into camp their loads of wood, of potatoes, apples, and other fruits, that they might realize something to contribute to this Commission. In the cities noble-hearted women have gathered the dribblets of charity into common channels of benevolence, organizing fairs, concerts, and what not in aid of this cause. In the still darkness of many a night, in lonely farm-houses, and at pleasant fireside gatherings, mothers, wives, have worked rejoicingly in the preparation of garments for the lorn and suffering ones in field and garrison; in chill dawns, on rustling country roads, with the same end in view, bronzed and horny hands have "hooked" through busy days shocks of yellow corn, heaping the affluent ears in shining mounds, thoughts of the good the proceeds of the labor would do the soldier making warm and glad the hearts beating under the huskers' rough jackets.

The actual magnitude of the work performed by the people through this Commission can not, of course, be expressed in words. But an approximate estimate has been made, in a late report of the Assistant Secretary, from which it can be stated that the gifts of the women of the country, made through the Commission, exceed in value the sum of $7,000,000. The whole amount, in money, received by the Treasurer of the Commission up to the 1st of October last, was $857,715 33, which has been swelled, including the receipts of the recent great Fairs at Boston, Cincinnati, and Chicago, to certainly more than $1,000,000. These statements, however, by no means present any adequate idea of the results achieved; labors have been performed and services rendered to which no mere money value can be attached. The general superintendent of the Commission, with quiet every where in our armies, amount to $45,000 a month; hundreds of men needing "special relief" are daily cared for, and the "homes" it has established; and almost hourly, at some point in the extended theatre of military operations, fresh demands are made upon its resources and met. Not only do its steamboats and wagon teams follow the army every where, but its agents are constantly employed in the equally important works of sanitary and hospital inspection, and the like, the results of which, as revealed in the physical condition of the soldier, no arithmetic could probably estimate.

But while the country will never know, in any adequate degree, what has really been accomplished through this Commission, certain specific results will undoubtedly be discovered to the public which will amply confirm its title to a place in history. Some results of this character are already developed, and a few of these—as illustrating the vast achievements which must ever remain unknown, and as showing the benefits the Commission has conferred—we shall enumerate in this and succeeding papers.

THE WORK AT GETTYSBURG.

The work of the Commission at Gettysburg, in July last, was a type of that which it has performed on every important battle-field since the war commenced. With the first news of the battle a depôt was established at Westminster, the nearest point of railroad communication. Thither all the hospitables were pushed forward, under fire, to reach the wounded on the left wing of the army, and a large amount of precious supplies of every description to the corps hospitals, and to scattering groups of wounded on the field, long before any supplies arrived by railroad. Immediately after the battle a Lodge was established on the field, and this became at once the centre of a system of distribution, whose results were most beneficent.

At the railroad depôt in the town, the Commission had large tents erected for the reception and refreshment of the wounded when brought in from the distant hospitals. They had also large storetents filled to repletion with all manner of supplies. A cook-house was erected, and here, in large cauldrons, stoves, and a steam apparatus, all of which were in constant operation day and night, ten cooks and between thirty and forty colored people were employed in preparing and dealing out such nourishment as the circumstances admitted. All possible appliances, indeed, which experience and considerate forethought could anticipate for so extreme a necessity, such as clothes, crutches, shoes, pails, pillows, splints, lint, bandages, and every kind of stimulant were furnished with unceasing diligence and attention. Surgeons, commissioned agents, moreover, labored in the dressing of wounds which the surgeons on the field had been unable to give proper attention to. Every thing that was in this way, it is believed, was done by the country. Before leaving on the trains every wounded soldier had his canteen filled with coffee, and was supplied with an extra cup of coffee, soup, or broth, as was preferred; subsequently, when the corps hospitals had been relieved of the wounded, and as to be removed a long distance, the more seriously wounded were gathered up by the agents of the Commission, and carried to Camp Letterman, a large depôt established a permanent station, co-operating for a long time afterward with the corps of army surgeons and nurses in the work of relief.

GRATITUDE OF THOSE RELIEVED.

Of course such care as the Commission bestowed on the wounded and the sick deeply affected the majority of those to whom even a cup of cold water was a blessing. One wounded officer during the whole time the Commission labored in that field says, that of the sixteen thousand who were transported during their stay not one went away without a comfortable meal; and all, rebels and unionists alike, received the same kindness, and were seemed especially grateful—the more so, no doubt, as they had been taught to expect very different treatment. Indeed, the men, as soon as their own wounds were dressed, "That feels so good, I haven't been so cared for since I left home." After the wounds were dressed, they have been erected in clean clothes—socks, slippers, shirts, drawers, and often dressing-gowns, the latter seeming to afford especial delight to the rebels. "Now I begin to clean and comfortable rows—'on dress parade' as they called it—every face, as the nurses passed to and fro, seemed lighted up with a smile, and words of gratitude were uttered in the fervent gratitude inspired by the manifestations of interest in their behalf.

Among the contributions which were held by a town in New York State was a quantity of cologne. This seemed to reach the hearts of the men quite as quickly as their wounds. "Ah, cologne, now?" "That kinder gives a fellow life!" and similar exclamations, ran from tent to tent as the bottles were tipped on the clean handkerchief which some oth, or thoughtful aid society had furnished.

The touching incidents which the delegates of the Commission report from this bloody field are, of course, varied and numerous.

A REBEL LIEUTENANT AND HIS BROTHER.

Late one afternoon, too late for the cars, a train of ambulances arrived at the depôt of the Commission with over 100 wounded rebels to be cared for during the night. Many of them were but slightly injured, but one of them, a lieutenant, was so weak and faint that it seemed impossible to do any thing to restore him. In appearance he seemed a mere boy, with a clear, intelligent, bright blue eyes, and hair that any New England girl might have worn with pride. One of the nurses took him in charge; he was too weak to speak, but he had been willing to eat for days, his comrades said. Finally, however, he was induced to take a little gruel, which he kindly thanked her for, and after the hour afterward he talked of his "good supper," thanking his attendant with a fervor again for their kindness. But all the while he was growing worse, and at midnight a change came; and from that time he thought every one who came to see him was before he was a soldier, when he sang hymns in his father's church. He sang them now again, in a low, sweet voice, and "spoke of home" as a child of a sick soul in it. "Lord, have mercy on me!" he cried now and then; then sangs without words—sort of low intoning—rippled from his pale lips. His father was a Lutheran clergyman in South Carolina; and the lessons of his childhood were floating back upon him in the dark hours through which he was going down into the deeper shadow. All the day following the nurses watched him, sometimes fighting his battles over, sometimes losing his Lutheran chants, till suddenly, at the tent door, close to which he lay, appeared a rebel soldier, just arrived with other prisoners. He was brought in to see the Lieutenant, and, hurriedly kneeling by him, called him by name; but the ears were deaf then to the call of love. Then, rising, he told the attendants that the Lieutenant's brother was wounded and a prisoner not far away; upon which some of the party started after him, returning not long after, carrying him in their arms. But he too was a stranger to Henry—for so the Lieutenant was called; and the corpse lay down at his side on the straw, and there remained for the rest of the day, the little group gathered around watching and listening to the strong, clear voice singing, "Lead, have mercy upon me!" The Lord, looking down, had mercy. The day faded, and the night came on; but with the sunset the rebel brother grew still, and the stars, opening their soft eyes, saw only a pale face with the death dews on it in the midst of the group.

A rude coffin was made, the dead boy placed in it; but all night long the wounded brother lay close against it, as if unwilling to be separated even from the dead, and the nurse who had patrolled right beside his own all the way up from childhood to the borders of that river which all must cross some solemn day. At the appointed hour the rebel officer prisoners must march; and, with tears on his face, the bereaved one went away with his comrades, to be exchanged, to be buried from those who tenderly cared for him while living; first, however, thanking them all for what they had done, and giving them all his warm gratitude, together with a palmetto ornament from the dead brother's cap and a button from his coat. That same morning Henry was laid away in his long sleep, a surgeon of the Commission reading the burial service, and a delegate writing his name on the little head-board of his narrow bed. He was a Tennessee Fourteenth Regiment South Carolina Volunteers."

THE CRAZY SOLDIER AND HIS WIFE.

Among the wounded soldiers who one night came into the Commission Lodge was an elderly man, who, at first, was thought crazy, from talking constantly of home. The attendants did what they could for him, passing him especially a warm basket of a red flannel shirt, drawers, and red calico dressing-gown, in which he dressed himself, and then sitting down to rest, giving the letter to one of the nurses to mail for him. The next morning he was sent away with a detachment of the wounded, and his case was forgotten. Months after, in the early evening, two tired women appeared at the Lodge, who proved to be his wife and sister. They had come from their home in search of their lost one, and had arrived just too late. He had been crazy before the war, his wife said, but not for ten years past. He had been returning to get money with which having been wounded, and had written to his wife to come and carry him away. It seemed almost like wilful carelessness to leave these helpless ones, who had never been away from their own quiet town, to undertake to find a soldier among so many men in so many different directions; but the persons at the Lodge helped them all they could, giving them all the information in their possession, and so they started on their search. A few days passed, and nothing was heard of either husband or wife; then there came a letter full of gratitude, saying that the wife had found her husband, and soon he home again with his dear ones around him to console by tender ministrations for all pains and all losses.

THE GERMAN MOTHER AND HER QUILT.

Another night two fathers with their wounded sons and an old German mother with her boy arrived at the Commission Camp, and were furnished with supplies. The old mother had come all the way from Wisconsin, bringing with her a patchwork bed-quilt for her son, thinking he might have to lie a long time in the hospital. At the Lodge, that quilt covered him, and the mother's hand soothed and ministered to him, her kind eyes looking into his till the deep sorrow in them was shining through them. The old woman was intensely patriotic. She had three sons, she said, in the army; and if God willed that this boy would end; but she counted her sacrifices as nothing; she'd be a soldier herself if she could." How the sublime spirit of motherhood shone in that humble woman—and of thousands like her all through the land—should shame the miserable cowards who, in nooks and corners, and sometimes openly in the market-place, declaim against this righteous war, and clamor for a peace involving the dishonor and lasting humiliation of the nation.

WHITE AND COLORED SLAVES.

No. I MACON STREET, NEW YORK.

To the Editor of Harper's Weekly:

The group of colored people whose portraits I send you were brought by Colonel Hanks and Mr. Philip Bacon from New Orleans, and are now the property of Mr. Bacon's Butler. Mr. Bacon went to New Orleans with our army, and was engaged as superintendent of the Government Intendent of Freedmen, under the care of Colonel Hanks. He established a plantation, and put these people, who were ex-slaves, and these children were among his pupils. He has since returned to Louisiana with them.

REBECCA HUGHES is eleven years old, and was a slave to Mr. Hughes, who resided on Canal street, in the city. She is older than herself. To all appearance she is perfectly white. Her features, hair, and forehead are not the slightest trace of negro blood. In the few months she has been with us she has learned to read and write, read well, and writes as neatly as most children of her age. She was eighteen months old when her father died, and they support themselves comfortably by their own labor. The grandmother, Mrs. Hughes, is a free woman. She states that she had "raised" a large family of children, but those are all dead or left by her.

ROSINA DOWNS is not quite seven years old. She is a fair child, with blonde complexion and light hair. Her father is in the rebel army. She has one sister as white as herself, and another who is quite darker. Her mother, then a bright mulatto, lives in New Orleans in a poor hut, and has to work to support her family.

CHARLES TAYLOR is eight years old. His complexion is very fair, his hair light and silky. These six of five boys in any school in New York are darker than he. Yet this white boy, with his mother, or he reckons, his born father sold to a slave. First by his father and "owner," Thornton W. Chilton, of Loudoun County, Virginia, to a trader named Harrison, who sold them to Mr. Thornhill of Jefferson County, who sold the negro portion of the family, and his slaves were liberated by General Butler. The boy is decidedly intelligent, and though he has been with us less than a year he reads and writes very well. His mother is a mulatto; she had one daughter sold into Texas before she herself left Virginia, and was one who, she supposes, is with his father in Virginia.

These three children, to all appearance of unmixed white race, came to Philadelphia last December, and were taken by their protector, Mr. Bacon, to the St. Lawrence Hotel on Chestnut Street. Within a few hours, Mr. Bacon informed me, he was notified by the landlord that they must leave. The children, he said, had been slaves, and must therefore be colored persons, and he kept a hotel for white people. From this hospitable establishment the children were taken to Union Volunteer Refreshment Saloon, where they were received without hesitation.

WYATT GRAY was born about 60 years old, he was "owned" by Jesse Howard of Woodford County, Kentucky. When Mr. Howard died he left Wyatt and his children and wife to Virginia Gray, a large planter about 45 miles above New Orleans. This man was somewhat kinder than his predecessors, and Wyatt has on his forehead the letters V. R. (Virginia Railroad) which he received from Mr. Gray at that time and came into the Union camp. Thirty of them had been brought like cattle with a view to sale. Most of them on the forehead and some on the breast or arms.

Wyatt can not say for fifty years old, however, he is almost white, was owned by her half-brother, named Solomon, who still retains two of her children.

Wyatt professes to be a member of the family in New Orleans. On her left arm are scars of three cuts given to her by her mistress with a cowhide. On her back are scars of more than fifty cuts given by her master. The mistress was the last one whipped by him. He struck behind him in bringing up his five o'clock cup of coffee. As Wyatt was always punished she was glad to escape her master, and has since been employed by Colonel Hanks as cook.

ISAAC WHITE is a black boy of eight years; but none would suppose him more than six years old. He has been in school about seven months, and I venture to say will not one boy in fifty of seven years of age make such improvements in this space of time.

The Rev. Dr. Chickering, Reverend Mr. Whitehead perhaps we ought to style him, since he is a regularly-ordained minister, and Mr. Bacon, the latter of whom is to Norfolk, Virginia, by a Dr. A. F. N. Cook, and sold for $1500; from Norfolk he was taken to New Orleans where he was bought for $1775 by a Dr. Leslie, who hired him out as house and table servant. Dr. Leslie was pleased and paid over that sum to his master, he suggested that a boy of Isaac's appearance would be quite acceptable. Dr. Leslie thought the request reasonable, and made him a donation of a white quarter of a dollar. The revered gentleman can read and write well, and is a very stirring speaker. He belongs to the Methodist Episcopalian, having enlisted in the United States army.

A large plantation in the vicinity of group which you reproduce has been taken, and entre its estate of the negroes. The crops are for sale at the benefit of the National Freedman's Relief Association. No. 1 Mercer Street, New York, and with them for your readers a copy of the price: $1 for the large picture, 25 cents each for the cartes. The profits to go to the support of the schools in Louisiana.

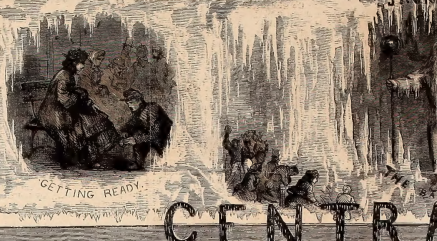
C. C. LEIGH.

BURNING OF THE COMPANIA AT SANTIAGO, CHILI.

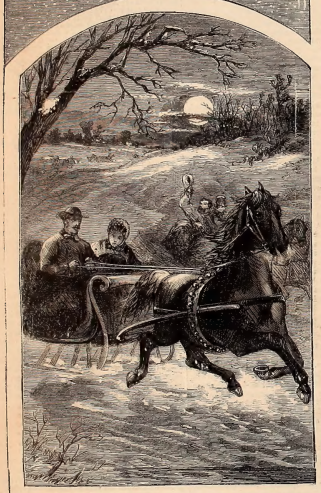
On the 8th of December last, at Santiago, the capital of Chili, occurred a calamity by which, in its kind, finds scarcely a parallel in history.

We give on page 65 engravings of THE CHURCH OF THE COMPANIA, and of the Interior, from photographs kindly sent to us by CHARLES S. RAND, Esq., Secretary of Legation. Ever since 1857, when the new church of the Compania de Jesus was born at Rome, this church has celebrated by the most magnificent of festivals the "Month of Mary," beginning on the 1st of November and ending with the 8th of December, under the auspices of the priest Ugarte, who stands at the head of the Sodalicio (or Daughters of the Virgin), in which were enrolled nearly all the ladies of the fashionable capital. For thirty days had this festival been going on, the prodigal of splendor that was now about to culminate in an illumination which Ugarte had promised the Roman Nuncio should outshine all those of the world. The evening had by had taken from mid-afternoon, for there were over twenty thousand lights, mostly camphene; and in the course time the church had filled to its almost capacity, until, at quarter past seven, it contained more than three thousand women and a few hundred men, all in a dense mass living and breathing, unlike those to which we are accustomed, being without pews. Over the altar was an image representing Murillo's Madonna of the Immaculate Conception, her feet resting upon a crescent, which, however, became a crescent of fire soon. But being illuminated, became a crescent of fire soon sooner as than, from one extremity, by the overflowing of the gas, a stream of flame issued forth, catching into a blaze the drapery around it, and soon stretching upward toward the tinsel and cauze with which the roof was decorated, followed by the rapid movement of a fire which the priest who saw mounted the kneeling multitude below. Those in the centre were the first to appreciate the peril, and turned toward the entrances, only to find, still kneeling near the door, were anxious to retain their places, and thus an obstacle was placed in the way of those attempting to escape, as the fire had now become hopelessly entangled in each other's dresses, while those still in the rear, hurried by the burning flames, pressed on and increased the general entangled above the double embankment of bodies underneath. There were but two avenues of escape, and before these lay the impassable fire which we have just described, barring all egress. More than two thousand women, most of them girls between fifteen and twenty years of age, were piled up pinioned beyond all hope of escape, when the lamps above, burnt loose from their fastenings, fell among the congested throng of maidens, setting their every article of dress in their very garments. Now the interior became one mass of flame, and the living struggled and closing the doors writhed as with one combined muscular effort, until it was so completely wedged together that the doors were rendered useless, and even saved with great difficulty, and with the loss of an arm or of life itself. And while this terrible tragedy was consummating in the church, Ugarte and his fellows were in the vestry—the door being locked to prevent escape in that direction—looking out for the safety of a few gewgaws of their own. It was not long before the entire roof fell through with a crash, and the huge belfry stood wrapped in flames, illuminating the ghastly scene beneath—a scene which we will not attempt to describe, for who can paint the agonies of the dying within, or the charred ruin which death leaves behind him? or who can portray the feelings of fathers and mothers and brothers, who stood without, looking upon the loved forms which, just at the door, defied all attempts at rescue?

SKETCH ON THE LARGE POND.



GETTING READY.



REFRESHMENTS.

FROST
IS UP.
PUT YOUR SKATES ON MISTER!
L PARK
NEW YORK SKATING CLUB.
DANGER
N
TER.
WARMING UP

TURNING OVER A NEW LEAF.

AFTER a while winter spent in studying art at Rome, I had come down, sitting bokkin between two Germans in a cheap vetturino carriage, to study nature at Naples. I was so sick of huge picture-galleries, hired models, and the gossip of the studios, that I thought it would be a relief to paint landscape for a change: so I said to others, and so I said to myself; but my own heart contradicted me. I knew very well, in my innermost soul, that it was in bitterness of spirit that I left Rome, unable to bear the sight of other men's prosperity. It stung me to see men whom I knew to be inferior to myself in true knowledge of color, in originality, in every thing but a plodding, stolid industry, pass me in the race of life. This is a cold, hard, workaday world of ours, an age without sympathy for the flaws and failings of genius, and measuring all capacities by the same pitiful little footrule of the results attained to.

And so I went to Naples; and, when the heats of the Italian summer came on, I took a roving life among the coast-towns and petty watering-places within reach of the great city—now at Portici, now at Sorrento, and then dawdling away weeks at Salerno or Castellamare. A lazy, good-for-nothing life it was: a life of castle-building, of regrets that I could be lazier, and of hopes that I should never blossom into meritorious fruit. I was still young, not four-and-twenty, but I thought I had a right to count myself a disappointed man. Long before my disappointed. First, because I had not met with encouragement from connoisseurs and the public. Secondly, because Lucy Graham—dear little Lucy, whom I loved and had loved for years, and who would have shared my poverty unmurmuringly—was not to be mine. Her relations were set against it. "They could not hear," they said, "of the dear girl's throwing herself away upon an idle, purposeless man who would drag her down with him into the mire of merited poverty." How false and selfish such reasoning was! They might have known—Lucy knew it, and Lucy's brother, to whom I will her gentle nature deferred—that with such an inducement, such a talisman, as her love and her welfare, depending on my toil, I should have done fifty times as much as I had ever achieved without such a spur to exertion.

A pecuniary crisis can not live, even in that country, always cheap to those whose wants are few, without coming. It had arrived, but in an unambitious fashion that did not task my patience overmuch. Colored sketches of mountain scenery and bits of Neapolitan fishermen, with bronzed, fishermen, peasants in goat-skins and brown serge, square-cupped women with pitchers, nets, olives, vineyards, and vine-clad caps, I threw from time to time, and these sold freely. My chief patrons were the foreign visitors to Sorrento and Castellamare, who were glad to carry home with them some memento of the rich scenery of the Neapolitan coast. I worked when I was hungry, earned enough to pay for beef and macaroni, and lived altogether in an improvident, hand-to-mouth fashion, like an educated lazarone. All this time I was very far from happy. There was a much heavier heart in the kingdom of Naples than that of Hugh Edwards —British subject and artist, as his passport described him—at his wanderer's end out of the little inn at Portici one autumn evening.

The sun was going down; one could see the scarlet light flashing and blazing through the green leaves of the rustling chestnut-trees, but there was plenty of light as yet, and the prospect was a pleasant one even to jaded eyes like mine. Portici and its painted houses were soon left behind, and I struck off by one of the many paths that lead into the hills.

Presently I stopped, and looked around me from a small eminence that commanded a view of the surrounding country. There was one object that especially took my eye, the new railroad, then in process of construction, and which was being carried out, like most of the iron ways of Europe by English skill and English capital. As I looked I saw a gang of ting far beneath me, in which a gang of laborers were still at work. The low rays of the sun flashed on their picturesque red forms, their heads topped by the red Naples cap, or bound, turban-like, with a colored handkerchief, and the picks and spades that were now and then thrown up with vehemence I stood afar off and watched them, but not from any sympathy with their labor or its ultimate object. On the contrary, as I looked I felt my lip curl and my brow darken; for the spectacle suggested unpleasant thoughts. In the contractor who had undertaken that section of the new line was no other than Lucy's odious elder brother, that very George Graham who had been the chief obstacle to the sealing of the half engagement between his orphaned sister and myself. A clever, plausible man, who had succeeded, and was still the successful in this world, treated failure as a crime.

I had never met this prosperous relative of Lucy's, nor did I desire to meet him. His opinion of myself had been formed from the report of mutual acquaintances, from the conversation of Lucy and her aunt, and from the correspondence that had begun and ended in anger. To meet George Graham was more than I had bargained for, and I quickly made up my mind to quit Portici.

A strange whim had urged me to visit this little town, and that whim had been disappointed. While last at Salerno an American traveler had given me an animated description of some adventures among the banditti, and had told me a number of anecdotes of the most celebrated brigand chiefs of the day—Saltocco, Capo Rosso, Malingbetti, and another freebooter whose name, I think, was d'Angelo, or "the Lamb," ironically expressed his peculiarly ferocious disposition. My informant was a doctor, and to this circumstance he had owed his immunity from any ill usage while in the hands of his dangerous hosts, many of whom were at the time suffering from marsh fever, and among them their leader Saltocco. The American had been lucky enough, having a medicine-chest among his luggage, to cure the greater part of these invalids; and, in return for his medical services, they had set him free, uninjured and unansomed, retaining, however, his gold watch and chain, which the chief promised to wear as a keepsake. The account Dr. Hucks gave of the wild bivouacs, high up in the thin clear air of the mountain solitudes of the Salvator Rosa groups around the fires, the dances, the village merry-makings, in which the brigands took a part as welcome guests, had piqued my curiosity. My desire was to obtain, if I could, a safe-conduct to inspect the camp of these marauders. For the idea of painting a great picture, and growing famous as a single effort, haunted me night and day, as it had haunted all of many and many an idle man. Who knew whether some quaintly savage scene amid the hills might not suggest itself as a work that should even yet restrieve my blighted fortunes?

Most certainly, however, had been the failure of these romantic notions. I found the good people of Portici by no means desirous to admit the existence of any brigands in their vicinity. All stories of carriage and plunder were gross exaggerations. A petty theft might now and then take place; but, beyond the pillage of a beer-shop or a travelling fruit-procession was authentic. In fact I suspect the Bourbon Government at Naples, anxious to avert the troublesome advice of foreign powers, had issued orders that the banditti, if they could not be exterminated, should be ignored.

"I beg your pardon," but I conclude that your name is Edwards, and that you are staying at the Albergo d'Inghilterra—is it not so?" said a voice in English at my elbow, as I was confronted with the speaker, who had approached me, lost as I was in reverie, without my hearing his step. He was a strongly-built man of forty years of age, in a sunburnt face and quick blue eyes, that roved hither and thither, and seemed in an instant to take the measure of any object on which they fell. His voice was getting gray, but probably more toil and exposure to weather than from age, since he did not appear to me to be much above fifty years of age. His attire, of dark-colored Tweed, was neat and plain, and by the compasses and ivory rule that projected from his pocket-book I at once discovered carriage than I am. Body of Bacchus! it's the English artist that came on Piero and me as we were eating our bread and melons by the well, and gave us a baiocchu apiece to stop quiet while he sketched us. The milordo is father, and has rot whiskers."

Indeed, an inspection of my passport and sketch-book convinced the brigand leader that I was not the wealthy traveler whom he had endeavored to ensnare. This discovery threw the Lamb into a paroxysm of dangerous fury. He began by cursing my captors for "blind bats," who did not know the difference between a beggarly spoiler of canvas and a "ricco" of the first quality. They excused themselves for their blunder by proverbial remarks, to the effect that night made every bird of one color, and that in the dark all cats were black. And the hum of assent which rose from the crowd proved that the brigands accounted their conduct all of a blame. Then the Lamb turned his flaming eyes on me, and, with a volley of choice Neapolitan abuse, declared that I should pay for both.

I reiterated the assurance that I was poor, and had no relative to whom I could apply for the price of my freedom.

"Per Eccole! but we will see to that," thundered the robber, "if you can not pay in silver you shall in skin. Strip off his shoes and warm his feet, my children; when they are roasted, this pert bird will sing a different song."

Instantly I was seized by several strong hands. I was thrown down, and very tightly bound with cords and thongs drawn savagely around my wrists and ankles, for it had often happened that a tortured prisoner had done mischief among the tormentors. Then my boots and stockings were torn away without meal, and I was thrust forward until the bare soles of my feet were close to the glowing red embers of the great fire. I was chilled with the black mountain air and with fatigue, and for the first few moments the heat was not disagreeable, but presently it became insupportable. I knew it should. The discomfort deepened into pain, the pain into agony, and I groaned and tried to crawl away. A robber took me by both shoulders and thrust me back again as if I had been a log; my scorched feet came in contact with the hot embers, and I could not suppress a scream which was mocked by a roar of laughter from the unfeeling savages.

"The roast meat will be burned," said one wag, and the joke provoked fresh mirth. A woman or two certainly did say "poverino," as I writhed and moaned, but no one offered to release me, and I began to fear that I should be martyred for life.

The fierceness of the pain drove that thought from my mind, conquered all sense of pride, resentment, and prudence, and I shrieked wildly and incoherently, sometimes beseeching the hard-hearted barbarians to have mercy, sometimes taunting and cursing them in the frantic hope that I might provoke some more irascible brute than the rest into ending my sufferings by a shot or a stab. Then nature was utterly spent, and I fainted.

When I recovered my senses I was lying in a wretched hut on a heap of straw. On a table of wine-cask at some distance sat a gray-haired old crone busy with one of those classic spindles which the Italian peasant women have used from the days of Etruscan civilization. For a time my senses were so dulled that I could remember nothing; and though I saw that it was morning, and that the air chilly, I did not try to realize how I came into my present position. At last a sharp shooting pain in my feet recalled my recollection of by-gone suffering, and I groaned and tried to rise, but failed. The old woman turned her head and bade me lie still, as if I had been a froward child, then came forward to unwind some yards of coarse linen in which my injured feet were wrapped, and proceeded to dress the wounds also afresh with some ointment of fully soothing ungent.

This old woman had, I suspect, saved my life. She alone had had compassion upon me as I lay insensible. The motive of this was very curious. Neapolitans of her class have little or no idea of philanthropy in theory or in practice, and it seldom enters into any one's head to pity the distress of those who are not akin to them in blood, or in love by friendship. But old Caterina had, it appears, been the mother of two sons, members of the gang, who had been hanged at Naples several years before, and, to the youngest and best beloved of these, I, in his mother's opinion, bore a strong resemblance. This lucky likeness had induced the old woman to undertake the cure of the lonely stranger. Thus she had restored some of the men to carry me to her hut—a comfortable deserted hovel—had laid me on a heap of straw beneath a tattered blanket, and had rubbed my blistered feet with an ointment which she declared infallible, and which would not allow me to "dance the Tarantella" in a month at latest.

But I was not yet safe. The Lamb, though convinced that I was not the traveler in whose stead I had been captured, was determined that I should not get off scot-free.

"He has fixed your ransom at eighteen thousand ducats. The milordo would have had to pay fifty thousand, but many profortress," "and he will pay the money. He gets money from all, even from begging friars and vine-dressers. Only last week he cut off the ears of a rich jeweler, first one, then the other, and sent them to his children in Salerno. The ransom was paid, but had it not been, I do believe would have chopped off every finger of the prisoner's hands joint by joint. That's how he serves the rich. As for those who are not rich he first toasts their feet and then stabs them with his stiletto—he does not waste much trouble on them; so, child, you had better think of some relation who would pay down the money to see you alive again."

Later in the day I received a visit from the brigand chief, who spoke substantially as follows: Every body knew that all Inglesi were wealthy folks, and, if I were not able to pay, probably I had kith and kin who would buy my safety. Failing that resource, were there not consule and embassadors of Inghilterra who might, could, would, and should forward the necessary cash to save the life of a British subject? To facilitate matters he, L'Agnello, would give me two weeks' grace, and would lower the terms to fourteen thousand ducats; but sooner than take a maravedi less, he would cause my head to be cut off and forwarded as a present to the Syndic of Portici, as he had done, four years since, in the case of Tommaso Bertoli, the vetturi.

Thus spoke the Lamb, not angrily, but with a kind of good-humored forcibly, and in the course of the afternoon a number of the brigands mustered into the hut, and one and all advised me in all seriousness to comply with their leader's recommendation. Some of these men were evidently sincere when they did not appear to be wholly without compassion for my wretched state, since my helpless plight gave very painful, and I should say that many of them very patted me on the back with rough kindness and bade me fear nothing as I should do well among them. Others nod and all agreed that since I obtained the sum demanded it would go very hard with me.

"The Lamb," said one tall youngster, who had been a boatman at Palermo, and was very proud of the five or six English words that he had picked up when plying among the foreign shipping—"the Lamb was out of temper yesterday, for three of his traps have caught no hare. Now, when the Cardinal, for whom nine of us watched for a week on the Sorrento road, a prince of the Church, whom ransom would have made rich for life, arrives, he gets nothing of the absolution he could have given us while we had him fast. Well, he slipped through our fingers, and so did the Milordo Inglese, but Signor Tazzi, who is wealthy enough to eat off gold and drink lacrima every day if he were not a Lichfilth, and so did the Lamb, and so he grows ravenfrige. The Lamb is not often so hasty as you found him, but he is a man of his word, and, per Domenico, you had better make haste to find your ransom, or of your friends as have the plumpest purses and the softest hearts."

Excellent counsel, no doubt, but, like much other advice of the same sort, easier given than followed. There was no one to whom I could turn for help in the wide world. My father, who was dead, was in London, above two thousand pounds of English money, and I could as soon have liquidated the National Debt as have raised it. Even if I had had any resources of my own. Rich friends were no more practical with me than they generally are with a man who is at once poor and helpless. Then I had no living relation who either could or would pay my ransom. The only hope, and that a desperate one, seemed to be that of an application to the British Embassy at Naples, and I knew too much of routine to expect much from that. Time was lost to me, and most likely, long before a letter official reply should be returned to my letter, I should be cast into my grave by the hands of the executioner. I was not improbable that my appeal would be treated as a hoax or an impertinence; there was "no precedent" for the case, and there was no precedence between a prisoner of L'Agnello and the Envoy of Her Britannic Majesty to the Court of the Two Sicilies.

In this emergency I bethought me of the stranger, the English engineer with whom I had been conversing immediately before my capture by the brigands. He had professed his desire to render me a service should real need of assistance arise, and I might as well try him as any one. Of course I was not so absurd as to dream that a salaried professional man could furnish the considerable sum that I required without reference to the price of his liberty, but I thought that if my new acquaintance were to press my case on the notice of the officials at the consulate, I might have a better chance of a hearing. With this idea I penned a short letter, addressed according to the direction that had been given to me, and intrusted to the brigands. He had professed his desire to render me a service should real need of assistance arise, and I might as well try him as any one. Of course I was not so absurd as to dream that a salaried professional man could furnish the considerable sum that I required without reference to the price of his liberty, but I thought that if my new acquaintance were to press my case on the notice of the officials at the consulate, I might have a better chance of a hearing. With this idea I penned a short letter, addressed according to the direction that had been given to me, and intrusted to the brigands. He had professed his desire to render me a service should real need of assistance arise, and I might as well try him as any one. Of course I was not so absurd as to dream that a salaried professional man could furnish the considerable sum that I required without reference to the price of his liberty, but I thought that if my new acquaintance were to press my case on the notice of the officials at the consulate, I might have a better chance of a hearing. With this idea I penned a short letter, addressed according to the direction that had been given to me, and intrusted to the brigands.

The robbers were by no means isolated from the sympathies of the rest of the community. They were on very good terms with most of the villagers in the mountain glens around them, at whose feasts and fairs they showed themselves openly, and from whom they received information and provisions. Indeed, many of them belonged to the district, and were akin to the more respectable and the very poorest of the people. Any fugitives and the very police who should have hunted them down; and this, perhaps, explains the fact that the sarabinieri never roamed able to discover the haunts where the marauders lurked, well known as they were to hundreds of so-called honest people.

The brigands were not idle. Frequent expeditions were undertaken with varying success, but no prisoner was brought up into the hills during my stay, though more than one carriage was stopped and its occupants plundered. On one occasion only was there any collision with the gens d'armes, and on that the detachment came back sullen and discomfited, with the loss of two of their number, who had been wounded and taken. This misfortune did not tend to make the Lamb more amiable. He gruffly intimated to his followers that they must prepare to set out for another lurking-place, since their unlucky comrades, in spite of the tremendous oaths by which they had been bound to keep the secret of their companions' retreat, would probably be tempted by promises of pardon to reveal all they knew. In fact, it was probable that the authorities would take active measures to destroy the wasps when once certain where their nest was to be found. Some of these men appeared to be much startled, and not appear to be wholly without compassion for my wretched state, since my helpless plight gave very painful, and I should say that many of them very patted me on the back with rough kindness and bade me fear nothing as I should do well among them. Others nod and all agreed that since I obtained the sum demanded it would go very hard with me.

"The Lamb," said one tall youngster, who had been a boatman at Palermo, and was very proud of the five or six English words that he had picked up when plying among the foreign shipping—"the Lamb was out of temper yesterday, for three of his traps have caught no hare. Now, when the Cardinal, for whom nine of us watched for a week on the Sorrento road, a prince of the Church, whom ransom would have made rich for life, arrives, he gets nothing of the absolution he could have given us while we had him fast. Well, he slipped through our fingers, and so did the Milordo Inglese, but Signor Tazzi, who is wealthy enough to eat off gold and drink lacrima every day if he were not a Lichfilth, and so did the Lamb, and so he grows ravenfrige. The Lamb is not often so hasty as you found him, but he is a man of his word, and, per Domenico, you had better make haste to find your ransom, or of your friends as have the plumpest purses and the softest hearts."

Excellent counsel, no doubt, but, like much other advice of the same sort, easier given than followed. There was no one to whom I could turn for help in the wide world. My father, who was dead, was in London, above two thousand pounds of English money, and I could as soon have liquidated the National Debt as have raised it. Even if I had had any resources of my own. Rich friends were no more practical with me than they generally are with a man who is at once poor and helpless. Then I had no living relation who either could or would pay my ransom. The only hope, and that a desperate one, seemed to be that of an application to the British Embassy at Naples, and I knew too much of routine to expect much from that. Time was lost to me, and most likely, long before a letter official reply should be returned to my letter, I should be cast into my grave by the hands of the executioner. It was not improbable that my appeal would be treated as a hoax or an impertinence; there was "no precedent" for the case, and there was no precedence between a prisoner of L'Agnello and the Envoy of Her Britannic Majesty to the Court of the Two Sicilies.

In this emergency I bethought me of the stranger, the English engineer with whom I had been conversing immediately before my capture by the brigands. He had professed his desire to render me a service should real need of assistance arise, and I might as well try him as any one. Of course I was not so absurd as to dream that a salaried professional man could furnish the considerable sum that I required without reference to the price of his liberty, but I thought that if my new acquaintance were to press my case on the notice of the officials at the consulate, I might have a better chance of a hearing. With this idea I penned a short letter, addressed according to the direction that had been given to me, and intrusted to the brigands. He had professed his desire to render me a service should real need of assistance arise, and I might as well try him as any one. Of course I was not so absurd as to dream that a salaried professional man could furnish the considerable sum that I required without reference to the price of his liberty, but I thought that if my new acquaintance were to press my case on the notice of the officials at the consulate, I might have a better chance of a hearing. With this idea I penned a short letter, addressed according to the direction that had been given to me, and intrusted to the brigands.

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

A FACT NOT GENERALLY KNOWN.—The proverbial unfathomableness of low lands is the reason why sick people are called valley-indisposed.

A recently-married gentleman was heard to declare that he was then as happy as the day was long. Rather unfortunately, however, he happened to be speaking on the twenty-first of December!

That atrocious James, who is always saying unpleasant things, was asked by a lady to whom he pay that a servant girl had broken out at the factory of a musical-string-maker. "Good!" said he, "capital! I'm sure I must have been completely gutted before the fire began."

Why can't the boots at a hotel be a good Churchman? —Because he's no lin-dependent.

A lawyer, the other day, went into one of our barber's shops to procure a wig. In taking the dimensions of the lawyer's head the boy exclaimed: "Why how long your head is, Sir!" "Well," said our worthy friend, "all lawyers must have long heads." The boy pondered in his vocation, but at length exclaimed: "Lord, Sir, your head is as thick as it is long!"

HOUSEHOLD WORDS.—Pshaw! Stop your noise! Shut up this minute! I'll send one spank over the hoof your tongue! Let me be! Go away! Get away! Get out! Behave yourself! I won't! You shall! Never mind! You'll catch it! Don't bother! Come here directly! Put away those things! You'll kill yourself! I don't care! They're mine! Mind your own business! I'll tell ma! You mean thing! There, I told you so! You didn't! I did! I will have it! Oh, look what you have done! Now you've! Won't you catch it, though! It's my house! Who's afraid of you? Mah-ah-h! Boo, boo, boo, oo! Who's the matter? Get out of doors, directly! I'm you hear me? Dear me! I never did see in all my born days! It's enough to send one crazy! Would you put a tuck in it? Well, say I! Says he! Says she! Says they! There—I'm done! Hi! Hem! Is that you, wood! Three bounces! Gored! Worked crosswise! Trimmed with velvet! Oh, my head! I won't stand it! Stop that!

A ROMANCE—CHEFLY RETOLD.—They meet in the street, and they sigh passing by. Meet again, and lift to them their hats with additional zeal, and sigh to be for life. "Dear," says he, "you love me?" "Yes, I do. They, do you love me, too?" "Really." "Let us name no." Oh he goes to propose, and receive mother's leave. His says "Yes." Then he may come with her to tea. He employs various trades, by whose aids 'tis his wish to furnish for his spouse a fit home. When that's done by the rents one by the priest; give a feast; set off soon—honey-moon blossoms, kisses, mutter, misses—what a tale of true love this is!

A jolly fellow had an office next door to a doctor's shop. One day a gentleman left the old fogy school himself into the wrong shop. "Is the doctor in?" "Don't live here," said the latter, who was in full scribble over some old documents. "Oh, I thought this was his office." "No! Next door, Sir!" "Well, I've been next door to this many a patient?" "Not living?" The old gentleman told the story in his whisky, and the doctor threatened the lawyer with a libel suit.

A GOOD THOUGHT.—A son of the Emerald Isle, once riding to market with a sack of potatoes behind him, discovered that the horse was getting tired, whereupon he commenced, on the potatoes upon his shoulders, and again mounted, saying "it was better that he should carry the praties—he was fresher than the poor baste."

A collier having taken a locking-glass home in his trunk, one of his neighbor offspring was desirous to see the contents of the mysterious box. The mirror was on the top, when the little curiosity seeker put his eyes on the glass the box shook head, dropped the lid, and, with joy depicted on every feature, exclaimed, "O mother, mother, father has brought home a young puppy!"

"Mary, my dear," said a doting husband to the lady that was soon to be his, "if ever I turn flirt, and desert you, either helpmate, she shall be a Mary, too, for your own dear sake." "Well," answered the fair one, "and what if the loving wife" (in my opinion another would be merely a super-nor-mary)"

DYING FOR A KISS.—An inquest was held lately on the body of a young man who, in the attempt to steal a kiss from the unwilling lips of a girl, fell down the stairs and broke her neck in trying to escape a kiss. The coroner's jury, shall kissing be given up as a dangerous amusement?

"In faith, Captain," said a sot to a brother officer, "you are a cursed unlucky fellow; whenever you play with me you're a Jamaican on board?"—"No, I haven't."—"Tilia, I believe," replied Pat, "yet you shall have to take the weather as it comes."

A SHEEPISH PROCEEDING.—Seizing Messrs. Laird's rams.

A letter-writer describes a beautiful young lady as having a face so handsome might dwell upon. That would be a delightful residence.

An American shrod remarked at a table d'hôte on the Continent, recently, that Austria need never fear national bankruptcy so long as the Rothschild's held on Venice, for it was her "floating capital."

Why is a washer-woman a great fool?—Because she sets the sun tube to catch soft water when it is raining hard.

"MAMMA," said a little girl, "can a door speak?" "Certainly not, my love." "Then why did you tell Anna to answer the door this morning?"

The best souring machine extant—the practical farmer.

Latest scientific discovery.—That bitumen is the greatest folds of nature.

Why is a washer-woman a great fool?—Because she sets the sun tube to catch soft water when it is raining hard.

"MAMMA," said a little girl, "can a door speak?" "Certainly not, my love." "Then why did you tell Anna to answer the door this morning?"

The best souring machine extant—the practical farmer.

Latest scientific discovery.—That bitumen is the greatest folds of nature.

What is "villainy of the blackest dye?"—Dye-abolical villainy, of course.

Doctors disagree, but they ought not to. Their legitimate business is to find out what diagrees with their patients.

When you offer cats to a horse he may say neigh, but he don't mean it.

Women have many advantages over men; one of them is, that they can't be killed in battle. To be dead, whereas men generally takes effect in her lifetime.

Why are the Germans the heaviest fellows in the world?—Because they are all Hanoverians.

An Irishman, on being told that a certain kind of stove would "save half the coal," said, "Indade; then be jabers I'll take two of them stoves, and save it all."

Folks don't go to bed nowadays—they retire to rest. Nobody eats his dinner—people take some refreshment. Nobody goes to church—but people attend divine service. Nobody is buried—but people inclined into the ground. No one forges a check—he puts his name on paper.

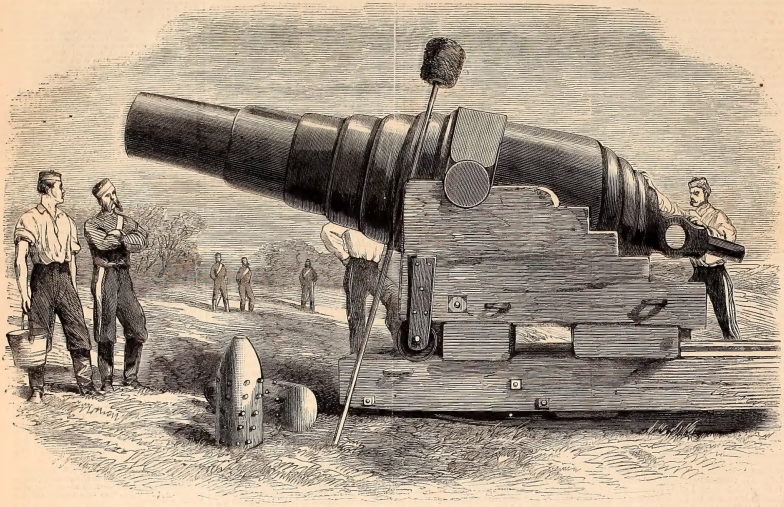
The late Charles Wynne, M.P., known in the House of Commons as "Bubble and Squeak," had a feeling, caring. Happening, for some reason, to be put in the same room with a blind old gentleman at dinner, he helped him, and made the remark to him, "Very fine weather, Sir." "Very fine, indeed, Ma'am," replied the other.

Said an Irishman to a telegraph operator, "Do you ever charge any body for the address in a message?" "No," replied the latter, "we don't." "And do you charge nothing his name, Sir?" said the customer. "No, Sir." "Well, then, I'll just call myself Mr. Nothing, and you'll never be knew I am here," handing him the following:—"To John Nothing, Esquire, eighteen Patrick M'Finn." It was sent as a tribute to Pat's drowdiness.

A person, speaking of the tenacity of life in turtles, asserted that he had seen one which had been cut out of its open its jaws six weeks afterward. The company seeming to disbelieve it, he said he would bet a hundred pounds he will doubt my word." Then turning to one gentleman, he asked him if he would be thought. The gentleman, observing that it was very remarkable, said to the relator, "If you yourself, Sir, had not seen the circumstance, could you have believed it?" "Indeed," said he, "I could not." "Then," replied the gentleman, "I hope you will excuse me if I do not."

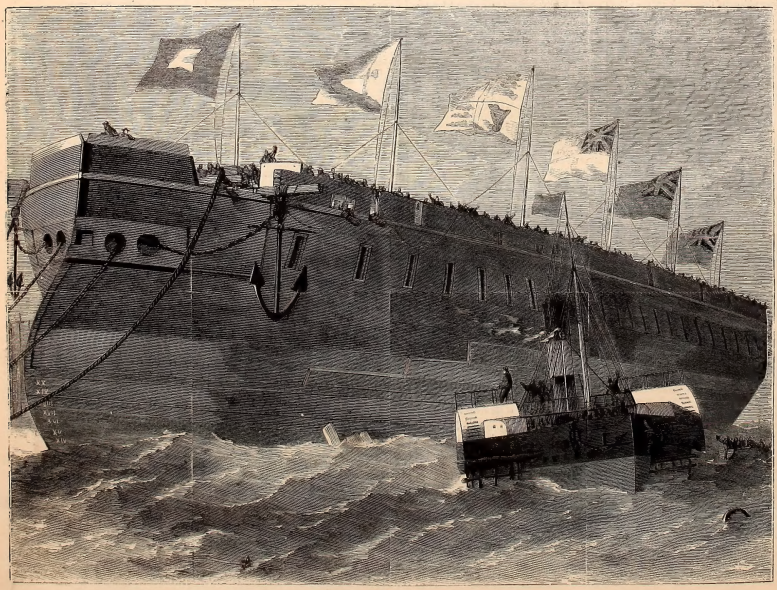
"No pains will be spared," as the Quack said when saving off a poor fellow's leg to cure him of its rheumatism.

Parties at a dead look should extricate themselves with a skeleton key.



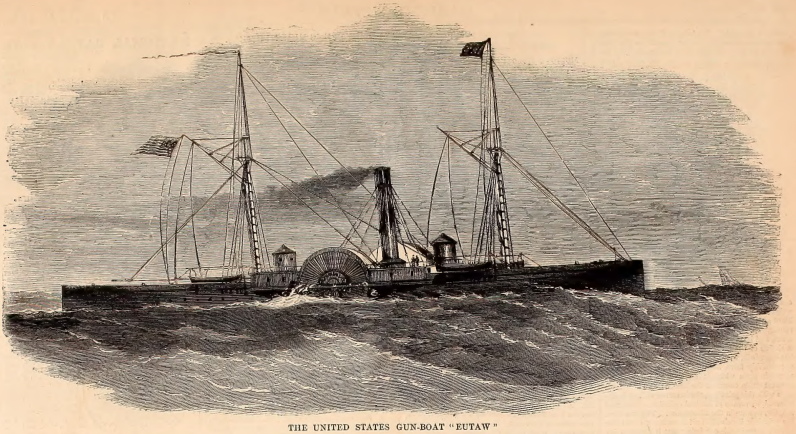
THE NEW ENGLISH SIX HUNDRED-POUNDER ARMSTRONG GUN.

[SEE PAGE 78.]



LAUNCH OF HER MAJESTY'S SCREW STEAMSHIP "MINOTAUR," FIFTY GUNS, AT BLACKWALL, ENGLAND.

[SEE PAGE 78.]



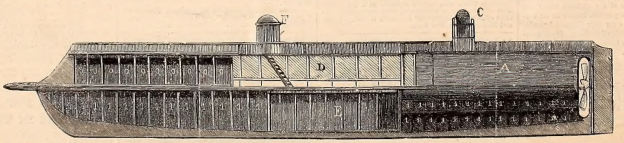
THE UNITED STATES GUN-BOAT "EUTAW"

THE GUN-BOAT "EUTAW."

WE give above an illustration representing one of our war steamers, the Eutaw, now in the Washington Navy Yard. She is one of the only class of side-wheel steamers constructed by the Naval Department, and known as a double-ender. Several charges having lately been brought against the Department for building slow steamers, Secretary Welles has proposed, for the purpose of a trial, a match between the Eutaw and the fastest side-wheel steamer which the country can bring against her. This challenge was about a week ago read before the Chamber of Commerce, which body did not feel disposed to accept it. The tonnage of the Eutaw is 974, and her draught eight feet six inches, and the Secretary claims for her that she will run against the same draught and tonnage in any water. Her length is 234 feet; she has a direct-acting engine with a cylinder 58 inches in diameter. Several very interesting experiments have been carried on on board of this vessel with super-heated steam, and on the evaporative powers of the boilers with a steam jet. She is commanded by Commander HOSER C. BLAKE, who, it will be remembered, was in command of the Hatteras when she fought the rebel privateer Alabama. Commander Blake, although a young officer, is one of the most promising in our naval service, and deserves to have a fast ship.

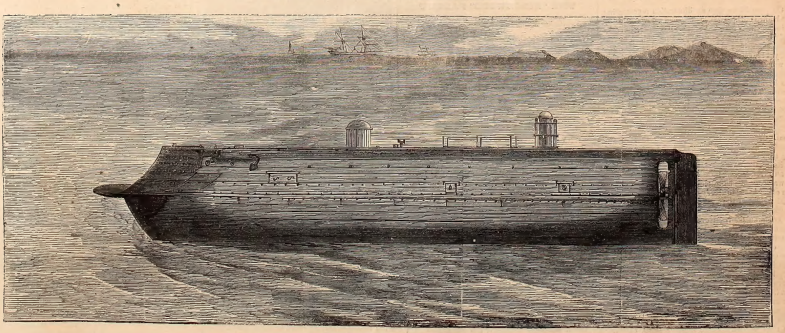
REBEL SUBMARINE BATTERY.

A M. OLIVIER DE JALIN sends to the French Le Monde Illustré drawings of a submarine vessel which we reproduce on this page, abridging his description. There has just been finished, he says, at Mobile a very curious little vessel, designed by Mr. Austill, which seems capable of destroying any ship in the world. It is of iron, 23 yards long. The interior is divided longitudinally by a partition into two portions: in the upper one are the machinery, armament, rudders, and reservoirs of compressed air; in the lower are chambers to hold air or water, as the case may demand, coal-bunkers, provision-lockers, and the like. On the deck, which is hermetically closed, are pipes for discharging air and steam, a smoke-stack, and a look-out, the upper part of which is of thick glass. The motive-power is a screw, worked either by steam or by electricity. At the stern is an ordinary rudder; at the bows another rudder, working on a horizontal axis, the object of which is to raise or lower the vessel. Now when no enemy is in sight the air-chambers are filled, and the vessel is managed like any other steamer. But when an enemy is in view the air-chambers are filled with water; down goes the vessel, and nobody is the wiser for its presence. Her perpendicular course is determined by the bow rudder, just as her horizontal course is regulated by her stern rudder. Turn it one way, and up she goes; turn it the other, and down she sinks. A pressure-gauge shows just the depth to which she has at any moment sunk. The man in the glass look-out governs the movement of the vessel. If it is sunk three feet below the surface it is invisible. On each side of the deck are placed iron cases filled with powder, joined two-and-two by chains of proper length. If a vessel lying at anchor is to be attacked, the submarine boat dives down, lets slip one of these twin torpedoes directly under the enemy; these rise by their specific gravity, and hug the enemy, one on each side, but kept from escape by the chain which, passing under the keel, unites them. The submarine, having accomplished her work, backs off to a safe distance, explodes these torpedoes by means of a galvanic battery, and up goes the enemy, in more pieces than one can well count. If a vessel under sail or steam is to be assaulted, the submarine dives down and lies hidden right under the track of her foe; then at the exact moment loosens a torpedo furnished with a percussion apparatus; the enemy strikes this, explodes it, and up also goes past all hope of redemption. The submarine, in the mean time, has dived down into the water so deep as to be quite safe from the shock which she has occasioned. "I can't stop to describe to you," concludes M. Olivier de Jalin, "the system of pumps to drive out the foul air, the air and water-pipes by means of which, with the aid of the compressed air, the air-tanks may in a few moments be filled with



A. Engine-Room.—C. Smoke-Stack.—D. Munition-Room.—E. Coal-Bunkers.—F. Look-Out.—1, 1, 1. Compartments for Air or Water.—0, 0, 0. Compartments for Compressed Air water or emptied." We believe M. Olivier has sold our French friend, and think that if our fleet has nothing to contend with more formidable than the invention of Mr. Austilt it will not suffer much damage.

LONGITUDINAL SECTION OF SUBMARINE BATTERY.



REBEL SUBMARINE BATTERY.

THE MOONLIGHT LONG AGO.

You love me well, I know, wife,
In spite of frown and toss;
In the moonlight long ago, wife,
You didn't look so cross.
In your little scarlet cloak, dear,
You tripped along the snow,
And all at once I spoke, dear,
Though sadly at a loss.

You hung your pretty head then,
And scarcely knew it;
I scarce knew what you said then,
But I knew it wasn't no.
My joy I couldn't speak, love,
But a hundred times or so
I blazed a velvet cheek, love,
In the moonlight long ago.

ARMSTRONG'S 600-POUNDER.

THE latest reports from England bring us an account of a new gun, of extraordinary dimensions; weighing no less than 22½ tons. This enormous bit of artillery has been built by Sir William Armstrong, under the auspices of the British Government, and has been lately tested off Shoeburyness. A sketch of the gun will be found on page 76. It has been built, we say; for a piece of this size could not possibly have been forged as a whole. The principle upon which it is constructed is that the greatest strain comes at the breech; and in accordance with this principle, the immense weight is distributed, by means of laminal cylinders of different lengths, as seen in the illustration. This has been the principle involved in all Armstrong guns; the novel feature in this one being that it carries a six hundred pound shot, and is so wisely distributed as to its weight that it is only four feet longer than the 300-pounder, although it is more than twice as heavy. Not only is the gun made up of cylinders, one inclosing another, but each particular cylinder is composed of several small rings, or coils, of iron welded together lengthwise. The outward layers are turned without and within, and are subjected to a great heat when they are fitted over the interior cylinders, and, cooling, contract with such force of pressure as to be most compactly welded together. The guns is bored with ten grooves, and to secure the rotation of the shot the latter has upon its surface ten rows of studs fitting into these grooves: the bore being 13 3-10ths inches in diameter. It is proposed to carry guns of this description on iron-clad war-vessels, but it should be found practicable, it would necessitate a complete revolution in the defensive armor of ships of war, as no vessel in existence could withstand the effect of the 600-pound steel shot. The practicability of their use for this purpose is, however, extremely doubtful, as in a heavy gale much smaller guns are frequently displaced. But for harbor and coast defenses this enormous war engine is of the greatest value and perfectly available. Its possible range, at an elevation of 10 degrees, is over four thousand yards, the charge being 70 pounds of powder. If we compare our own progress in naval armament with that made by the British, we shall find that a preference has been always given by us to cast-iron guns, small charges, and heavy shot at low velocities; while in England steel guns are preferred, with high charges and light shot, at excessive velocities. Twenty-six guns have, however, been constructed in this country capable of carrying a 1000-pound shot, but these have been found, as probably this new 600-pounder will be, unavailable except for harbor and coast defence.

LAUNCH OF THE "MINOTAUR."

On page 76 we give an illustration representing the launch of the English iron-clad screw steamship Minotaur from the yard of the Thames Iron Work and Ship-building Company, in England. The English have three ships of this class, the other two not yet launched. The Minotaur is the largest ship of war afloat, being 450 feet long and 59 feet wide, and carries 50 guns. Her armor-plates on the waist are 24 inches thick, and 14 toward the bow and stern. There are two features worthy of attention about this vessel. One is, that running all along each side she has what are called "wing passages," 42 inches wide, and corresponding with the height between decks. The wings are again divided into small water-tight compartments, so that in the event of a shot passing through the outer skin of the ship the water from the leak will be confined to its compartment. Another noteworthy feature is an arrangement by which several hundred tons of water may be admitted into these compartments, the effect being to steady the vessel in action. The total weight of the vessel when completed will be 10,000 tons; yet it is expected that she will make 14 knots an hour. Notwithstanding the immense size of this vessel, it still seems to us that she would be no match for one of our Monitors, which, although they only carry two guns, yet by their revolving turrets are enabled to shift their fire continually. And then it must be remembered that the latter present very little vulnerable surface, being only 18 inches above the water, and their turrets only about 20 feet in diameter. The Minotaur, on the other hand, has an immense surface, which, if she were put in the situation of our Monitors at Charleston, would have surely given way at some point, and caused the ship to sink. These massive ships, carrying large armaments, are far less available for all the exigencies of offensive or defensive warfare than the turreted iron-clads of a less size. The English have no iron-clads with revolving turrets as yet, but we think that these represent thus far the highest result of naval skill and efficiency.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

MORTON'S GOLD PENS are now sold at the manufactory at the commencement of the war; this is entirely owing to the Manufacturer's improvements in machinery, his present large Retail Business and Cash-in-Advance System; for, until he commenced advertising, his business was done on Credit and strictly with the Trade.

The Morton Gold Pens are the only ones sold at old prices, as the makers of all other gold pens charge the Premium on the Gold, Government Tax, &c.; but Morton has in no case changed his prices, Wholesale or Retail. Of the great numbers sent by mail to all parts of the world during the past few years, not one in a thousand has failed to reach its destination in safety; showing that the Morton Gold Pen has the advantage over pens, in every part of the world, at the same price, postage only excepted.

Reader, you can have an enduring, always ready, and reliable Gold Pen, nearly equivalent to your usual style of writing, which will do your writing vastly cheaper than Steel Pens; and at the present almost universal High Premium Rates of everything, you can have a Morton Gold Pen cheaper, in proportion to the labor spent upon it and material used, than any other Gold Pen in the World. If you want one, send "The Pen is Mightier than the Sword," in next column.

Brandreth's Pills

were understood, few families would be without

SO GREAT A REMEDY IN THE HOUSE.

This medicine is a wonderful cure for Small-Pox, and no person having that terrible disease should for a moment delay their use. Authenticated cures will be furnished all who desire by application at the principal office, Brandreth House, New York.

A lady of 56 was out of health generally: no food agreed with her—always violent pain in the stomach after eating. All the remedies she took did her no good, until at last she took Brandreth's Pills for a few days together, then rested for a few days. This method she followed for three months, which restored her to perfect health.

A young lady was obliged to leave school because of a constant severe pain in the region of the heart when she tried aloud or spoke, or sang or walked quickly. Her case was nearly a fatal one, by the remedies employed, of which bleeding was one. But at length she used Brandreth's Pills, which in one year cured her, and now her health is fully restored.

TUMOR OF THE NECK CURED.

A young gentleman had a tumor on the side of his neck, which had been years in growing, and was pronounced a cancer. Dr. Brandreth expressed the opinion that perseverance with his Pills would cure it. They were used according to the printed instructions which accompany each box, and soon the tumor began to give way. In a little over one year, they cured it perfectly, and the gentleman can not now be aware that he ever had it.

It is unnecessary to add that BRANDRETH'S PILLS are so largely patronised by Principal Office, Brandreth House. Sold also at No. 1 Union Square, and by all Dealers. Get new style.

Short-Hand without a Master,

By which the art of taking down Sermons, LECTURES, Speeches, &c., may be readily attained in a few hours. 40th edition, with a supplement, sent, post-paid, on receipt of 25 cents. RICHARD PARKER & CO., 23 Ann and Nassau Streets, New York.

"LOVE, COURTSHIP, AND MARRIAGE."—All, or how to form, and to Secure the Affections of a happy Marriage, The Remedy, Love—sighs, in the fact. Secret of Beauty. A Woman's Experience. Failing of Love. To improve the Complexion—with numerous illustrative Portraits. Sent free for 25 cents. Address T. JOHNSON, 121 first of a new vol. Only 15 cts. Or $1 50 a year. FOWLER & WELLS, N. Y.

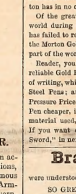
American Hardware, J. W. Bartlett,
443 Broadway, N. Y.

Needle Manufacturers for all the Sewing Machines. BARTLETT'S IMPROVED HAND NEEDLES.

☞ HAZELS, GILL, COHN, CARD PINS, &c., &c. ☜
BARTLETT'S IMPROVED PEERLESS is a wonderful improvement over others for SEWING MACHINE OF HAND WORK. Try sample 12 cts., any size, for 50 c., free by mail.—Mr. DEMOREST.

THE "RIDGEWOOD" PATENT

SMOKING CASE.



Most ingenious in its combination of the Metallic Case, containing Pipe and Tobacco, with the Glass Pipe Cover, with a handsome Tobacco Pouch attached, filling the Pipe by the Case, without use of the fingers or waste of Tobacco, the whole securing freedom from all odor, and portable as the Cane or Gun. It is made for service, of various styles, at $1 5s, $2 00, $3 25, $5 00, and $8 00 to $3 75 and $6 00; the latter richly gilt, and very handsome. Nothing can excel its Comfort, Utility, and Economy for all Smokers, Travelers, Sportsmen, &c., in the Army and Navy. As a PRESENT to Friends, as a GIFT from the Ladies, nothing could be more acceptable. Sold by all Dealers. SOLD BY ON ALL RANKS, in Camp or on the March, IT IS INVALUABLE. Orders, with remittance, promptly attended to via our AGENT, daily attest this fact. Single cases sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of price, as above.

SKATERS will appreciate this Case.

Also, The Ridgewood Smoking Tobacco. Of superior quality known by its flavor. Unequaled for its pouch (about a week's smoking), $2 25 per box; and larger sizes for the General Trade. SNUFFS, DRAUGHT, and SUTLERS invited to call and examine these Goods. Circulars sent on order. A LIBERAL DISCOUNT to DEALERS.

☞ A half-pound Package of this fine Tobacco, full weight, sent carefully put up by mail, postage paid, on receipt of $1 25. All Orders receive prompt attention.

RIDGEWOOD MANUFACTURING CO.,
OFFICE 429 BROADWAY, COR. Howard Street, N. Y.

Diamond Parlor Watches.
In Round and Hunting Cases.
60 Courtlandt Street, N. Y.

"THE PEN IS MIGHTIER THAN THE SWORD."

THE GOLD PEN—THE BEST OF ALL PENS,
MORTON'S GOLD PENS,
THE BEST PENS IN THE WORLD.

On receipt of any of the following sums in Cash, the Subscriber will send by return mail, or otherwise, as directed, a Gold Pen or Pens—selecting the same according to description, viz.:

GOLD PENS WITHOUT CASES.

For 25 cents, the Magic Pen: for 38 cents, the Lucky Pen; for 50 cents, the Always-Ready Pen; for 75 cents, the Elegant Pen; and for $1, the Excelsior Pen.—These Pens are not numbered, but correspond in sizes to numbers 2, 3, 5, and 6 respectively.

THE SAME PENS IN SILVER-PLATED EXTENSION CASES, WITH PENCILS.

For 50 cents, the Magic Pen; for 75 cents, the Lucky Pen; for $1, the Always-Ready Pen; for $1 25, the Elegant Pen; and for $1 50, the Excelsior Pen.

These are Wide-Finished, Good-Writing Gold Pens, with Iridosmia Points, the average wear of every one of which will exceed the price of the Steel Pens; although they are unwarranted, and, therefore, not exchangeable.

MORTON'S NUMBERED PENS.

The name "A. Morton," "Number," and "Quality," are stamped on the following Pens, and the points are warranted for six months, except against accident.

The Numbers indicate sizes: No. 1 being the smallest, No. 6 the largest, adapted for the pocket; No. 4 the smallest, and No. 10 the largest Mammoth Gold Pen, for the desk.

Long and Medium Nibs of all sizes and qualities. Short Nibs of Numbers 4, 5, 6, and 7, and made only of first quality.

The Long and Short Nibs are fine pointed; the Medium Nibs are Broad, Coarse Business points. The engravings in miniature show the sizes and styles.

GOLD PENS, WITHOUT CASES.

For $0 25—No. 1 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 3d quality.

For $1 00—No. 2 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 3d quality.

For $1 25—No. 3 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 3d quality.

For $1 50—No. 4 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 3d quality.

For $2 00—No. 5 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 2d quality.

For $2 25—No. 6 Pen; $2 75 a No. 7 Pen; $3 25 a No. 8 Pen; $4 a No. 9 Pen; $5 No. 10 Pen—all 1st quality.

THE SAME GOLD PENS, IN SILVER EXTENSION CASES, WITH PENCILS.

For $1 50 a No. 1 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 2 Pen, 2d quality.

For $1 75, a No. 2 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 3d quality.

For $2 00, a No. 3 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 3d quality.

For $2 50 a No. 4 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 3d quality.

For $3 00, a No. 5 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 2d quality.

For $3 50, a No. 6 Pen, 1st quality.

GOLD PENS, ALL FIRST QUALITY, IN SILVER-MOUNTED DESK HOLDERS.

For $3 50 a No. 4 Pen; or $3 75 a No. 5 Pen; or $3 75 a No. 6 Pen; or $5 50 a No. 7 Pen.

For $4 00 a No. 8 Pen; for $6 a No. 9 Pen; and for $6 a No. 10 Pen.

The "1st Quality" are pointed with the very best Iridosmia Points, and, of course, all none of this quality are sold with the slightest imperfection which skill and care can prevent.

The "2d Quality" are superior to any Pens made by him previous to 1861.

The "3d Quality" he intends shall equal in respect to Durability, Smoothness, and Good Writing Qualities, any true considerations any Gold Pens made elsewhere.

In reviewing the Pens sold by him, he has no fear to say that, previous to operating his New and Patented Machines, he made as many first-class Pens, and as comfortable Pens, for the price, but the Gold been furnished gratuitously.

Parties ordering must to all customers specify the No. "Name" or "Number," and the "Quality" of the Pens wanted, and be particular to describe the kind they prefer—whether Fine or Medium, Coarse or Fine.

All remittances sent by mail in registered letters are at my risk; and to all who send twenty cents (the charge for registering), in addition to the price of goods ordered, I will guarantee their safe delivery.

Parties sending Gold or Silver will be allowed the full premium on the day received.

TO CLUBS.—A discount of 10 per cent. will be allowed on sums of $5 and upward, of 15 per cent. on $10, and of 20 per cent. on $40, if sent to one address at one time.

Address, A. MORTON,
No. 25 Malden Lane, New York.

Beware the Northeaster.

BROWNE'S METALLIC WEATHER STRIPS AND Window Bands.

SAVE ONE HALF THE FUEL; excludes COLD, WIND, RAIN, and DUST from DOORS and WINDOWS. LOCAL AGENTS WANTED IN EVERY WHERE. Address THE PATENT METALLIC WEATHER STRIP CO., 644 Broadway, N. Y.

NOW READY. The ILLUSTRATED PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL, 40 Engravings, Portraits of Gen. HANCOCK, Lyndhurst, Beautiful Women, Egyptian Mummies, Wild Indians in a Sculping Dance, Wild Men, and Beast Children. Rules marred by the Week. Dreams, their Significance, Physiognomy, or Signs of Character, Love, Courtship and Marriage, in the Jan. No. The Phrenological Journal, 15 cents by first post. Address FOWLER & WELLS, 308 Broadway.

Elliot's New Repeaters

Are now ready. The most safe, compact, durable, effective, and reliable Revolvers ever offered. Carry large balls (No. 32 cartridge), are rapidly loaded and fired—overwhelmingly carried in the Army and Navy. Five inches, four barrels—each rifled gain twist. The Trade supplied. ELLIOT & BROTHER, 374 Broadway, N. Y.

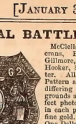
New Corps Pin.

We can now offer to Officers and all members of the Army our new style Corps Pin, in Fine Gold Plate, richly engraved and chased, with the Corps designation in Fine Inlaid Enamel in Division colors, being the richest, neatest, and finest Pin ever offered. Mailed free for One Dollar. GEO. DEMERITT & CO., Jewelers, 393 Broadway, N. Y.

ALL ARTICLES FOR SOLDIERS

At Ballinton, Washington, and all places occupied by Union troops, should be sent by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 74 Broadway. Soldiers charged low rates.

NATIONAL BATTLE PINS.



Cavalry and Artillery Pins.

The above cuts represent perfectly the Cavalry and Artillery Pins we have been getting up in answer to the urgent inquiries, day by day, from that important branch of the service now so long neglected in appropriate Badges. The Cavalry and Artillery Pins are designed for the Divisions in

Red, White and Blue,

The outer rim highly polished Silver—to be for the Name, Co., Regiment. These Pins are Silver, and cost One Dollar and Twenty-Five Cents, including Name, Co., and Regiment engraved upon them, or One Dollar without engraving. If engraving be desired beyond the Name, Co., and Regiment, Three Cents per Figure will be charged.

AGENTS will be furnished at Six Dollars per dozen. The Emblems are raised, and the Pin about the thickness of a two dollar piece.

UNITED STATES NAVY

Monitor Pins.

The cut is a correct copy of the Monitor Pins got up in Silver, in honor of the Monitor and purchase of Prize Fund. This will be carried upon the same, and furnished at $1 each. The Pins are very beautiful, and will be engraved by desire of money collected for the Navy. Same Pins got up in Gold, $2 each.

Agents wanted. Every Monitor in the Navy represented.

LOUIS PHILIP & CO., 609 Broadway, N. Y.

Hoyt's Hiawatha Hair Restorative.—Superior to every other preparation for the hair in power to restore, and in delightful effects. Unequaled and natural appearance, to prevent it from falling out, to overcome effects of previous use of preparations containing sulphur, sugar of lead, &c., and to remove the impurities and baneful action of the scalp. Invaluable for children.

HOYT'S MINNEHAHA HAIR GLOSS, unexcelled in keeping the hair in order.

HOYT'S IMPERIAL COLORING CREAM, oils and colors the hair at the same time, imparting light and red hair to a beautiful brown or black.

HOYT'S EXCELSIOR TOILET POWDER, imparts beauty to the complexion, smoothness to the skin, and preserves perfectly the delicate bloom of youth everywhere. JOSEPH HOYT & CO., 19 University Place.

$50 for $20.

SOLDIERS IN THE ARMY,

For $20 we will forward by mail or express, pre-paid, the following list of Fine Gold-Plated Jewelry:—4 Vest Chains, 12 Gent's Seal Rings, 6 Gent's Fine Gold Retention Holders, 6 Vest Hooks, 4 Fancy Watch Keys, 12 Bosom or Scarf Pins, 4 pair Sleeve Buttons, 3 Best and Glass Fine for Miniatures, 3 Double Glass Lockets, and 3 Chatelaine Stone Pins. Address THOMAS CAFFERTY & CO., Providence, R. I.

Printing-Press for Sale.

One Taylor Double Cylinder, five Rollers, Table Distribution, Belt, Fixtures, complete.

Apply to HARPER & BROTHERS, 329 Pearl St., N.Y.

(A CARD.)

TO PHYSICIANS AND INVALIDS

The Rev. CHARLES R. KING, formerly Secretary to the London Evangelical Alliance, and recently connected, as Associate Minister with the Church of the Transfiguration Mission, will send FREE of Cost and the Prescription with which he successfully treated, while in charge of the large Mission Hospital, upwards of one hundred cases of CONSUMPTION in the first, second and third stages.

The remedy is equally adapted to the treatment of Asthma, Catarrh, Bronchitis, and all affections of the Lungs, Throat, and Air-Passages; while in speedily relieving the latter, it acts directly upon and energizes the deranged functions of the Stomach, Liver, and Bowels.

Address, with stamp,
Rev. CHARLES R. KING,
Station D, Bible House, New York.

P. S.—I wish publicly to acknowledge the generosity of these publishers who, from a sense of humanity, have given me the widest possible gratuitous publicity. Religious papers are earnestly requested to copy.

Short-Hand without a Master,

By which the art of taking down Sermons, LECTURES, Speeches, Trials, &c., may be attained in a few hours. 40th edition, with a supplement. Sent, post-paid, on receipt of 25 cents. RICHARD PARKER & CO., Ann and Nassau Streets, New York.

HARPER & BROTHERS
Have just published:

CHARLES DICKENS'S NEW CHRISTMAS STORY.
MRS. LIRRIPER'S LODGINGS. Thirty-Second Thousand. 8vo, Paper, 10 cents.

Holiday Presents.

J. H. Winslow & Co.,
100,000
WATCHES, CHAINS, &c., &c.
Worth $500,000.

To be sold for One Dollar each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for till you know what you are to get.

SPLENDID LIST!!

OF ARTICLES TO BE SOLD FOR ONE DOLLAR EACH.

100 Gold Hunting Cased Watches ..... $100 00 each.
100 Gold Watches ..... 50 00 each.
200 Ladies' Gold Watches ..... 25 00 each.
200 Ladies' and Gent's Silver Watches .. 15 00 each.
2000 Vulcanite Neck Chains ..... 6 00 to 10 00 each.
2000 Gold Band Bracelets ..... 5 00 to 10 00 each.
2000 " ..... 3 00 to 5 00 "
3000 Cameo Brooches ..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Mosaic and Jet Brooches ..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Lava and Florentine Brooches.. 4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Coral, Opal, and Etn. Brooches.. 4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Cameo Ear Drops ..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Mosaic and Jet Ear Drops ..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Lava and Florentine Ear Drops.. 4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Coral, Etn., and Opal Ear Drops 4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Gent's Breast Pins ..... 2 50 to 8 00 each.
2000 Watch Keys ..... 2 00 to 4 00 each.
2000 Fob and Ribbon Slides ..... 2 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Sets of Sleeve Studs ..... 2 50 to 6 00 each.
2000 Sleeve Buttons ..... 2 50 to 6 00 each.
2000 Plain Rings ..... 2 50 to 5 00 each.
2000 Stone Set Rings ..... 2 50 to 6 00 each.
2000 Lockets ..... 2 50 to 10 00 each.
2000 Sets Ladies' Jewelry ..... 5 00 to 10 00 each.
3000 Gold Pens, Silver Cases ..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.
10000 Gold Pens, with Silver Extension Cases ..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.

All of the above list of Goods will be sold for one dollar each. Certificates of all the various articles, stating what each one can have, are first put into envelopes, sealed up, and mixed; and when ordered, are taken out without any regard to choice, and sent by mail, thus giving all a fair chance. On receipt of the Certificate, you will see what you can have, and then it is at your option to send one dollar and take the article or not.

In all transactions by mail, we shall charge for forwarding the Certificate, prepaying postage, and doing business, 25 cents each, which must be inclosed when the Certificate is sent. Five Certificates will be sent for $1; fifteen for $2; thirty for $5; sixty-five for $10; and a hundred for $15.

AGENTS.—Those selling 40 Articles will be allowed ten cents on every Certificate ordered by them, provided the remittance amounts to one dollar. Agents will collect 25 cents for every Certificate, and remit 15 cents to us, either in cash or postage stamps. Great caution should be used by our customers in regard to giving their correct address, Town, County, and State. Address

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
208 Broadway, New York.

Soldiers' Co. Pins and Corps Badges.

Annexed is a fac-simile design of our newest style Co. Pin, the letter representing the Company, mounting on in bold relief, and very conspicuous. Every letter on hand from A. to Z., and every Corps Badge worn by the Army, constantly in Stock. Silver or Blue, to represent the differ ent Divisions in each Corps.

Solid Silver.	Price, handsomely engraved
" Co. Pin.....	$1 00
" Solid Relief.....	1 50
" Corps Badge, enameled.....	1 50
Corps Army Badges.....	2 00

Terms, Cash in advance. Send for a Circular.
Address E. M. ALLEN & CO., 208 Broadway, N. Y.

EMPLOYMENT

At your own homes. It is the greatest discovery of the age. Profits 100 per cent. Demand staple as Flour. Full particulars sent free, on receipt of two stamps.
Address C. MUNRO BROWN, 74 Bleecker St., N. Y.

Agents Wanted for the Army.

New Army Watches.

Every Soldier should have the Magic Railway Time-Keeper. A handsome solid Silver Composite Hunting Case, with new Patent True Jointer, to save trouble of opening case, and to prevent the height of our brass model. The handsomest and most useful Watch ever offered $10.

Every Officer should have the DOUBLE TIME DIPLEX STOP WATCH.—This highly useful Watch has beautiful and heavy Hunting Cases, with Allegorical Engraver for Washington and London time, Sweep Seconds with Separate Adjusted Stop, to be used in training horses and also by Sportsmen, Artillerists, &c., in marking time, $30.

All the leading novelties can be seen by sending for our Catalogue. Watch Agents in every regiment on unusually liberal terms.

All Watches guaranteed free to any address, and warranted for 12 months.

ARRANDALE & CO., Importers of Watches,
212 Broadway, New York.

Union Playing Cards.

Colonel for King, Soldiers of Liberty for Queen, and Major for Jack. 52 enamelled cards to the pack. Eagles, Shields, Stars, and Flags are used, and you can play all the games with same. Two packs, in cases, mailed free on receipt of $1. The usual discount to the Trade. Send for a Circular. Address AMERICAN CARD COMPANY,
405 Broadway, N. Y., or 765 William Street, N. Y.

RHEUMATISM.

USE THE ELECTRO-NEURALGIA INSOLES, BELTS, AND ANKLETS. NOW IN UNIVERSAL DEMAND FOR RHEUMATISM, COLD FEET, &c. MOTHER & CO., No. 629 Broadway, N. Y.
Insoles, $1 per pair; Belts, $2; Armlets, $1 50 each. Sent by mail for 50 cents additional.

Sportsmen, Tourists, and Army and Navy Officers.

Powerful and Brilliant Double Glasses.

Portability combined with great power in "Field, Marine, Theatre, Opera, and general out-door day and night double perspective glasses, with the distinctly a person to know him at from 3 to 5 miles. Spectators of the greatest temporal power to strengthen and improve the sight, without the distressing result of frequent changes. Catalogues sent by enclosing stamp.

SEMMONDS, Oculist-Optician,
691 Broadway, New York.

Opera and Field-Glasses
Of great power, from $3 50 to $25. Spectacles and, Eye Glasses. Also Powerful Microscopes at $5. B. H. HOUN, Manufacturing Optician, 712 Broadway, up stairs, corner of Union St. Send for circular.

Winter Cloaks.

BRODIE'S
Great Clearing Sale.

The Entire Winter Stock
Will be Sold without regard to Cost,

Before making Extensive Alterations for the Spring Trade.

BRODIE,
The Leader of Fashions!
300 Canal Street, New York.

Caution
FROM
The American Watch Company.

It having come to our knowledge that imitations of the American Watch have been put upon the market in grand numbers, calculated, by their utter worthlessness, to injure the reputation of our genuine products—to protect our own interests and the public from imposition, we again publish the trade marks by which our Watches may invariably be known.

We manufacture four styles of Watches:

The FIRST has the name
"AMERICAN WATCH CO., Waltham, Mass.," engraved on the inside plate
The SECOND has the name
"APPLETON, TRACY & CO., Waltham, Mass.," engraved on the inside plate.
The THIRD has the name
"P. S. BARTLETT, Waltham, Mass." engraved on the inside plate.

All the above styles have the name "American Watch Co." painted on the dial, and are warranted in every respect.

The FOURTH has the name
"WM. ELLERY, Boston, Mass." engraved on the inside plate, and is not named on the dial.

All the above described Watches are made of various sizes, and are sold in gold or silver cases, as may be required.

It is hardly possible for us to accurately describe the numerous imitations to which we have alluded. They are usually inscribed with names so nearly approaching our own as to mislead the attention of the unaccustomed buyer. Some are represented as made by the "UNION WATCH CO., of Boston, Mass."—no such company existing. Some are named the "ELLERY," instead of our P. S. BARTLETT, besides many varieties named in such a manner as to convey the idea that they are the veritable productions of the American Watch Company.

A little attention on the part of buyers will protect them from gross imposition.

ROBBINS & APPLETON,
Agents for the American Watch Company,
162 BROADWAY, N. Y.

SALISBURY, BRO. & CO.,

AGENTS FOR THE UNITED STATES FOR THE CELEBRATED

ALBERTINE

Extension Holders and Gold Pens,

Of the most beautiful and elaborate construction, put up in new fancy cases of one dozen each, and not sold in any less quantities. They will retail for $3 each.

Price, per dozen..... $10 25
Or 3 dozen for..... 29 00

Sent by mail or express, prepaid. Address
SALISBURY, BRO. & CO., Manufacturers,
Salesmen Wanted.

$75 a month, or commission allowed on sales. Apply to HALE & CO., Newburyport, Mass.

10 for One Dollar.

The finest Portraits at the Lowest Price.

Card Photographs of
President Lincoln, and each of his Cabinet—Senators—Statesmen—all the Major-Generals of our country. All other noted Characters of Army and Navy, living and dead.

Fivefold Men of all Ages,
AUTHORS, ARTISTS,
ACTORS, ACTRESSES,
and all prominent persons, male and female.
Fancy and Miscellaneous Pictures, &c., &c.
Sent by return mail, post-paid.

Original Gift-Book Store,

for all Pictures for Albums, and they will be sent free per return of mail, Ten for $1. Single Copies 15 cents.
Address

G. G. EVANS, Publisher,
No. 308 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

N. B. A Classified Catalogue of over 2000 different books, especially adapted to Army and Navy Reading, sent on receipt of Five Cents. SEND FOR IT. Premium certificates for new enterprise of Watches, Jewelry, Vest Chains, &c., &c., sent on receipt of Ten Cents.

Military and Naval

COLLECTION AND BANKING OFFICE.—SOMES, BROWN & CO., No. 2 Park Place, New York, attend and collect every variety of just claims against the Government or States. Hand-Books containing laws, &c., sent by mail, free.

DO YOU WANT LUXURIANT WHISKERS OR MUSTACHES?—My Ointment will force them to grow heavily in six weeks (upon the smoothest face) without risk, or injury to the skin. Plan sent by mail, post free, to any address, on receipt of an order. R. G. GRAHAM, No. 109 Nassau Street, N. Y.

PHOTOGRAPHIC MAGNIFIER, a charming accompaniment to photographic albums. $1 50. Godfrey, 821 B'way, N. Y.

HUBBARD BROS. IMPORTERS OF WATCHES

WATCHES
FOR
THE ARMY.

Superbly finished watches to the beauty of which is only equaled by their cheapness.—N. Y. Weekly, July 11.

Particularly valuable for officers in the army, and naval officers.—Frank Leslie's, Feb. 13.

Perfect, best and cheapest time-pieces ever offered.—N. Y. Illustrated News, Jan. 16.

Magic Time Observers,
The Perfection of Mechanism!
Being a Hunting, or Open Face, or Lady's or Gentleman's Watch combined, with Patent Self-winding Improvement.

A most pleasing novelty. One of the prettiest, most convenient, and decidedly the best and cheapest timepiece for general and reliable use ever offered. It has within it the key concealed with its machinery in its own winding attachment, rendering a key entirely unnecessary. The cases of this Watch are composed of two metals, the color or one being fine 16 carat gold. It has the improved ruby action lever movement, and is warranted as accurate time piece. Price, superbly engraved, per case of half dozen, $204. Simply winding, 12 hour interval, hours, $25. If sent by mail, the postage is 50 cents; registering, 20 cents.

Silver Watches!
First-Class Hunting Time-Pieces.

FOR ACCURACY OF MOVEMENT, BEAUTY OF MATERIAL, AND, ABOVE ALL, CHEAPNESS IN PRICE, THESE WATCHES HAVE NO EQUAL.

UNIVERSAL APPROBATION!

An imitation so faultless that it can hardly be detected by the most experienced judge. The material being of two metals, the outer one first quality Silver and the inner one Gold Bezel. It can not be recognized by watching or heavy engraving, making it not only in appearance, but durability, the best resemblance of the Sterling Silver in existence.

The sale of these watches in the army is a source of enormous profit, retailing, as they very readily do, at $25 and upward. But believing that we can do more in a single pay-day by any one of ordinary business tact!

As Watches are now! In heavy hunting cases, beautifully engraved, white enamel dial, and fancy cut hands, in any usual size, for the small sum of $15; postage, 25 cents; registering, 20 cts. Sold only by the case. Can safely send by mail.

☞ TERMS CASH, INVARIABLY IN ADVANCE. No agents employed; buyers must deal directly with us. If money is sent by express or mail in a registered letter, it is at our risk! Orders will meet the most prompt and faithful attention.

HUBBARD BROS., Sole Importers,
No. 208 Broadway, New York.

To Compositors. — Wanted, three strictly first-class Compositors, used to Book-work. Apply to Mr. MASON, Foreman of HARPER & BROTHERS' Composing Rooms, N. Y.

J. W. EVERETT & CO.,

Will forward to any address, on receipt of order, Photographs from life of any of the prominent

OFFICERS OF THE ARMY AND NAVY,
STATESMEN, DIVINES,
ACTORS, ARTISTS,
FOREIGN CELEBRITIES, ETC., ETC.

20 cents each. Catalogues sent free. Free by mail.
Address

J. W. EVERETT & CO.
Box 1614. N. Y. City.
☞ Send for a Circular.

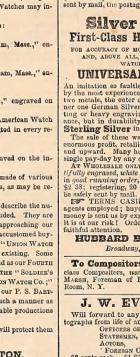
$75 A MONTH!

I want to hire Agents in every county at $75 a month, expenses paid, to sell my new cheap Family Sewing Machine. Address S. MADISON, Alfred, Maine.

"THE HUMAN FACE DIVINE," a new system of Physiognomy; with Hints on Expression, Illustrated by Hands, Feet, Skin, Complexion, with all Signs of Character, and How to Read Them. In One PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL AND LIFE ILLUSTRATED for 1864. Now ready. $1 50 a year. Address FOWLER & WELLS, N.Y.

H. A. HARVEY, 64 Maiden Lane, N. Y., TWINES, Rope, CORDAGE, and Yarn, Hemp Packing, Wick, CARPET WARP, Fish Lines, Blocking Cord, Lamp and Candle Wick, Twine, Wrapping and Wrapping PAPER. Envelopes, and Paper Bags.

COMPETITION DEFIED!



AND ELEGANT TWO DOLLAR CHAIN

We offer to sell our WATCH, which is of the LATEST AND MOST APPROVED STYLE, AND ACCURATE TIME-KEEPER, and in sterling Cases, Hunting and Open Face, at the price of Ten DOLLARS.

We therefore recommend all wanting either an OREIDE, GOLD or SILVER WATCH, Hunting Case, to send us $10, when they will receive a handsome Watch, selected by ourselves, neat, sealed and post-paid, at our expense.

OUR CHAIN is the admiration of all those who have seen it. In beauty and cheapness it cannot be surpassed. ONLY TWO DOLLARS.

☞ Recollect, the OLD ESTABLISHED AND RELIABLE AGENCY, where all orders are attended to with the utmost promptitude, carefulness and accuracy, and forwarded to their destination in the most compact, reliable and expeditious manner.

Address THOMAS ORNSBY,
General Purchasing Agent, 56 Nassau St., N.Y.

Head-Quarters for Army Corps, Company, and Division Pins of every description. On the receipt of $1, I will send you a Solid Silver Shield, or either Army Corps, Division, or Co. Pin with your Name, Rank, and Co. handsomely engraved upon it, or a fine Gold Pen with Extension Case and Pencil, or a new style Vest Chain, or Lady's Chain, or a California Diamond Ring or Pin, or a Seal Stone Ring; and for $1 50, I will send you a Solid Silver style CAVALRY Pin, engraved as above. Agents sending for 10 or more Pins at one time will be allowed 15 cents each.

R. T. HAYWARD,
Manufacturing Jeweler, 319 Broadway, N. Y.

Cavalry and Artillery.

Solid Silver, $1 25. Solid 18 k. Gold, $3 00.

Solid 18 k. Gold, $3 00. Solid 18 k. Gold, $5 00.

Sent by mail on receipt of Price. Also all Kinds Corps, Co., and Division Pins, engraved to order, by the single one, 100, or 1000, and sent to any part of the country. Terms cash in advance. Send for a circular. Address

BROWNE & MOORE,
Manufacturing Jewelers, 709 Broadway, New York.

Works by W. M. Thackeray.

VANITY FAIR. A Novel. With Illustrations. 8vo, Cloth, $2 00.

THE NEWCOMES. Illustrated. 8vo, Cloth, $2 00.

PENDENNIS. A Novel. With Illustrations. 2 vols. 8vo, Cloth, $4 00.

THE VIRGINIANS. With Illustrations by the Author. 8vo, Cloth, $2 00.

THE ADVENTURES OF PHILIP. A Novel. Illustrated. 8vo, Cloth, $2 00.

HENRY ESMOND. A Novel. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

LOVEL THE WIDOWER. A Novel. With Illustrations. 12mo, Cloth, $1 75.

THE ROSE AND THE RING. A Fireside Pantomime. Numerous Illustrations. Small 4to, Cloth, $1 00.

THE GREAT HOGGARTY DIAMOND. A Novel. 8vo, Paper, 75 cents.

ROUNDABOUT PAPERS. With Illustrations. 12mo, Cloth, $1 75; Half Morocco, $2 50.

THE ENGLISH HUMORISTS OF THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY. 12mo, Cloth, $1 75; Half Morocco, $2 50.

THE FOUR GEORGES. With Illustrations. New Edition. 12mo, Cloth, $1 25; Half Morocco, $2 50.

Published by HARPER & BROTHERS,
Franklin Square, New York.

☞ Sent by mail, postage-free, on receipt of price.

A Splendid Mother's or Bridal Present.

HARPER'S
Illuminated and Pictorial
BIBLE.

Including the Apocrypha. Superbly embellished by over Sixteen Hundred Illustrations, exquisitely engraved by Adams after Designs by Chapman, exclusive of a Series of Silk Plates, Illustrations in Colors, comprising Frontispieces, Presentation Plate, Family Record, Titlepages, &c. The whole forming a sumptuous Folio Volume.

PRICES.—Morocco, gilt edges, beveled and panelled sides, $25 00; Morocco extra, panelled sides, $30 00; Full Calf, marbled edges, blank stamped, $18 00; Full Roan, marbled edges, $12 00.

Harper's Pictorial Bible is printed from the standard copy of the Bible as published by the Oxford and Cambridge Presses, the Apocrypha, a Concordance, Chronological Index of Scripture Proper Names, Explanatory Tables of Weights, Measures, &c. The large Frontispieces, Titles to the Old and New Testaments, Family Record, Presentation Plate, Historical Illustrations, and Initial Letters to the Chapters, Ornamental Borders, &c., are from original designs, made expressly for this edition, by J. G. Chapman, Esq., of New York. In addition to which, there are numerous large Engravings, from designs by distinguished artists in France and England; to which a full Index is given.

HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers, New York.

For sale by A. WILLIAMS & CO., Boston; SMITH, ENGLISH & CO., Philadelphia; CUSHINGS & BAILEY, Baltimore; FRANCIS, TOWNSEND & HUTCHINSON, Albany; DERBY & CO., Cincinnati; KEITH & WOODS, St. Louis; S. C. GRIGGS & CO., Chicago; DAWSON & BROTHERS, Montreal.

HARPER'S
NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE

One Copy for one Year	$3 00
Two Copies for One Year	5 00
An Extra Copy, gratis, for every Club of Ten Subscribers, at $2 50 each, or 11 Copies for $25.
HARPER'S MAGAZINE and HARPER'S WEEKLY, together, one year, $5 00.

HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers.

Circulation over 100,000.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.
Single Copies Six Cents.

TERMS.

One Copy for One Year	$2 00
One Copy for Two Years	3 00

And an Extra Copy will be allowed for every Club of Ten Subscribers, at $2 50 each, or 11 Copies for $25.

TERMS TO ADVERTISERS.—Seventy-five Cents per line for Inside, and One Dollar per line for outside Advertisements.

Bound in Vols. I., II., III., V., VI. and VII. for the Years 1857, 1858, 1859, 1860, 1861, 1862, and 1863 of "HARPER'S WEEKLY," handsomely bound in Cloth, Price $2 00 each. are now ready.

HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers.

COLD COMFORT.

JEFF DAVIS (reading the Pope's Letter). "Well, it's very good of His Holiness to call me 'Illustrious President,' and all that, but it would have been more to the purpose if he had sent me a lot of his cast-off clothes and some broken victuals!"

GOLD PENS AND CASES

Retailed at wholesale prices. 14 kt Gold Pen, Solid Silver Case, $1 50, warranted for one year, guarantee accompanying each Pen. Send for a circular. Pens repointed on receipt of 10 cent.

E. S. JOHNSON, 15 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

FISK & HATCH.

Bankers and Dealers in Government Securities,

AND

AGENTS FOR THE UNITED STATES
FIVE-TWENTY LOAN,
No. 38 Wall Street, New York.

Great Chance
To Make Money!!!

We want Agents everywhere to sell the most splendid STEEL ENGRAVINGS ever published. Will furnish them so that a stock of $10 will yield $50; also STATIONERY FREE PACKETS, with which we give as Premium Gold and Silver Watches. Full particulars in Circular mailed free. Address

G. S. HASKINS & CO., 35 Beekman Street, N. Y.

BALLARD PATENT BREECH-LOADING RIFLES AND CARBINES,

Carrying the copper waterproof cartridge, and also using ordinary loose ammunition. This arm is now submitted by all competitors to be superior to any other ever offered to the public. Its simple construction and perfect workmanship are a sure guarantee against getting out of order. The great advantage of loading with either fixed or loose ammunition of arms makes it superior to all others. These arms are made for both sporting and military purposes, and have been adopted both by the General Government and a number of States. We have the highest testimonials of their efficiency and durability.

We also offer to the Public our new Cartridge and loose ammunition loading revolver. This arm has no equal as a belt or pocket weapon. No one wishing a first-class arm should be without one.

For further particulars send for descriptive circular.

P. S. Do not forget that both Rifles and Pistols may be used with either copper cartridge or loose ammunition.

MERWIN & BRAY, Sole Agents,
702 Broadway, N. Y.

VALENTINES
To the Trade.

Call or send to Hoyt-Quarters. Catalogues sent free by mail. A better assortment, on more liberal terms, than any other house can offer. Address

BENJ. W. HITCHCOCK, 435 Broadway, N. Y.
(Store and Manufactory.)

SPECIAL NOTICE.

AGENTS, male or female, SOLDIERS, and all having some time to spare, are particularly requested, as a favor, to send us their address, and we will send in return, some information for which they will be wellpaid. We offer EXTRA INDUCEMENTS. From $5 to $15 per day ABOVE EXPENSES. We want Soldiers from every county in the U. S., and from EVERY REGIMENT in the Army. Address in full, RICHARDS & CO., 37 and 39 NASSAU STREET, Box 5151, N. Y.

Features of Peculiar Interest
May be found in the Prospectus of the

Atlantic Monthly

for 1864. The best poets, essayists, and writers of fiction are engaged to contribute each month to its pages. Terms $3 00 a year. Club rates offered. Send for a circular to TICKNOR & FIELDS, Boston.

Straight Hair made Wavy!! without hackling it, by using Lyon's Patent Hair Crimpers. For sale at Variety Stores.

A Bad Breath.—The Greatest Curse the human family is heir to. How many lovers it has separated—how many friends forever parted. The subject is to delicate, your nearest friend will not mention it, and you are ignorant of the fact. To effect a radical cure, use the "BALM OF THOUSAND FLOWERS" as a dentrifice, night and morning. It also beautifies the complexion, removing all tan, pimples, and freckles, leaving the skin soft and white. Price 50 cents. For sale by all druggists. The Trade supplied by HOWARD, SANGER & CO., 103 and 107 Chambers Street, N. Y., and for sale by all Druggists.

F. GROTE, Manufacturer of Ivory Goods, 78 Fulton St., New York, cor. Gold, Billiard, Bagatelle, Pool Balls, Tea Tin Balls and Pins, Checks in great variety, Marking Inks and Naskin Plates, and all other kind of Ivory Goods, wholesale and retail. Also Manufacturer and Importer of Cane, Cue Leather, Chalk, &c. The only place to get a good set of seasoned Billiard Balls at reduced prices. All Orders by mail promptly attended to.

IVORY PHOTOGRAPHIC SLEEVE BUTTONS (Carte) applied both, with beautiful likenesses of the President, Distinguished Men and Generals, $1 00 per pair. Also fine Ivory Brooches, $2 00; Ear-rings, to match, $2 00. White and Imitation of Jet and Coral. Manufactured and for sale by WM. M. WELLING, Agent, 707 Canal Street, New York, Sign of the Golden Elephant. Sent free on receipt of the price. Ivory Seal Pins $1 00 each.

Putnam Clothes-Wringer.

The ONLY reliable Self-Adjusting Wringer.

No wood-work to swell or split.

No thumb-screws to get out of order.

WARRANTED WITH OR WITHOUT COG-WHEELS.

It took the FIRST PREMIUM at Fifty-Seven State and County Fairs in 1863, and it, without an exception, the best Wringer ever made.

Instead of believing the statements of parties interested in the sale of other Wringers,

Try it, and Judge for Yourself.

THEY ARE THOROUGHLY WITH ANY AND ALL others, and, if not entirely satisfied, can be returned.

It will wring any thing from a thread to a bed-quilt without alteration.

Patented in the United States, England, Canada, and Australia. Agents wanted in every town.

No. 2, $5 50; No. 1, $6 00; No. A, $8.

Manufactured and sold, wholesale and retail, by

The Putnam Manufacturing Co.

No. 13 Platt Street, N. Y., and Cleveland, Ohio.

S. C. NORTHROP, Agent.

The Celebrated CRAIG MICROSCOPE, combining Instruction with Amusement, is mailed, prepaid, for $2 25; or with 6 beautiful Colored Objects, for $3; with 24 Objects, $5, by

HENRY CRAIG,
205 Broadway, New York.

Also, his will mail, prepaid, the Binocular, or Perfected STEREOSCOPE, with a side for Faces and Field-Piece, accommodating all ages, for $5; with 13 assorted views, $5. A liberal discount to the trade.

A Household Word.—Buy your Housekeeping Articles at BARNHURST'S, Cooper Institute, New York.

Who wish to make Money.

Send your address to J. W. YALE, SYRACUSE, N. Y., and you will receive, from a sample of YALE'S CELEBRATED FLAG OF DEFIANCE AND MILITARY FIRE STARCH, by return mail. Call shortly.

The Hunted Unionist.
A Record of Late Occurrences in Georgia.

The most graphic revelation of the age! Revealing the persecutions and indignities to which Southern Unionists are subjected! Painting the cruelties of Guerrillas! Showing how fugitives are hunted with Bloodhounds! Portraying the horrible sentence of "Lookout Mountain," and forming altogether the most startling picture of veil tyle in Rebeldom ever submitted to the public. It is written by Mr. CONSTABLAN, author of "the great Durango rust story," now running in the New York Ledger, and is sure to thrill and instruct his millions of readers.

Price 10 Cents.

Sold by all news dealers, and sent post-paid on receipt of price.

IRWIN P. BEADLE & CO., Publishers,
No. 137 William Street, New York.

FINE WATCH FREE,
And $15 Per Day Easy.

Agents should be careful in directing their orders for our Original and "only Genuine" Extra Large Size Stationery Prize Packages, which have become so popular through the fine quality and value of their contents. As we have several imitations, who copy our Styles, Advertisements, Premiums, &c., for the purpose of deceiving Agents, we are the only manufacturers of the "Celebrated Richards Prize Packages," and none are genuine unless bought direct from us. These parties who advertise to give a "Premium Watch" to agents will not do as unless the agent first pay them from $40 to $50 in cash. This "we challenge any of them to deny." We will present a case of 100 of our Finest Packages to any agent who obtains a watch from them without first paying the above-named amount. Their attempt to present premiums, after our long-established custom, is in this case but a poor dodge. We still do as we have done for years past, present free to every one who sets as our agent a Fine Gold or Silver Hunting Case Watch, "Genuine English Movements," and warranted a correct time-keeper. These watches are presented as fine as cost to us in the first order. No one else does this. Our Wonderful Packages contain more really valuable articles than any half dozen others ever sold. Among the surprising contents of each package will be found Fine Jewelry, Gents' Jewelry, Jewelry, Ladies' Fashion Plates, Designs for Needle-work, Cottage Keepsakes, Household Receipts, Letter-Writer's Instructor, Parlor Amusements, Gents Pocket Calendars for 1864, Union Patriotic Songs, Companions for Soldiers, Military Lieutenants, Games, Army Advice, Rare Recipes, Many Ways to get Rich, Yankee Notions, Fancy Articles, Rich and Costly Presents of Fashionable Jewelry &c., &c., all together worth from $5 to $10, sold for only 25c. Agents make immense profits. 100 to 200 per cent allowed. We guarantee entire satisfaction to Agents, or they may return unsold packages to us. Our Packages stand same as Flour, where all others are giving out, and quickly exhausted. Agents wanted in every county and town in the country. Goods sent safe to all parts of the army. Send for our Great New Circular for 1864, containing Extra Premium Inducements, &c. S. C. RICHARDS & CO., 102 Nassau St., N. Y. Only Original, and Largest and Oldest Stationery House in the World.

Friends. Send a stamp for my Circulars. Address L. M. HARRIS, Boston, Mass.

VERMILYE & CO.
Bankers, No. 44 Wall Street,

Have for sale and negotiate

U. S. FIVE-TWENTY BONDS

As long as issued by Government at Par and Interest.

Also Buy and sell at market rates,

U. S. One Year CERTIFICATES OF INDEBTEDNESS.
U. S. COUPON BONDS OF 1881.
U. S. 7.30 TREASURY NOTES.
U. S. QUARTERMASTER CHECKS.

Maturing Certificates of Indebtedness collected on favorable terms.

VERMILYE & CO.,
BANKERS, No. 44 Wall Street, N. Y.

Fogg's Double-Action Patent Lever
SKATE BUCKLE,

Manufactured and for sale on Straps, at wholesale, by F. T. FOGG, No. 3 Beekman Street, Straps and Leather Goods, 215 Pearl St., New York. 65 Kilby St., Boston.

UNIVERSAL CLOTHES WRINGER

OVER 50,000 SOLD IN 1863.
BOTH SELF-ADJUSTING AND ADJUSTABLE.
The only wringer with the patent
COG-WHEEL REGULATOR,
which positively prevents the rolls from
BREAKING OR TWISTING ON THE SHAFT.
A GOOD CLOTHES WRINGER WANTED
in every town. We offer liberal inducements, and guarantee the extraordinary
Descriptive circular sent free
R. U. BROWNING, No. 347 Broadway, New York.

GUNS, PISTOLS,
Military Goods,

FRENCH AND ENGLISH FANCY GOODS.

Also, a full assortment of

Jet, Coral, and Steel Goods.

Schuyler, Hartley & Graham,
19 Maiden Lane & 22 John Street. N. Y.,
31 Rue du Chateau d'Eau, Paris.
Sands St., Birmingham, Eng.

Shilts' Ointment, warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in six weeks, or money refunded. Sent postpaid, for 50 cents. Address C. F SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

Dyspepsia Tablets,

For Indigestion, Heartburn, &c., manufactured only by S. O. WELLING, and sold by druggists generally. A case for test, by mail, prepaid, for 25 cents. Address, No. 707 Canal Street, New York. Agent for Great Britain, 60 Holborn, London. Sent free by mail for 50 cents.

$35 WATCHES. $35

Genuine Full-Jeweled American Lever Watches, in 4 Ounce Coin Silver Hunting Cases, Gold Joints, for $35.

Also every variety of good Watches at equally low rates. All orders from the Army must be pre-paid, as the Express Companies will not take bills for collection on soldiers.

J. L. FERGUSON, Importer of Watches,
208 Broadway New York.

$7. WATCHES. $7

A Beautiful Engraved Gold-Plated Watch, Lever Cap, small size, English Movements, perfect time-keeper. Sent free by mail, in neat case, for only $7. A Solid Silver, same as above, $7. Specially adapted to the ARMY. ATLAS P. NORTON & CO., 33 & 35 Ann Street, N. Y.

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper, of Aug. 23, says: "Messrs. NORTON & CO. have established two very desirable things in a watch — cheapness and reliability. When it is known that for $7 a person can have an excellent timekeeper, there will be greater punctuality in all the affairs of life."

The only enameled "Turn-over" Collar made in metal. Send $1 for a "Turn-over" or 75 cents for a "Chicken" to Box 5151, and receive it by return mail. American enameled Metallic Collar Co., 94 Pine St., N. Y.

$8 WATCHES $11
AND CHAINS.

A Beautiful Engraved Gold-Plated Watch and Chain, finest movement, handsomest and heaviest cases, warranted a perfect time-keeper, $ Dollars. Engraved Silver, same as above, chain included, $ Dollars. A very heavy and fine Hunting Case Solid Silver Watch, full jeweled, and fine English movement, silver chain included, 11 Dollars. Handsome Gold-plated Gold Plated Chains included, for 11 Dollars.

We will send, on receipt of the money, one of our Watches and a Chain, by mail, postage paid, to any address. Our Watches are especially adapted to the Army, being heavily cased and perfect time-keepers, and in running order.

GEORGE A. ELY & CO.,
No. 208 Broadway, New York.

$2 to $5 a day!—Agents wanted, local or travelling, everywhere. Business honorable, easy, and attractive. Article quoted at sight, needed by soldier, and likewise useful to man, woman or child. Particulars sent free, or box supplied by mail for 25 cents. Address

A. J. BESTOR, 245 Main Street, Hartford, Conn.

Handsomest Pin Out.—The new style Army Corps Pin, in Heavy Gold Plate, beautifully enameled and chased, mailed free for only One Dollar.

GEO. DEMERIT & CO., 395 Broadway, N. Y.

THE BOWEN MICROSCOPE.

"Magnifying small objects 500 times." Mailed free anywhere for 30 CENTS. Five of different powers for $1 00. Address J. C. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass.

Remington's

ARMY AND NAVY
REVOLVER.

Approved by the Government.

Warranted superior to any other Pistol of the kind. Also Pocket and Belt Revolvers. Sold by the Trade generally

E. REMINGTON & SONS,
Ilion, N. Y.

Attention of Officers and all members of the Army is called to the new style Corps Pin in Fine Gold Plate, richly enameled and chased, mailed free for One Dollar, by GEO. DEMERIT & CO., 395 Broadway, New York.

IMPORTANT.

The public are respectfully informed that I have just received, per Steamer "Celia," a fresh shipment of the Jules Mumm & Co's

Verzenay Cabinet
AND
Dry Verzenay
Champagne,

of a new vintage, surpassing in richness, finesse, and delicacy of quality any Wines of the same grade ever before sent by this house. A trial of the above will convince the most fastidious.

The following houses have a supply of this shipment on hand:

CHAS. BELLOWS.
W. B. CORWIN & CO.
H. D. FITCHER.
MACY & CO.
W. H. JACKSON & CO.
PURDY & NICHOLS.
J. F. VAN ROSSUM.

JAMES MEYER, JR.,
45 Beaver Street,
Sole Agent in the U. S. for Jules Mumm & Co's Champagnes.

Learn to Skate in One Hour by using The American Parlor Or Floor Skate, Hard Rubber Rollers, Anti-friction Axles. Frederick Stevens, 216 Fulton Street, New York. 66 Kilby Street, Boston.

Army Corps Pins in Fine Gold Plate, richly enameled and chased, several out and most handsome style, mailed free for only One Dollar, by GEO. DEMERIT & CO., Jewelers, 395 Broadway, New York.

Holloway's Pills are a remedy hailed by all as the best antidote of the internal diseases most common to the human family, including dyspepsia, bile, sick headache, and all febrile and inflammatory influences. Their operation is simple, harmless, and effective. Sold at the manufactory, No. 80 Maiden Lane, N. Y., and by all druggists, at 25c., 62c., and $1 per box.

HARPER & BROTHERS
Have Just Published:

FIVE YEARS OF PRAYER, with the Answer. By Rev. SAMUEL IRENÆUS PRIME, D.D. 12mo, cloth, $1 00.

The Power of Prayer. Illustrated in Essays by Dr. Cheever, Dr. Tyng, Dr. Prime, and Dr. Hall. 12mo, cloth, $1 00.

The Life of New Dr. Mumford. By Rev. Dr. Prime. 12mo, cloth, $1 00.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION.

VOL. VIII.—No. 371.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 6, 1864. [$1.00 FOR FOUR MONTHS. $3.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1864, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

THANKS TO GRANT.—[SEE NEXT PAGE.]

THANKS TO GRANT.

"Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the thanks of Congress be and they hereby are presented to Major-General ULYSSES S. GRANT, and through him to the officers and soldiers who have fought under his command during this rebellion, for their gallantry and good conduct in the battles in which they have been engaged; and that the President of the United States be requested to cause a GOLD MEDAL to be struck, with suitable emblems, devices, and inscriptions, to be presented to Major-General GRANT.

"Section 2. And be it further resolved, That, when the said MEDAL shall have been struck, the President shall cause a copy of this joint resolution to be engrossed, on parchment, and shall transmit the same, together with the said MEDAL, to Major-General GRANT, to be presented to him in the name of the people of the United States of America.

"Section 3. And be it further resolved, That a sufficient sum of money to carry this resolution into effect is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

[Passed without opposition in both Houses: Approved by the President and the Country.]

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 6, 1864.

☞ OWING to some delay in the transmission of the advance sheets of Dr. CHARLES DICKENS'S paper, we are obliged to omit, in the present Number, the continuation of the story, "A WHITE HAND AND A BLACK THUMB." The story will be continued in our next Number, and will be regularly published until its completion.]

OUR FOREIGN RELATIONS.

THE correspondence of the State Department, now published, shows how industrious Secretary SEWARD has been. The two most interesting points in it, of course, are the question of the English rebel rams and the French conquest of Mexico. Mr. SEWARD treats both of them with firmness, ability, and skill. The sailing of the rams would have been undoubtedly a cause of war; for, as Mr. SEWARD well and plainly says to Mr. ADAMS, on the 5th of October, 1863: "The resistance of foreign aggression by all the means in our power, and at the hazard, if need be, of the national life itself, is the one point of policy on which the American people seem to be unanimous, and in complete harmony with the President." It was doubtless the continued success of our navy, supported by the most unrelenting statement of this truth by Mr. ADAMS, which brought from Lord RUSSELL on the 8th of September, 1863, the extremely curt and crisp announcement that the rams would not sail. Throughout the correspondence Mr. ADAMS appears in the best light: prompt, calm, sagacious, persistent; nor has Lord RUSSELL the least reason to congratulate himself upon any advantage in argument, comprehension, or temper.

The treatment of the American question with France required of Mr. SEWARD not only firmness but adroitness. For, counting upon our defeat, Louis NAPOLEON has conquered and is occupying Mexico. It is a step already taken. His dilemma is obvious: how to remain with safety, or how to retreat with honor. Our question is not less embarrassing: how to assert our traditional policy so as to persuade him that he had better withdraw. It is not an easy task. The Secretary states our policy thus: The United States have no right nor will to interfere in the war between France and Mexico; but they believe that free institutions in the nations around them are essential to their own safety, and if France should adopt an adverse policy there would be great risk of serious collision between her and this country. On the 23d of October, 1863, Mr. SEWARD writes that this Government does not consider the war in Mexico ended, nor the Mexican Government with which it has friendly relations overthrown. Therefore it can not entertain any question of a new Government, but will recognize the sovereignty and independence of the Mexican people in whatever form they may choose, in the exercise of an absolute freedom, to manifest them.

This is rather foggy. Does it mean that if they choose to manifest them in the form of an Austrian empire upheld by French bayonets that it will recognize it? Or does it mean that the choice of an empire will be regarded as proof that absolute freedom of election has not been exercised? Or is it left purposely foggy? It is not satisfactory, and is very probably not meant to be.

We wish that Mr. SEWARD could have omitted one or two phrases in the French correspondence, and that, without losing the tone of diplomatic courtesy, he could have avoided all taint of obsequiousness. Surely there was no need of saying that Louis NAPOLEON assumed the reins of empire in France "in obedience to her voice," because the empire was notoriously a coup d'état. If his subsequent election was the result of an absolute freedom of choice, Mr. SEWARD can not refuse to acknowledge the same thing in MEXICO, and recognize MAXIMILIAN as assuming the reins of empire "in obedience to her voice." Thus, it is quite worthy the Secretary of State to present to Spain the continued enjoyment of slavery in Cuba as the reward of friendship for the United States? If we had no other inducement to offer her, wouldn't it be better to take the risk of her hostility?

These are blemishes in a very able and remarkable diplomatic correspondence.

PRIDE AND SENSITIVENESS.

THE "Life of General Butler," by Mr. PARTON, will show the interested reader why Mr. Beverly Johnson, who was sent to New Orleans to investigate the General's conduct of affairs, so constantly thwarted that most able and skillful officer, and so invariably favored the enemies of his country and Government. It was made a speech in the Senate of the United States, and incidentally drops the explanation. It is because he considers the rebels "proud and sensitive." That the pride of the Government of the United States requires that the rebellion be so subdued that it may not burst forth again does not seem to occur to him. That the loyal people of the land may be quite as "sensitive" as rebel slaveholders is a fact he has yet to learn.

Does Mr. Senator Reverdy Johnson really think that the time has not come for the ancient and foolish twaddle about the "high spirit," the "gentlemanly tone," the "pride," and the "sensitiveness," of men who sell their own and other people's children? That in every condition of society which is barbarous, and always is the distinctive sign of barbarism, there should be a certain dash and alertness of feeling, is attested by universal experience. The chiefs are always impatient of control, dictatorial, self-indulgent, dogmatic. They use the club, the bowie-knife, or the pistol, upon the least occasion. But why should a man like Mr. Johnson, who has had the advantage of mingling with a society of which most of the human rights is a cardinal principle, permit himself to repeat these phrases which are now as ludicrous as they are obsolete? Does this worthy and belated Senator really think that Charles Stuart was a man of higher "pride" than John Hampden, or that Strafford was more "sensitive" than Pym? The Southern people, who are not rebel leaders, may be an ideal folk; but tickling the "proud and sensitive" nerves of slave masters is not the business which the American people now has in hand.

A LOUD CRY.

OUR view of the rebel prospects has rather been startling confidence in the success of all the public as well as private news lately received from the seat of insurrection. The Raleigh (North Carolina) Standard, the most able, and very striking article, in which it sets forth the astounding fact that the rebel Congress is controlled by members from States which do not belong to the Confederacy, by representatives from Kentucky, Tennessee, Missouri, Arkansas, and Louisiana, impose, according to the Standard, "odious and oppressive laws," which can no more be enforced upon the people of those States than upon those of New York or New England!

Here is representative government with a vengeance! Here is a paradise of the people for which it was worth while to break away from the "Yankee despotism!" The rebel Congress, composed as we have seen of the basest tacs, impressments, and conscriptions upon the people of North Carolina, for instance, which it was not enough to bring into the most shocking prosperity has brought them untold woe. They see that the European powers, which were sure to take which we bring them, neither shoulder them or ever. They see their domain contracting; their families starving or carried off; trade at an end; industry only supporting an army which feeds upon them, and which may be shot or sold forced. They see their slaves freed, escaping, and restive. They see their soil saturated with the blood of their children. They see that they are opposed to them a nation constantly reinforcing its armies, prospering and active and resolved, holding out to the people of the South the hand of fellowship on such terms as honorable men will persistently reject. How long is this likely to continue?

The bold of the leaders of the rebellion upon the people is very tenacious, and its tenure is Slavery. For however wretched and poor the whites may be, just in the degree of their ignorance will they be content, so long as there is a proscribed race below them. Remove the proscription and you destroy their contentment. Remove the proscription and they turn upon their leaders and ask, "What are we fighting for? Without Slavery what is Southern Independence worth? And with Slavery are we not the most unmitigatedly wretched of American citizens?"

The very presence of our armies will teach them to ask these questions. We know, and the rebel chiefs know, and the Copperhead allies know, that to such questions there can be but one answer, and that these men will gladly agree that the Slavery which has enthralled them, and in which the head and could have no prospect of interest, shall be destroyed and forever. Then we shall have peace, and not before.

GENERAL BUTLER.

MR. PARTON'S "Life of General Butler" is a very valuable contribution to the history of the war, because it is so vivid a portraiture of the most remarkable man, upon the whole, that the war has developed. When the struggle began it was natural to suppose that the Yankee genius would show itself in prompt and daring action, in a perfect quality to every unexpected occasion, and a general readiness, wit, and practical wisdom, which are always associated with the Yankee name. But certainly there has been a profound disappointment in this expectation. Sturdy, steady, patient heroism we have seen, and clear principle and unshrinking resolution, but the typical Yankee traits have been more so plainly and constantly exhibited as in the career of General Butler.

In the winter of 1860–'61 we felt that the war was coming, and, grieved with his late political allies, went home to prepare to fight them as traitors and rebels. He apprehended the scope of the struggle, and from the moment he accepted Annapolis until that in which he is intrusted with the settlement of the question of exchange of prisoners, his shrewd insight, his selfpossession, his various knowledge, his motherwit, and his good-humored heroism, have enabled him to meet every kind of difficulty, and solve in every instance, except one, that the public confidence in his genius and resources is profound and general.

The earlier parts of his military career in Maryland are most interesting, and are related with great spirit by Mr. PARTON. That gentleman does not spare the military plans and conceptions of General SCOTT, and it is certainly amusing to read that while that General was maturing a grand programme for capturing Baltimore (as his successor did afterward, for bagging the whole army in which four companies of three thousand men each were to move simultaneously upon the city, General Butler advanced into the environs with a few companies, halted when he found his staff into the city, and Baltimore was taken. It has been held from that moment. The solemn snubbing administered to Butler from the head-quarters at Washington read, under the circumstances, like chapters from Gil Blas. The worship and cant of "strategy" had already begun.

The capturing of Baltimore was characteristic of General Butler's method. It is the application of common sense, heroism, and perception to the crisis before him. His disposition of the practical question of slavery, as he met it at Fort Monroe, was another striking illustration. The slaves in his eye were "contraband of war;" and Mrs. or Mr. Partington said, slavery was abolished by an epigram.

But the occupation and government of New Orleans is the most signal event in his history. Has the world ever seen another man who could have done that work? Whether with rebels, or conditional Union men, or slaves, or slaveholders, or non-slaveholders, shop-keepers, ship-women, Bank presidents, mayors, common councils, and merchants; with questions of law, of precedent, domestic, international, and foreign, of the most delicate and summary justice or the wisest forbearance—he carries the same high humor, copious resource, and inexorable decision; and there is no way left for rebels, who are baffled by him at every turn and in every wile, but to call him Beast, and set a price upon his head. Mr. PARTON very plainly intimates that foreign influence was exerted to the utmost by all rebels, and rebel accomplices, in New Orleans, tended to a disturbance of the equanimity of our foreign relations. But the Beast was equal to every obstacle, and the Secretary of State was really the cause of General Butler's removal from the Department of the Gulf. General Butler there is no way left for rebels, was an conciliation, which almost cost us Louisiana. That was a policy which General Butler never would have adopted because the rebellion, as he was profoundly persuaded that in trying to tickle tigers you run tremendous risks. General Banks did not persevere, and Louisiana has been retained.

From his previous intimacy with the leaders of the rebellion General Butler has always commanded the confidence of the war. He knew it was a radical struggle in which one principle or the other must prevail. The leaders he knew to be daring and desperate. The people he know to be deluded; and probably no man is less surprised than he by the course the war has taken. Of all our conspicuous actors in the struggle no one has thrown himself into it more heartily, intelligibly, and unreservedly; and although he is yet scarcely in the prime of life, the copious and delightful biography of Mr. PARTON shows Benjamin Butler to be already one of the most original characters in our history.

THE BROWN CODE.

THE new rebel conscription law, without which the insurgent armies can not be reinforced, makes Jefferson Davis as absolute a Dictator as ever Robespierre was in France. The Macon Telegraph in Georgia plainly exposes the scheme. By the law of Mr. Brown every able-bodied man in the Confederacy, including the rebel Presidents, Senators, Governors, and Judges is to be impressed into the service. Then if the lame, and blind, and supernumerated are not enough to do the work necessary for the support of the army, men are to be detailed from the army for the purpose.

But who is to detail them? The worthy President of the Confederacy! Thus he has it all in his own hands. He is to detail the governors, judges, merchants, farmers, senators! A more ludicrous plan was never proposed. It virtually puts the power over every person and all property into the hands of one irresponsible man. We commend this last stroke to the profound consideration of the foreign and domestic gentlemen who are fond of contrasting the far-reaching sagacity of the Southern statesman with the puerile plans of Lincoln's ministers.

OLD DOGS.

BEFORE the last Presidential election there were certain papers and orators who used to inform us that if we did not vote for Mr. Breckinridge, or if Mr. Lincoln were elected, the grass would grow in the city of New York. Mr. Lincoln was elected, but the grass has not yet started, except in the Central Park.

Now that another election approaches the same papers are beginning the same tune. That Mr. Lincoln is voted for this time blood is to flow, and the election is to end in universal massacre. Would people kindly refuse to avoid such terrible consequences, ask the wiseacres, vote for our candidate!

It does not seem to occur to these astute politicians that the election carried under any threat of this kind is simply the end of Government, and the failure of the Democratic principle. If we can avoid civil war only by voting for one man the election is a farce, and the one man would do us a signal service by taking the quietly possession of the Government without the form of an election.

These Bourbon gentlemen, who learn nothing from events, nor the use of words, are carrying elections by terror is, for the present at least, ended. When the leaders, now in rebellion, used to shake their bana solemnly and say that if they could not have their own way "the South" would be compelled to dissolve the Union, the nation used to surrender, and they promptly pretended that the Union is continue. Their organs at the North were so well broken to this kind of tactics that they can not emancipate themselves, and are beginning, in the old way, to threaten the horrors that will befall us if we elect a President who pleases us.

These are sensible old dogs in Italy which, long after they have lost their voices, still open their mouths fiercely and go through all the forms of barking. But they were never known to frighten any body.

LITERARY.

THE many friends and former enthusiasts for Alexander Smith will be surprised by the limpid purity and simplicity of style with which he has written a book of essays in the character of a placid old man in the placid old village of "Dreamthorp." (J. E. Tilton & Co., Boston), which gives the title to the book, which is most neatly printed and bound. There are twelve most pleasant, gossiping essays, not like Bacon's or Emerson's or Montaigne's, but ripe and quiet and sunny, and a great deal more genial and agreeable than the Rev. Mr. Boyd's. "Dreamthorp" is a charming book for the cars, or a frosty evening by the fire, or a summer day in the country. It is not unlike quite impossible that the author of a "Life Drama" should have written "Dreamthorp," but we are inclined to think that the liking for the latter will be more permanent and genuine.

In the "Life of William H. Prescott," by George Tickner (Tickner & Fields), we have a sumptuous quarto, a splendid typographical example and unique in American book-making; the printers being Welch, Bigelow, & Co., at the University Press, Cambridge. It is for those who are amiable scholar and gentleman, whose misfortune in the practical loss of sight not only did not sour his natural kindliness of nature, but enabled his activities, so that, devoting himself to historical composition, he became a famous author. It is a purely literary life, and a certainly very interesting, enriched with many letters from distinguished men of the time, and abounding in that personal anecdote and gossip which, while they consume the reader's time, clearly illustrate the subject of the memoir. Fortunate in all but his partial blindness, in family, friends, and wealth, and devoted to the soft, polished, conservative side of life; and throughout the tale you move in a society as select as the book is expensive. There in the rustle of silks and satins, the exchange of perfumed compliments and billet-doux; the steady stream of mutual incense on every hand; the evening-rooms, courts, high society; until cold winds, poverty, and the battle of life, seem simply impossible. Mr. Tickner's fine, and entire intimacy with Mr. Prescott peculiarly fitted him for writing the life, the successive events of which he has apparently most faithfully narrated. It would have been pleasant to find that Mr. Prescott had the heroism of a great scholar; that he did not shrink from contact with public affairs at a time when no man of influence and talent should have refused to give his heartiest sympathy and service, after his kind, to his country; and to discover that he was never deluded by the dull indifference to human welfare which calls itself conservatism. But every scholar can not be Milton or Languet; and Prescott's gay, genial, and graceful nature, fitted for saloons, boudoirs, and libraries, went smiling and sparkling through life, faithfully devoted to his work, endeared to his friends, and making both of readers happy. In this beautiful volume we find many passages in which we of this Journal have a special interest; as in the sketch taken from the We. By of February 12, 1859, recording a conversation with Mr. Prescott, shortly before his death, by the Reverend W. H. Milburn; and in the many always friendly, allusions to his publishers in New York (who are also the publishers of this Journal). The relation each both sides was always most pleasant, and as such relations are of necessity an important part of the life of an author, they have due mention from the biographer. If we say, at last, that the spirit of this biography is entirely congenial with that of its subject, have we not given it the highest praise?

A capital book for boys is "Days and Nights on the Battle-field" (Tickner & Fields). It is written by "Carleton," the signature of Mr. Coffin, army correspondent of the Boston Journal. It describes the battle of Bull Run, the capture of Forts Henry and Donelson, with the battle of Shiloh, and other operations in the West, in a style so easy, vivacious, and picturesque that no book is to be compared with it for giving an intelligent child a vivid conception of the war which shakes the country. The book is full of lively incident and shrewd observation. Its interest never flags, and it makes even the movement of battles intelligible. It is from such sources that the historian is to draw, and his elaborate touches will scarcely be more effective than these sketches of "Carleton."

[From the Evening Post of January 30.]

HARPER'S WEEKLY.—We have received the seventh volume of Harper's Weekly—for the seventh year 1863. It is a journal of the year, kept in the most interesting way, and as we turn over the pages we review many now almost forgotten sensations, and see, bit by bit, how history has grown. Here we find "The new Commander of the Potomac army," General Meade; here, "Column Kilpatrick's charge," which made him presently a brigadier-General; here, in pictures, for the most part drawn with admirable spirit, and clearly cut and printed, the live army and the staid capture of Vicksburg, the battle of the iron-clads Atlanta and Weehawken, and many other scenes which posterity will read of admiringly.

The volume closed and bound up becomes history, but it would not be just to this publication to exalt a single one to the influence which it has exercised during the year, and which it continues to exert. An illustrated journal like Harper's Weekly, which circulates, we have heard, over one hundred and twenty thousand copies per week, chiefly among families, and which has probably a million of readers, has necessarily a great influence in the country. The Weekly has consistently and very ably supported the Union, the Government, and the great principles for which they which the Union was made. The publishers have shown themselves true and wise lovers of liberty, and sterling patriots. And we have known no whole influence of their journal for the most vigorous and thorough prosecution of the war; and have ably and constantly supported every measure of the Administration calculated to put down the rebellion, and to destroy the cause of rebellion among the people.

Unlike most illustrated journals, Harper's Weekly has displayed political and literary ability of a high order, as well as artistic merit. Its political discussions are sound, clear, and convincing, and have done their share to educate the American people to a right understanding of their duties and duties. They complete in all the departments of an American family journal, Harper's Weekly has earned for itself a right to the title which it assumed seven years ago—"a journal of civilization."

In its specialty—illustrations of passing events —it is unequaled, and many of the pictures of the year do honor to the genius of the artists and engravers of this country. There is a more scene in the seventh number of the Weekly (page 80) which is worthy of a frame, and has more merit than many an oil painting of a similar scene. In fact, the war has done much to improve the art of designing and cutting wood engravings, and we find frequent wood-cuts in Harper's Weekly which we have not seen equaled in any European publication of the kind.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

CONGRESS.

SENATE.—January 29. Mr. Brown presented a memorial from a portion of the Missouri Legislature against reforming the nomination of General Schofield as Major-General; the Senator spoke in strong condemnation of the course of General Schofield as military commander in Missouri.—The Military Committee reported, with recommendations, bill for a uniform ambulance system.—Resolutions were presented from the Milwaukee Chamber of Commerce, asking for a modification of the Reciprocity Treaty.—The President was asked to furnish information touching the recent conflagration at Santiago, Chili.—The Military Committee was instructed to report on the advisability of consecrated fees for horses and mules.—The resolution for a committee on the conduct of the war was passed, with the House amendment requiring an investigation into contracts, in case of Mr. Harris's motion to take requiring a new oath from Senators come up. Mr. Collamer opposed at length the form of the oath, the object of which, he said, was to rid the senate of members like those who, in 1861 and before, while holding seats, exploited against the Government. If the Constitution was so framed that this oath could not be done, it was a defective. Mr. Anthony followed, arguing in favor of the rule. Mr. Hendricks compared the oath to the Dutch oath, but because he thought it proper, but to silence the element that might arise if he refused. Mr. Saulsbury moved in its particularly objectionable to him; but when the Senate proposed to make it a general rule, effecting all future applicants, he should oppose it. He thought that any man who came duly commissioned by his State had a right to a seat. He was determined that none of the leaders of the rebellion should have a seat in the Senate; but when the rebellion was crushed they would never seek a place in the Senate. He then went on to express his loath pat obstructions in the way of reconstruction; denounced the policy of the President, and wished to see a mode of reconstruction as would allow of the return of the seceded States into the Union as friends, and not as enemies.—January 31. The Senatorial oath and Mr. Bayard's case was again brought up, and debated by Senators Johnson, Howard, and Foote; but no action was taken, except the rejection of an amendment offered by Mr. Powell, by 26 to 12.—The Senate adjourned until Monday, January 25.—January 25. The Judiciary Committees were discharged from the consideration of the resolution for the expulsion of Mr. Davis, and proceedings introduced resolution precluding admission to the bar in United States courts to all persons who shall not have taken the oath prescribed by the Act of 1862.—The Secretary of War was directed to transmit all papers and documents concerning elections issued by military authorities in Kentucky and Missouri.—Mr. Wilson moved to take up a bill for the character of the heavy ordnance, and rifled guns, and the Senate proceeded accordingly.—Mr. Grimes moved an inquiry into the affairs of the Naval Department was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.—January 26. Senatorial oath was brought up and debated, Senators Saulsbury and Johnson speaking against the oath. Supreme resolution. This resolution, effected December 18, to the effect that to the time of the rebellion, the Court of every Senator should take in open Senate the oath prescribed by the Act of July 2, 1862, was agreed to, by 28 to 11.—January 26. Mr. Bayard addressed the Senate in reference to the new oath. He had thought that if it were adopted there was but one alternative, either to comply with it or resign. He had resolved that he had been partly in error; the rule had been judicially adopted, and he was willing upon that ground to take the oath; but he should do this, and then resign the seat which he had held for thirteen years. The Senate then took up and resigned his seat, and refused the hall. Mr. Richardson, of Illinois, on the other hand, stated at first time, and that, while he doubted the policy of requiring the oath, he was prepared to take it under protest, and, if permitted by the rule.—Mr. Wilson introduced a bill to print the official report of the battle of Gettysburg, and authority to secure honorariums to persons engaged in the service of the United States' records.—Mr. Sumner introduced a bill for the rebellion; that was done, he let all the States come in with welcome, and let all the people be forgiven. Controlled by the proper judicial tribunals. He did not believe in vengeance.—The Senate then took up the Senatorial oath.—The Revenue bill came up. An amendment was offered by Mr. Fessenden to tax all liquors, from 20 gallons on hand for sale, whether distilled before or since the 1st of July, 1863, at the rate of 20 cents per gallon, after the act; adopted, 35 to 20. Another amendment imposing 10 cents per gallon on cordials, and that they which matter has been infused so that they are sold as medicines.—January 27. The Senate resumed discussions on the subject of a uniform system of coinage, weights, and measures.—The joint resolution amendatory of the Constitution act was brought up and debated; but no action was taken.—January 28. Senate took up the bill to amend the act to provide for the enrollment and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes. The first amendment was agreed to, taking all action in the bands of Governors, instead of Governors and Senators. Another amendment was agreed to, providing that all spirits imported previous to the 1st of January, 1863, should be subject to a duty of 20 cents per gallon. The whole bill, as thus amended, was reported, and together, with the amendments, passed.—Mr. Stevens, was ordered to be printed, as preliminary to further discussion.—January 29. The Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measure was appointed, Mr. Ramon chairman.—The Senate then resumed the consideration of Mr. Stevens's substitute was rejected by 100 to 51; the amendment of the Committee on Ways and Means by 87 to 63; the main features are a tax of 60 cents per gallon on all first and spirits; brandies and other spirits distilled from grain, composed of whisky flavored so as to sell for brandy, rum, etc., whisky, upon importation, a duty of 60 cents per gallon, first proof, as levied. Upon cotton a tax of 2½ per cent. is levied, and upon all sales by the hands of manufacturers and dealers, upon which one-half cent has been paid, the tax of one-half cent per cents is imposed.—The resolution amending it. Confederate notes not now bonded in any and other purpose action was taken.—Mr. Ward offered a resolution to the effect that all officers and soldiers who had resigned for the reason within two years from enlistment, should receive the bounties heretofore granted to those who have every service: referred to Committee on Military affairs.—House adjourned till Monday, January 25.—January 25. After the introduction of several bills, which were referred to appropriate committees, Mr. Stevens offered a resolution instructing the Military Committee to introduce a bill for increasing the pay of officers and soldiers. A bill for the table was rejected by an almost unanimous vote, and the resolution was referred.—Mr. Pendleton introduced a bill to Mr. Dowell censuring the suspension of the habeas corpus act, and by Mr. Kernan's resolution, the Secretary of State is instructed to the basis on which the war should be conducted, condemning the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus, and deprecating all revolutionary measures: debate arising, these two subjects were postponed, and the table was rejected by an almost unanimous vote, and the resolution was referred.—Mr. Pendleton introduced a bill to Mr. Dowell censuring the suspension of the habeas corpus act, and by Mr. Kernan's resolution, the Secretary of State is instructed to the basis on which the war should be conducted, condemning the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus, and deprecating all revolutionary measures: debate arising, these two subjects were postponed, and the table was rejected by an almost unanimous vote, and the resolution was referred.—January 26. Mr. Dowell moved to take up the bill to amend the act to provide for the enrollment and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes. The first amendment was agreed to, taking all action in the hands of Governors, instead of Governors and Senators. Another amendment was agreed to, providing that all spirits imported previous to the 1st of January, 1863, should be subject to a duty of 20 cents per gallon. The whole bill, as thus amended, was reported, and together, with the amendments, passed.—January 27. A new Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures was appointed, Mr. Ramon chairman.—January 28. The Committee on Ways and Means reported a substitute for the Senate's substitute was rejected by 100 to 51; the amendment of the Committee on Ways and Means by 87 to 63; the main features are a tax of 60 cents per gallon on all first and spirits; brandies and other spirits distilled from grain, composed of whisky flavored so as to sell for brandy, rum, etc., whisky, upon importation, a duty of 60 cents per gallon, first proof, as levied. Upon cotton a tax of 2½ per cent. is levied, and upon all sales by the hands of manufacturers and dealers, upon which one-half cent has been paid, the tax of one-half cent per cents is imposed.—The resolution amending it. Confederate notes not now bonded in any and other purpose action was taken.—Mr. Ward offered a resolution to the effect that all officers and soldiers who had resigned for the reason within two years from enlistment, should receive the bounties heretofore granted to those who have every service: referred to Committee on Military affairs.—House adjourned till Monday, January 25.—January 25. After the introduction of several bills, which were referred to appropriate committees, Mr. Stevens offered a resolution instructing the Military Committee to introduce a bill for increasing the pay of officers and soldiers. A bill for

A STAMPEDE OF ARMY HORSES.—[FROM A DRAWING BY MR. A. R. WAUD.]

SERGEANT JOHN CLEM.

OUR YOUNGEST SOLDIER.

SERGEANT JOHN CLEM, Twenty-second Michigan Volunteer Infantry, is the youngest soldier in our army. He is 12 years old, and small even for his age. His home is Newark, Ohio. He first attracted the notice of General Rosecrans at a review at Nashville, where he was acting as marker of his regiment. The General, attracted by his youth and intelligence, invited him to call upon him whenever they were in the same place. Rosecrans saw no more of Clem until his return to Cincinnati, when one day coming to his rooms at the Burnet House, he found the boy awaiting him. He had seen service in the mean while. He had gone through the battle of Chicamauga, where he had three bullets through his hat. Here he killed a rebel Colonel. The officer, mounted on horseback, encountered the young hero, and called out, "Stop, you little Yankee devil!" By way of answer the boy halted, brought his piece to "order," thus throwing the Colonel off his guard. In another moment the piece was cocked, brought to aim, fired, and the officer fell dead from his horse. For this achievement Clem was promoted to the rank of Sergeant, and Rosecrans bestowed upon him the Roll of Honor. He is now on duty at the head-quarters of the Army of the Cumberland.

SALTPETER CAVE NEAR CHATTANOOGA.

THE "Nick-a-Jack" Cave near Chattanooga is one of the main sources from which the Confederates have derived the saltpeter required for the manufacture of powder. Its loss is deplored by the rebels as one of the most serious results of our victory at Chattanooga. Six or seven years ago this cave was visited by "Porte Crayon" (D. H. Strother, of Virginia, lately on the staff of General Banks, at New Orleans), the genial artist-correspondent of Harper's Magazine. From his description in that periodical for August, 1858, we quote the following:

> The cave is situated at the base of Raccoon Mountain, which rises abruptly to the height of twelve or fifteen hundred feet above the low grounds. In the face of a perpendicular cliff appeared the yawning mouth of Nick-a-Jack Cave. It is not arched as these caves usually are, but spanned by horizontal strata resting on square abutments at the sides, like the massive entablature of an Egyptian or Etruscan temple. From the opening issues a considerable stream, of a bright green color, and of sufficient volume to turn a saw-mill near at hand. The height of the cliff is about 70 feet, that of the opening 40 feet, and about 100 in width immediately at the entrance, and of this the stream occupies about one-third. The roof of the cave is square and smooth, like the ceiling of a room, but below, the passage is rough and irregular, with heaps of earth and huge angular masses of rock, making the exploration both difficult and dangerous.

"Porte Crayon" goes on to describe how the cave was formerly the resort of a gang of banditti, whose occupation was plundering and murdering the emigrants and traders who descended the Tennessee River, the cave furnishing a convenient hiding-place for their booty. Since he wrote this cave had fallen into the hands of a worse and more desperate gang, who used it for purposes still more nefarious, extracting from it abundant supplies of the "villainous saltpeter" required for the manufacture of powder for the Confederate States of America. It has now—thanks to Grant and Sherman—fallen into honest hands. Our illustration on this page, for which we are indebted to a photograph furnished by Mr. Morse, of Nashville, gives the present aspect of the cave, showing the ruins of the rebel Saltpeter Works.

A RAILROAD "ACCIDENT."

A TELEGRAM from Pittsburg, published in the New York papers of January 15, says:

> The morning express train ran off the track, and two passenger cars were precipitated down the embankment, forty feet, and were destroyed by fire from the stoves. Several persons were injured, none of them seriously.

Our correspondent, who was on this train, and who furnishes us the sketch on page 92, writes:

> The cars made a clear leap of some forty feet into the bed of the Little Juniata River, and almost instantly caught fire, and were consumed. Some thirty out of fifty passengers were so severely injured as to be unable to care for themselves, while hardly one escaped unhurt. The good people of the town of Birmingham, and the country around, were soon on the spot, and exerted themselves in caring for the wounded, among whom were many soldiers returning home on furlough. We fortunately got out all the wounded before the fire reached them.

CAMP OF THE NEW YORK 103D.

THIS regiment, known as the "Seward Infantry," has been knocking service during the siege of Charleston. It is now recruiting in New York. Its rendezvous is at 218 Rivington Street, where applications for enrollment may be made, or to Colonel HEINE, 40 Bowery, Captain REDLICH, 27 Bowery, Lieutenant BRAKIN, Bowery Garden, or Lieutenant SCHMIDT, 243 Forty-fourth Street. The bounties paid to veterans amount to $382, to recruits $677—$300 cash in hand. Their camp, represented on page 92, is on one of the islands near Charleston Harbor, in a very healthy location. The rations furnished are excellent and abundant. As their names evince, the officers of this regiment are Germans, and very likely to this is owing that, by special permission of the Commanding General, the national beverage, lager-bier, is allowed.

MAJOR-GENERAL HERRON.—[FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY BRADY.]

GENERAL FRANCIS J. HERRON.

GENERAL HERRON is a native of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania. Some eight years ago he removed to Dubuque, Iowa, where he entered into business. Here he took an active part in the organization of the "Governor's Grays," which soon became one of the noted Companies of the Northwest. This Company, of which he was Captain, tendered their services to the Government in December, 1860. When the President's Proclamation calling for volunteers was put forth, the Grays became a part of the First Iowa Regiment, entering service in May, 1861. Captain Herron distinguished himself at the Battle of Wilson's Creek, August 10, where Lyon fell. He then returned home and raised a three-years' regiment, of which he was appointed Lieutenant-Colonel. This was attached to Curtis's forces, and took part in the battles of Pea Ridge, March 7 and 8, 1862, where Herron commanded the regiment, its Colonel having charge of a brigade. During the second day's fight Herron was wounded, his ankle being broken by a cannon-shot, which killed his horse. Yet he led his men for an hour, until the enemy's batteries were reached. Here he was surrounded and taken prisoner, but was soon after exchanged for the rebel Colonel Hebert. In July, 1862, he was promoted to the rank of Brigadier-General of Volunteers, and at the Battle of Prairie Grove, December 7, he commanded two divisions, and though fighting against overwhelming odds, won the battle before reinforcements came up. Twenty days after he captured Van Buren, Arkansas. For his gallantry on these occasions he was promoted to the rank of Major-General, his commission dating from November 29, 1862. Early in 1863 Herron with his division went to Vicksburg, and during the latter part of the siege they formed the left wing of Grant's army. After the fall of Vicksburg they were sent to New Orleans, where they operated in the Atchafalaya and other districts of Louisiana. Herron's last fighting in October, 1863, he was relieved by General Dana. Herron, having recovered his health, has just gone to Texas, relieving Dana and assuming his old command on the 2d of January. If we can judge any thing from the antecedents of General Herron, we shall before long hear of his doings in the "Lone Star" State.

SALTPETER CAVE NEAR CHATTANOOGA.

"WEEP THOU NO MORE!"

WEEP thou no more; a common lot is thine!
Fold thy meek hands upon thy heaving breast:
In silent sympathy see he no rest;
There is no lasting joy but trust divine.

O heart that long'st for death, but may'st not die!
O weary heart, all wasted with thy pain,
That strivest to unlade the stream, yet all in vain,
Weep thou no more, none hear thy weary cry!

The cold and distant stars are gazing still
In the hushed midnight on thy falling tears;
Thus have they gazed, for many thousand years,
On all varieties of human ill;

And yet they shine as on Creation's dawn,
Unlike to human mode. All things cease,
Sooner or later, lapped in perfect peace,
For nature knows not learning. All things born

Take sorrow for their heirloom with the light.
But wake and cry, and fail to sleep again;
So slumber has no sleep found after thy pain;
While more is breaking in the darkest night,

The billows fast return upon the shore,
The morn-dew on the myrtle to the sea!
Whatever is not true, there only are can be;
Thither thou drifted fast—weep thou no more!

MATTY ESMAINE'S RAFFLE.

"IT'S for the benefit of the sick soldiers, you know!"

Matty Esmaine was sitting on a low cricket in the very middle of the room, surrounded by a perfect maelstrom of ribbon, and velvet, and winking steel beads and shimmering gold braid—a little Fairy Disorder, whose wand was a diminutive thimble, and whose magic ring was marked by rainbow scraps of silk and tangled masses of embroidery floss! She was small and rosy, with liquid brown eyes, and cheeks tinted with the pinky pearl of the trailing arbutus you sometimes find hidden under the rustling layers of old leaves in scented spring woods. And her auburn hair—well, it was looped up with cherry-colored ribbon into what ladies call a "waterfall," and very pretty it looked in its chestnut shadows that changed to ripples of gold at every motion of the head.

Ellen Esmaine, the sober, elder sister—she sat in the window seat, threading sprays of coral on silver-wire—was altogether different; not a bit pretty, but very fresh and plump and lovable; and the dreamy way in which she watched Matty's difficult movements, as a grown-up cutting might tolerate a little kitten's freaks, was a sight to see! And Montague Carryer, sitting "at anchor" in a small clear space in the sea of drippery, was occupied in holding a skein of violet silk for the younger Miss Esmaine to wind. Of course he was dreadfully clumsy about it, perpetually dropping the ends, and catching his great thumbs in the meshes, and committing other awful sins that could be dreaded of in connection with a skein of violet silk; but then he enjoyed it so intensely that Matty hadn't the heart to deprive him from his position as swing, ex pro.

"For the sick soldiers, eh?" said Mr. Rayner.

"And aren't the well soldiers to derive any emolument therefrom?"

"Of course not; they don't need it."

"Don't they? I tell you what, Miss Matty—if you could be on pick-duty a night or two, or carry a knapsack up and down the muddy Fairfax hill ten or twelve times, on a forced march, you might possibly alter your opinion on the subject of well soldiers being the most fortunate creatures in existence. Haha! that's the matter!"

Matty had given a small deprecating shriek as Montague snapped the strands of violet silk in his enthusiasm.

"Nothing," said Miss Esmaine, dryly, taking the skein from him. "Uncle! what a sensation run through his nerves, well, your fingers touched his brown paws. "Only I prefer two chairs to finish this talk."

Indeed, Miss Matty, I'm very sorry," said Montague, penitently. "Just let me try once more; I'll promise to keep my hands as still as mice. I know I'm a clumsy blockhead; but—"

But Matty was inexorable, and the abashed defender of the country withdrew his batteries, and opened fire in a new spot.

"I suppose the girls and women are making heaps of gim-cracks for this fair, eh?"

"To be sure they are," said Matty, her eyes sparkling. "Such a lot of money as we shall make. There are to be seven different raffles, only think! Mrs. Vane gives a piano to be raffled for; and Kate Windham contributes a cashmere shawl, a love of a real India; and Major Hall has given us a silver dressing-case; and, oh dear!" sighed Matty, stopping in the very act of sewing spots of gold foil upon the blue velvet wings of a gorgeous butterfly that was to be put down in the catalogue as a "Fen-wiver, No. 18"—"if I could only give them something better worth having than these ridiculous little gewgaws!"

"Well, then, why don't you?" said Rayner, twisting his mustache argumentatively.

"Why don't I?" flashed Matty; "what have I to give? If I had a piano I'd sacrifice it in a minute. If I owned a sewing-machine I'd send it down to be raffled for to-morrow!"

"Indeed!" said Private Rayner, arching his eyebrows satirically. "I'm surprised at the extent of Miss Esmaine's patriotism. While we soldier only contribute the vital stream of our heart's-blood, or, it may be, a leg or an arm to the shrine of our country's need, Miss Matty Esmaine is willing to give up her piano if she had one."

And he lightly hummed the lines:

"Oh! would the ladies
If I could as well as not,
And I'm willing every body else
Should do as they see fit, they've got!"

Matty's cheeks had crimsoned with an angry glow.

"Montague! how can you tease me so?"

"Am I teasing you? Really I was not aware of it."

"To taunt me with papa's slender means, when you know I would give any thing in the world to aid the noble fellows who have fallen maimed on our battle-fields, or make any sacrifice that lay within my power!"

"Then you really feel anxious to raise money for this fund?"

"I can not tell you how anxious!" said Matty Esmaine, with passionate earnestness. "I have wished a thousand times that I were a man to shoulder the rifle my own self; but I am only a poor little woman that can but toil and pray for the great work in the midst of her weakness."

"I can give you an idea," said the young man, watching her with a half-smile in his eyes. "Did you know that you possessed a treasure worth a dozen pianos?"

"Now you're mean!" he whispered, in evident trepidation, "let's go away from here; that woman with the pink cap-ribbons has looked at me twice, and I can't imagine what she's listening to. She's counting this way, Mont; do make haste!"

"They are beginning to turn the wheel!" suddenly exclaimed Rayner, who had paid no manner of attention to his friend's spasmodic whispers. "This way, quick! Good Heavens! if my mad freak should be thus heralded for life!"

"Make who? What wheel? Who the deuce are you talking about?" ejaculated Carberry. But Rayner dragged him through the crowd, crinoline and all, to the spot where all his interests were centered—the slowly revolving wheel that was a destiny to him!

The gaslights seemed to whirl in mad circles around him, and the vague exclamations of the surrounding crowd blended into one stream of vague, uncertain sound; the five minutes were like five ages to him!

There was a moment's breathless silence, and then the lucky name and number were pronounced.

"Seventy-three—Share No. 60, has drawn the prize," said the spectacled secretary.

"Walk in, Sir, and take possession."

"I—I will return in another time! I'll call again to-morrow," stuttered the confused recipient of Fortune's favors, but all in vain; he was pushed forward to the astonishing accumulating all the way.

"Mind now!" he gasped, as he was precipitated through the doorway, "if it's a dog or a parrot I'll—"

And the clanging hinges shut in the remainder of his speech.

It was a tiny room, with one chandelier pouring white tides of light down on a fair young girl, who stood laughing and coloring in the middle of the passage—Matty Esmaine's dimpled, pretty self.

"Miss Esmaine!" faltered the blushing bachelor, looking round to see if there was any crack in the great wide entrance-hall through, and backing confusedly toward the door.

"Yes, Mr. Carberry," said Matty, demurely; called to take possession of my lot of lawn advertised when she knows 'em. "I'm the prize; won't you take me?"

"I'd sooner take—poison!" enunciated Josiah, breaking into a cold perspiration.

"But you must!" said Miss Matty, decidedly.

"Don't, Matty, Montague Rayner, calling himself into the room greatly to Miss Matty's confusion. "You've drawn the prize, Mr. Carberry, and you're justly bound to take possession of it."

Josiah stared at him with distended eyes, and pale, quivering lips.

"Unless," went on the ruthless private, "you can get some friend considerate enough to take the responsibility off your hands."

"Look here, Mont," exclaimed Josiah, seizing Rayner by the button-hole; "you're not the fellow to desert an old friend in such a strait as this. It was all your fault that I subscribed, and—and—Come now, you take her; there's a good fellow. Do."

"You legally transfer the prize to me?"

"Yes; any thing—only let me out of this confounded place, and I'll never go near a Ladies' Fair again I wish I may be hanged or married, I don't much care which."

And Josiah darted from the room in a species of semi-desperation. Private Rayner turned quietly to Miss Esmaine:

"A truce to these absurd jests! Oh, Matty, if you knew what I have suffered during the last hour!"

"I knew you would take care of me," said Matty, mischievously. "Wasn't Mr. Carberry frightened, though?"

"Do you sanction the transfer, Matty?" pleaded the young soldier. "Oh, my dearest, tell me, have I won you for life? Don't trifle with me. Tell me, now and forever, have you courage to be a soldier's wife?"

One moment she looked at him with saucy defiance in her eye and smile, the next she burst into a shower of jewel-bright tears.

"Oh, Montague, it is a wild, wayward heart, not worth your love—not worth a tithe of your noble affection, but it is all, all yours."

And this was the auspicious termination of Matty Esmaine's raffle.

A week subsequently the young lady sent off a check for five hundred dollars to the hospitals, and a seven-sheeted long epistle to a certain young soldier who had joined his regiment at Chattanooga, in which was the following gauntlet of defiance:

"Don't suppose I'm going to make any admiration on your patriotism, Sir, if you are to be my lord and master some day. No, indeed. Didn't I give myself for my country's benefit, I'd like to know? And have not I given something dearer yet—my lover? Oh, Montague, if Heaven sends you safely back to me, I shall never be unhappy again."

For Matty Esmaine's heart was full of the vague happy fearfulness that broods over the heart of every woman whose dear ones are standing on the battle-heights of Union.

ELSIE LEONARD.

SNOWED up in a lonely inn among Irish mountains, the writer of this little record paid a dreamy visit to the loose pages of romance-literature which floated about from the lips of those who came and went about the hearth-place. They leaped and fell in fitful sentences, just as did the blaze in the shadows; and among the rest the following little history glimmered forth from the smoke, and wrought itself for the hour into a tender shape in the embers. Referring to the fearful fall of 18—, which is remembered with horror in the district, they called it the story of the Sawyer's Daughter. Knowing what the words mean, it seems hard to turn one's eyes from the blank of the end, and dash warmly into the beginning: for the beginning was warm and bright, and this page should open, as a small door opens, into a garden of sunshine.

It was August, the glorious golden month. Hills were flushed with crimson ether, and grave and stern with gorgeous mystery. Valley rivers ran red at sunset, and rainbows hung about the waterfalls. The bronzed corn-fields palpitated faint for joy when a sharp breeze passed over a hedge and fanned their hot hearts, and in the cabin doorways the women joined their brown hands above their eyes while looking for the reapers coming home.

It was a sultry afternoon. The curlews on the burning beach below had not energy to scream as the flowing tide flashed like fire to their feet, where they perched luxuriously on the wet stones, and the fisherman's boats drifted idly out into the dazzling western haze, though toil and sweat had made a bygone dream, and they steered to the shores of eternal rest. High up on a stretch of golden moor a white cottage cast the shadow of its gable on the hot ground, and the faint smoke from its chimney hovered sleepily above in the lustrous air. The door lay open, and the threshold-stone was boldly marked with a red breadth of light. Beyond it there was a cool little hall, at present deliciously filled with the murmurous echoes of a pleasant voice ebbing and flowing from somewhere near. A white door opened from either side of the passage. In one of the rooms Elsie Leonard lifted a little chintz-draperied parlor, a pale lady was lying on a sofa. A great vase of fern stood behind her on the floor, and the green leaves were half let down, filling the place with a cool, dreamy atmosphere. The other room was the cottage kitchen, tiny, white, and glittering. A handsome fair-cheeked old woman, wearing a brilliant handkerchief folded like a turban over her white cap, and a big blue apron, was making some cakes which were "browning" over the fire, and at the white-curtained window, flung wide open to the sun, a young girl was baking at a table. Her gown was brown gingham, no brooch fastened her collar, a white apron was tied round her waist, and her sleeves were pushed up over her round arms her elbows. Many housemaids would have been discontented to wear her dress, yet a glance must convince the most skilful of comprehension that this little baker was a lady.

She prattled gayly as she baked, now and again looking her head round to shake back the waving dark hair from her throat and forehead, or flashing round a merry look from her bright face at the old servant.

"It's very ominous, certainly," she said, cutting out her cakes with an air of mock seriousness; "the cocks have been crowing all night and scarcely a breath without any awkwardness of yours, therefore most surely a stranger is to come. And how many times have I dreamt last week, which makes it doubly sure that if a stranger does come something terrible will be the consequence. Now, what do you think he will do, Ishy—decapitate us all? or bring an enchanter's wand, and change us into ducks and geese? That would not be so bad this hot weather. It would be so nice to swim in the lake all day!"

Bab shook her head. "It's all very well for you to have your fun out of it, Miss Elsie," she said, "but I hope he mayn't darken our door: that's all!"

Elsie laughed blithely as she untied her apron, and laughed again as she ran up the one little flight of white-painted steps to her small bedroom under the eaves. Coming quickly down again, in her outdoor dress, with a basket in her hand, she looked in at the kitchen, and said,

"I am going for some mats and flowers, Bab. Have the kettle boiling, for mamma will want her tea. And, Bab, if I meet the stranger I'll send him to you. Oh, perhaps he is coming to take The House!"

Not waiting to see the result of this suggestion, Elsie tripped through the door out on the sunshiny heath. "The House" was a large pile, standing solitary in a wooded recess between hills, not far distant. It stood upon the lands of Elsie's ancestors, and the setting sun was just now blazing on the windows of her nursery. In that nursery Bab had sung her to sleep and taught her her prayers; and if Elsie's bright youth owned little that her life had fallen from its worldly high estate, the faithful servant suffered sorely over the cruel chance, and could not tolerate the idea of a stranger in the old house.

Elsie sauntered slowly along in the sun, filling her basket with mosses and water-lilies. She stood up to her waist among the reeds, and, shading her eyes, gazed round and round the welkin. All the earth was quiet; heavily, softly still, and at rest. Eternal ridges of mountains prisoned it between purple walls. A chill fever throbbed in its veins, but there was no effort, no varied action. Elsie had heard of the "busy world," and often wondered what it must be to behold the works of men, to live one in a crowd, to have variety in one's days, to see new faces, to make new friends. "It is so still," she murmured; "so eternally, intolerably still. Nothing changing, nothing renewing, nothing passing away. Nature going through her slow, monotonous courses; time making no older; and still the same dull, dull, quiet life! Oh, that I had a pair of wings to fly over yonder mountain, with its smiling, dancing face, half amazed at and half pitying my restlessness, or that I could paddle a boat right over that golden line, out so far, where the ships pass like gnats! There no peace of mind or cloudland streaming down the air in colored labyrinths ending in golden vistas; and they are crowded with travellers, fancies, and wishes, and hopes coming and going; but on that one weary, drowsy, yellow road that leads out into the world where men and women live and work there is never a shadow, never a speck! Bab's tongs!" she repeated, smiling to herself. "I wish some one—man, woman, or child—would come and pass us by, if only before we die of stagnation. Heigh-ho! Mamma says she had plenty of friends once; but nobody comes now. Well! I don't care; only one does tire of baking bread, and gathering flowers, and going out for walks. And I wish I had not read that novel. It was a delightful treat, but I don't think it was good for me."

She strolled again as she came near the house, and looked up at the windows. "Now, if I were in earnest with all this grumbling," she said, "how wicked I should be! For it is a blessing not to have such a pleasant little home to come to, and a dear, patient mother waiting for her tea!"

At this moment Bab appeared on the threshold gesticulating wildly and mysteriously.

"Why, what is the matter?" cried Elsie.

"Hev—ven!" gasped Bab, while her turban nodded with frenzied impulse.

"Who?" asked Elsie, opening her eyes wide.

"The stranger. He came up the road a bit ago, a tall and as grand as he can please. . And he asks, 'Is this Mrs. Leonard's house?' And I don't know what came over me that I said 'Yes,' as if I could have sent him about his business. But he's in the parlor; and oh! Miss Elsie, dear, hurry in and get him out of this as fast as you can."

Bab opened the parlor-door, and Elsie advanced to it mechanically, quite bewildered, and only half understanding the old servant, only half desirous to see a real stranger in the room with her mother. She walked in, fresh and bright after her ramble, with her curly hair, somewhat tossed, and twined in picturesque rings and tendrils from under her sheltered hat, and with her basket of mosses on her arm. A gentleman was sitting by her mother on the couch, and as he rose up at her entrance the girl almost sank into the earth with shyness. "Mamma," her mother say, "Elsie, this is Mr. North, the son of your father's friend who went to India. He has only been a short time in England, and has kindly come to see us."

Elsie, having nothing to say, gave him her hand, and then sat down. Too shy to look, she sat gazing at the fire and listening to the pleasant bass voice which was so unheard-of a novelty in that small parlor. She fell into a reverie of glowing romance at the strange, new sensation of having a friend. Where had he come from? Had he really traveled that peculiar yellow road; or had he landed with a fleet in the bay, or strode across the hills?

"You are not perhaps aware," said Elsie's mother, "that there is no hotel for very many miles from here. If you will accept such mountain hospitality as we have to offer it will be given most gladly."

The pale lady said this with a pink flush on her white cheek, while there hovered about her an echo of that sweet, stately dignity which in her youth had so well become the mistress of "The House."

And then the stranger, having gladly accepted the invitation, went into the hall to look after his gun; and Elsie, trying to shake off her bewilderment, went up stairs to lay aside her hat. She brushed back her curls, and shook out her dress, and tied a blue ribbon under her collar, and then her toilet was complete; for Elsie, in summer time, except on Sundays, never thought of wearing anything better than a gingham gown. As she came down stairs the strange stood at the open hall-door, and Elsie, having conquered her first impulse to turn and fly up again, came soberly down, and saw him plainly for the first time; for before he had only been to her a vague, kindly presence. He was tall and strongly made, handsome and brave-looking, with a bronzed skin and sunny eyes. The light fell on the little maiden herself as she came down the stairs with a strange spell checking her steps and veiling the frank light in her eyes. Elsie did not realize what a miniature place it must seem to him altogether, this traveled man; a miniature house, and a miniature young lady (not more so in stature than in the very small amount of the usual requirements which sufficed to proclaim her such), who dared to wear gingham at tea-time, and yet approached with as stately a little step as though she wore clad in silks and laces. Philip North saw, however, have found it a pleasant picture which the sunset illumined before him, for his eyes kindled, and a delicate thrill of appreciation hovered tenderly on his lip. Elsie tried to say something polite as she passed close by, but meeting those warm, observant eyes fixed upon her, she relapsed into shyness, and retreated to the kitchen, where Bab was preparing tea.

A glass dish of water-lilies stood in the centre of the tea-table, and Philip North said, "I think I saw you gathering these." They were the first words he had spoken to her; and Elsie colored and overflowed a cup, and then looked up surprise, and said, "Did you?" Where?"

"Down by the side of a little lake. And after you had got them you stood for a long time in a brown study, looking at the sky."

And this was all the conversation they had till after tea. Then Elsie's mother, having conversed too much and too eagerly for her strength, lay resting on her sofa; and Elsie, looking out into the starry shades of the twilight from the open window, forgot her reserve, and found herself talking quite frankly to the stranger, telling him how she spent her time (not concealing the fact that she baked the bread), what books she read, and a number of other small things too trifling to be recorded. And then the moon appeared between two mountains, large and yellow in the soft purple night; and Philip North enraptured Elsie by telling her that he had often seen the moon rise in any land. Then he described to her countries whose very names made her cheek throb. Pour little Elsie! that was a night on which to be forgotten while the light staid in those earnest eyes.

One evening soon afterward it happened that Elsie came to the door of the cottage, and arrived from the moors with his gun and his dogs and his day's spoil. He stooped and laid the dead game at her feet, and spoke to her in a voice of love. Some wild idea suggesting the poem of "Hiawatha" flashed darkly through her brain, and sent a fearful delight tingling through every nerve in her body, and trembling, like one who had got a blow, then rushed up stairs, and threw herself on her bed in a passion of tears—why, she did not dare to know. She felt something cold on her face, and, looking up, saw one of Philip's dogs standing over her with mute sympathy. She leaned forward to kiss his rough face, but checked herself, pushed him fiercely from her, and ran down to Bab in the kitchen.

Weeks passed, and still Philip North staid, and still Mrs. Leonard observing him, weighing his words and his looks, and still Elsie was unaware—still Elsie's mother was glad that he staid. And even Bab had forgotten her dream and blessed him for a kindly gentleman, who, by always bringing happily about her household work, did not care if he saw her through the open window baking her bread; nor was she ashamed to be seen by him as an artist asked her for one of her cakes fresh from the fire. And so her life were on toward that sunniest point of the year, the first fortnight in June, when the roses are the music was to be hushed, and the light to go down. Oh, dead eyes! if you can look back on life, how do you thank God for those few days of happiness that linked you to the end, and let the grave open beneath you unaware!

Was it the creeping on of the shadow of death, that restlessness which would not let Elsie be happy in peace? or was it the ghost of Bab's foolish superstition rising over the house that had in it? At evening, when she closed the door upon the sad mountains, Elsie longed so to shut out the world that they knew, and to be alone with her mother. At night she lay broad awake, assuring herself "Our friend is here." Then the shadow would reply, "How long will he be here? He is so kind, and you will never behold him again, never, never, till the last trumpet shall sound." And, weary and feverish, she would rise when the dawn had swept away the night-clouds, and in the fresh pale morning, while the birds were yet sleepily under the eaves, she would haunt the restful house, stealing out to feed and pet Philip's dogs, and then in again to watch the sun rising over the low window and now from another, reading the pale scrolls of early clouds and wondering at how recklessly we sleep away half our lives. Sometimes, when the dull dreams happy moments whose fast-waning measure she has been meted out to us with a nice balance, and at last, when the sun was mounted high overhead, she would steal to the garden, and bring a handful of flowers, and place them on her pillow, and, laying her cheek against their cool sweetness, would fall asleep.

One day Elsie, having been down on the beach, came in with a glorious light on her face, and told her mother a story, over which the pale lady cried, as women sometimes do when very happy. But Elsie could only look at her mother's mountains with a transfigured countenance, and whisper triumphantly, "What can come now, unless death?" The story vanished from her mind, and she was so ready to pray for that which God saw not right to give.

Philip North bought "The House," and thither Elsie's mother was to go in the autumn. Everything else had become its mistress. So, being merely fairly blinded, Elsie played with the goddess of their hearts. And Elsie went with Philip one evening to view the old place and arrange about alterations and furnishing. She wore a white lawn muslin dress and straw-hat, walking by Philip's side over the moors, and through the wood, and across the threshold into the deserted house, flinging back shutters, and letting in the light, and making the silent old rooms ring back the echoes of her quick feet and merry voice. And so they spent how this room and that should be appointed, and Philip made notes of all; for he was going back to the world to make many more purchases before Christmas-day, which was to see their wedding.

November came and Philip went, and in the joy of receiving his first letter Elsie forgot the pain of parting. One week went by, wet and dreary, and the next set in with heavy snows; falling, falling, whirling and drifting night and day till roads were filled up and roads were blocked, and all landmarks were lost. And on the first white morning Elsie stood at the window, with some dainty needle-work in her hand, watching and smiling at the eddying flakes, thinking little of how soon their cruel white sting would freeze up her young life, how soon the pitiless drifts would seal her dead eyes.

There were no more letters; the mails were stopped. Thick and unceasing the snow fell. The valleys, like overflowing seas, rose to the knees of the mountains. Dwellers in the lowlands fled for shelter to their friends on the hills, and forgot to return their visits. The great streams and rivers lay congealed like blood in the veins of the dead.

Every morning the day stared in at Elsie with its white blank face where she sat holding her mother's hand; and every evening the long piercing cold of that cruel snow was killing, while with daily sullen denial it forbade all aid to approach her. Day after day she sat so, holding the thin hand, while weeks went on and December was half spent, gazing out at the imploring hills and the mourning trees, and the ever-falling pitiless carriage while her eyes searched the relentless sky in vain for mercy.

Down deep a lamp burned constantly in the garnished parlor. Christmas decorations had been made, and white curtains were looped with the red and green of the holly. Bab kept the fire burning and the lamp trimmed, and Elsie stole down now and again to see that all was neat and bright; for the time Philip came near day, and Philip might arrive and her mother recover.

And the pale lady who lay up stairs, knowing herself to be dying, and which words to the child whom she feared to leave lonely, urging her to omit no preparation, to have all things brightly in readiness, to have the house shaked clean and Philip arrive her own wasting life might yet have a little time to burn, even until she beheld that which her heart craved to see accomplished.

"Christmas-day will be bright, love," she would murmur, stroking the faithful little hand that held her fingers, as if it would need to be a day long to death. "I dreamed this morning that the day had come, and the sun was shining, and you and I were both dressed in white, and I was quite well again. I know it will be a bright day."

And then the pale lady would turn her fastchanging face to where she could see the chimneys of her old home, and, thinking who knows what thoughts of the happy past passed under its roof-tree, she would gaze away above the white hills beyond with the eyes of one whose soul goes with them, forgetful of earth, trying but vainly to grow accustomed to the path by which it soon must go on its lonely journey to the unknown land.

And so the days passed away and the walls were garnished, and the lamp and fire burned brightly down stairs; and above Elsie's white dress lay in her room like a shroud, and the pitiless snow outside, which had drifted in through the window and remained there undisturbed. And the wind moaned, and the gale howled, and the locks of the doors rattled as if to warn that one was coming to whom closed doors were nothing. And that one came in the dead of a night when Bab commanded the watch from sleep. And opening her eyes she recognized the call, and, riveting one last prayerful gaze upon the dear face beside her, she turned her own from the world and followed the messenger.

Oh, pulseless earth! oh, tearless sky! you have no pity for the loving life that would fain have lingered yet a little space, how then could you melt for the unpraying dead that lay there, meekly decaying as it were in the sight of the patient dead-cold, waiting so stilly till you vouchsafed it a grave; or for the stricken figure that sat at its feet with a brain too deadened by weeping hour by hour for changed features in their unsympathizing repose, where all the flood-gates of warmth had been sealed dusky locks, and the seal of death on the still, unheeding smile?

So Elsie sat at her dead mother's feet, and old Bab stood with wet heart-broken, and could not cease her to weep nor to rest. And still the wedding-guests left the lamp in room, and the lamp burned down stairs, and the wind rattled at the locks, and still the earth and sky were a blank.

At last the thaw commenced slowly to work. Life began to appear, and passages were cleared here and there. And two of the kind-hearted Christians, the poor, with difficulty found Elsie's mother a grave. And after that was done, Elsie, shunning the light, crept home and lay down in her room, crept into the kitchen and laid her head on Bab's knees.

Late in the evening she roused herself and asked if it was not Christmas-eve. Yes, it was the eve of her wedding-day.

"Then, Bab," she said, "we must have every thing ready. Mr. North will be here to-night."

Bab shook her head. "No, no, Miss Elsie. The thaw has done wonders, but not so much as that. It's dark already, and no human bein' could know his way from the moor beyond where the roads begin. Mr. North will likely take the one that leads to the Black Crags, and if he did he'd go down headlong as sure as heaven and earth."

Elsie sat up straight and stared at the old woman, and then put up her hand to her head as if to collect her poor shattered wits.

"Some one must go," she said, "and watch on the moor all night to show him the way when he comes. He will be there as sure as God is above us. I feel it, Bab! I know it! Can not some one go?"

"Oh no, no, Miss Elsie!" cried Bab, wringing her hands at her young mistress's white distraught face; "no one could stay there the night through, he'd be dead-perished before morning."

"You are sure of it? Ask some one; I must know."

Bab went to inquire and came back. It was as she had said; no one dared venture to pass a night on the moor. The snow might come on again at any moment.

"Then God help me!" mouned Elsie, as she crept from the kitchen and felt her way up stairs in the dark. She went into her own room, where the wedding-gown still lay, and she could see from the window that line of moor where the reads met. There, with hands locked in her lap, and strained eyes fixed on the distance, and white cheek close to the pane, she sat. The sky had cleared a little, and the moon had ventured out, looking pale and meek, as if she, too, had had her troubles and wept away all her brightness.

Twelve o'clock struck; and Bab, who had vainly tried to move her mistress, had perforce laid her own weary old head on a bed in the room off Elsie's and fallen asleep. One o'clock, and the night had deepened. Then the moon shone out, and brilliant on the white ridges and levels of mountains and valleys. Two, and still Elsie sat fixed, and nothing had changed. Three, and the moon began to sink away among cloud-drifts low on the hills.

Four struck in the hall, and the sound roused Elsie from a state of numbness like unto that into which she had fallen. Was it the shock that made her start to her feet and, with bent brows and strained eyes, gaze toward the moor, while all her frame shook with the agony of suspense? Was it the fate that pointed to her a black something moving in the dim distance like one riding on with difficulty? Another instant and the window is flung open and heard and shudders are thrust out. A low groan, "My God!" bursts from her as the shadow seems to pause and then move away into that dim distance. Then she heard she has left the window, dashed from the room, and is gone.

Till her death poor old Bab remembered with remorse how heavily she slept that night till she seemed to dream that Miss Elsie's figure flashed past her through the room in which she lay. The hands made her sleep uneasily, and she awoke troubled, and, rising to reassure herself, searched the house for her young mistress. In vain; one look at the white bed showed it was empty. Elsie was gone.

Who shall tell where? The moorlands that screamed past her as she struggled on, fired to supernatural effort by the strength of her purpose, plunging through snow-wreaths, stumbling over rocks, and clogged numbly with ice, could not show Black Crags? Or the moon that pitied her as she carried her dead to her gods death?

But the moon waned, and the gray Christmas dawn broke, and a traveler, riding with difficulty through the partly-cleared snow, and cautiously, thinking he heard his own name called, a sharp, clear, bitter cry, fading suddenly into silence—"Philip! Philip!"

He wheeled about and gazed seaward, just as the red sun bared his brow above the eastern mountains, and perceived a lovely one stretched across waves of whiteness like a ruthless conqueror exulting after the carnage is done. And out, out far, just by the Black Crags, he thought he saw a light dark figure standing in the red light against the snow. But his eyes were dazed with the sun, and when he looked again the figure was gone. He pressed on his horse eagerly and thought no more of his cold fancy.

"Philip!" Oh, that last woeful cry falling unheeded into stillness just as the poor heart broke! And the sea, that cruel pool prayed for, entered at last that garnished home; but the hearth that had glowed so brightly for him all through the night, long years after, was forever cold, and the heart whose love had fed its flame, and the fingers that had trimmed the lamp, and the lips that had heard the little love-gifts lying about, where were they?

Ay, where? Who shall guess from what hollow gulf of woe, from the cave of what cruel rock, the side carried the dead girl? The sea-gulls may scream her miserere, and the waves roll their muffled dirges over her head, but the human mourner will ever kneel at her grave, for the body of Elsie Leonard was never found.

But Bab still lives, it wherever he goes the vision of that figure out on the snow in the red dawn will haunt him till death, and the echo of that last cry, "Philip! Philip!" ring in his ears.

Elsie is the story of the Snowy Christmas. It is told over the logs in the cabins at night; and children will turn pale if, in the wintry gloaming, a plover sobs from seaward or a curlew cries over the Black Crags.

THE MAIDEN'S LAMENT.

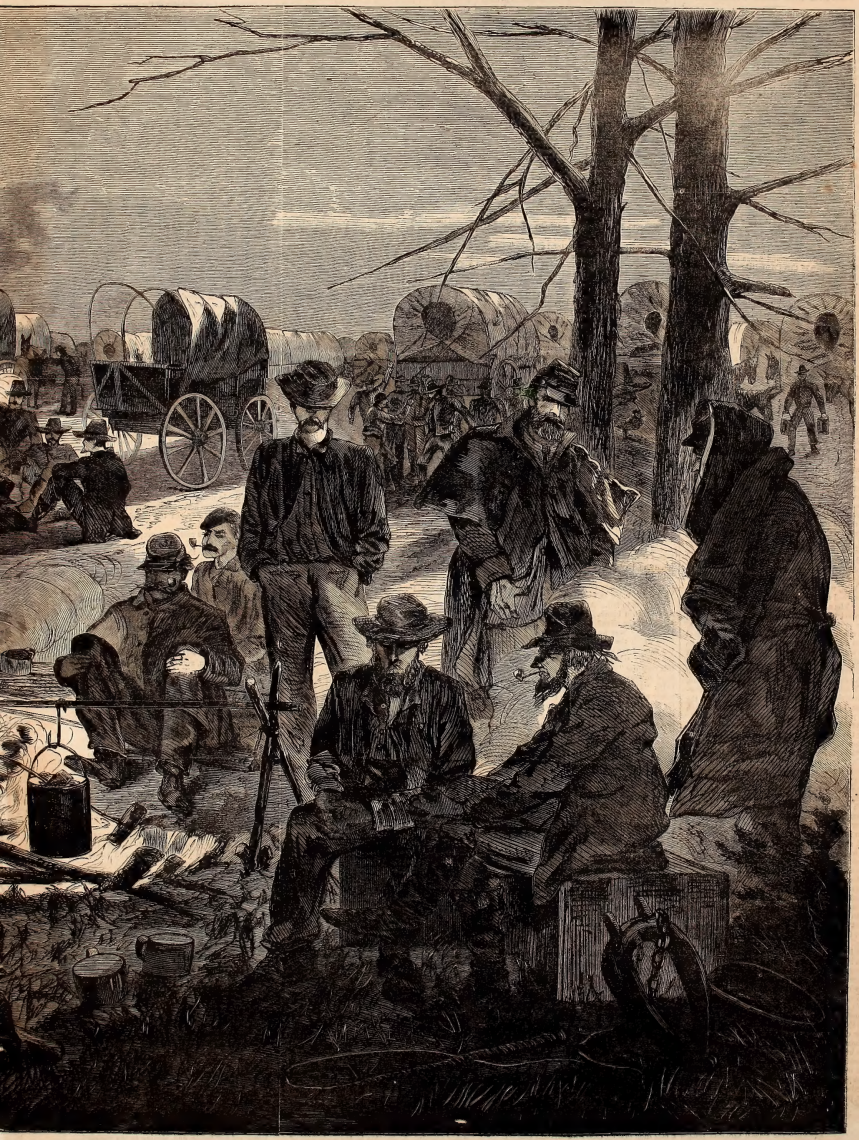
Tue oak-wood is waving,
The clouds gather o'er;
There white flowers are blowing
Beside the green shore;
The breakers are dashing in white—with might:
And she sighs out aloud in the gloomy night.
And weeping, thus wailed she:

"My heart is broken,
The world is a void,
Nothing more can it give me,
Nothing it destroyed.
All the bliss that the earth can bestow I have proved;
Heavenly Father, I know it! take—I have lived—I have loved—
Oh! take back thy child to thee.

"The tears that thou weepest
Most surely be shed,
Ere no sorrow awakens
No sleep of the Dead!
Yet say, oh, can solace and comfort be breast,
When I mourn for the love by which once it was blest,
And the balm shall extract from above.

"Let the tears I am weeping
Still vainly be shed,
Though my sorrow can wake me no sleep of the Dead;
Yet all that can solace and comfort the breast,
When I mourn for the love by which once it was blest,
Are the tears and the sorrow of love."

HALT OF A W



AGON TRAIN.

HOSPITAL AND CAMP INCIDENTS.

THE SANITARY COMMISSION AMONG THE SOLDIERS.

No. II.

In nothing does the Sanitary Commission more palpably exhibit its competency for the office it has assumed than in its celerity of movement and its spontaneity of action in every exigency. No matter where a battle may be fought, its surgeons and nurses are sure to appear instantly with needed supplies; no matter what difficulties may stand between it and desirable results, or how sluggishly other bodies may move, the Commission moves forward always with swift and steady pace, overcoming all obstructions with a resolution and faith in itself which holds all things to be possible in the name and service of humanity. The work performed by the Commission at Chattanooga strikingly illustrates this truth. The battle of Chicamauga, it will be remembered, was fought unexpectedly; the means of conveyance, moreover, were very limited, neither land nor water routes meeting the sudden exigencies of the service; the depôts of supplies, too, were far removed from the scene of action, inasmuch that for a time the army suffered materially from the want of rations; but notwithstanding all this, but scarce was the battle had ceased and the shattered columns had found pause in their bloody work, the nurses of this Commission were at work on the field, performing just the service demanded by the occasion. Within ten days after the action two thousand packages of sanitary stores were distributed. Their distribution was progressive and orderly of the Commission. Another fact exhibits with equal emphasis its thoroughness. The battle of Chicamauga was fought on the 19th and 20th of September. Between that time and the 17th of November seven thousand additional packages and boxes of sanitary stores, such as wines, stimulants, fruits, vegetables, and clothing were forwarded for the relief of the sick and wounded.

Probably the most considerable battle since the commencement of the war have the wounded been so well and promptly cared for as at Chattanooga. The agents of the Commission were every where. They fitted up rooms for the reception of the suffering, supplied them with clothing, bandages, and edibles, procured and put up stores, dressed the wounds of those requiring immediate assistance, and superintended the washing of rations for the men. On the second day of the battle these agents made comfortable nearly two thousand men, doing what they could to relieve the Government to do. One incident will clearly attest their usefulness and efficiency. Returning from the field on the evening following the second day of the fight, one of the principal agents found the steps of a church in Chattanooga, where services had been held during the day, crowded with wounded men. Entering the building, he found the whole interior filled with a congregation from the battle-field, crippled with the variety of wounds, with no medical or other officer in charge, without food of any kind, without water, and without even a candle to shed a glimmering light over their desolation. The agent at once carried a quantity of concentrated beef to a residence near the church, and there prepared immense caldrons of soup, which, with candles, bread, and water, the nurses carried to the sufferers and distributed, all receiving thankful gifts with the most grateful satisfaction. The next day they were supplied with vegetables and other food; comforts, shirts, and blankets were provided for the destitute; medical assistance was furnished, and hundreds of lives that would, but for this timely intervention, have been lost, were saved to the nation, to share in the triumphs of liberty through long years to come.

The service rendered by the Commission agents after the recent battles about Mission Ridge were no less important than those already rehearsed. Stores to the value of $25,000 were distributed within a week after the battle, and hundreds of instances are recorded showing the benefits of its noble work.

The gallantry of our men in the assault upon Mission Ridge is attested by hundreds of incidents which came under the observation of the Commission workers as they toiled in the wake of the army. A few of these may be recited here. A soldier fallen in the difficult ascent, and lying with a shattered shoulder, thus urged forward two comrades who had halted in the rear of the fight: "I'm of no account; don't stop for me; for God's sake push right up with the boys;" and on they pressed, leaving him in the possession of kindly, more loyal and and grand than kingly purple. At another place a colonel, toiling up the mountain, encountered two brothers, one wounded, the other bearing him along anxiously over him. The colonel, not seeing at first the fallen man, ordered the other to move on. "But this is my brother," he said, with a sob in his voice. The poor dying fellow on the ground rallied in an instant: "Yes, that's right, George; go on, go on!" and, looking up and look on the dying brother, clasped his musket and crowded on, fighting bravely until the summit was reached. Then, hurrying back, he knelt again over the prostrate brother, but he was dead; in the tumult of the battle his disinterested love, and calmly, gladly he had been mustered out and gone home.

At the first line of rifle-pits, in the grand advance of our column of the Fourth of the Forty-first Ohio Regiment fell terribly wounded. A General rode up as he fell, exclaiming, "I hope you are not badly wounded." The Colonel only said, "Do you think we'll make it, General?" "I do," the General replied. "Then," said the gallant fellow, with a smile, "I'm satisfied; I can stand this." And there, perfectly content, he remained while the battle throbbed and beat along the hills, with the shouts of the ascending heroes "speaking to him comfortably" now and then through the din.

In the charge upon the second range of rifle works a Captain fell, and two men came to his aid. But he would not suffer them to remain. "Don't wait here," he cried; "go back to your places. One useless man is enough; don't make it three." Just then a cheer floated down the mountain as some new success was achieved by the resistless columns. "Don't you hear that?" he cried. "March!" And away went the loitering soldiers, leaving their comrade where he fell. With such a spirit animating rank and file, rousing to sublimest heroism in the hour of peril, what wonder that all dangers are overcome, all opposition beaten down, and the flag of the nation carried lustrously wherever duty points the way!

A prominent and most useful feature of the Commission is its work among the soldiers in its Hospital Directory, which was originated in a humane desire to supply a record of the inmates of army hospitals, whether dead, living, or wounded, or from wounds received in battle, in order to meet the inquiries of the friends of the soldier unable to obtain any knowledge of the name or locality of his hospital. The benefit, however, conferred by the Directory has been much more extensive than the soldier, but also to the soldier himself, becoming, as it has, a medium of communication for wives and mothers searching for husbands and sons, a channel through which has flowed messages of love, and cheer, and hope, more grateful to the fevered brain and the agony of wounded than the tenderest care of surgeons and nurses. The total number of names on record in this Directory on the 1st of December last was 148,437; the number of inquiries made for information was 12,884; and the number of successful answers rendered 2203, or seventy-two per cent. upon the number received. In these nine thousand two hundred and three answers lies a history which only the Day of Final Assize can reveal. The gratitude which this branch of the service is acknowledged is not hidden nor concealed. Mothers write of "their undying gratitude" for the simple announcement that their boys are "doing well in hospital; others "invoke the blessing of God upon the labors of the Commission;" while others still express their love in the life long will cherish warmest memories of the service it has rendered.

Incidents illustrating the usefulness of this Directory might be cited by the volume. A few, however, of the more entertaining will serve our purpose here.

A poor woman from Wisconsin, whose husband had been wounded at Donelson, and whose brother was wounded at Lookout, made her way to Louisville, where she was sent by the Commission agents to Nashville. There the Commission refused its way communications it was impossible to send her further front, and the Nashville office accordingly telegraphed to the Commission agents at Chattanooga for information. The next day, which was Thursday, it was answered that her son was severely wounded, and had been taken to a hospital which was subsequently captured by the enemy, in whose hands he then was. It was sad news, but better than suspense. It was communicated to her as kindly and gently as possible; but, gently as the intelligence was imparted, it drove her almost frantic. Several times during the day Commission visited the office to hear more, but there was nothing more to tell. And so two days more slipped away, and a little, but unavailing, crowd still be. Was he alive? were his wounds cared for by the rebels? was he dead? Such were the questions which the poor mother kept repeating over in the ears of the agents. "Oh that I could hear!" she cried. "Even the worst would be better than this suspense." At last, late on Saturday night, the word so prayed and waited for came. It was this only: "Dead." It was a terrible blow. A very paroxysm of grief settled upon the mother's heart, and for hours her sufferings seemed beyond all human endurance. After a time, carrying her son's body now with her, she went away; but the next morning she returned to the office, still terribly stricken in heart, but calmer than before, and, pointing to the flag over the door, with tears in her eyes, "That flag is dearly dear to me this morning. It was core my sonnyson." Her strength was exhausted, and the Commission defrayed her expenses home. Thank you the memory of its work will not be forever safe by side in the hallowed heart with recollections of her boy slain in the battle's front?

One day a stout, clean-faced farmer from Dayton, Ohio, Montgomery appeared at the Nashville office, seeking information of his son. He was furnished with passes and, with necessary directions, went on his way. A few days afterward he returned, carrying a sword and haversack, and with a long white box in his care—a very quiet box, but very precious to the farmer. The sword and the haversack were his son's, and the son's corpse was in the quiet box. It had been recovered through the agency of the Sanitary Commission. It was in that, there would never have been in a Danvers church-yard the head-stone which tells now to the days as they go the story of that farmer's sacrifice in the country's cause.

Another illustration of the value of this Directory is furnished by the following incident. On the 23rd of November the following inquiry from a Northern city was received at the Nashville office: "Sanitary Commission, Nashville: Please inform me if Henry Ford, Company F, Thirty-fifth Ohio, alive? Hospital 15—Fifteen." Fortunately, the record books at the Nashville hospital, and this answer promptly returned: "Henry Ford, Company F, Thirty-fifth Ohio, is alive—wounded severely." Till the father became as soon as he can." Thus father and son were brought together, as they probably would not have been but for this Directory.

Some of the scenes witnessed at the offices of the Directory in Washington and at other central points are touching in the extreme. Thus, at the Washington office: A father presents himself—a strong man, and still young in years—asking for news from his son. The record is referred to; the boy is dead. The announcement, coming with the suddenness of a bolt from heaven, goes with sharpest agony to the heart of the father, and he sinks upon a seat in the shadow on his life that only the sunrise of some great hope can ever brighten. Another, with white face and trembling voice, pressing to the office-desk, begs for information of his boy: "He was a noble fellow! no father ever had a better son; can't you tell me something of him?" He is told that the "boy" is in a hospital but a little distance off; he grasps the hand with both of his, tears running down his cheeks the while, and without uttering another word leaves the room. Still another comes—a woman, who, with almost breathless voice, exclaims, "I want to find my husband! I have not heard from him for months! Can you tell me where he is?" His name and the number of his regiment is ascertained, and the answer is promptly returned, "You will find him at Lincoln Hospital." A momentary shade of incredulity appears upon the anxious face; then, turning her full eyes, swollen with weeping, she gave only one look of gratitude—a full reward for years of labor—and in an instant is in the street, flying at the swift feet to embrace the husband of her love. Thus, day by day, the varied scene goes on, each new incident adding fresh testimony to the value of this admirable system.

At the Louisville office scenes equally affecting have been presented almost daily ever since the advance marched from that Murfreesboro. One day an old man from Northern Ohio entered the office. He had traveled the long distance to meet his son, who was lying sick at a house called away. He had found his boy; it was a consolation to look into his face even though the sad shadows were upon it. He only said that they did not want away; a clerk going with him and procuring a coffin for the dear departed. Before the journey could be started for his Ohio home—in which, however, even now he would be missed, one step would never more be heard on the threshold.

A sprightly young wife appeared one day at the Louisville office, asking to have a dispatch written to her husband, who was stationed in Nashville. The clerks turned to consult the record for his name, which she at once pronounced a useless delay—"that is his name." She knew all the wanted was a dispatch written, and would be obliged for as much haste as possible. "But," said the clerk, "are you sure that he is in Nashville?" "Certainly; nothing is more certain." "You would have no objections to meeting him here?" the clerk inquired with a look to give me his approval?" "No; you will not need it. This 'abstract' will please you better. These are directions where to find your husband—a house in the city, and not quartered in Nashville. He

In five minutes I knew he was safely disposed of for some hours to come.

I called loudly in his ear, and shook him roughly, but he did not stir.

I shall never forget the earnest joy with which the poor girl clasped my hand and thanked me.

I don't know whose heart beat fastest then—hers or mine: I know that I forgot all about the dreadful cold, and only felt an insane longing to take her in my arms and kiss her.

Taking the sleeping man's great buffalo-robe and wrapping it round her, I bade her sit down, and asked her the cause of her father's murder, and why she seemed to be a prisoner.

As I spoke I could not help an involuntary shudder at the appearance of the corpse.

In administering the chloroform to the man I had accidentally displaced the rug, which the murderers had carefully arranged so as to hide the face of the supposed paralytic.

The eyes were closed and blue, the nose pinched, the mouth partly open, with curled and strained lips, the teeth set, and grinning horribly in the half-light reflected from the snow in which we were imbedded.

It had now ceased snowing.

In answer to my question she said:

"I am alone in the world; I can trust you—I will tell you all. The—the body"—here she grew paler than even she was before—"the body is not that of my father—oh no! I could not have borne it! It is my uncle. I am a Virginian: my father and mother both died when I was very young, leaving me, a rich orphan, to the care of my uncle.

"All I know was that I was well educated, and had whatever money I wanted; but when I left school my uncle was strangely altered: my presence seemed to irritate him.

"He tried to make me marry that wretch who has gone—he was my uncle's overseer, and a more cruel or wicked man never lived."

Here I suddenly thought, "What if he should not fall asleep?" the engine, but should arrive!"

I went out and found him in what I knew would be his death-sleep—crouched completely under the fire-box of the engine.

The engineer had left his now cold and useless machine, and sought shelter in the cars.

I returned to my lovely charge continued:

"I was often talked to by some of our old slaves, and in particular by my dear old nurse, about this man. She said he had come a few years ago, and in some way had obtained an undue influence over her master—ordering every thing, and treating the slaves, who had never experienced any thing but kindness from my father and uncle, with the greatest severity.

"This villain persecuted me with his odious attentions; and one day—I can't tell you—but I rushed to my uncle, who, when he heard, called him into the library, and in a furious passion said:

"'Although you have by your devilish cunning obtained my promise of my niece as your wife, I will not tamely submit to see her insulted. Take that, you villain!' firing a pistol full in his face.

"Fortunately the villain defeated itself, and my uncle was not a murderer.

"The overseer smiled an evil smile, and said:

"'Your mind: it was only a little mistake. We will settle affairs another day.'

"Not long after this the fellow who is asleep there, and who is the overseer's brother, came and joined him. He is a doctor. My uncle became daily more and more miserable; my old nurse saying it was because preying upon his mind, because he had appropriated my property.

"A few weeks ago my uncle's health began to fail seriously, and the 'Doctor,' as he was called, constantly expressed his opinion that paralysis might be expected.

"Last Monday I was awaked by my old nurse in a dreadful fright, to tell me that my uncle was dying. I rose, and found the 'Doctor' and the overseer with him.

"The 'Doctor' said that, as he had predicted, my uncle had had a paralytic attack—probably lost the use of his limbs and speech, and that he probably would not be able to move for some time to come. He felt his responsibility too great for his brother and himself, and consequently should remove him to S——, where he would be placed under the care of the celebrated Dr. W——.

"This was said intentionally in the hearing of several of the servants, and passed for truth; although I was unacquainted with all, protested against removing my uncle in such a state.

"Knowing the evil character of both men, I resolved that I would not part from my uncle, but would accompany him to S——.

"I fancied I saw a sinister smile on the face of the overseer as I said this; but he only remarked:

"'Oh, certainly; no objection can be made to that.'

"Yesterday we started.

"My suspicions were aroused by the 'Doctor' and overseer refusing to let me approach my uncle, either to dress him or to help him into the carriage.

"In spite of this caution, however, I obtained a glimpse of his face, and knew in an instant he was dead.

"I was too excited and horrified to faint.

"The overseer saw by my looks that I now knew all.

"He at once said, in a brutal tone,

"'Oh! I guess you see it all now! You're a sensible girl, so a few words will suffice. There wasn't much love lost between you and your uncle, so you need not make a fuss.

"The truth is, the Doctor there physicked him a leetle too strong, and it would not do to bury him here, for the job would have been blown. So we thought we would take him where no one will be the wiser. The poor old gentleman has died of cold and overexertion, don't you see?'

"I can't tell you what the wretch said to me; only that he said he had got all the old gentleman's plunder from the estate; that he meant to marry me whether I would or not; and that if I so much as spoke or looked at any one on the journey he would kill me at once.

"'I knew he would not hesitate to carry out his threat, so dare not utter a word.

"'Oh! how thankful I was to see you enter our car!

"'I felt a presentiment that you would in some way save me from these horrid men.'

Here the poor girl burst into tears.

I don't know what I did or said, only that I comforted her, and vowed I would never forsake her.

The time was now approaching when the two o'clock train was due. There was a deathlike silence, broken only by the mournful tones of occasional gusts of wind, which, like evil spirits sporting round us, rushed to and fro through the ill-made cars, uttering their unearthly wail.

Every one had huddled themselves in whatever they could find as a protection from the biting cold.

Although hardly any stood, I began to feel exhausted and benumbed, and probably should have fallen into a dangerous stupor but for my mind being racked with thought.

How should I act?

If I gave these two men up to justice (supposing the overseer survived), what proof was there that they had poisoned the "paralytic"?

I asked Alice—so we will now call her—whether the overseer had the seal on him or not.

She said he had admitted to her that he had gold, notes, and securities to a very large amount upon him.

I then searched the still sleeping "Doctor;" he was so motionless and deathlike that I began to fear that the chloroform had had a fatal effect upon him.

I found nothing but a few dollars and a revolver. I think I said, with the latter a neckerchief, securely tied his hands behind him.

It was now snowing heavily again; but I sallied forth once more to see that the man of evil sleep, overseer still under the engine, frozen as hard as the iron which covered him, and doubtless quite dead.

With fingers almost lifeless at his own I searched him, and found, besides the expected loaded revolver and bowie-knife, a large canvas bag fastened round his waist, containing the stolen money.

I hastened back with it to Alice, during she might be overcome with cold and fall asleep.

Just as I had my hand on the door of the car I heard a well-known sound: there was no need to think twice—the driver of the expected train, blinded by the snow, had not seen the danger-signal! With criminal negligence they had not telegraphed our non-arrival from S——, but were rushing on us!

I shouted loudly to the occupants of the cars to save themselves, and sprang into ours for Alice.

Even in the short time I had been absent she had nearly gone to sleep.

We awoke in time, girl! She had experienced hunger, thirst (for she dare not take food from the overseer, lest he should poison her), excitement, and cold.

I seized her in my arms, and had scarcely leaped from the car when the crash came!

I will not dilate on the horrors of the collision; we have too many such descriptions in our daily papers. Happily, our striking had not roused any of the passengers, but some three or four never knew how death came.

I laid the fainting body of Alice for a moment, carefully wrapped up, on the snow, while I searched for our late evil companions.

The murderers had met a milder fate than they deserved.

The frozen overseer was completely smashed: beneath the engine.

Whether the "Doctor" really died from the effects of cold and the chloroform I can not tell, and do not like to think.

He also was a bruised and almost shapeless mass; both had died painless deaths.

The engineer and fireman of the train which ran into us had jumped into the snow, and were unhurt.

The passengers were very few, and, surprising to say, only one was killed.

We made great fires of the débris, and waited the morning, when help should come.

Amidst all the horrors of the scene I felt a thrill of happiness in having Alice looking to me as her sole protector, and through the night I kept her head on my shoulder, in which she trusted and reposed.

I felt as if I had known her for years. Was the gentle girl weaned from her affections for one whom I had met under such strange circumstances—was she soon to be severed from me? No! never! Such was the thought I clasped her closer to my heart.

At last help came: about five o'clock in the morning an express came from K——, expecting to find a breakdown: they took us up, and we arrived at S—— about eight o'clock.

I asked Alice what she would wish to do.

In some confusion she said:

"I know not what to say!" But, putting her little hand in mine, she said: "Will you, who have watched over me through that dreadful night, who have saved me from horrors of which I can not think, see me safe back to my own home—my own. Indeed now?—it will be very lonely, no one to welcome me but the servants; but it is my right home. Am I asking too much?"

Need I tell the reader my answer?

I offered myself, a poor surveyor, as her husband as well as protector.

She did not say no.

The railway accident was universally believed to be the cause of the deaths of Alice's uncle, the overseer, and the "Doctor;" Alice, with pardonable deception, explaining that the "Doctor," not finding Dr. W—— at his own town, insisted on going on to the next, to some other surgeon.

Alice and I have now lived happily for years; but we never see the snow sparkle thickly on the ground without shuddering at the recollection of the night we passed in the snow-drift.

ABOUT CATS.

The palmy days for cats were in the times of Egypt's power as a nation, some 500 years B.C. They were held then as sacred as dogs or crocodiles, and death was the penalty for killing them. From their nocturnal habits and glossy fur the Egyptians deemed them symbolical of the moon, and a golden cat was worshiped at Syene. Herodotus tells us some marvels about them. The "toma," it seems, in his time, had a particular liking for making sport with kittens—a very fortunate thing, too, or the land would have been overrun with cats. Crowding would set in when a fire broke out the sole care of the natives is to keep the cats from it, to do which they post themselves as guards round the burning house, and think no thought for putting out the flames. A divine impulse, however (says the chronicler), seizes the cats: they dart under the men, or leap over them, and fling themselves into the flames. Then great mourning takes possession of the land. If a cat were found dead in any one's house the inmates had to shave off their eyebrows. The defunct animals were carried into the temples, where they were embalmed, and solemnly deposited in the city Bubastis. Specimens may be seen in the British Museum. Very different is their fate at modern Rome. A recent traveler tells us they are there as highly esteemed for culinary purposes as puppy-dogs in China. If you have a roast hare for dinner you may be sure it will make too many inquiries as to what kind of "Pussy" it was before it came into the chef's hands.

The ancient physicians had a firm belief in the healing powers of different portions of this animal, probably from some confusion existing in their minds with regard to its own nine lives. One of them gives us, as a valuable recipe to cure fevers, two pints of water mixed with three drops of blood taken from the ear of a black, and certain parts of a cat's digestive organs! The claw of an owl, or a wolf's eye was a good external application to accompany this dose. Catching at the slightest verbal resemblance, their system of medicine would at present be well represented by prescribing a cat in a case of catalepsy. The very ashes of the animal, sprinkled where mice were, would prove quite sufficient to scare them away, according to Pliny's belief.

The popular sayings connected with cats are so numerous, that they might be utterances of Father Cats himself. Italians are so grateful to the Dutch peasantry. Their tenacity of life comes out in the proverb, "Care killed the cat." Their familiar proximity to the domestic hearth is alluded to in "A cat may look at a king." Indeed, there could be no legal hamlet in the old Welsh constitution unless it possessed a cat. We confess ourselves puzzled as to the explanation of the Scotch proverb, "Grinning like a Cheshire cat," unless it alludes to Grimalkin's well-known habit of cruelty.

One of the most common natural antipathies is an utter abhorrence of cats. We know a lady who can not stay in the same house with one, and knows no hateful sensation more instinctively, even before she sees it. Blue-eyed cats, oddly enough, are always deaf.

Mr. Darwin has a curious speculation how a society of cats in any rural district would soon affect the neighboring vegetation, as the field animals they prey upon would, of course, proportionately increase, and their greater numbers would in turn tell upon vegetable life. Cats have always been known to have a strong objection to the scent of valerian; they are also very fond of rolling over the pretty blue nemophila of our gardens; so horticulturists should take notice accordingly. The best mode of prevention, we may suggest, is to keep a small terrier.

Much as we hate cats about our houses, however, they are capable of very strong attachments. We have known more than one instance where they have followed their favorite in his country walks like a dog. It is upon record, too, how an ancestor of Wyatt the poet was fed and preserved by a cat when concealed in a tree by Richard III. As for its sagacity, we knew one that belonged to an old lady which, at her invitation, would ascend the kettle-shaft of the cottage and heat her potatoes, look askant a minute at the narrow-necked cream-jug, and then (quietly sitting down by it) would insert the tip of her shoulder, in order to extract and enjoy the cream. The process she repeated till the jug was empty, with much apparent satisfaction. Another had the curious taste strongly developed in it of ascending to the open bedroom windows of an old mansion by means of the climbers on the walls, and then making away with all the soup the washingstands contained.

Considering how much the cat abhors cold water, our readers must often have wondered why sea-faring men are so fond of taking the animal with them on a voyage. This is explained by two circumstances. Marine insurance does not cover damages done to cargo by the depredations of rats; but if the owner of the damaged goods can prove that the ship was sent to sea unfurnished with a cat he can recover damages from the shipmaster. Again, a ship found at sea with no liv'ng creature on board is considered a derelict, and is forfeited to the Admiralty, the finders, or the Queen. It has often happened that a ship has been abandoned, some domestic animal—a dog, a canary-bird, or most frequently a cat, from its hatred of facing the waves—and the vessel from being condemned as a derelict. A singular occurrence of this kind was related in the papers last winter. A vessel was found abandoned on the Banks of Newfoundland, with only a cat on board: a crew that boarded her navigated her safely across the Atlantic to the Kintyre coast, when another storm broke upon the illfated ship. She soon went to pieces, and the crew were drowned, with the exception of the mate, who drifted to shore on a piece of wreck. At the last moment the cat sprang on to his neck and clung there till more than both washed ashore, when she concealed herself among the rocks, and will not probably care any more to tempt the sea.

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

An Englishman on his return from a hunting excursion in India was asked how he liked tiger-hunting. He replied, "It is very good sport as you hunt the tiger; but, if hard screwed, he sometimes takes it into his head to hunt you, and then it has its drawbacks."

An infamous old bachelor being asked if he ever witnessed a public execution, replied, "No, but I once saw a marriage."

The age of a young lady is now expressed according to the present style of skirts, by saying that eighteen springs have passed over her head.

Of what trade is the sun?—A tanner.

What fish is most valued by a loving wife?—Her-ring.

When is a man thinner than a lath?—When he's a shaving.

The husband who devoured his wife with kisses found afterward that she disagreed with him.

Mrs. Partington says that because dancing girls are stars, it is no reason why they should be regarded as heavenly bodies.

French sorrow and sentiment are illustrated at Montmartre cemetery, where a tombstone has been erected with a colossal tear carved on it, and the words underneath, "Judge how we loved him!"

In the Court of Queen's Bench, in a lunacy case, a witness, a laundress, was asked with respect to the defendant: "What was his behaviour?" Witness certainly not knowing the meaning of the word): "I never saw her so."

A young man advertises for a situation as son-in-law in the Matrimonial Weekly. Would have an objection, he says, to go a short distance into the country.

Rather unexpected was the reply of the urchin, who, on being straitened in his circumstances for pocket-money, stoutly asked, "Do you know where those little boys go to who play marbles on Sunday?" replied innocently.—"Yes; they go to the devil," was the answer, and some on 'em goes down by the side of the river."

On a church, whose collar was rented as a wine-vault, a wag inscribed:

> There's a Spirit above
> And a Spirit below,
> A Spirit of love
> And a spirit of woe—
> The Spirit above
> Is the Spirit Divine,
> The spirit below
> Is the spirit of wine.

"Ah, Jemmy," said a sympathizing friend to a man who was just too late for the train, "you did not run fast enough." "Well, I did," said Jemmy, "I ran fast enough, but I did not start soon enough."

A young man in California, whose New England friends had ceased to correspond with him, woke up their interest by sending them tobacco to smoke in his native place, inquiring the price of a tolerably-sized farm. Seven affectionate letters came from friends by return of mail—one two or three a day have come ever since, including one from an old cattle owner—horn.

A sentimental cook says: "It does not follow that two persons are fit to marry because both are good. Milk is good, and mustard is good, but they are not good for each other."

Book for Firebrands.—"Crabbe's Tales."

The gentleman who was lately tied to time has been released.

"I'll drop you a line in a moment," as the fisherman said to the trout.

A company—capital $500,000—has been started to supply non-combustible starch. It has not a chance of success, for it is impossible to conquer the feminine love of a "flame!"

THINGS NOT GENERALLY KNOWN.

If you see a man with a bandage round his eye, a sign he is out of spirits, and likely to be sla-ing.

If a young lady is discharged, her father is apparent she is discherging.

When a man throws up an appointment he is generally sick of it.

A man going to sleep in a field is sure to "lie on the face of nature."

When a servant-maid is blown up it is usually through her own carelessness.

It is perfectly true that there is but one cat in Catalonia.

"Well, Sambo, what's yer up to nowadays?" "Oh, I is the carp'ner and joiner." "Joiner! I guess yer is." "What is the difference between a carp'ner?" "Why, carp'ner I does the circular work." "What's dat?" "Why, I does the circular saw."

Why is a young lady verging in sorrow like a rebel gunboat?—Because it is a private-teer.

CALAMITOUS ACCIDENT.—A poor, thoughtless old gentleman fell down in the street, on the spur of the moment. His screams were frightful.

TRUTH IN PARENTHESES.

I really take it very kind,
This visit, Mrs. Skinner;
I have not seen you such an age—
(The weather's come in terrible).

Your daughters, too, what loves of girls—
What heads for painters' easels!
Come here, and like the baby, dear—
(And give it pethaps the measles).

What, little Clara left at home?
Well, now, I call that shabby;
I should have brought her, sure as fate—
(A shabby, shabby babby).

And Sal and Jane—I hope he's well?
Although he lives so handy,
He never now comes near us—why—
(The better for my brandy!)

Come, take a seat, I long to hear
About Matilda's marriage;
You've come, of course, to spend the day?—
(Thank Heaven, I hear the carriage!)

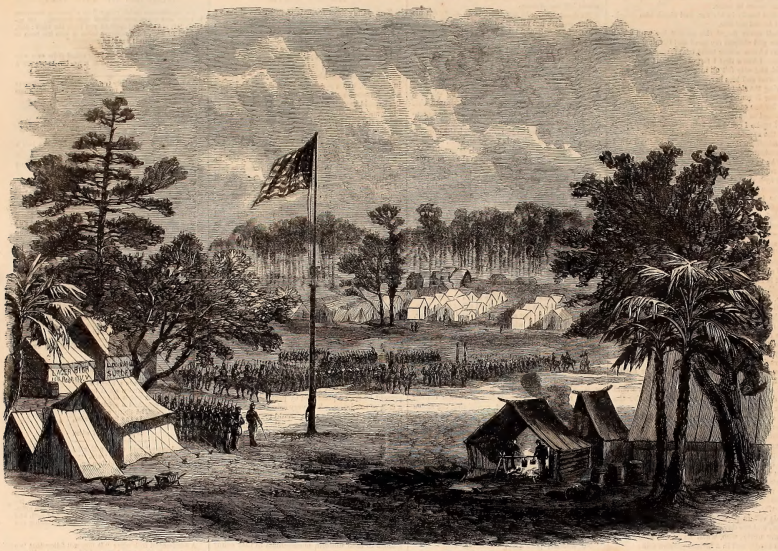
What, must you go?—next time I hope
You'll give me longer measure;
Nay, I will see you down the stairs—
(With most uncommon pleasure).

Good-by—good-by—remember all;
Next time you'll stay to dinner?
(Now, David, mind I'm "not at home"
In future to the Skinners.)

In a discussion with a temperance lecturer, a toper asked, "If your nose, your boots, what effect must it have on the cost of your stomach?"

Why is a pig the most provident of animals?—Because he always carries a spare-rib or two about him.

When is a tooth not a tooth?—When it is a-king.



CAMP OF THE NEW YORK ONE HUNDRED AND THIRD BEFORE CHARLESTON.—FROM A SKETCH BY COLONEL W. HEINE.—[SEE PAGE 85.]

ACCIDENT ON THE PENNSYLVANIA CENTRAL RAILROAD.—[SEE PAGE 85.]

THE STAG DANCE.

THE STAG DANCE.

Our soldiers believe in the literal interpretation of the dictum of the Wise Man that "there is a time to dance." But to put their faith into works is not the easiest thing in the world, owing to the lack of partners of the feminine persuasion. However, by imagining a bearded and pantalooned fellow to be of "t'other kind," they succeed in getting up what they call a "Stag Dance," which is better than none, as is shown by the intense interest evinced by the spectators.

A VETERAN ON FURLOUGH.

Our Veteran Soldiers, the heroes of many a hard-fought field—and of what is perhaps still harder to endure, of many a long march and weary encampment—are now returning by thousands for a brief visit to their loved ones at home, before returning to the field. The scene which our artist has depicted, where a returned veteran is telling his story of that war, a part of which he was, is this day being enacted in thousands of homes in every section of the broad Union.

A VETERAN ON FURLOUGH.

LILY'S BALL.

LILY gave a party,
And her little playmates all,
Gaily dress'd, came in their best
To dance at Lily's ball.

Little Quaker Primrose
Sat and never stirr'd,
And, except in whispers,
Never spoke a word.

Tulip fine and Dahlia
Shone in silk and satin;
Learned old Convolvulus
Was tiresome with his Latin.

Snowdrop nearly fainted
Because the room was hot,
And went away before the rest
With sweet Forget-me-not.

Pansy danced with Daffodil,
Ross with Violet;
Silky Daisy fell in love
With pretty Mignonnette.

But when they danced the country dance,
One could scarcely tell
Which of these two danced it best—
Cowslip or Heather-bell.

Between the dances, when they all
Were seated in their places,
I thought I'd never seen before
So many pretty faces.

But of all the pretty maidens
I saw at Lily's ball,
Darling Lily was to me
The sweetest of them all.

And when the dance was over,
They went down stairs to sup,
And each had a taste of honey-cake,
With dew in a butter-cup.

And all were dress'd to go away
Before the set of sun;
And Lily said "Good-by!" and gave
A kiss to every one.

And before the moon or a single star
Was shining overhead
Lily and all her little friends
Were fast asleep in bed.

ONWARD.

Non look, nor footstep backward turn,
Though many a vanished scene be fair;
There's less beneath the sun
Of charm than despair.
The Future we can carve at will—
The sculptured Past defies our skill.

Why summon up the weird array
Of spectres false—Delusion's train?
The idols Time has proved of clay
Will ne'er be gold again:
Nor defiest alchemy restore
The treasures that we prized of yore.

The wreaths that decked our youthful brows
Have lost their brightness and perfume;
We'll weave our crown from fresher boughs,
And flowers of richer bloom!
And brighter sunbeams than of old
Shall change our sails to beaten gold.

We will not think of roof or wreck,
Of latent dangers hurried o'er,
Of storms that whilom swept our deck;
Our Pharos shines before,
And gilds the wave that ceaseless sweep
On to the vast eternal deep.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

MORTON'S GOLD PENS are now sold at the same prices as before the commencement of the war; this is entirely owing to the Manufacturer's improvements in machinery, his present large Retail Business and Cash-in-Advance System; for, until he commenced advertising, his business was done on Credit and strictly with the Trade.

The Morton Gold Pens are the only ones sold at old prices, as the makers of all other gold pens charge the Premium on the Gold, Government Tax, &c.; but Morton has in no case changed his prices, Wholesale or Retail.

Of the great numbers sent by mail to all parts of the world during the past few years, not one in a thousand has failed to reach its destination in safety; showing that the Morton Gold Pen can be obtained by any one, in every part of the world, at the same price, postage only excepted.

Reader, you can have an enduring, always ready, and reliable Gold Pen, exactly adapted to your hand and style of writing, which will do your writing nearly cheaper than Steel Pens; and at the present almost universal High-Pressure Price of everything, you can have a Morton Gold Pen cheaper, in proportion to the labor spent upon it and material used, than any other Gold Pen in the World. If you want one, see "The Pen is Mightier than the Sword," in next column.

Dyspepsia Tablets,

For Indigestion, Heartburn, &c., manufactured only by S. G. WELLING, and sold by druggists generally. 50 cents per box. Depot No. 597 Canal st., New York, second floor. Sent free by mail for 65 cents.

"LOVE, COURTSHIP, AND MARRIAGE."—All, born to love, and to be loved. Mistakes, Unhappy Marriages, The Remedy, Love—signs, in the face. Secret of Beauty. A Woman's Experience. Falling in love. Secrets of the Complexion—with numerous illustrative Portraits—in Jan Double No. PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL. Try a new vol. Only 10 cts. Or $1 50 a year. FOWLER & WELLS, N. Y.

"THE PEN IS MIGHTIER THAN THE SWORD."
THE GOLD PEN—THE BEST OF ALL PENS,
MORTON'S GOLD PENS,
THE BEST PENS IN THE WORLD.

On receipt of any of the following sums in Cash, the Subscriber will send by return mail, or otherwise, as directed, a Gold Pen of Price—selecting the same according to description, viz.:

GOLD PENS WITHOUT CASES.

For 75 cents, the Magic Pen; for 38 cents, the Lucky Pen; for 50 cents, the Always-Ready Pen; for 75 cents, the Elegant Pen; and for $1, the Excelsior Pen.—These Pens are not numbered, but correspond in size to numbers 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 respectively.

THE SAME PENS IN SILVER-PLATED EXTENSION CASES, WITH PENCILS.

For 50 cents, the Magic Pen; for 75 cents, the Lucky Pen; for $1, the Always-Ready Pen; for $1 25, the Elegant Pen; and for $1 50, the Excelsior Pen.

Gentlemen's Well-Finished, Gold-Writing Gold Pens, with Iridomin Points, the average wear of every one of which will fit out(ask a gross of the best Steel Pens) although they are inexpensive, and, therefore, not exchangeable.

MORTON'S WARRANTED PENS.

The name "A. Morton," "Number," and "Quality," are stamped on the following Pens, and the points are warranted for six months, except against accident.

The Numbers indicate size only. No. 1 being the smallest, No. 6 the largest, adapted for Ladies' hands. No. 10 the smallest, and No. 10 the largest Mammoth Gold Pen, for the desk.

Long and Medium Nibs of all sizes and qualities. Short Nibs of Numbers 4, 5, 6, and 7, and made only of first quality.

The Long and Short Nibs are fine pointed; the Medium Nibs are Broad, Coarse Business points. The engravings are fac-similes of the sizes and styles.

GOLD PENS, WITHOUT CASES.

For $0 75 a No. 1 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 2d quality.
For $1 00 a No. 2 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 3d quality.
For $1 25, a No. 3 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 3d quality.
For $1 50, a No. 4 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 3d quality.
For $1 75, a No. 5 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 2d quality.
For $2 25, a No. 6 Pen; $2 75 a No. 7 Pen; $3 25 a No. 8 Pen; $4 a No. 9 Pen; $5 a No. 10 Pen—all 1st quality.

THE SAME GOLD PENS, IN SILVER EXTENSION CASES, WITH PENCILS.

For $1 50 a No. 1 Pen, 1st quality; or a No 3 Pen, quality.
For $1 75, a No. 2 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 3d quality.
For $2 00, a No. 3 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 3d quality.
For $2 50 a No. 4 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 3d quality.
For $2 75, a No. 5 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 2d quality.
For $3 00, a No. 6 Pen, 1st quality.

GOLD PENS, ALL FIRST QUALITY, IN SILVER-MOUNTED DESK HOLDERS.

For $3 00 a No. 4 Pen; for $3 25 a No. 5 Pen; for $3 75 a No. 6 Pen; for $5 00 a No. 7 Pen.
For $4 00 a No. 8 Pen; for $5 a No. 9 Pen; and for $6 a No. 10 Pen.

The "1st Quality" are pointed with the very best Iridomin Points, carefully selected, and many of the finest are sold with the slightest imperfection which skill and the closest sorting can detect.

The "2d Quality" are superior to any Pens made by him previous to the year 1860.

The "3d Quality" he intends shall equal in respect to Durability, Elasticity and Good Writing Qualities (the only true considerations) any Gold Pens made elsewhere.

In regard to the Gauge Gold Pens, he begs to say that, previous to operating his New and Patented Machines, he could not have made the Gold Writing and Durable Pens, for the price, had the Gold been furnished gratuitously.

Parties ordering must in all instances specify the "Name" or "Number" and "Quality" of the Pens wanted, and be particular to describe the kind they prefer—whether stiff or limber, coarse or fine.

All remittances sent by mail in registered letters are at my risk: and to all who send twenty cents (the charge for registering), in addition to the price of goods ordered, I will guarantee their safe delivery.

Parties sending Gold or Silver will be allowed the full premium on the coin received.

TO CLUBS.—A discount of 10 per cent. will be allowed on sums of $15, of 15 per cent. on $30, and of 20 per cent. on $50, if sent to one address at one time.

Address, A. MORTON,
No. 25 Maiden Lane, New York.

Ballard Patent Breech Loading Rifles and Carbines.

Carrying the copper water-proof cartridge, and also using the Common Cartridge.

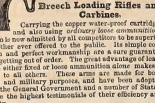
This arm is now admitted by all competitors to be superior to any other ever offered to the public. Its simple construction and perfect workmanship are a sure guarantee against getting out of order. The Peculiar Range of Sighting with either fixed or loose ammunition alone makes it superior to all others. These arms are made for both sporting and military purposes, and have been adopted both by the General Government and a number of States. We have the highest testimonials of their efficiency and durability.

We also offer to the Public our new Cartridge and loose ammunition bedding revolver. This arm has no equal as a belt or pocket weapon. No one wishing a first-class arm should be without one.

For further particulars send for descriptive circular.

P. S. Do not forget that both Rifles and Pistols may be used with either copper cartridge or loose ammunition.

MERWIN & HRAY, Sole Agents,
202 Broadway, N. Y.



Elliot's New Repeaters

Are now ready. The most rife, compact, durable, effective, sure, and reliable Revolvers made. Carry large balls (No. 32 cartridge), and shoot with great force. Are consequently carried in the vest—whole length five inches—four barrels—each rifled each twist. The Trade supplied.

ELLIOT ARMS CO., 494 Broadway, N. Y.

New Corps Pin.

We can now offer to Officers and all members of the Army our new style Corps Pin, in Fine Gold Plate, richly enameled and chased, with the Corps designation in Fine Jewels. Sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of price. Best, cost, and finest Pin ever offered. Mailed free for One Dollar. GEO. DEHERIT & CO., Jewelers, 305 Broadway, N. Y.

United States
Sanitary Commission.

"What is it doing to economize the Life and Health of our Soldiers?"

It is using all the means Providence has placed within its reach, or is it stiff-necked, and determined that so GREAT a MEMBERSHIP as shall not be used "to economize the life and health of our Soldiers?"

Brandreth's Pills

Sagacious men believe that the administration of BRANDRETH'S PILLS, in its "Homes" and as "Special Relief," would more than quadruple the present value to the "Life and Health of our Soldiers."

Let the following testimony from

SIXTY REVEREND CLERGYMEN

be studied by members of the United States Sanitary Commission. If these statements are true, can they be doing their duty as CHRISTIAN MEN in not using the means Providence has placed within their reach?

FRIENDS OF SOLDIERS,

READ!

BRANDRETH'S PILLS PROTECT FROM THE ARROWS OF DISEASE, USUALLY AS FATAL TO SOLDIERS AS THE BULLETS OF THE FOE.

SING SING, Oct. 26, 1863.

We, the undersigned, surviving members of Company F, Seventeenth New York State Volunteers, hereby certify that we have used Brandreth's Pills during our two years' service, and to them we attribute the fact that our constitutions are uninjured by the necessary hardships and privations of a soldier's life in the field. In costiveness, colds, chills, diarrhœa, dysentery, and typhoid fever, their prompt use cured us in a few days. Our health was often restored without having been entered on the sick list; in fact, a single dose of four or five pills usually cured what, under the regular treatment, would have been a serious sickness. Others, who appeared to be sick in no respect different to us, but who used the remedies prescribed by the regimental surgeon, either died or were sick or broke in the hospital.

When we left Sing Sing, in June, 1861, you gave us a supply of these Pills, and we feel sure, from our experience, that if every soldier were provided with this medicine, the general health of the army would be greatly improved. For ourselves, it is our sole remedy, answering all our wants in the way of physic, and we have known and tested it from our childhood, and our parents before us.

John Vickers, Captain, Patrick Cullen, 4th Sergeant,
J. L. Seaman, 1st Lieutenant, Henry J. Brown, 1st Corporal
William Sea, 1st Sergeant, Wm. Mathers, 3d Corporal.
G. H. Young, 2d Sergeant, Henry W. Miller, 3d Corporal,
Dennis Shay, 3d Sergeant, Thos. Croft, Drummer,
Geo. B. Coe, Drummer.

PRIVATES.

Francis J. Jennings,	Lorb B. Coe,
William W. Campbell,	Albert Lane,
William H. Thurston,	Ellis Jones,
Albert Wesley,	Wm. Van Wart,
John W. Cornell,	James B. Croft,
William Holmes,	Roscoe K. Watson,
William H. Alder,	Frederick Hunt,
Martin Sea,	William Tuttle,
George Ackerley,	Jotham Carpenter,
Hiram Scaggs,	Charles Wright,
Alfred Wilkins,	Sanford Olmsted,
William Griffin,	Fuller Carpenter,
Jacob Carpenter,	James Bowley,
William J. F. Hewett,	Robert W. Westcott,
Joseph Kavanaugh,	Jacob D. Dykeman,
Thomas A. Barlow,	John M. Bodine,
Henry Hannah,	James D. Dixon,
William Hannah,	Edgar Wilkins,
John Conover,	David Baker,
Jacob Baker,	Henry Scaggs.

T. B. Lane, 1st Sergt., Co. D, 175th N. Y. Vols.
M. C. Smith, 1st Sergt., Co. D, 175th N. Y. Vols.
Wm. Knight, Co. I, 6th N. Y. Artillery.
Abram H. Miller, Co. K, 175th N. Y. Infantry.
Willard F. Lansing, Musician, 1st N. Y. Vols.
Wm. Keasy, Co. B, Second Pennsylvania Cavalry.
Cassius Bishop, Co. E, 19th N. Y. Vols.
Elliot Sea, Co. B, 5th N. Y. Vols.
Daniel Gillis, Sergt., Co. B, 2d N. Y. Vols.
Caleb S. Frisbie, Co. B, 5th N. Y. Vols.

STATE OF NEW YORK,
Westchester Co., ss:

I, WILLIAM M. SKINNER, a Notary Public, duly commissioned and sworn, residing in the Village of Sing Sing, County and State aforesaid, do hereby certify, that the foregoing Affidavit was subscribed and sworn to before me, hereto annexed, dated Oct. 26, 1863, concerning the value and efficacy of Brandreth's Pills, beginning with Capt. John Vickers and ending with Caleb S. Frisbie, were signed in my presence, and that I, as their request, witnessed their signatures to said Certificate.

I further certify, that I am personally acquainted with all who signed the same, and know them individually to be men of truth and veracity.

In witness whereof I have hereunto subscribed my name and affixed my Official Seal, this, eleventh day of January, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-four.

WM. M. SKINNER, Notary Public.

STATE OF NEW YORK,
County of Westchester, ss.:

I, Hiram P. Rowel, Clerk of the County aforesaid, and also Clerk of the Courts in and for said County, Do Hereby Certify, that

WM. M. SKINNER, Esquire,

whose name is subscribed to the Certificate of the Proof or acknowledgment of the annexed Instrument, and endorsed thereon, was, on the day of the date of the said Certificate, a Notary Public, in and for said County, residing in the said County, appointed and sworn, and duly authorized to take the same according to the laws of the said State. And further, that I am well acquainted with the handwriting of the said Notary Public, and verily believe that the Signature to the said Certificate is genuine.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand, and affixed the Seal of the said Courts and County, the 12th day of January, 1864.

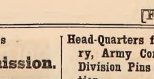
HIRAM P. ROWEL, Clerk.

Whiskers! Whiskers!—My Concoct will force them to grow on the smoothest face in 21 days. Satisfaction given or money refunded. Sent for 35 cents a package, or 5 for One Dollar. Address
FRANK JAGGERS, Calhoun, Ills.

Head-Quarters for Veteran, Cavalry, Army Corps, Company, and Division Pins of every Description.

On the receipt of $1, I will send you a Solid Silver Shield, or either Army Corps Emblem, or Co. Pin with your Name, Regt., and Co. handsomely engraved upon it, or a fine Gold Army Corps Extension Case and Pencil, or a new style Vest Chain or Neck Chain, or a California Diamond Ring or Pin, or a Solid Silver Ring; and for $1 50, I will send you a Solid Silver new style CAVALRY Pin, engraved as above. Agents wanting for 10 or more Pins at one time will be allowed 15 cents each.

B. T. HAYWARD,
Manufacturing Jeweler, 208 Broadway, N. Y.



The only enameled "Turn-over" Collar made in metallic. Send $1 for a "Turn-over" or 75 cents for a "Choker," to Box 5173, and receive it by return mail. American enameled Metallic Collar Co., 94 Pine St., N. Y.

THE "RIDGEWOOD" PATENT SMOKING CASE.

Most ingenious in its combination of the Metallic Case, containing Pipe and Stem, Matches and Pipe Cleaner, with a handsome Pebble Front attached, filling the Pipe by a valve, without use of the fingers or waste of Tobacco, the whole securing freedom from all odor, and perfect ease in Cosie Case. It is made for service, of various styles, at $1 50, $2 00, $2 25, $2 50, and $3 50 by mail, and $1 00; the two latter richly plated and engraved. Nothing can excel its Comfort, Utility, and Economy for all Smokers, at Home or Abroad, in the Army and Navy. As a Present to a Friend, as a Soldier's Companion, it is the most enviable more acceptable. FOR THE SOLDIER OF ALL RANKS, it is the Case for the Service, in the Field. Large Orders, with commendation from all points in our Army, daily attest the fact. Single cases sent by mail, post on receipt of price, and $3 cents.

AGENTS will appreciate this Case.

Also, The Ridgewood Smoking Tobacco, Of superior quality and flavor, in packages to fill the pouch (about a week's smoking), $2 25 per lb., and larger sizes for the General Trade. SMOKERS, DEALERS, and SUTLERS invited to call and examine these articles. Circulars sent on order. A liberal Discount to Dealers.

25 A half-ounce Package of this Fine Tobacco, fully sweet, sent carefully put up by mail, postage paid, on receipt of $1 10. All Orders receive prompt attention.

RIDGEWOOD MANUFACTURING CO.,
Office 422 Broadway, cor. Howard st., N. Y.

ALL ARTICLES FOR SOLDIERS

At Ballard's, Washington, and all places occupied by Union troops, should be sent by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 74 Broadway. Soldiers charged low rates.

"SANITARY FAIR."

From this date (January 15, 1864), until the close of the great Fairs to be held in New York and Brooklyn, I will give the following Extra Rates as follows, viz.: 100 box (100 lbs.) of my best Soap for every ten boxes (of 100 lbs. each) sold to families. Price, 10½c. per lb., or $10 50 per box of 100 lbs.

Every one may thus do something in this great and glorious work of sustaining and comforting our sick and wounded soldiers. Address my Manufactory, No. 76 Washington Street, giving name and residence, and the Soap will be delivered at your residence in New York, Brooklyn, Williamsburgh, or Jersey City, free of express charge—you paying $10 50 on delivery of the Soap. When you order, mention that you do so after reading this notice, and I will credit ten lbs. soap on one of the above Fairs—thus making 100 lbs. (or one box) for every ten boxes sold as above.

Orders received from Brooklyn and Long Island will be entered as desiring one box in ten to the Brooklyn Fair. All others to the New York Fair.

Persons ordering who do not live in either of the above named four cities will send me $10 50 by mail, and I will deliver the Soap, free of cartage, on board such steamboat or railroad as they may direct.

B. T. BABBITT,
Nos. 64 to 74 Washington Street, New York.

Beware the Northeaster.

SAVE COAL AND HALF THE FUEL; excludes COLD, WIND, RAIN, and DUST from DOORS and WINDOWS. LOCAL AGENTS wanted in every village. Address the PATENTEE METALLIC WEATHER STRIP CO., 644 Broadway, N. Y.

ARTIFICIAL LEGS & ARMS. SELPHO'S PATENT

The best Substitutes for Natural Limbs ever invented. (Illustrated 24 pages.) 310 Broadway.

NOW READY. The Illustrated Phrenological Journal, 20 Engravings, Portraits of Gen. Banks, Lyndhurst, Beautiful Women, Egyptian Mummies, Short Indians in a Scalpin' Dance, Wild Men, and Basil Children. Babes nursed by the Wolf. Dreams, their Significance, Physiognomy, or Signs of Character, Love, Courtship and Marriage, in the Jan. No. Phrenological Journal, edited by first pen. Address FOWLER & WELLS, 308 Broadway.

PHOTOGRAPHIC MAGNIFIER, a charming accompaniment to photographic albums. $1 00. Godfrey, 821 Broadway, N. Y.

Holiday Presents.

J. H. Winslow & Co.,
100,000
WATCHES, CHAINS, &c., &c.
Worth $500,000.

To be sold for One Dollar each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for till you know what you are to get.

SPLENDID LIST!!

OF ARTICLES TO BE SOLD FOR ONE DOLLAR EACH.

100 Gold Hunting Cased Watches..... $100 00 each.
100 Gold Watches..... 60 00 each.
500 Ladies' Gold Watches..... 35 00 each.
500 Ladies' and Gent's Silver Watches.... 25 00 each.
$200 Vest and Guard Chains..... 5 00 to 10 00 each.
3000 Gold Band Bracelets..... 5 00 to 10 00 each.
5000 " ..... 2 50 to 5 00 each.
3000 Cameo Brooches..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Mosaic and Jet Brooches..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Lava and Florentine Brooches.. 4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Coral, Opal, and Em. Brooches.. 4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Cameo Ear Drops..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Mosaic and Jet Ear Drops..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Lava and Florentine Ear Drops. 4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Coral, Em., and Opal Ear Drops 4 00 to 6 00 each.
5000 Gent's Breast Pins..... 2 50 to 8 00 each.
3000 Wristlet Clasps..... 2 50 to 6 00 each.
3000 Fob and Ribbon Slides..... 2 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Sets of Bosom Studs..... 2 50 to 6 00 each.
3000 Sleeve Buttons..... 2 50 to 6 00 each.
3000 Plain Rings..... 2 50 to 5 00 each.
3000 Stone Set Rings..... 2 50 to 6 00 each.
3000 Lockets..... 2 00 to 10 00 each.
3000 Sets Ladies' Jewelry..... 5 00 to 10 00 each.
10000 Gold Pens, Silver Mtd Holders 4 00 to 5 00 each.
10000 Gold Pens, with Silver Extension
" Pens and Pencils..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.

All of the above list of Goods will be sold for one dollar each. Certificates of all the various articles, stating what each one can have, are first put into envelopes, sealed up, and mixed; and when ordered, are taken one without being cast to choice, and sent by mail, thus giving all a fair chance. On receipt of a Certificate, you will see what you can have, and then it is at your option to send one dollar and take the article or not.

In all transactions by mail, we shall charge for forwarding the Certificates, paying postage, and doing the business, 25 cents each, which must be inclosed when the Certificate is sent for. Certificates will be sent for $1; eleven for $2; thirty for $5; sixty-five for $10; and a hundred for $15.

AGENTS.—Those acting as Agents will be allowed ten cents on every article ordered; but, taken one with the remittance amounts to one dollar. Agents will collect 25 cents for every Certificate, and remit 15 cents to us either in cash or postage stamps. Great caution should be used by our customers in regard to giving their correct address, Town, County, and State. Address

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.
208 Broadway, New York.

EMPLOYMENT

At your own home. Thousands can realize a Hundred Dollars Weekly.—No talents required except those found in every household; profits 100 per cent.; described free as flour. It is the greatest discovery of the age. Full particulars and an outfit, free of charge for return postage.

Address C. MUNRO BROWN, 74 Bleecker St., N. Y.

Union Playing Cards.

Colonel for King, Goddess of Liberty for Queen, and Major for Jack. Ornamental cards to the back. Shields, Stars, and Flags are the suits, and you can play all the usual games. They are, in sooth, sealed free on receipt of $1. The usual discount to the trade. Send for a Circular. Address AMERICAN CARD COMPANY,
455 Broadway, N. Y., or 165 William Street, N. Y.

RHEUMATISM.

USE THE FAUSTO-METALLIC INSOLES, BELTS, and ARMLETS. THEY ARE AN INFALLIBLE REMEDY for RHEUMATISM, GOUT, FEVER, &c. METCALF & CO., No. 439 Broadway, N. Y.

Insoles, $1 per pair; Belts, $3; Armlets, $1 50 each. Sent by mail for 30 cents additional.

Sportsmen, Tourists, and Army and Navy Officers.

Powerful and Brilliant Double Glasses.

Portability combined with great power in Field, Marine, Tourists', Opera, and general out-door day and night-double perspective glasses, will show distinctly a person to know him as from 5 to 6 miles. Spectacles of the greatest transparent power to assist vision and improve the sight, without the distressing result of frequent changes. Catalogues sent by return mail.

SEMMONS, Oculists—Opticians,
609 Broadway, New York.

Hoyt's Hiawatha Hair Restorative.—Superior to every other preparation for the hair in power to restore faded and gray hair to its original color and natural appearance, to prevent it from falling out, to overcome effects of previous use of preparations containing sulphur, sugar of lead, &c., and to remove the impurities and humors of the scalp. Invaluable dressing for whiskers.

HOYT'S MINNIHAHA HAIR GLOSS, unequaled for keeping the hair in order.

HOYT'S IMPERIAL COLORING CREAM,
oils and colors the hair the same time; changes light and red hair to a beautiful brown or black.

HOYT'S EXCELSIOR TOILET POWDER,
imparts beauty to the complexion, smoothness to the skin, and prevents the formation of sunburn. Sold everywhere. JOSEPH HOYT & CO., 19 University Place.

$50 for $20.

SOLDIERS IN THE ARMY.

For $20 we will forward by mail or express, pre-paid, the following list of Fine Gold-Plated Jewelry:—4 Vest Chains, 12 Lockets, 4 Gold Rings, 4 Gold Pens and Extension Holders, 6 Vest Books, 4 Fancy Watch Keys, 12 Bosom or scarf Pins, 4 pair Sleeve Buttons, 3 Bar and Glass Pins for Miniatures, 3 Double Glass Lockets, and 3 Cluster Studs. Address THOMAS CAFFERTEY & CO., Providence, R. I.

All parents who desire the health and happiness of their children are interested in the new

PATENT CANTERING HOOPERS.

Call and take a ride, or send stamp for circular.

S. W. SMITH, No. 468 Broadway, New York.

H. A. HARVEY, 94 Maiden Lane, N. Y., TWINES, Rope, CORDAGE, Spring and Iron Wire, Russian Felting, CARPET WARP, Fish Lines, Blocking Cord, Lamp Wicking, Lampwick, Tarred Yarns, Netting and Wrapping PAPER. Envelopes, and Paper Bags.

SOLDIERS' C^o PINS & CORPS BADGES

Every Co., from A to M, and every Corps Badge worn by the Army, constantly on hand, engraved to order, and sent free on receipt of price. Also Cavalry and Artillery Badges. Premiums offered to Clubs. Don't fail to send for an Illustrated Catalogue. Address C. L. BALCH & CO., 208 Broadway, New York.

Caution
FROM
The American Watch Company.

It having come to our knowledge that imitations of the American Watch have been put upon the market in great numbers, calculated, by their utter worthlessness, to injure the reputation of our genuine products—to protect our own interests and the public from imposition, we again publish the trade marks by which our Watches may invariably be known.

We manufacture four styles of Watches:

The FIRST has the name

"AMERICAN WATCH CO., Waltham, Mass.," engraved on the inside plate.

The SECOND has the name

"APPLETON, TRACY & CO., Waltham, Mass.," engraved on the inside plate.

The THIRD has the name

"P. S. BARTLETT, Waltham, Mass.," engraved on the inside plate.

All the above styles have the name "American Watch Co." painted on the dial, and are warranted in every respect.

The FOURTH has the name

"WM. ELLERY, Boston, Mass." engraved on the inside plate, and is not named on the dial.

All the above described Watches are made of various sizes, and are sold in gold or silver cases, as may be required.

It is hardly possible for us to accurately describe the numerous imitations to which we have alluded. They are usually imitations of the name so nearly corresponding our own as to escape the observation of the unaccustomed buyer. Some are represented as made by the "UNION WATCH CO., of Boston," and "UNION WATCH COMPANY." Some are named the "Soldier's Watch," to be sold as our FOURTH or WM. ELLERY grade, usually known as our "SOLDIER'S WATCH;" others named the "BARTLETT WATCH CO.," others the "P. S. BARTLEY," instead of our P. S. BARTLETT, besides many variations named in such a manner as to convey the idea that they are the veritable productions of the American Watch Company.

A little attention on the part of buyers will protect them from gross imposition.

ROBBINS & APPLETON,
Agents for the American Watch Company.
162 BROADWAY, N. Y.

SALISBURY, BRO. & CO.,
AGENTS FOR THE UNITED STATES FOR THE CELEBRATED
SHEET-IRON SAFES.

Extension Holders and Gold Pens.

Of the most handsome and durable construction, put up in new fancy cases of one dozen each, and sold in any sizes quantities. They will retail for $3 each.

Price, per dozen..... $30 00
Or 3 dozen for..... 75 00

Sent by mail or express, prepaid. Address
SALISBURY, BRO & CO., Providence, R. I.

Military and Naval

COLLECTION AND BARGAIN OFFER.—Scarce, Brown & Co., No. 5 Beekman Place, New York, solicit correspondence with variety of just claims against the Government or States. Hand-Books containing laws, &c., sent by mail, free.

"THE HUMAN FACE DIVINE," a new system of Physiognomy, with Hints on Palmistry, Life, Death, Head, Hair, Hands, Feet, Skin, Complexion, with all "Signs of character, and How to Read Them." Illustrated PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL AND LIFE ILLUSTRATED for 1864. New vol. 32 full pages. Terms, $1 a year. FOWLER & WELLS, N. Y.

Printing-Press for Sale.

One Taylor Double Cylinder, five Rollers, Table Distribution, Bed 38x51. Price $2500.
Apply to HARPER & BROTHERS, 329 Pearl St., N.Y.

DR. R. GOODALE'S CATARRH REMEDY.

Exterminates Catarrh, Rest and Breath, forever. Price $1. Sent anywhere by mail. Depot, 613 Broadway, N. Y. NORTON & CO., Sole Agents.

Rifled Ordnance.

A practical treatise on the application of THE RIFLE to Guns and Mortars of every calibre. To which is added a new theory of the initial action and force of fired gunpowder. First American, from the fifth revised English edition. By Lieut. Thomas, R.A. In one volume, octavo, with illustrations. Price $2.

Copies sent by Mail, postage paid, on receipt of price.

Just published by D. VAN NOSTRAND, 192 Broadway, New York.

Redpath's Books for the Camp Fires.

No. 1 (96 12mo pp., good paper, new type, neatly bound in greenback) is now ready and for sale by all newsdealers.

No. 3 contains "ON PICKET DUTY, and other TALES."

By L. M. Alcott, author of HOSPITAL SKETCHES. "Miss Alcott is a woman of genius."—Boston Traveler. "Has a rare but healthy literary career before her."—D. A. Wasson. "I am delighted with your beautiful papers."—Harvey Rice. "Has tact, humor, pathos, power of brief and vivid description."—Wide World. "The reader is alternately moved to laughter and tears."—Waterbury American. A pamphlet of flattering notices of Miss Alcott's first book could be given. This new volume will increase her reputation.

PRICE, TEN CENTS.

Wholesaled by H. Dexter, Hamilton & Co, N. Y.; J. S. Walsh, Chicago; James Redpath, Publisher, Boston. Sent by mail to any address on receipt of price.

$60 A MONTH! We want Agents at $60 a month, to introduce our new and wonderful Patent Articles, Oriental Burners, and 12 other articles. 15 circulars sent free. SHAW & ULLMAN, 347 Broadway, New York.

WATCHES
FOR
THE ARMY.

Superbly finished watches, the beauty of which is only equaled by their chronometers. — N. Y. Weekly, July 25th.

Particularly valuable for officers in the army.—Travelers—Frank Leslie's, Feb. 1st.

Prettiest, best and cheapest time-pieces ever offered. — N. Y. Illustrated News, Jan. 30.

Magic Time Observers,
The Perfection of Mechanism!
Being a Hunting, or Open Face, or Lady's or Gentleman's Watch combined, with Patent Self-winding Improvement.

A most pleasing novelty—and one of the prettiest, most convenient, and decidedly the best and cheapest timepieces for general use, reliable and ever offered. It has within it and connected with its machinery its own winding attachment, rendering a key entirely unnecessary. The cases of this Watch are composed of two metals, the outer one being fine 16 carat gold. It has the improved ruby action lever movement, and is warranted an accurate timepiece. Price, superbly engraved, per case of half dozen, $104. Sample watches in neat morocco boxes, $35. If sent by mail, add 50 cents for each; registering, 20 cents.

Silver Watches!
First-Class Hunting Time-Pieces,
FOR ACCURACY OF MOVEMENT, BEAUTY OF MATERIAL, AND, ABOVE ALL, CHEAPNESS IN PRICE, THESE WATCHES ARE UNRIVALED.

UNIVERSAL APPROBATION!

An imitation so faultless that it can hardly be detected by the most experienced judges. The material being of two metals, the outside of which is the finest kind of silver one German Silver, it can not be recognized by cutting or heavy engraving, making it not only in appearance, but in durability, the best resemblance of Solid Sterling Silver Watches.

The sale of these watches in the army is a source of enormous gratification, as we very readily do, at $25 and upward. Many hundred dollars can be made in a single day—by any one of ordinary business talent.

AT WHOLESALE ONLY! In hunting cases, beautifully engraved, with enamel dial, and fancy set hands, in good running order, by the half dozen, $6d; postage, 24 36; registering, 24. Sold only by the case.

AT WHOLESALE ONLY! In hunting cases, beautifully engraved, with enamel dial, and fancy set hands, in good running order, by the half dozen, $6d; postage, 24 36; registering, 24. Sold only by the case.

CASH IN ADVANCE, INVARIABLY IN ADVANCE. No agents employed; buyers must deal directly with us. If money is sent in a letter, be sure it is registered; return it is at our risk! Orders will meet the most prompt and faithful attention.

HUBBARD BROS., Sole Importers,
Broadway, cor. Courtlandt St., New York.

To Compositors.—Wanted, three strictly first-class Compositors, used to Jobbing. Apply to Mr. MARSH, Foreman of HARPER & BROTHERS' Composing Room, N. Y.

J. W. EVERETT & CO.,

Will forward to any address, on receipt of order, Photographs from any of the following prominent

OFFICERS OF THE ARMY AND NAVY, STATESMEN, ACTORS,
ACTRESSES,
AND OTHER CELEBRITIES, etc., etc.

20 cents each. $1 80 per dozen. Free by mail.

Address

J. W. EVERETT & CO.,
Box 1614. N. Y. City.

☞ Send for a Circular.

The Beard &c.

IN these cases of scanty, retarded growth, where the person is over 18, try its remarkable nourishing and stimulating power, the Tennessee Swamp Shrub Balsam has been found infallible, in exciting the Beard, Moustaches, &c., to a luxuriant, free and vigorous growth. The history of this Balsam, with a small sample box, will be sent entirely, on receipt of return postage.

JOHN RAWLINS, 815 Broadway, N. Y.

Agents Wanted for the Army.

New Army Watches.

Every Soldier should have the Magic Railway Time-Keeper. It has beautiful dial, composite Hunting Case, with new Patent Time Indicator, to save trouble of opening the case, and is altogether the most popular watch. The handsomest and most useful Watch ever offered $15. Every Officer should have the DOUBLE TIME DIPLEX STOP WATCH.—This highly useful Watch has the useful and heavy Silver Hunting Cases, with Enamel Indexes for Washington and London time, Sweep Seconds with Stopper attached, Stop to be used in winding hours, and also with Spectators, Artillerists, &c., in marking time, &c.

All the leading novelties can be seen by sending for our Catalogue. We would like a live agent in every regiment on usually liberal terms.

All Watches mailed free to any address, and warranted for 12 months.

ARRANDALE & CO., Importers of Watches,
212 Broadway, New York.

Opera and Field-Glasses
Of great power, from $3 50 to $25 Spectacles and Eye Glasses. Also Pocket Microscopes at $3. B. H. HORN, Manufacturing Opticians, 319 Broadway, up stairs, corner of Leonard Street. Salem St. Send for circular.

THE HOME MELODIST

Contains nearly One Hundred Favorite Songs. It is exceedingly convenient in size, and neat and attractive in style. The words are given, bound in cloth, and comprising choice pieces, which in another form costs twice the price of this book. Sent by mail, free, on receipt of only twenty-five cents, by OLIVER DITSON & CO., 277 Washington Street, Boston.

Attention, Soldiers!

Every soldier should have a BADGE WITH HIS NAME MARKED DISTINCTLY upon it. The Subscribers will forward to any soldier in the Army or sold Silver Badge, with his Name, Company, and Regiment engraved upon it, on receipt of One Dollar. The above cut represents size and style of the Badge furnished. It can be fastened to any garment.

In solid 18-k. gold, $3 00.

DROWNE & MOORE,
Manufacturing Jewelers, 208 Broadway, New York.
N. B.—All kinds of Corps and Co. Pins, Enamelled, in Red, White, and Blue, by the one, 100, or 1000.

Just what every Family wants. Sewage & Co.'s Patent Lubricator for Hand Lamps and Lanterns, burns Kerosene Oil with a brilliant light without chimney, smoke, or odor. Sent by mail, post paid, for 75 cents. Agents wanted. Send for circular. Sample sent free for 50 cts. American Institute awarded 1st Premium Medal, 1863.

DO YOU WANT LUXURIANT WHISKERS OR MUSTACHES?—My Congener will force them to grow heavily in six weeks (or the moustaches face) without stain or injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, free, to any address, on receipt of order. R. G. GRAHAM, No. 109 Nassau Street, N. Y.

HARPER & BROTHERS

Have Just Published;

FIVE YEARS OF PRAYER, with the Answers. By GEO. MÜLLER, of Bristol. Square 12mo, Cloth, $1 25. "The Power of Prayer," "Travels in Europe and the East."

"Life of Jos. H. Mumford." By the Author. 75 cts.

ROUNDABOUT PAPERS. By W. M. THACKERAY, Author of "The Four Georges," "The English Humorists," "Virginia Early," "Denis Duval," "Lovel the Widower," "Adventures of Philip," &c. With Illustrations. 12mo, Cloth, $1 50; Half Morocco, $2 25.

MR. WIND AND MADAM RAIN. By FATH. DE MUSSET. Translated by EMMY MAKEPEACE. Illustrated by CHARLES GRAHAM. Square 4to, Cloth, $2 50.

VERY HARD CASH. A Novel. Founded on Facts. By CHARLES READE, Author of "Love me Little, Love me Long," &c. 8vo, Cloth, $1 00; Paper, 75 cents.

HISTORY OF THE GREAT INDIAN WARS AND MASSACRES OF 1862 AND 1863. By ISAAC V. D. HEARD. With Portraits and Illustrations. 12mo, Cloth, $1 50.

HEAD'S DAILY WALK WITH WISE MEN. Daily Walk with Wise Men, or Select Thoughts for Every Day in the Year. Selected, Arranged, and specially Adapted, by REV. NELSON HEAD. Large 12mo, Cloth, $1 50.

ELEANOR'S VICTORY. A Novel. By MISS BRADDON, Author of "Lady Audley's Secret," &c. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

HARPER & BROTHERS will send any of the above Works by Mail, postage free, to any part of the United States on receipt of the Price.

HARPER'S
NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE
For February, 1864.

CONTENTS:

SIMON KENTON.
ILLUSTRATIONS.—Kenton's First Victory.—Daniel Morgan.—Scouts Fired.—Finding the Enemies.—Daniel Boon.—Kenton saving Boone.—A Fraternal Hug.—Kenton and Girty.—Kenton and Logan.—Kenton and his Deliverer.—George Rogers Clarke.—Kenton and Fletcher. —Simon Kenton.

MONOMOY.
ILLUSTRATIONS.—Whitewash Village.—A Monomoyer —Map of Monomoy.—The Light-House.—Take her on the Weather Beam.—The Life-Boat.—Saving the Mail.—Monomoit House.—The Pedagogue.—Clamming at Monomoy.

A WORD OR TWO.
THE "GEOMETER" OR MEASURING WORM.
ILLUSTRATIONS.—Twigs, with Eggs and Chrysalis—

The Geometer.

EPISODIC FARMING.
THE TIMES' WATCHERS.
THE SMALL HOUSE AT ALLINGTON.
CHAPTER XXXIII. Jane and Aunt Ottilia.
CHAPTER XLVII. The new Private Secretary.
CHAPTER XLVIII. Nemesis.
ILLUSTRATIONS.—In Town.—"Why, on Earth, on Sober?"

A HISTORICAL MYSTERY.—(With Portait.)
THE CHRISTMAS GUEST.—(With Illustration.)
JOHN HEATHBURN'S TITLE. Part I.
THE SIEGE OF LOUISBURG.
ON THE STAGE. By FRANCES ANNE KEMBLE.
BRIEFLY NOTED. By ROSEBERY AMORY SWAIN.
PICKED UP.
FOUR DAYS AT GETTYSBURG.
OUR BRIDGET.
A GOSSIP ABOUT PIRES.
RENAN AND HIS BOOK.—(With Portrait.)
MONTHLY RECORD OF CURRENT EVENTS.
LITERARY NOTICES.
EDITOR'S EASY CHAIR.
EDITOR'S DRAWER.
ILLUSTRATIONS.—A Copperhead Creed.—Sunset.—Advice to Young Men.—Dr. Bull.—Bob's Experience.—Good Cause Hair.—Lily's Order.—Difficulties of Dentists.
FASHIONS FOR FEBRUARY.
ILLUSTRATIONS.—Street Dress.—Morning Toilet.

TERMS.

One Copy for one Year..... $3 00
Two Copies for one Year..... 5 00
An Extra Copy, gratis, for every Club of Ten.
Single Numbers, 25 cents; or 11 Copies for $25 00.
HARPER'S MAGAZINE and HARPER'S WEEKLY, together, one year, $6 00.

HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS.

Circulation over 100,000.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

TERMS.

One Copy for Four Months..... $1 00
One Copy for One Year..... 2 00
One Copy for Two Years..... 3 00
And an Extra Copy will be allowed for every Club of Ten Subscribers, at $2 00 each, or 11 Copies for $25.
Payment invariably in advance.

TERMS TO ADVERTISERS.—Seventy-five Cents per line for inside, and One Dollar per line for outside Advertisements each insertion.

Vols. I., II., III., IV., V., VI. and VII. for the Years 1857, 1858, 1859, 1860, 1861, 1862, and 1863 of "HARPER'S WEEKLY," handsomely bound in Cloth, extra, Price $5 00 each, are now ready.

HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS.

CHECK!

MR. SEWARD (to EARL RUSSELL*).* "That was a very close shave, my lord; if you hadn't taken up your Pirate—beg pardon, I mean your Pawn—that time, I'd have been into your Castle as sure as a gun!"—(See MR. SEWARD'S Correspondence with EARL RUSSELL.)

FISK & HATCH.
Bankers and Dealers in Government Securities,
AND
AGENTS FOR THE UNITED STATES
FIVE-TWENTY LOAN,
No. 38 Wall Street, New York.

Watches Given Away.

Agents and Dealers look at the Great Chance to make Money we offer, by engaging in the sale of our New Novelty Improved Patent Pocket Watch. Only $15 required to obtain a WATCH, FREE, with first order. We also offer SILVERED STEEL ENGRAVINGS. $10 invested will yield $50. Never before such inducements were offered. Full particulars in circulars, mailed free.
G. S. HASKINS & CO., 36 Beekman Street, N. Y.,
The Oldest Established Prize Package House in the U. S.

$7. WATCHES. $7.
A Beautiful Engraved Gold-Plated Watch, Lever Cap, small size, English Movements, perfect time-keeper. Sent free by mail, in neat case, for only $7. A Solid Silver, same as above, $7. Specially adopted to the ARMY.

$15 European Timekeeper. $15
A SUPERB "Lever, Double Gold Plate" engraved Hunting Case Watch, Magic Spring, "Genuine English Jewelled Movements," Independent Action, Self Balance, correct timekeeper, "universal one year." Exact imitation of a $150 Watch, used by English Army Officers. Sent free by mail for only $15.
ENGLISH COURT WATCH, for ladies. "Rich designs,"$13
GENUINE ENGLISH PATENT LEVER, full jewelled, $25
ARMY WATCHES OF ALL DESCRIPTIONS very low.
We do not sell the poor Swiss Movement Watches. Our customers should beware of parties advertising in imitation of us.
FISK & HATCH'S Illustrated Newspaper, of Aug. 22, says: "Messrs. NORTON & CO. have combined two very desirable things in a watch—cheapness and reliability. When it is known that for $7 a person can have an excellent timekeeper, there will be greater punctuality in all the affairs of life."
CHAS. F. NORTON & CO., 26 & 40 Ann Street, N. Y.

VALENTINES
To the Trade.
Call or send to Head-Quarters. Catalogues sent free by mail. A better assortment, or more liberal terms, than any other dealer can offer. Address
BENJ. W. HITCHCOCK, 458 Broadway, N. Y.
(Store and Manufactory.)

Straight Hair made Wavy!! Without heating it, by using Isia's Patent Hair Crimpers. For sale at Variety dealers.

SPECIAL NOTICE.
AGENTS, male or female, SOLDIERS, and all having some time to spare, are particularly requested, as a favor, to send us their address, and we will send them, by return mail, information for which they will be THANKFUL. We offer EXTRA INDUCEMENTS for the sale of $10 per day and EXPENSES. We want address from EVERY COUNTY in the U. S., and from every SOLDIER in the ARMY. Address to fail, RICHARDS & CO., 37 and 39 Nassau Street, Box 4121, N. Y.

THE BOWEN MICROSCOPE.
Magnifying small objects 900 times. MAILED FREE everywhere for 30 CENTS. PRICE of different powers for $1.00. Address BOWEN, Box 2129, Boston, Mass.

The Celebrated CRAIG MICROSCOPE, combining Instruction with Amusement, is mailed, pre-paid, for $3 50; or with 6 beautiful Mounted Objects for $5; with 24 Objects, $8, by
HENRY CRAIG,
535 Broadway, New York.
Also, he will mail, prepaid, the Bellows, or Perfected STEREOSCOPE, with a sliding Focus and Field-Piece, accommodating all sizes, for $3; with 13 stereoscopic views, $9. A liberal discount to the trade.

A Household Word.—Buy your Housekeeping Articles at 58, 59 and 60 Market Lexington New York.

A Beautiful Complexion free from Tan, Pimples and Freckles, may easily be procured by using the "BALM OF THOUSAND FLOWERS." For sharing it is unsurpassed. It is composed of pains oil, honey, and other valuable articles, highly perfumed by its own ingredients, and when used for washing, night and morning, renders the skin soft and white, and free from blemish. Price 50 cents.
The Trade supplied by HOWARD, SANGER & CO., 305 and 307 Chambers Street, N. Y., and for sale by all Druggists.

IVORY PHOTOGRAPHIC SLEEVE BUTTONS (Patent applied for), with perfect likenesses of the President, Distinguished Men and Generals, $1 00 per pair. Also fine Ivory Brooches, $2 00; Ear-rings, to match, $3 00. White and Imitation Jet and Coral. Manufactured and for sale by W. M. D. WELLING, Agent, 207 Centre Street, New York, Sign of the Golden Elephant. Sent free on receipt of the price. Ivory Serif Pins $1 00 each.

Putnam Clothes-Wringer.
THE ONLY reliable Self-Adjusting Wringer.
No wood-work to swell or split.
No thumb-screws to get out of order.
WARRANTED WITH OR WITHOUT COG-WHEELS.
It took the FIRST PREMIUM at Fifty-Seven State and County Fairs in 1863, and is, without an exception, the best Wringer ever made.
Instead of believing the statements of parties interested in the sale of other Wringers,
Try it, and Judge for Yourself.
THEN BE THOROUGHLY SURE ANY and ALL others, and, if not entirely satisfactory, return it.
It will wring any thing from a thread to a bed-quilt without alteration.
Patented in the United States, England, Canada, and Australia. Agents wanted in every town.
No. 2, $5 50; No. 1, $6 00; No. 4, $8.
Manufactured and sold, wholesale and retail, by
The Putnam Manufacturing Co.,
No. 13 Platt Street, N. Y., and Cleveland, Ohio.
S. C. NORTHROP, Agent.

(A CARD.)
TO PHYSICIANS AND INVALIDS.
The Rev. CHARLES E. KING, formerly Secretary to the London Evangelical Alliance, and recently connected, as Assistant Minister and Preacher, with the Venezuelan Mission, will send FREE Free of Cost all the Prescription with which he successfully treated, while in charge of the large Mission Hospital, upwards of four hundred cases of CONSUMPTION in the first, second and third stages.
The remedy is equally adapted to the treatment of Asthma, Catarrh, Bronchitis, and all affections of the Lungs, Throat, and Air-Passages; while it speedily invigorates the enfeebled Nervous System, and energizes the deranged functions of the Stomach, Liver, and Bowels.
Address, with stamp,
Rev. CHARLES E KING,
Station D, Bible House,
New York.
P. S.—I with publicity to acknowledge the generosity of three publishers who, from a sense of humanity, have given this advertisement gratuitous insertion. Religious papers are earnestly requested to copy.

Shultz Ointment, WARRANTED to produce a full set of Whiskers in six weeks, longer, richer, &c. Sent post-paid, for 50 cents. ADDRESS G. F. SHULTZ, Troy, N. Y.

FINE WATCH FREE,
And $15 Per Day Easy.
Agents should be careful in directing their orders for our Original and "only Genuine" EXTRA Large Size Gentlemen's Fine Watch Packages, which have become so popular through the fine quality and value of their contents, that we have several imitators, who copy our Styles, Advertisements, Premiums, &c., for the purpose of deceiving Agents, we are the only manufacturers of the "Celebrated Hickorick Price Package," and none are genuine unless bought direct from us. Those parties who advertise to give a "Premium Watch" to agents will not do as unless the agent first pays them from $40 to $50 in cash. Try this challenge any of them to deny. We will present a sum of 100 of our Finest Packages to any agent who obtains a watch from them without first paying the above-named amount. Their attempt to present premiums, after our long-established custom, is in this case but a poor dodge. We still do as we have done for Years past, present free to every one who acts as our agent a Fine Gold or Silver Hunting Case Watch, "Genuine English Movements," and warranted a correct time-keeper. These watches are presented on the spot or sent with the first order. No one else does this. Our Wonderful Packages contain more really valuable articles than any half dozen others ever sold. Among the surprising contents of each package will be found Fine Stationery, Pens, Pencils, Envelopes, Ladies' Fashion Plates, Designs for Needle-work, Cottage Keepsakes, Household Companion, Letter-Writer's Instructor, Parlor Amusements, Gem's Pocket Calendars for 1864, Linen Emblems, Camp Companions for Soldiers, Military Lakenesse, Games, Army Advice, Rare Recipes, Many Ways to get Rich, Yankee Notions, Fancy Articles, Rich and Costly Presents of Fashionable Jewelry, &c., &c., all together worth many dollars, for only 25c. Agents make immense profits. 100 to 200 per cent sold. We guarantee every agent can make $15 per day. Our regular agents average that. Our Packages stand same as ever, above all others for quality and quantity of contents. Agents wanted in every camp and town in the country. Goods sent safe to all parts of the army. Send for our Great New Circular for 1864, containing Extra Premium inducements. Box, S. C. HICKARDS & CO., 102 Nassau St., N. Y. Only Original, and Largest and Oldest Prize Package House in the World.

OFFICE OF THE COMMERCIAL CO., Bankers,
No. 44 Wall Street, New York, Jan. 25, 1864.
WE have notice from the General Subscription Agent to 30 Loan that the whole amount of this loan authorized by law has been taken by subscribers. We can not, therefore, furnish as heretofore the bonds at par and interest.
We shall be pleased to fill orders for these bonds at market rates, and shall endeavor to help constantly on hand, ready for immediate delivery, a full assortment.
We also buy and sell all kinds of Government Stocks.
The new FIVE PER CENT INTEREST-BEARING LEGAL-TENDER NOTES.
SIX PER CENT CERTIFICATES OF INDEBTEDNESS.
SEVEN-THIRTY TREASURY NOTES.
SIX PER CENT COUPON and REGISTERED BONDS 1881.
U. S. QUARTERMASTERS' CHECKS.
Maturing Certificates COLLECTED or CASHED on favorable terms.
VERMILYE & CO.,
Government Agents Five-Twenty Loan.

STAMMERING
And Stuttering cured by Bates's Patent Scientific Appliances. For (New Edition of) descriptive Pamphlets and Drawings, address H. C. L. MEARS, 217 W. 23d St., N. Y.

GOLD PENS AND CASES
Retailed at wholesale prices. 14 kt. Gold Pen, Gold Silver Case, $1 50, warranted for one year, guarantee accompanying each pen. Send for a circular. Pens repointed on receipt of 25 cents.
E. S. JOHNSON, 18 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

VALENTINES.
Dealers should secure their stock of Valentines in season. Send for a list.

Ten Dollar Package.
LIST OF CONTENTS.
36 Neat Valentines, lace and embossed, retail at ... $0 5
20 Harvest Home Scenes, retail at ... 0 10
20 Fancy Embossed Paper, retail at ... 0 15
12 Embossed Gilt and Silver Mottoes, retail at ... 0 15
6 Gold and Silver Ornamented Paper, retail at ... 0 50
2 Illuminated Mottoes, retail at ... 0 25
1 Beautiful Valentine in Fancy Box, retail at ... 1 00
12 Juvenile Valentines, retail at ... 0 12
12 Fine Note, Comic, assorted, retail at ... 0 5
72 Humorous Comic Valentines, single sheets, retail at 0 5
6 Fine Valentine Cards of Poetry, retail at ... 0 5
24 Embossed Envelopes, fine sizes, retail at ... 0 5
24 Large Size Envelopes, two sizes, retail at ... 0 5
12 Beautiful Fine Envelopes, retail at ... 0 10
All the above in a neat box, and a Valentine Showbill. This assortment we have put up for your supplied in the trade, and can not but give entire satisfaction in quantity, quality, and price. We assure you that they offer a very large profit to the retailer. The above lot will be sent free by mail on the receipt of $10 00. Send by express orders early to T. W. STRONG, 98 Nassau Street, New York.

$8 WATCHES $11
AND CHAINS.
A Beautiful Engraved Gold-Plated Watch and Chain, the Swiss movement, genuine dial and hands, warranted a perfect time-keeper, for 8 Dollars. Engraved Silver, same as above, chain included, 6 Dollars.
A very heavy Hunting Cased Solid Silver Watch, full jeweled, and fine English movement, silver dial, warranted a perfect time-keeper, and a handsome Gold Plated chain included, for 11 Dollars.
This will send, on receipt of the number of our Watches and a Chain, by mail, postage paid, to any address. These Watches are manufactured expressly to the Trade, being heavily cased and perfect time-keepers, and in running order.
GEORGE A. ELY & CO.,
No. 595 Broadway, New York.

Ladies and Gentlemen should use Aldrich's Empirial Fumade, which changes red, grey, or flaxen hair to a beautiful black or brown in a few applications, without dyeing, besides being the finest hair dressing ever discovered.
Give it a trial, and you will never use any other.
Price 50 cents in large bottles. Sent to any part of the United States. A. ALDRICH, 370 Broadway.
Sold by HELMBOLDS, 594 Broadway, N. Y.

Learn to Skate in One Hour by using The American Parlor Or Floor Skate, Hard Rubber Rollers, Anti-friction Axles, Frederick Stevens, 29 Park Place, (Barclay), New York. Send for Circular.

$35 WATCHES. $35
Genuine Full-Jeweled American Lever Watches, in 4 Ounce Coin Silver Hunting Cases, Gold Joints, for $35.
Also every variety of good Watches at equally low rates. All orders from the Army must be pre-paid, as the Express Companies will not take bills for collection on soldiers.
J. L. FERGUSON, Importer of Watches,
208 Broadway New York.

To all who wish to make Money.
Send your address to J. W. YALE, SYRACUSE, N. Y., and you will receive, free, a sample of his CHEMICAL FLAG OF OUR UNION AND MILITARY PENCIL STATIONERY ENVELOPE, with circulars.

The Best Magazine
Of its class in America is the
Atlantic Monthly
Such is the unanimous verdict of the press. Price 25 cents a number, or $3 00 a year, postage paid. Club rates liberal. Send for a circular. Address
TICKNOR & FIELDS, Boston.

Perry Davis' VEGETABLE PAIN KILLER. The Great Family Medicine of the Age. Every Volunteer should have a bottle, in cases of sudden sickness or disease.
Pain Killer, taken internally, should be administered with milk and water, and sweetened with sugar, or made into a syrup with molasses. For a cough, a few drops on sugar, eaten, will be more effective than any thing else. For Sore Throat, gargle the throat with a mixture of Pain Killer and water, and the relief is immediate and cure positive.

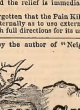
It should not be forgotten that the Pain Killer is equally as good to take internally as to use externally. Each bottle is wrapped with full directions for its use.

The new Novel, by the author of "Neighbor Jackwood,"



Ready at all principal bookstores. Published by J. R. LITTLE & CO., Boston.

Army Corps Pins in Fine Gold Plate, richly enamelled and chased, newest and most handsome style, mailed free for only One Dollar, by GEO. DEMERIT & CO., Jewelers, 363 Broadway, New York.

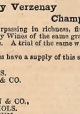
Holloway's Ointment and Pills are the unanimous result received healing and health-giving medicines of the nineteenth century. The Ointment, when applied to the surface, penetrates to the hidden radix, or root of the disease—augmenting the agency of the Pills in expelling the cause of sickness in almost every ailment that man is heir to. Sold at the manufactory, No. 80 Maiden Lane, New York, and by all Druggists, at 25c., 63c., and $1 per pot or box.

IMPORTANT.
The public are respectfully informed that I have just received, per Steamer "Celia," a fresh shipment of the Jules Mumm & Co's

Verzenay Cabinet
AND
Dry Verzenay
Champagne,

of a new vintage, surpassing in richness, fineness, and delicacy of quality any Wines of the same grade ever before sent to this country. A detail of the name will convince the most fastidious.
The following houses have a supply of this shipment on hand:
CHAS. BELLOWS,
W. S. CORWIN & CO.
H. D. FELTER.
MACY & CO.
W. H. JACKSON & CO.,
PURDY & NICHOLS.
J. F. VAN ROSSUM.
JAMES MEYER, JR.,
43 and 45 Exchange Street.
Sole Agent in the U. S. for Jules Mumm & Co.'s Champagnes.

Remington's



Approved by the Government.
Warranted superior to any other Pistol of the kind. Also Pocket and Belt Revolvers. Sold by the Trade generally.
E. REMINGTON & SONS,
Ilion, N. Y.

Attention of Officers and all members of the Army or Navy.—Purchase the new style Corps Pin or Shield Plate, richly enamelled and chased, mailed free for One Dollar, by GEO. DEMERIT & CO., 363 Broadway, New York.

$2 to $5 a day!—Agents wanted, local or traveling, everywhere. Business honorable, easy, and attractive. Article quick sale to citizen or soldier, and alike useful to man, woman or child. Particulars sent free, or less samples by mail for 31 cents. Address
A. J. HEFFORD, 848 Main Street, Hartford, Conn.

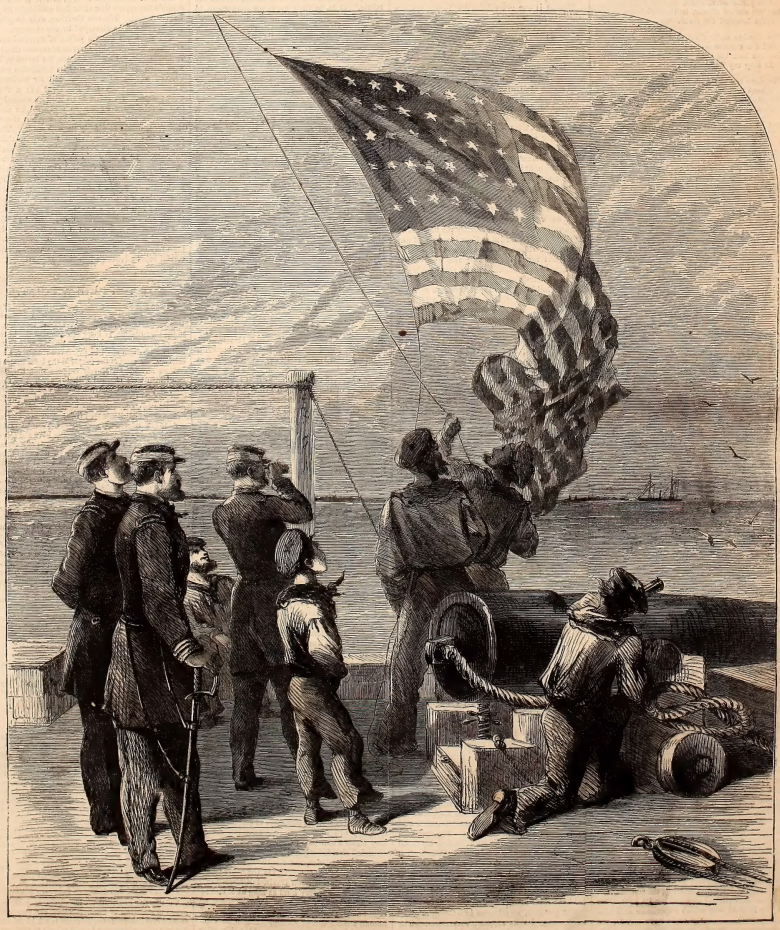
Handsomest Pin Out.—The new style Army Corps Pin, in Heavy Gold Plate, beautifully enamelled and chased, mailed free for only One Dollar.
GEO. DEMERIT & CO., 363 Broadway, N. Y.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION.

VOL. VIII.—No. 372.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 13, 1864. [$1.00 FOR FOUR MONTHS. $3.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1864, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.



"OUR FLAG IS THERE!"—[SEE PAGE 101.]

KING COTTON.

KING COTTON looks from his window
Toward the westering sun,
And he marks with an anguished horror
That his race is almost run.

His form is thin and shrunken,
His cheek is pale and wan,
And the locusts of care on his furrowed brow
Are dread to look upon.

But yesterday a monarch
In the flush of his pomp and pride,
And not content with his own broad lands
He would rule the world beside.

He built him a mighty palace,
With gold from beyond the sea,
And he built cars the corner-stone,
And he called it Slavery.

He summoned an army with banners
To keep his foes at bay;
And, gazing with pride on his palace walls,
He said, "They shall stand for aye!"

But the palace walls are shrunken,
And partly overthrown,
And the storms of war, in their violence,
Have loosened the corner-stone.

Now Famine stalks through the palace halls
With her gaunt and pallid train:
You can hear the cries of famished men,
As they cry for bread in vain.

The King can see from his palace walls
As his pride betrayed—
Thousands of mothers and wives bereft,
Thousands of graves new-made.

And he seems to see in the lowering sky
The shape of a flaming sword,
Wherein he reads with a sinking heart
The anger of the Lord.

God speed the time when the guilty King
Shall be hurled from his blood-stained throne;
And the palace of Wrong shall crumble to dust,
With its boasted corner-stone!

A temple of Freedom shall rise instead
On the decorated site,
And within its shelter alike shall stand
The black man and the white.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 13, 1864.

UNCLE SAM'S PENCE.

HOW is it that the Sanitary Commission spends so much money? is a question that is constantly asked. It has made nearly half a million by its fairs, and it still cries, More! More! Yes, but it has not made the half-million. The money collected at the great fairs has been entirely at the disposition of the local sanitary authorities, not of the Commission. The Boston fair chose to send fifty thousand dollars to the Commission; and it was well done, as it was truly needed, and will be wisely spent. But while the proceeds of the fairs will be converted into material supplies, there is a large monthly cash outlay which the Commission has to meet, or stop its operations. Distributing supplies is but one part of the work of the Commission; and if all the money raised should be devoted to that purpose more than half its benefits would be destroyed.

A moment's thought will show exactly the point, and Treat No. 73 of the Sanitary issues tells the story plainly. The Sanitary Commission works, as it were, with five hands. It distributes supplies. It inspects camps and fields-hospitals by medical men. It inspects general hospitals by the same agents. It organizes special relief with all its agencies, in all its departments; and it keeps an accurate Hospital Directory, so that the situation and condition of five hundred thousand soldiers may be known to their friends throughout the country.

Now this Sanitary Inspection may save more lives than hundreds of wagon-loads of supplies. Shall the Inspection be abolished? If not, it can be supported by cash only.

Or the Special Relief, which has lodges and homes all along the Atlantic coast and upon the Mississippi—shall it be relinquished? Ask the soldiers. But if it is to be maintained, it can only be with money.

Or the Hospital Directory? It costs very much, but it tells all about the sick and wounded, wherever they may be; and when it was lately a question whether it should be continued, there was such an earnest pressure from the friends of the soldiers every where not to give it up that it was seen to be a necessity of the service, and is continued.

Now, to keep all this machinery going, so essential to the welfare of the soldiers and the happiness of their homes, at least thirty thousand dollars are required every month. It is from the Central Treasury that the money for such expenses is drawn; and it is in this view that, while its branches in the Supply Department may be full to overflowing, the Commission may be hard pushed to continue its operations in the freefold way which experience and wisdom have demonstrated to be necessary for the complete success of any one department. Besides, all the agents, and they must be hundreds, in all the departments are paid agents, as they ought to be, both for effectiveness and discipline. There is the system of transportation also, independent of the regular army medical department, which enables succor to be immediate upon the battle-field, and there is the outlay for every form of relief at every battle.

For all these purposes ready money is essential. It must be as sure an income as that of any other business, and it must last while the war lasts, or this great mercy must stop. Now the revenue for the work is drawn and can be drawn only from the hearts of the people, for in this case it is the heart that opens the purse. The money given is the Peter's pence of the crusade of humanity in which the nation is engaged. Who wishes it to stop? Who, if he had but twopence, and a dear brother or friend in the war, but would say, "One of them shall be for Peter, whose name this time is Uncle Sam."

A GROSS INJUSTICE.

THERE is one gross injustice to our soldiers which Congress should not lose a week in correcting, and that is the pay of the colored troops. If colored men are paid, don't enlist them. If the prejudice of race and color is insuperable, yield to it. But why should the American people do an unpardonably mean thing? If we are ashamed to acknowledge the heroism of the colored troops at Milliken's Bend, at Port Hudson, at Fort Wagner—upon every field, in fact, and in every battle where they have been tried—let us at least be manly enough to say to them, "We can not treat you honorably, so go home!"

Men for man, the colored troops at present enlisted are not inferior to any of our soldiers. Whole regiments were recruited under the express statement from Washington that they were to be treated like all other soldiers. Whole regiments, finding that we did not keep our word, have declined to receive any pay whatever, and have respectfully preferred to wait until we were ready to fulfill our promises, meanwhile performing cheerfully the most incessant and onerous duties. How long would any regiment of white men, however brave and loyal, which had been enlisted like the Fifty-fourth Massachusetts (colored), under the promise of thirteen dollars a month and three dollars and a half for clothing, remain quiet under a monthly payment of seven dollars and three additional for clothing? And who would blame them for demanding the fulfillment of the contract or a release from service?

Do we at this moment need all the stalwart arms we can gather to the national cause or the life of the nation when we can wisely disband the fifty or sixty thousand colored soldiers already in the service? And is there one Senator or Representative in Congress, excepting Fernando Wood's member, who can look upon the people with the colored troops to be paid equally with all others? "I suppose my body will stop a bullet as well as another," said a colored soldier with bitter sarcasm.

The prejudice from which this injustice springs is part of the foul fruit of slavery. What is called an instinctive antipathy is merely the feeling inevitably associated with the color of an enslaved race. If the Thracians had been of a blue complexion, the Romans would have declared that they had an instinctive antipathy to blue eyes. For why should not a Frenchman or an Englishman have it toward the black race as well as we? "I don't like my dog to play and eat a gentleman, at a dinner-table in this city, of an Englishman who had been describing a visit to the West Indies, "when you found yourself sitting at table between two colored men?" "They were gentlemen," was the answer, "and I felt as I do at this moment."

But the point for every honest man to ponder is this: We invited the colored men to fight for us: they have shown themselves brave, clever, and obedient, and we refuse to pay them what we pay other soldiers. Could any picture of the sheer breach of faith and wanton injustice of such conduct, a distinction like this, even if it were honorably made, tends to maintain a feeling of caste which would be fatal to the army. All that we ask is fair play for every man who will risk his life for the country; and against foul play, whether hung between Englishmen, Frenchmen, Irishmen, or Germans, whether with white, black, or red men, we shall not fail to protest as earnestly and persistently as we can.

HOW TO DO IT.

THERE are two policies of the restoration of the Union. One is that of the Copperheads, and the other that of the Administration and the Union men of the country. The first proposes that whenever the rebel leaders lay down their arms and take the oath to the Constitution the National armies shall be disbanded. The other proposes that, until the country has received some satisfactory proof that the rebellion is destroyed, and not merely smothered, it shall hold the rebel district by arms.

For instance, we advance into Georgia. The rebel army, let us suppose, surrenders. The people take the oath. A provisional Governor is appointed by the National authority, and he orders an election. Who shall vote? "Why, of course," cry the Copperheads, "those who are voters under the State Constitution!" Very well. The election is held, and a tool of Stephens or of Toombs, or Robert Toombs himself, is elected Governor. What will you do? Shall the Government order General Grant to evacuate Georgia? Is the State restored to the Union and peace secured? Or if in Mississippi Jefferson Davis—mere supposition, but equally false to the Government—is elected Governor according to the forms of the State Constitution, is he to be recognized and the troops withdrawn?

No citizen of the United States acts so absurdly in his smallest private matters. Does any body suppose that collectively those citizens will play the fool? Have they been sending their sons and brothers to be murdered for nothing? Do they mean to put a premium upon treason and rebellion? If the Constitution did not enable them to settle the question as it should be settled, their common sense would supersede the Constitution. The Copperhead theory of the Constitution is simply that of the rebels. It is, in their view, an instrument to prevent the maintenance of the United States Government, and to secure the local sovereignty of States in but an echo of Calhoun's theory, which was expressly devised to cover disunion and destroy the National supremacy.

The plan which the Administration has avowed in public approval is that of the Administration. It proposes first to occupy the rebel States by force of the National arms; then to appoint a provisional governor, who may order an election. By what authority? By that of the United States. And the same authority—not the State Constitution—will decree when, where, and under what conditions, that election shall be held. If it result in the election of men who conform to the requirements they become the rightful government of the State, because they represent the people of the State who are loyal to the United States. If these people are but a fourth of the population, and can not enforce their authority upon the rest, the United States Government helps them by force of arms, as it is bound to do by the Constitution. When the loyal State authority shall inform the Government of the United States that it is able to maintain itself the national force will be withdrawn.

Now the paramount condition of the election must be the oath against slavery, and this for two reasons. First, because the only sensible hope of quiet lies in the reason of the people of the South from . . e control of a slaveholding aristocracy; and, second, because the overthrow of the system is the only political victory of the North based upon slavery. There is no doubt whatever that so long as that absurd contradiction of the American principle, and conscience, and policy endures, just so long the peace of the country will be threatened. Andrew Johnson, of Tennessee, a Southerner, a slaveholder, a Democrat, expresses the sense of the American people in saying: "Slavery has been the destroying element which tried to put down the Government, and the Government should put it down immediately and forever."

SENATOR DAVIS.

SENATOR WILSON has done well in withdrawing his resolutions for the expulsion of Senator Jefferson Davis. The letter of Mr. Davis declares that he meant only a legitimate Parliamentary opposition to the measures of the Government, and there is no reason for doubting his sincerity. "I am a man who always sympathizes with indignation, because his temper is so furious and ungovernable that every time he speaks upon the public affairs he becomes absolutely speechless," and he has lived through three years of the war without comprehending in the least degree either its cause or its inevitable consequence. The speeches and letters of such a gentleman must be patiently endured, like those of Mr. Roebuck in the British Parliament, or of the Copperhead orators in our own House of Representatives.

Mr. Garrett Davis is a statesman who believes that if a few secessionists and a few abolitionists had been hung three years ago there would have been no trouble. That civil wars are always the conflict of ideas and not of men, he does not perceive. He undoubtedly thinks that if Martin Luther had been quietly poisoned there would have been no Protestant Reformation, and if only Patrick Henry had been throttled, the American revolution would have been avoided. But all such men are fruit, they are not trees. So long as the trees last the fruit will be generated. Every form of injustice, of despotism, of tyranny, will forever produce enemies. You may shoot John Hampden, but you have not wounded civil Liberty. You may strike Charles Sumner into silence, but the barbarism of slavery will still be denounced. On the other hand, you may hang Jefferson Davis, but slavery will breed Davises of every kind as long as it lasts.

If Senator Davis were a younger man he might at last comprehend these simple truths of human nature and of history. But if, as Confucius said, a man never changes his habits after he is forty years old, how much less can a politician be expected to change his views after he is seventy? As long as he sits in Congress Mr. Davis will divide his wrath between the partisans of Slavery and the friends of Liberty, and believe ardently and sincerely that if you wish to prevent nettles from stinging you must reprove them severely.

MILITARY SURPRISES.

THE rebellion will not break up like a frozen river in spring; and amidst its waning fortunes we are not to forget that it has still a large, brave, and trained army, led by desperate chiefs, and that this army will not disappear until it has struck some strenuous blows. General Schenck, of Ohio, said pertinently in Congress last week that we must be prepared for wild movements from the rebels in extremity. For undoubtedly they will mass their forces and fall with overpowering weight upon some point of our extended lines. Exactly where they will strike it is impossible to say; nor is it unreasonable to suppose that their first onslaught may be successful. We can therefore only be prepared, and not be dismayed by the surprise.

Yet there are certain points of carefull importance, where a rebel surprise or success should be impossible. East Tennessee, for instance, is a position so important that its possession was deemed worthy of a special call for prayer and Thanksgiving from the President but a few weeks since. Its value to us and its necessity to the rebels are known to every soldier and civilian in the country. Any mishap there, therefore, would be simply unpardonable. The nation has the clearest right to require that, whatever expense of life or treasure, Knoxville shall be held. It is certainly unfortunate that we should have heard of General Grant's presence in St. Louis simultaneously with the falling back of our forces before Longstreet toward Knoxville; for what becomes of our Thanksgiving of two months ago if Longstreet can seriously threaten to dear Knoxville out? This should not be a debatable point; for any disaster in that region would shake public confidence more than any other conceivable event, except a successful rebel advance upon Washington.

NOT TOO FINE A POINT.

NOT to put too fine a point upon it, does any body really believe that Messrs. Vallandigham, Bryard, Brooks, Saulsbury, Seymour, & Co. are more loyal to the Constitution, or more anxious that the liberties of every man and the dignity of the flag and of the nation shall be preserved than Mr. Lincoln and the mass of the people in the loyal States?

Does any body sincerely suppose that, if these gentlemen were charged with the conduct of this war, a permanent and prosperous and honorable peace would be obtained more speedily than it will probably be under the present authorities?

Does any body doubt that if Mr. Jefferson Davis and Judah Benjamin, and Robert Toombs could have their way they would prefer to have the Government of the United States in the hands of Messrs. Seymour, Vallandigham, & Co.? And would it be because they suppose that rebels would be compelled to submit to the authority of the Government, or because they believe that, with the Government in such hands, the rebels could dictate terms of settlement?

Why is it, that, in the third year of a terrible war to maintain the Union and Constitution, the people of the country have overwhelmingly confided the men who claim to be distinctively the friends of the Union and the Constitution? Because not one of them—whatever he has said—has given proof of any sounder knowledge of the Constitution or sincerer devotion to the Union than Mr. Lincoln, or General Butler, or Andrew Johnson, or Mayor Swan of Baltimore.

The gentlemen who have been politically known heretofore as the most supple tools of the leaders now in rebellion—who have held with Governor Seymour, even if they have not said, as he has, that, if the Union could not be saved without destroying slavery, it might slide—these gentlemen claim to be peculiarly jealous of the principles of the Constitution and of the rights of the people. Why, then, do the people repudiate them?

Because, not to put too fine a point upon it, they do not believe them.

AN APOSTLE OF PEACE.

WE have alluded several times to the fact that in January, 1861, when the rebels were preparing to overthrow by force the Government of the United States, PEYTON MCCRARY apologized for their conduct that he could not help him obtain arms for that purpose. In other words, the new apostle of peace regretted that he could not furnish but the city of New York should in no way be made responsible for the outrage.

"AS MAYOR, I have no authority over the police. If I had the power, I should summarily punish the authors of this illegal and unjustifiable seizure of private property. —PEYTON MCCRARY.

This is the gentleman who waxes so pathetic over the shedding of brothers' blood, and proposes to send commissioners to Richmond to ask his friend Toombs upon what terms he will submit to the laws of his country. If he had had the power, he says, he would summarily have punished those who tried to prevent Tombs and Company from murdering our brothers and sons. But when Toombs and Company have been engaged in that noble work for three years, the amiable Mr. Wood says nothing of summary punishment for them, but prattles of measures of fraternal conciliation. And he strikes a fine attitude. "What! does any body question my loyalty?" he exclaims. Nobody that we know of. There are many things that do not admit of question. Benedict Arnold's patriotism, for instance, or the honesty of a man who escapes the State Prison by the statute of limitations.

THACKERAY.

"THE last time the writer," Mr. SHIRLEY BROOKS, "saw WILLIAM THACKERAY was on Wednesday, the 16th of December. They were next-door neighbors at a dinner where all the intimate friends. THACKERAY was in his usual spirits, which were never boisterous, but always cheerful, and he had pleasant words for all present. He had something to say of the 'circumstances' touching which the National Shakspeare Committee has been under a cloud of regret, and which Mr. LUCAS has indignantly declared will cause posterity to 'point with scorn' at the assistance in the Committee's labors. They did not ruffle THACKERAY, however they may have incensed his friends; and it is not needful—at least at present—to reproduce his smiling judgment on those whom it concerned. He enjoyed himself much, in his own quiet way, and contributed greatly to the enjoyment of those who were something less quiet; and a question arising about a subscription in aid of a disabled artist, he instantly added to it a guinea. If memory assure me had previously promised. The writer's very last recollection of the cynic, therefore, is in connection with an act of Christian kindness. On the following Monday he attended the funeral of a lady who was interred in Kensal Green Cemetery. On the Tuesday evening he came to his favorite club—the Garrick—and asked a seat at the table of two friends, who, of course, welcomed him as all welcomed THACKERAY. On Wednesday he was out several times, and was seen in Palace Gardens 'reading a book.' Before the dawn on Thursday he was where there is no night."

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

CONGRESS.

SENATE.—January 27. A bill was reported back from Military Committee providing a bounty to soldiers enlisted before May, 1861.—A bill was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, providing for better administration of the Indian Affairs in California.—A bill introduced providing for the appointment of assayer from subtreasury at Boise City, Idaho.—The Committee on Naval Affairs reported a bill providing that persons belonging to the Volunteer Naval service shall be admitted to the Senate, and that all such appointments cease at the expiration of 60 days after the return of the vessel.—The bill to promote enlistments came up; an amendment was adopted authorizing the President to pay a sum not more than $100 to colored recruits, in lieu of two months' advance pay.—The time for closing the wills, children, and mother of colored recruits was debated; Mr. Powell wished to strike out the clause; Mr. Henderson wished it to apply only to recruited slaves belonging to delayed soldiers; Senators Grimes and Wilkinson advocated the retention of the clause; they would free all those connected with men fighting our battles; Mr. Henderson, of Missouri, said that he was in favor of Congress abolishing slavery wherever it had the power to do so; that if Congress had the power to pass this bill, it had the power to abolish slavery where this bill did not. Mr. Grimes seconded; he had no doubt upon the question, and would cheerfully vote for such a bill; Mr. Henderson continued, declining to debate the question of the powers of Government during the existence of the war, but that the action proposed would be calculated to irritate the loyal people of Missouri, who are now perfecting measures of emancipation; one of the blessings which would ultimately result from the war would be the abolition of slavery by the States themselves.—The case of Mr. Davis was brought up and further debated. Senators Davis, Saulsbury, Fessenden, and Lane, of Indiana, all Republicans, spoke against the proposition for a resolution of expression of censure.—January 28. After unimportant business the amendment of the Homestead bill was taken up and passed; it provides that any soldier or sailor who from being in service is unable to do the necessary acts to avail preliminary acts required by law, and any one of whose family depending upon the head which he has died in service, and upon which settlement and improvement have been made, and upon making affidavit before the commanding officer, and paying the necessary sum, be entitled to a homestead conferred by the Homestead act.—The President was requested to give information as to the steps taken to secure the colonization of colored persons by Hayti, Liberia, etc.—The case of Mr. Davis was resumed. Mr. Johnson, of Maryland, moved that Mr. Foster opposed the resolution of expulsion or censure, Mr. Wilson spoke in favor of withdrawing upon the general course of Mr. Davis, and his resolutions in particular; but acting that the war had put upon record much evidence of disloyal but smug and flattering. Mr. Johnson opposing the clause forbidding the voluntary the relatives of deceased troops; this the Senator said would be unconstitutional, and subject to the decision rendered by the Homestead bill. The President was requested to give information as to the steps taken to secure the colonization of colored persons to Hayti, Liberia, etc.—The case of Mr. Davis was resumed. Mr. Johnson, of Maryland, moved that Mr. Foster opposed the resolution of expulsion or censure, Mr. Wilson spoke in favor of withdrawing upon the general course of Mr. Davis, and his resolutions in particular; but acting that the war had put upon record much evidence of disloyal but smug and flattering. Mr. Johnson opposing his language, and as members on the Administration side were willing to take the Senator's construction, that the resolution of expulsion became a farce, and he accordingly withdrew it. The question matter was then concluded.—Mr. Sherman introduced a bill for the relief of Mr. Johnson, of Missouri, who was driven from his residence by the rebels, and who has since been murdered by them. The bill was referred to the Committee on Claims.—Mr. Sherman opposed the amendment, which made no distinction between persons who were and those who were held as slaves. It guaranteed to each one who entered the service freedom for himself, his mother, his wife, and his children. This guarantee was the inevitable consequence of the employment of the slave as a soldier; and Congress had no right to employ slaves without giving to the owner the employ slaves; if we can give them pay, bounties, and rations we can give them freedom. He was in favor of taking into the military service all the slaves we need. If our enemies took slaves into their service, he said that we should pay a reasonable compensation to loyal masters. He was prepared to vote for the most extreme system of emancipation, with compensation to loyal owners. Mr. Wilkinson, of Minnesota, while favoring emancipation, opposed the bill.

HOUSE.—January 27. The Deficiency bill came up; the House refused to concur in the amendment of the Senate appropriating money to be expended by the Secretary of Treasury extension to the amount necessary to protect them from forgery; the bill was then passed, the previous voting against it.—Mr. Kinney, delegate from Utah, reported the death of Mr. Fercuson, the author of the bill by which he denounced the Mormons as rebels and traitors. Mr. Kinney also presented the petition of Brigham Wood with disloyalty, referring especially to his regarding the detention in New York of persons arrested by the Governor of Georgia. He were a member of the House of Representatives, and was not a traitor.—Mr. Wood, Mr. Wood replied, asserting his loyalty, and declaring that Governor Seward, of New York, in refusing to his dispatch to the Governor of Georgia. All that he did was in accordance with the law. The persons against the arms had been detained by his order, replying that he would not have done it, and that the power was not responsible to the Mayor. [The correspondence referred to is as follows: Governor Seward's letter to Governor Wood, January 24, 1864, "Is it true that any arms intended for and consigned to the State of Georgia have been seized by the public authorities in New York? Your answer is expected by the Governor of Georgia at once." The Mayor answered, "In reply to your dispatch I regret to say that arms consigned to the Governor of the State of Georgia have been seized by the police of this State, but the Governor of Georgia will please to be made responsible for the outrage. As Mayor I have no authority with the police. I have, however, reason to apprehend disturbance of this illegal and unjustifiable seizure of property." A vote to notice that the correspondence had taken place was carried.—Mr. Kinney said he would "take advantage of their privilege to prevent the passage of the bill, and would speak against time. If the consideration was postponed till Monday.—The Confederate Act was discussed by Messrs. Wickliffe and Cox, the former claiming that modern usages of nations gave no right to confiscate the property of enemies, that the Constitution of the United States, nor to establish civil governments in any of the conquered States. Mr. Cox argued that under the war all the obligations of the Union were binding upon the people of the insurrectionary States, that the laws of nations they had put themselves beyond the privileges of the Constitution, and that the only question of the war in which peace could be secured only when we took away the resources of the rebels. The example of Cromwell should be followed, he said that he had put down rebellion by force. Mr. Cox opposed confiscation on the ground of public policy and Constitutional objections.—January 28. Mr. Wickliffe, in replying a tax of two per cent. on all transactions in gold; that the property of the rebels should be seized for the use of the Union army shall be opened to trade to all alike, and that the Government should issue paper. Mr. Hill, opposing for the temporary government of a new Territory, to be called Montana, out of portions of Idaho and Dakota. Mr. Kasson introduced a joint resolution disapproving of the French intervention in Mexico.—January 29. The report of the Committee on Elections relating to the election in Louisiana was discussed by Messrs. Dawes and Voorhees, who claims to have been elected from New Orleans in the session, and was opposed by Messrs. Hooper, Hale, Davis, from the Committee, said that the election arose from the military necessity of the case, and from no fraud, and that none had been legally held. No votes were cast at Port Hudson, and the Union vote was not a few from that part of the district lying without New Orleans, to exclude from the polls persons disloyal to the Union, or members followed in support of the position of the Committee.—January 30. Mr. Dawes closed the debate on the claim. The subject was postponed until Tuesday, and the House, after the consideration of a bill in relation to the territory of Mr. Neal, of Missouri, whose death was formally announced, adjourned.—February 1. Mr. Ashley, of Territory 1. Mr. Arnold introduced a joint resolution that a bill authorizing the issue of bonds to the amount of $400,000,000 receive a commutation in money for the deficiency.—The Committee on Judiciary reported a bill providing that the deficiency of District Attorneys taking measures to forfeit the property of persons engaged in the rebellion, and to punish; whether it is expedient, on account of the increase of the public debt, to increase the pay of officers, and what allowance should be given to those who, not having been in the service, have been disabled in consequence of it; what legislation is required to enable assignments to be made by insolvent debtors for the benefit of their creditors; to inquire into trade regulations in insurrectionary districts, and to report by bill or otherwise; to inquire into fraud or favoritism; laid over.—A select committee was appointed on the bill to provide for the payment of the Alleghenies.—Mr. Eldridge offered preamble and resolution declaring the unwillingness of the people of this country to the principle of self-government; that the draft had proved inadequate to fill the ranks of our armies, and should fail equally on rich and poor; and that therefore the Military Committee be instructed to report a bill repealing or suspending any further draft, and offering sufficient pay and bounties to secure the requisite number of volunteers: laid on the table. 94 to 42.—Mr. Grinnell offered a preamble and resolution to the effect that colored persons claimed as slaves have rendered valuable services to the army; that the further employment of colored troops would relieve the people of the North; therefore, it was necessary to have a larger number of persons of African descent would meet in the approaching election, be in favor of the draft, but having the grade of Lieutenant-General was brought up. Mr. Garfield opposed its present passage; a Lieutenant-General could do nothing during the war that could not be done by the General-in-Chief; the President could select any one for Commander-in-General; for Lieutenant-General it was better to wait till the close of the war, and then one who had merited such; every one knew who would now be appointed under this bill; would it be advisable to recall him from the army and make him a brigadier-General? Mr. Farnsworth replied, that General Grant be selected he would not take up his quarters in Washington; he had still command of the army, and hasten to any point where his presence was required. Mr. Garfield replied that the bill contemplated that the Lieutenant-General should actually take the command, and not be a mere appendage to Chief-of-Staff. He should vote for it. Other members followed in the same general strain on the bill. Mr. Ashley moved to lay it on the table was negatived, 113 to 75, when Mr. Rice offered an amendment providing that the bill should take effect on action, which was agreed to, 111 to 11. The bill was then passed, 86 to 36. Mr. Rice explains that the President may, when he thinks it expedient, and with the consent of the Senate, appoint a Lieutenant-General, who is the officer not below the grade of Major-General, who, on appointment as Lieutenant-General, shall be authorized, under the direction of the President, to command the armies of the United States, and to make such rules and ordinances to be as provided for in the acts of July 17th, 1862, and March 3d, 1863; but nothing in this act shall affect the rank, pay, or emolument of General Scott.—February 2. Mr. Ashley, from the Committee on Retrenchment, reported a bill providing that the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized to issue bonds for the payment of the Revolutionary debt.—The Enrollment bill from the Senate, with amendments, was taken up. Mr. Stevens explained that the bill was made the special order for Feb. 9.—The bill to facilitate the payment of the national debt was then taken up, and discussed soldiers was passed. It provides that on the production of $100 to the Secretary of the Treasury, he shall furnish the Second Auditor with an account of the military service of the claimant, and the amount due him, which shall be paid on the certificate of any paymaster in the army. All claims of the kind heretofore presented shall be subject to be adjudicated by the Commissioner of Pensions, and paid on the certificate of the paymaster of the army.—On motion of Mr. Clark, the Committee of Ways and Means were instructed to report a bill for the repeal of the provision for duties upon foreign imports, especially articles of luxury, so as to produce an increase of the duties of the customs to the internal revenue tax so as to produce $200,000,000; if impracticable, the Secretary of State and the Secretary be $300,000,000; and of authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to borrow on the above expenses, loans of $200,000,000.—The Committee on the Judiciary were instructed to report a bill to prevent the sale of arms to persons connected any obstacles in the way of such an organization.—Mr. Stevens said that he will permit it to exist a President at the next term; and, if so, whether Congress will not remove those difficulties.—The Committee was then up, and, after a qualified speech in its favor by Mr. Brooks, of New York, rose.—Mr. Clement, of Pennsylvania, explained that the bill prepared by the Military Committee was to be in the nature of a substitute for existing laws; the bounty was left at $300, instead of being raised to $400, and all the provisions of the present enactment, looking to the exhaustion of the draft. Mr. Chanler opposed the bill, as unnecessary, as a draft, and bringing in a new bill for the enrollment of all persons liable to military service, and providing for the arrest of deserters and the prevention of desertion.—Mr. Davis of Kentucky, replied, misunderstanding upon the general course of Mr. Chanler. Mr. Chanler explained that his remarks were directed against the Confederate Government as he has here expressed his views in the Democratic caucus, and his personal alteration between Messrs. Anderson of Kentucky and Allen of Illinois.—Mr. Anderson explained.

THE ARMY OF THE POTOMAC.

Our army in Virginia remains in its usual quiet. The weather of the past fortnight produced a great deal of enthusiasm in its ranks. According to rebel paper there is a considerable movement of troops in the enemy's country, reduction of their ration, and the General has had to issue orders against the practice of desertion which was so litigio to prevent anarchy. This will explain the late outbreak of the rebel journals in the interest of the rebel army become engaged in a mutual conflict.

WEST VIRGINIA.

A serious fight occurred on Saturday, January 30, in Greenbrier County, Western Virginia, between the rebels and Union. A train of eighty wagons had been sent out from Camp Piatt, Kanawha County, to bring in the winter's commissary stores for the garrison at Petersburg, accompanied by a guard of 200 men. The train, owned, under Colonel Jones, was suddenly attacked when three miles from Williamsburg, by a force of rebels, said to be commanded by surrender the train. General Early, it appears, is again in the field in Western Virginia, with a large force, and Gen. Thoburn evacuated Petersburg on Saturday night, and retreated to Moorefield, where he was immediately attacked by the enemy. The rebels then took possession of Petersburg, and have been in New Creek Valley since.

In which the enemy was driven back two miles. Our forces have occupied Romney and Moorefield Junction.

EAST TENNESSEE.

On the 26th of January Governor Andrew Johnson issued a proclamation ordering an election on the 1st of March, for members of Congress, and to vote the sense of the people of allegiance.

The object of the rebel order Longstreet is too persevering to be overlooked. Movements are now in operation in the direction of Kentucky which have an importance beyond the spring campaign. Let us see what these movements are. Longstreet is in East Tennessee. The most important is the disappearance of Johnson's army from Dalton and Resaca, and its distance beyond. Our cavalry, having fallen back, were attacked by the enemy, who gathered in force. Longstreet, who was in charge of Hindman's cavalry recovered the fortunes of the day. Our loss was 200 in killed and 1,000 in prisoners have fallen back upon Knoxville, and the enemy has advanced and made demonstrations against the fortifications of that city. Our force is by left for forage to our army, the others having been all sent to Dalton. The enemy's movement appears to be a feint for offensive. The appearances, however, are that Longstreet is moving across the southwest corner of North Carolina with his main force, to join Johnson, and that all his present operations in the vicinity of Knoxville are intended to cover his real design.

RAID IN KENTUCKY.

An invasion on a small scale has again been inflicted upon Kentucky. Captain Gillem, commanding Scottsville, Allen County, has been driven in by a force consisting of five hundred rebels under Colonel Hamilton, and compelled to surrender his force and the town.

FOREIGN NEWS.

EUROPE.

The most extensive preparations are being made in England for the celebration of the tercentary return of Shakspeare's birthday, one of the most important features in which will be the grand Shakspearian Ball in Manchester. The Court of Exchequer has refused to grant a new trial in the case of the Alexandra. The London Times congratulates England on her escape from the threatened troubles in Italy and Mexico.—Quite an exciting debate occurred in Paris in the Corps Legislative on the Emperor's address. The Opposition attacked the principle of official candidatures, and the abuses of power in which the interference of the Ministry had indulged. Thiers strongly supported the Opposition, but in a very conservative though business manner. These matters have no affect in Europe, if we may judge from his charge to the Bishop de Montabourg, in which he declares that Napoleon III. "can hardly escaped from shipwreck again cold winds and tempests—the Solferino, Sebastopol, Mexico, Algeria question has received a new development in the position taken by Spain and France. Both have expressed their determination to occupy Mexico in the quarrel with Europeans from, and upon its cessation of a decision of the Federal Diet. Spain declared that those Powers would not interfere. Holland to accept Schleswig without consent of the Federal Diet. It is obvious that France and Austria are determined either to prevent a war, or, in case it should occur, to prevent the success of the Germans. Denmark is in the meantime, that she should retract the Novembre, and continue existing in the Duchies. They have done against the wishes of the German Diet, that during the matter into their hands. Prussia, on the other hand, is the minor German States to interfere. Impossible for the administration of the Duchies, and the Austrian and Prussian have left Copenhagen. This is a fact of which the Danish would declare a civil war. If they do so, then they are second, and the Federal Diet, in either case, will have very little to do with the result.

SOUTH AMERICA.

The election for President of the Republic of New Granada has resulted in a majority for Mosquera in only one of the nine States. It is said that he will be by force, supply retain his position. Considerable excitement has been made in Peru by an attempt on the part of the Government to imprison an Archbishop for refusing to administer the sacrament to a dying minister. The excitement was obliged to retract.

There has been a bloody revolution in Matamoros, resulting in the retention of Gen. Cortinas in command of the frontier at Brownsville. Our forces have crossed the Rio Grande for the protection of United States property. General Cortinas has been expelled, and has returned to the Texas side of the river.

ARMY AND NAVY ITEMS.

COLONEL ULRIC DAHLGREN has returned from his visit to Charleston, and reported to his father at Washington. Hopes are entertained by him that his limb will since him to resume the duties of his profession. He regrets very much being progressing favorably at Charleston, though Admiral Dahlgren is not pleased with the conduct of the rebels of disease anxiety and watchfulness.

General A. H. LESTER will soon be in New York with the following regiments of his brigade: the Eighty-first, the Ninety-first, and the Ninety-eighth New York regiments, and Howard's New York battery. All veterans having been participated in the Peninsula campaign, and also in the campaign of North Carolina. They have been re-enlisted, and are going home on short furlough and to fill up their ranks.

General GILMORE is expected in New York in a few days.

The United States steamer Kutaw is going on blockade duty off Wilmington.

Lieutenant SEMMES, of Stuart's cavalry, and cousin of the pirate SEMMES, was captured on Monday, in Maryland, by a party of cavalry.

The report of Major-General BANKS, of the operations on his staff since the raid, up to the 20th of February, amounts to $250,000,000.

Captain SMITH, Assistant Adjutant-General, has been appointed Pass-Officer between Washington and the Army of the Potomac, vice Lieutenant-Colonel Sharpe.

Private De Witt Van Horsehurg, formerly of the One Hundred and Fifty-seventh New York regiment, has attained the rank of Second Lieutenant in the Fifth New York.

The President has pardoned Francis S. Hawkins, of the Second Rhode Island cavalry, who was under sentence of death for desertion.

The troops at Fort Gibson are reported to be subsisting on half rations, owing to a defective supply system. Fodder is also scarce.

The ship Cuidez, Captain Jennings, from Yokohama, Japan, with a cargo of tea for New York, was recently captured off Point Judith, Long Island, by the Indian ocean, by the rebel pirate Alabama.

Latest reports from Alaska state that the bear's paw, of the United States brig Perry, captured on the 5th of December last, with a valuable cargo of furs, consisting in the mouth of South Carolina, are now confined in Columbia, S. C., and are well treated. The colored man of the expedition was hung as soon as captured.

From twenty-five to forty deserters come into the picket lines of the Army of the Potomac daily, and say that Tyler Corps, notwithstanding four skirmish lines have been driven out by the rebels at Fredericksburg.

A trunk containing $47,000 was found last week by our troops in a house at Bayou Sara, Louisiana.

Major-General JOHN A. MCCLERNAND, of Illinois, has been ordered to report at Springfield, Illinois.

Five blockade-runners, recently from Richmond, were arrested at Washington while on board of the stage which was conveying them to Fort Tortugas. Two of the persons were found between $20,000 and $40,000 in gold, twenty-one gold watches, and a large amount of silver. The only instances half a dozen bails were driven in on a single charge of pistol shot. In most instances the wounded covered the wound ulcer, placing the ball at the bottom of the wound, and thus giving powder on top.

Should the proposed race between the Estate and Kirkwood sailing boats between Boston and New York companies intends within a few days to run the Estate from Norfolk to New York against time, carrying the Sub-Committees of the House and Senate as judges and witnesses of the performance of the boat. She recently, on a trial trip, averaged eighteen miles an hour.

It is understood that General FREMANTON will not return to the Army of the Potomac, but will be assigned to duty in Washington or chief of the Cavalry Bureau. General Averill will probably assume command of the cavalry corps.

Lieutenant BURROW, of the Sixth Ohio Cavalry, was killed last week near Warrenton by guerrillas, under circumstances that render the death nothing short of cold-blooded murder.

It is reported that one hundred and thirty deserters came into our lines last week in one squad, the pickets leaving their guns and coming with them.

A correspondent with the Army of the Potomac writes that two Mississippi regiments attempted to fight their way out of the rebel lines for the purpose of taking the oath of allegiance to the United States, but were unsuccessful.

General ROSECRANS has arrived at St. Louis. He was warmly welcomed.

General MEADE has been quite ill at Philadelphia, but is now much better.

THE CONFEDERATES EVACUATING BROWNSVILLE, TEXAS.—[SKETCHED BY AN ENGLISH ARTIST.]

EVACUATION OF BROWNSVILLE BY THE CONFEDERATES.

BROWNSVILLE lies on the Texas side of the Rio Grande opposite Matamoras, which is two miles distant. We present above the hasty departure from this place of the Confederate garrison on November 2, 1863. The occasion of this sudden flight was the anticipated arrival of our fleet of transports off Brazos, Santiago. For two days every means of transit across the river was overcrowded with goods, furniture, cotton, and baggage, while upon both banks were piled, in confused heaps, bedding, cotton bales, luggage, vehicles, and merchandise of every description. The garrison buildings in the mean time were burned, and all cotton and stores that could not be removed. On the 6th the Federal troops occupied Brownsville, where is now the headquarters of General Herron. It was General Banks who originally occupied the position.

THE LINDELL HOTEL, ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.—[SEE PAGE 109.]

GUARD-BOAT ON PICKET DUTY OFF MOBILE.

OFF MOBILE.

OUR correspondent transmits some interesting sketches of the BLOCKADE OFF MOBILE, which we present before our readers on pages 97, 101, 104, and 105. The large picture on pages 104 and 105 represents on blockading duty, rolling and pitching about in a heavy sea. She is a first-class sloop of war, mounting 22 guns. The Hartford, Brooklyn, and Pensacola belong to the same class.

THE UNITED STATES SLOOP OF WAR "RICHMOND"

Another picture, which we give above, represents

A GUARD-BOAT ON PICKET DUTY.

Says our correspondent:

"The poor fellows manning these boats often suffer very severely from cold and rain; when the weather is moderate they divert themselves with fishing, but at best their duty is a hard one."

A third sketch, given below, represents the

"KENNEBEC" CHASING THE "GREY JACKET."

On the night of December 20 the fleet was alarmed by the usual signal notifying them that a vessel was coming out. It was dark and boisterous, but from the Richmond the rebel steamer was easily seen. It is the duty of the smaller vessels to give chase while the larger ones protect. In this case the pursuit devolved upon the Kenebec, who chased the steamer during the greater part of the next day, and celebrated New-Year's eve by her capture. The prize was a valuable one, containing five hundred bales of cotton and four hundred barrels of turpentine and resin. Accompanying these sketches is another, which we print on the first page, with the title,

"OUR FLAG IS THERE!"

Representing the stars and stripes as being hoisted by the officers and sailors on one of our gunboats at sunrise.

THE UNITED STATES STEAMER "KENNEBEC" CHASING THE REBEL STEAMER "GREY JACKET."

[FROM CHARLES DICKENS'S "All the Year Round."]

A WHITE HAND AND A BLACK THUMB.

IN THIRTEEN CHAPTERS.

CHAPTER V.

PASSING over a few days, we find our Polly-my-Lamb no longer a solitary little maiden, but under the affectionate and rather piercing eye of Aunt Sercold—no relation in the world, but what, I am sorry to say, is often infinitely better—an old friend, and also a school-fellow of good Mrs. Humpage, deceased.

This lady who, though the sum of five-and-forty summers had ripened her fair cheek, was yet unchosen as a bride, had passed the later years of her life alone. The death of her mother, in Holland, had occasioned her return to her own land; and, at the request of the orphaned heiress, she had taken up her temporary abode in Jermyn Street, and there did her utmost to cheer and comfort the lonely little girl.

In the lowest possible tone, let us whisper to the reader that Aunty Sercold, who was by nature of a lively and social turn, found it sometimes a little, even not a little, dull. No power or persuasion on earth, however, could have prevailed with her to say so. The pair saw no company, and were not the pair? but the greatest audacity was perpetrated by Lord Job himself, who took off the enraged magistrate's wig and chain of office, and rode off, decorated with both! This unheard-of atrocity provoked the Common Council to such a degree as to induce the offer of an immense reward; and it seemed that Lord Job, the fearless, deemed it no unwise proceeding to relieve the metropolis for a few months of his presence. At all events, his daring and skilful hand was no longer recognisable in the daily recurring records of London crime. And thus matters rested on the morning on which we revisit the house of the Three Elms.

"Do you prefer sitting in the window, Aunt Sercold?" said Polly-my-Lamb. "Will you not be more comfortable here?" arranging a tempting cushioned chair near the fire.

"My dear, who are your opposite neighbors, do you know?" was the rejoinder.

"A Mr. Ascroft, I believe, ma'am," said the young lady, quietly.

"That's one of them, dear. Who else?"

"Oh! Captain Broxley."

"The big man, that always quarrels with his chairman. Yes. Well?"

"I beg your pardon?"

"Who else, dear? Go on," said Mistress Sercold, her eyes fixed upon the house.

"Ah! yes—a Mrs.—"

"Stiff, Polly! Once for all, who is that pretty young gentleman, always making believe to shave, in the middle window, but always looking—looking—"

"At you, aunt?"

"Well, it's certainly very odd," said Aunt Sercold, with a becoming embarrassment. "It unquestionably is odd. I wish he wouldn't, you know. Ah! there he is! It was, I think, on the second day after my arrival, that I happened to be standing at the window, when a young person—a remarkably handsome young man—suddenly appeared in the window of the opposite house. Our eyes met. His fell—he withdrew. A few minutes later I chanced again to put open the window—again he appeared to me—again his eyes fell, and, with an air of diffidence, shall I call it? once more he precipitately retired. These little encounters have been of frequent occurrence, my dear. If he sees but the flutter of my dress, in a second he is at his post, but only to desert it again, with an expression of mingled indifference and (vanity would whisper) admiration, which, I must confess, have not been wholly without their effect on my mind. I thought at first it might be you!"

"Dear me, aunt! why should you imagine that?" asked Polly the innocent.

"I'll tell you why I knew it was not," returned the elder spinster. "You happened to come to the window once, during one of these singular interviews. In a second the young man's face changed to its whole expression. His colored cravat, as stole away, as though caught in some fact to the tender gravity of which his heart bore testimony."

"Dear me, aunty," returned Polly, looking very little, "I think we may find a more agreeable subject to discuss than Master Arthur Haggerdorn."

"Arthur Haggerdorn! So, that's his name! Why didn't you say so before?"

"Did I not, aunt? I—suppose I—forgot—or—didn't reason. Yes—oh yes—Master Arthur Haggerdorn."

And thereupon the young lady recounted to her companion the history as detailed by Mrs. Ascroft; not omitting the history with which he had inspired his kind landlady.

Miss Sercold was sensibly touched, and with difficulty restrained from tears.

"The poor orphan!" she exclaimed. "And, doubtless, now he is striving to do something for his daily bread. I shall never forgive myself for having, though involuntarily, embarrassed these noble efforts. He must have wasted an immensity of time at that window. We owe him some reparation, dear. Could we not, now," added Aunt Sercold, with suddenly hesitation, "send him—a little—"

"Money, dear aunt? He does not want it."

"Nor would I so far insult his noble nature as to offer it," said Miss Sercold, warmly. "He would wave it from him with disdain! No—send him a little note, you know. Invite him to tea."

"My dear aunt! Tea? Are you in your senses?"

"I flatter myself I am as collected as yourself, child," returned Miss Sercold, in a high state of perturbation; "nor is there any thing so very extraordinary in my proposal. At the Hague people used to come in to tea without being asked at all. I am sure he draws beautifully. My dear mother was devoted to the art, and I have had paying and fitting reverence to her memory in encouraging its professors to the best of my power."

"But not necessarily by inviting them to tea, dear."

"Humph! But it's no matter. Indeed, I must beg your pardon for forgetting that I am myself but a guest."

"You are my dearest, almost my only friend." And Polly-my-Lamb kissed and soothed her in a manner few could resist; but my aunt was hard to pacify, and continued to bemoan the youth's hard fortune, expressing at the same time such a longing desire to inspect those wondrous specimens of art on which he was so unceasingly employed, that Polly-my-Lamb, wrought to it, yielded reluctant consent that a verbal message should be dispatched to Mrs. Ascroft, intimating a wish to examine more closely any of those productions of the young artist, whose progress had been unavoidably witnessed over the way. The young lady, moreover, with conscience to this forward step, by regarding the message as confined to Mrs. Ascroft, and instructing the bearer accordingly.

To her extreme confusion an answer was returned, with lightning speed, to the effect that the young gentleman would be delighted to display to the arts—as represented by Master Haggerdorn.

"Of course we will ask him to tea, aunt," said Polly, resumed by commendable grace. "Some slight allusion to his juvenility. "He shall have tamarisks and Barbary prunes, and you shall tell him a story."

So, in due course, that is, at six o'clock, the expected guest appeared, proving to be a remarkably fine infant of nineteen, with a handsome figure and bewildered brain, presented himself, pot-tolo in hand, and paid his compliments to the two ladies.

Miss Sercold thought Polly the handsomest chief over the Barbary prunes, and both ladies welcomed their guest not the less graciously because the traces of severe labor were plainly visible on his fair open face. The lad's singular beauty, even more striking on a closer inspection, almost awed Aunt Sercold into silence; and Polly-my-Lamb, who, on seeing the stature of her guest, had resolved to be matchle, found herself transmuted, by force of the law of hospitality, into common clay.

Agitated as he certainly was, young Haggerdorn's manner possessed all the seeming ease and actual grace of perfect breeding. But this being, for the present, incompatible with her duties as hostess, the young lady devoted herself to the tea-urn, and to maintain the silent fascination of her visitor, by trying to feel both wounded and offended by his presence there at all—which, by the way, was readily urged by his landlady, being completely overruled.

Why, the impertinent young man had absolutely a brown and curling mustache! Not a doubt of it, is true, as to have passed (across the way) for one of those darker shadows which tedious sickness casts on many a fair face. Nothing of the kind, however. Beard or no beard, the boy—that is, the youth—that is, the man—could not be turned out till after tea.

Now it was that the drawings, which proved to be very indifferently-executed studies of highly uninteresting parallelograms, were brought into relief. Never, surely, were the early struggles of juvenile artist against the difficulties of perspective and the tenacious laws of gravitation dealt with such cheering encouragement. A donkey, upon three swollen legs (fourth invisible), who had parted with his shadow to the proprietor of the sunshine at a shilling as big as his own head, provoked a world of enthusiastic comment. A ruined feudal residence, whose topmost tower, in defiance of the laws governing impenetrable wood, locked like tipsy Titans fighting in a green bog, restored comparative composure to the elder spinster. And, finally, a sea view with a huge black specimen of naval architecture, perched on the very apex of a mighty wave erected expressly for the purpose, placed every body completely at ease.

But as Polly-my-Lamb regained her sensational calmness she became only more and more deeply impressed with the singular character of the countenances before her. Sometimes a pain did she turn her eyes, almost angrily, aside. As often did their infallibly wander back, until every lineament of that face of surpassing beauty was rooted in her heart and memory as though engraven in steel.

But the voice—the voice! From what etoken subject in Nature's laboratory, where that skilled craftswoman conceals her rarer gifts, came forth the sounds which, low and truthful as they were, dropped upon the ear like a murmur rather dreamed than heard? Polly-my-Lamb felt her pulse vibrate like an accordant harp-string, and, longing to be angry at the liberty thus taken with her nervous system, sighed unwittingly when the music ceased, and thought her own voice sounded raven-like as she strove to answer.

As for my Aunt Sercold, had the guest preserved any thing like reasonable self-possession, her demeanor must have astonished him not a little. Had those golden curls and translucent eyes been exchanged for the hissing snakes and stony gleam of a Medusa, they could scarcely have more effectually subdued her. For ten minutes after his first appearance she had sat almost like a gray petrifaction, overcome with calm indifference quietly the youth's respectful greetings, and, after muttering some half-intelligible sounds, became once more entranced in her contemplation. We who are intrusted with the key of my aunt's secret soul, perceive one thought alone assuming positive shape, and wandering ghostlike through the intellectual mist, exclaiming, "What upon earth can make this angel in love with me?"

"And I, rose pour limning have brought you, dears madams," went the musical voice in its pretty foreign lisp. "I, viz so fear zat you would sink me for an impostor."

"Sink you, Sir!" murmured my aunt.

"Sink me an impostor, when you saw my figuis —sketches."

"Figurous," indeed, Sir," said Miss Sercold.

"Zat is, my impressions, my lineaments. I can draw a man, far less," he was going to raise his eyes to the younger lady, but changed his purpose, and simply bowed his head. "But, ah! An evening rell! Here is my best."

And he produced a smudgy landscape, generally dreamy-colored, with a suggestion of the god of day half suffocated in a mass of red-hot vapor, striking out frantic rays, like feelers, in every direction, and wearing altogether the appearance of a gigantic crab, being grilled on a dullish fire.

My aunt fanned herself involuntarily. The picture was remarkable, but it was nothing to the gaze of the painter, which dwelt searchingly upon her.

"I wish he'd look at Polly a little!" thought my aunt. "So awkward, really!"

To whatever unseen power the amiable lady appealed her benevolent countenance need not ineffectual. Miss Humpage requesting him to draw near her tea-table, Arthur Haggerdorn perforce looked to, and that his task was not unwelcome, perforce was dyed in blushes, from brow to chin. With such extreme sensitiveness to the inexperienced Polly was acutely touched. At the first, she had added address to him the most ordinary expressions of courtesy, and fortunate it was for her that Miss Sercold began at this moment to exhibit manifest tokens of returning life, and presently was able to converse with a collectedness Polly-my-Lamb might envy. That was still more satisfactory, the latter observed that, in proportion as Mr. Haggerdorn's attention was diverted from her friend, so did that lady's disposition to regard him steadily augment.

But now it was that gentleman's turn to be distraught and unintelligible. His replies were made at random, and to the purpose. He contradicted my aunt in the flattest, though sweetest manner. He laughed at wrong times. He spilled some cream on the sacred lavender, and saw it not. All his faculties were gradually centring in one point—the mysterious power which, by absolutely in the immediate presence of the little idol whose sweet face had, he fondly believed, had power to draw back his fleeting spirit from the very gates of the grave. He knew perfectly well that he was losing self-possession, and yielding more and more to an insane desire to fall at the feet of the young girl on which one of Polly's little diamond shoe-buckles was at that moment glistening, to gaze unreproved upon the liquid depths of her eyes, to storm for the rare words she dropped like jewels on his ear.

So long as Miss Sercold's remarks obtained the slightest notice from him, so long as he was self-possessed, Polly-my-Lamb was comparatively comfortable; but when it became evident that the fire of her pity would be wasted on him, and that the visitor was becoming more and more unconscious of every object but herself, the poor child grew anxious and uneasy, and finally relapsed into moments, and at length, finding the position intolerable, rose and expressed her intention of retiring to her room, and committing herself to the care of her aunt for the remainder of the evening.

Polly had expected an effect of some sort from this forced move; but the tendency to it did not produce. The young man turned deadly white, like one stricken with a sudden terror. The quick, vivid blushes died away, and was painfully visible. Weakened by recent illness, and with a nervous system wrought to the extreme point of sensibility, it required but a slight shock was necessary to reduce him to a condition as pitiable as that from which he had so recently emerged. But there was no help for it. The very essence of his emotion only suggested more clearly to Polly the desirability of at once handing over her susceptible love-plaything to her aunt. Could there be a fitter distress than Miss Sercold? Polly-my-Lamb gave him one pretty smile and vanished.

"Dear child! what a power of her!" was Miss Sercold's reflection. "Nose, my young friend, you may speak freely, as I know well enough you have not yet begun to do."

The words had scarcely framed themselves in her thought when Arthur Haggerdorn was at her feet, kissing her hands, calling her his hope, his blessing, his guardian angel, imploring her pity, heaping epithet on epithet, such as nothing but sickness or distress could suggest.

Miss Sercold, not absolutely taken by surprise, was startled at the vehemence of the young lover. She drew her hand coyly away.

"How did he guess my age?" thought my aunt.)

"A sounand years it has lived in zese six weeks," continued the suitor. "'Passion,' saidst you? It is madness. It is Dea! I tell you I call die if you withdraw sis face, which has killed every sing else in ze world!"

"Compose yourself, I intreat you, Sir; I have not said that I intended to withdraw it," said my aunt, gently. "Pray be calm. This excessive agitation may be injurious. It is somewhat embarrassing—I—I am inclined to wish my niece had not left us!"

"I die, wiz all my heart," cried the young gentleman. "Recall her, I beseech you, best madam."

"I will endeavor to do so, since you desire it, Sir," said my aunt, rather stiffly.

"Desire it? Oh, my best madam, you guessed my secret well. I—I—I fancy that was ze matter wiz me, and your tender heart provided ze'e comfort. To-morrow I from London certainly go."

"To-morrow!"

"Surely, to-morrow. Why stay? I have looked on my portrait. I have not seen her since. I have her fingers felt. I am ready now to die."

Miss Sercold felt inclined to suggest that an increased disposition to live might be a more legitimate result of these successes. All she said was:

"You really leave London to-morrow?"

"And leave my heart, best lady."

"Permit me then to ask you," said the lady, "might it not have been better to postpone these singular declarations till your return?"

"I return never," replied the lover, emphatically.

"I do not think I quite understand you, Mr. Haggerdorn. Are you evincing a becoming consideration for the feelings of—of others, in expressing your own, thus strongly, under the circumstances you mention? What if you had obtained an even more explicit assurance that your overtures might be acceptable—"

"My dear lady! Acceptable? Is zis then possible? But no—no—"

"No, Sir, I assure you, if you prefer it, Sir," said my aunt, turning her head aside a little coquettishly.

"You will drive me mad wiz joy! I possessed one sousand terrors. I shall name them. First, that being both so young—"

"Very good. You need be older," thought Miss Sercold, gazing tenderly on the boyish face.

"A stranger, an orphan—"

"Such are commended to our ch—charity," sobbed my aunt.

"A beggar."

"I am far from penniless."

"How satisfying is that! I rejoice wis my heart to hear it."

"Perhaps you do," was the mental comment.

"In spite of all you bid me hops? And she—she will then suffer that I am free?"

"I beg your pardon?" said my aunt.

"She shall hear my vows?"

"Your—"

"Vows, excellent madam."

"Of what nature, may I be allowed—"

"Of love, madam! Have I not said she is my life, my goddess, my—"

"She?"

"Have I not been pouring my gratitudes to you for bringing me to gaze so near upon her glorious beauty? Do I not already love you as my mother, best lady?"

The shock was severe. Such a castle, however unstable its foundations, can hardly topple down without carrying with it a world of wreckage having fallen about one's ears. But the absurdity of her position, should the mistake become apparent, struck upon my aunt's mind, as it were, lighted up the way of escape. She had in no way committed herself. Her looks and language, though intended to convey a meaning of their own, had somehow been caught up in the torrent of the young man's passion, and borne away in a totally different direction. She almost accepted it with a blush.

"You hesitate, dear lady. Will you destroy the hopes you raised?" asked the young lover, becoming greatly agitated. "Now that you have spoken, zat is too late. Better madness; better dea!" His hand closed involuntarily on a knife that lay beside him on the tea-tray. "Oh, let me be free! Let her tell my fortune—zat is, fate. For me, I will speak never. To-morrow I from England flee always to be many miles from her, and never shall be haunted more. I shall paint my bread. I shall sketch silently and humbly in a foreign shore." Here was a doubtful look at the donkey, and thought of very short commons indeed.) "Only I ask to look again upon her face, and hear her voice—even, I ask no more. I crave her from se room, perhaps, wis my mad lookings. I beseech you, for you have a good and kind heart of women, let her come and stab me wis one word—farewell."

He was at her feet again in his wild anxious serenity. Miss Sercold would not trust herself to look at him. Indeed, she could not have seen him if she had, the good soul's eyes being suffused with tears of genuine sympathy. She patted his hand with comfortable reassuring pressure, and, with her kerchief to her eyes, hurried from the room.

Polly-my-Lamb was not on her bed, but standing by attired, at the window of her apartment, gazing intently at an opposite house which happened to be in the occupation of Mrs. Mistress Ascroft. She started round, half-guiltily, as her friend entered, and became pale as death as she noticed her agitation.

"What has happened, dear? Is he—has he—?"

"He has indeed, dear," said my aunt. "—but it's—it's—actually—what we thought. It is you, dear, that this particular young gentleman honors with his preference. To be sure, he is very young."

"Aunt Sercold, candidly," He implores you to grant him an interview. He loves you."

"He dares?"

"And he says that in spite of your brief acquaintance—"

"Brief! It is none at all," said Polly, impatiently stamping her little high-heeled shoe.

"Don't, dear; you may bring him up," cried Miss Sercold.

"Up, madam!" exclaimed Polly, now really angry and flushing scarlet. "Is he a lunatic—a housebreaker?"

"I don't think he is either; but I do think he is laboring under a degree of mental excitement which you, who have caused it, can alone allay. But I should have hesitated to bring his request, had not his quitting England to-morrow rendered it unlikely that his presence should ever offend you again. Well, I will dismiss him!"

"He—leave to-morrow, aunt?" said the young lady, sitting down.

"Never to return. I could not but feel some pity for one so friendless and desolate. But I think you act wisely in rejecting his entreaty. I need not tell him in what terms you did so, you know. I can say you have retired to rest."

"Thank you, Aunt Sercocld.... But—but—"

"My dear?"

"I haven't."

"Such excuses are permissible."

"Not when better are at hand. I think he requests it important, and—and requires apology."

"I will receive it."

"And—oh, aunt!—how could you?" burst out the young lady.

"Eh! could I what?" demanded the startled spinster.

"Advise me to receive declarations of—of—goodness knows what—ashamed do you call it?—from a person to whom I have never spoken in my life before this night?"

"Advise?" ejaculated poor Miss Sercocld. "I am sure I never did any thing of the kind. And, besides, in justice to the young man, I am bound to say that I do not think his hopes extend beyond a few words of farewell."

"Oh, indeed! That alters the case," said the little lady. "One ought not to seem churlish, ought one? Well—O, aunt, why don't you speak? Tell me, dear, what ought I to—"

"Put on? Nothing; you look charming."

"I mean ought I to see him or not?"

"Go down by all means, dear," said my aunt, frankly resuming her previous opinions. "You can not do less."

Polly-nay-Lamb, justly regarding the later counsel as the riper, decided on adopting it, and presently—not, however, without a little tremor of the nerves—gripped down stairs followed by her friend.

She had assumed the most stately demeanor of which her pretty little figure was susceptible; had compelled her animated mobile features into a very ill-fitting mask of indifference; which had in it more of discomfort than dignity, and opened the door with a determination to freeze the young gentleman, with one Gorgon glance, into a statue-like of decorous quiescence fitted for receiving the little speech of farewell she had arranged in descending the stairs. Nevertheless, as they entered the eye involuntarily fell.

"Why, my good gracious!" exclaimed the voice of Miss Sercocld. "If he's not gone?"

Polly-my-Lamb threw one hurried glance round the room, then uttered a loud cry, and, springing like a fawn toward the other side, knelt by the recumbent form of the young man.

"He's asleep!" was Miss Sercocld's first perplexed suggestion.

"No, dead! He's dead! Ring! Cry! Call out! Do something, aunt! O, Heaven!"

Miss Sercocld did every thing quoted, and that with considerable energy; then hastened to Polly's side.

The poor boy was lying almost on his face. In his fall he had displaced the hearth-rug, a portion of which was grasped in his hand, and a dark thread of blood, proceeding from his lips, rose, like a red snake, across the stone.

Hamilton has killed him. He has broken a blood-vessel. O, aunt, aunt, how could you?"

"Could I?"

"We waited too long. O, it was cruel."

"Now Heaven forgive you," began poor Miss Sercocld.

The apartment was rapidly filling with alarmed servants. Stephen Gould, the deaf—who had of late discarded his fixed idea of conflagration, and now, on the appearance of any agitation in the household, invariably made a dive across the street, and brought up a doctor—quickly followed, accompanied by Mr. Hartshorne, the long, lean practitioner at the corner, who, though present at about the same period at twenty different places in the vicinity, possessed the curious property of always being found at home.

The calm professional presence had its accustomed effect of reducing every body to silence and self-possession. Hartshorne lifted the white face—white, and seemingly impassive, as the stone on which it lay—and the poor boy slowly opened upon a mattress which had been brought in and stretched upon the floor, the little doctor began a closer examination.

"He's d—d—dead!" sobbed Miss Sercocld.

"Not a bit more than you are, madam," said the little doctor, rather sharply. "And, what is almost as satisfactory, the bleeding has stopped for the present. When I have examined the character of the blood, I shall be able to express—Hum! that's unlucky, first time in my life, I've left my spectacles behind! I'll not be gone an minute. Get you all out of the room but two; and let those two, for their lives (or rather, for the patient's), not suffer him to be moved, or touched, or even spoken to, till I return."

"I will remain," said Polly, quietly.

"And I," said my aunt.

Presently there was a trembling of the eyelid, the long lashes went heavily, wearily apart, as though waking were unwelcome. But the first object that met his view was the face of his little lady, a tear upon her cheek, and a whole world of pity in her eyes. He saw it, for a hectic color rose in his cheek, and he made a feeble effort to move.

Polly remembered the doctor's charge. She made a gesture, almost directly, with her hand.

"If you move, you die," she murmured.

The boy regarded his effort, without taking his eyes from her face, and succeeded in placing his head about an inch nearer to Polly's foot; then, as though satisfied, suffered his heavy lids to close again.

"If you move head, or foot, or tongue again, we quit the room," said Miss Sercocld.

The patient lay like a stone.

Back rushed the little doctor, fitting his glasses on his nose as he entered. After a careful examination of the invalid's condition, he announced—to assure the anxious witnesses that all danger had for the present passed away. (Good Mr. Hartshorne was not aware of the new symptom that had declared itself during his brief absence, and, oddly enough, nobody mentioned it!) Extreme quiet and perfect repose of mind were now the chief essentials. If the bleeding should not return within the next half hour, the doctor held that there would be little risk in removing the patient to his own lodging; and as Mr. Hartshorne knew Mrs. Ascroft very well, he would call, as he returned home, and arrange with the good woman as to the best mode of conveying him thither.

Had any indifferent person taken note of Polly-my-Lamb's demeanor, since the moment she had been detected by her resuscitated guest in the act of weeping over him—but more especially since that guest had been pronounced out of danger—he must have appeared in the light of a very unfeeling young person. When the doctor reappeared she was sitting by the sofa with her head resting on it; no sooner had he uttered the hopeful words than she quitted it altogether.

"A very self-possessed young lady," thought little Mr. Hartshorne, as he buzzed quietly about his patient, feeling half disposed to remain and see that the latter received genuine treatment. "She offered to watch him, with all the coolness of a hospital nurse, and no doubt she knows his case quite absolutely to expire on her hearth-rug, walks off, I dare say, to her supper! But she's an heiress, for-sooth—a fact which has set the wits and speculations than to expend them on the suffering. I hate (if you please, my dear Miss Sercocld, hold his head a little higher)—those sort of young people. So young, and so untender!' as the cow said, when she mumbled the pine-shoots. Well, well. Thank you, my dear madam—the spoon—is just a few of these drops before he is moved, and as many after."

Only once more did Master Haggerdon open his languid eyes; and, seeing no one but my good aunt, speedily closed them again, unnoticed, remaining in that state for the next twenty-four hours of his natural procession, with Stephen Gould as chief mourner, to his own lodging, and placed in the custody of his landlady.

CHAPTER VI.

By was some days before the sick-chamber exhibited any token of human occupancy. The blinds remained half drawn, and not even the figure of a gliding nurse was visible. A message forwarded by Mr. Hartshorne on the day after the catastrophe, importing Miss Humpage's desire (after "compliments") to be informed of the young man's condition, received a doubtful reply: "Can't tell her or any body yet. I'm not a witch."

"Hang her 'compliments!'" muttered the little doctor (who was nevertheless, amenity itself to the sex in general, but had conceived an aversion for the like to poor Polly). "Why the dogs" (the doctor's nearest approach to an imprecation) "don't she send over to the lad's own place? It's nearer. But no, my lady's fine—! Let some one inquire of Fort Guines.

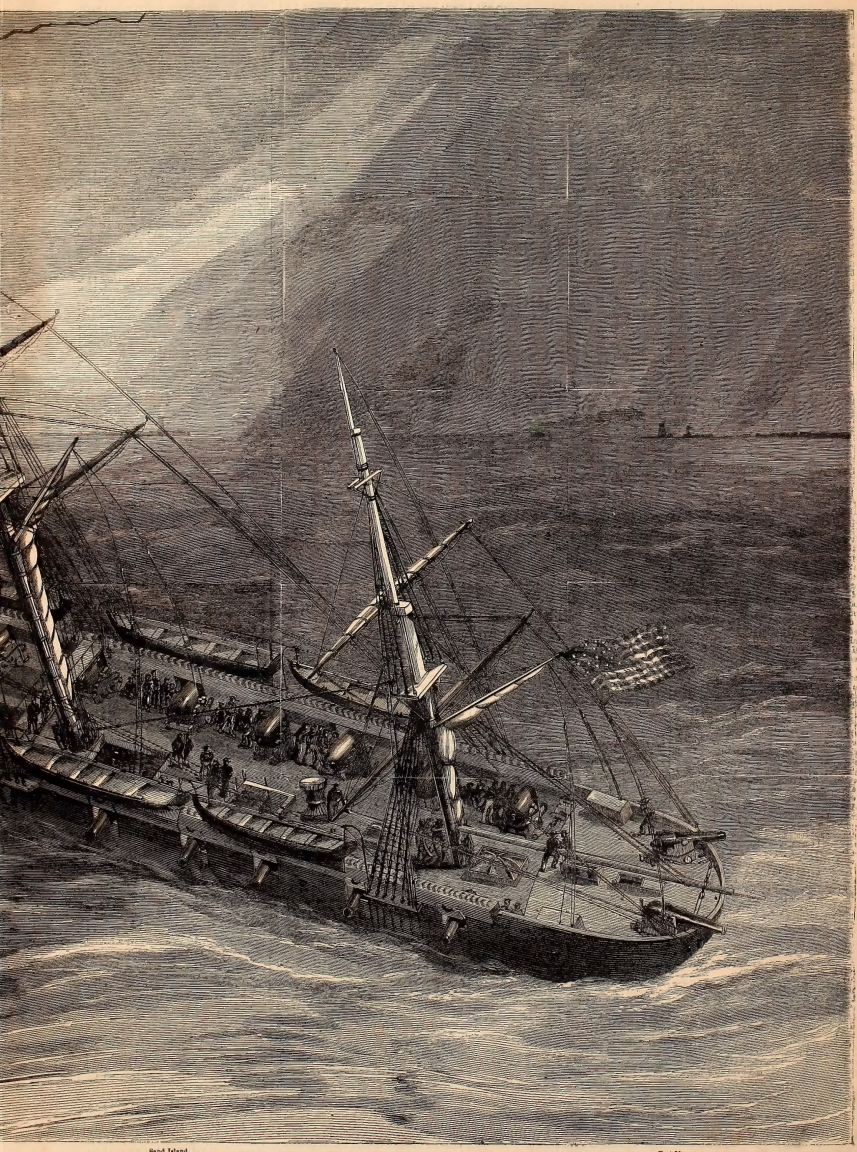
THE UNITED STATES SLOOP OF WAR "RICHMOND"



ON BLOCKADE DUTY, OFF MOBILE.—[SEE PAGE 101.]

SHADOWY MISGIVINGS.

I MAY as well begin by stating that my name is Blushman—Percival Blushman. I believe an unusual name; but that will not affect the course of the little true narrative which I am about to introduce, and which I hope will "run smooth."

Further preliminary particulars in reference to Percival Blushman may not perhaps be found uninteresting. From childhood upward I have always had a leaning—a yearning, in fact—for the noble. The grand, the colossal, fills my mind with a strange sensation of speechless awe. Nature's grandest works are to me always sublime in the direct proportion to their size and strength. An elephant can never be named to affect me with a greater thrill of admiration than, say, a powerful mastiff, though the latter might naturally furnish more immediate grounds of alarm. Yet so it was. Such a thing as a cattle-show had on these grounds a strange fascination for me; and, a prey to misguided feelings of repulsion and attraction, I found myself surveying the gross charms of the kine so mysteriously and wonderfully fattened. Yet so it was. All monstrous developments—Great Easterns, Great Exhibitions for all nations, and even the stalwart forms of the heroes of the ring, all excited this elevating tone of mind—morbid, some of my friends called it. Yet so it was.

I was reading for the Bar. I had determined to walk that famous Westminster Hall, which a Scarlett, a Follett, and the rest of the profession, had walked. Every thing, too, about it was large, stately, grand—and that impressed me. The statutes, the reports, the suits (of law), the suits (of costume), the wigs, the gowns, the escutcheons, and (sometimes) the fees, all were on a monstrous and overgrown scale. It struck me, too—but this might have been a mistake—that the physique of the men was greater. But about their professional reputation there could be no question, boasting such men as a Scarlett, an Erskine, a Follett, and many more.

I was then, reading for the Bar, a view my being "called" to the Honorable Society of Lincoln's Inn. The Honorable Society of Lincoln's Inn. How euphonistic! It seemed to come to me telling from each side like an anthem. I was reading hard, very hard; I felt the responsibility of the courses I had chosen; of the path made sacred by the steps of the Bar, of the—but I must not subside to those famous names again. I determined not to see my fellow-creatures; I declined routs, and female society generally; I rose in the morning two hours earlier than I was accustomed to—that is to say, at half past eight; and it being now close on a fine week, I had, with the calm disposition of a suttee, declined a dancing, shooting, driving, riding, general merry-making party, even. In the country scene came almost to my eyes as I rose with the lark at the cold dull hour of half past eight, and I thought of Greyforest, for I had been there before, and shot, and driven, and danced. But then I thought of a Scarlett, and of—the rest, and how they, at one time or between as I was doing, had labored, and gave up shooting and dancing. And then, sternly, I brought all my law books together in a pyre, and, laying myself down on the top—a true suttee—set fire to—that is, began to read again with desperation.

I grew ill in the struggle. I have heard the expression used "broke down"—I think it a good one. So I broke down. I confess it was hard to say what had broken, where it had broken, or what the breakage should have been down and not up, or at least in a lateral direction.

I was sitting one night in this state of general fracture at my lonely chambers, when my friend Twemtyman burst in. He, too, was reading for the Bar; but as he was reading, He danced as he sang. He had come on an errand of charity. He had heard of the break-down, and found me with all the broken pieces about me; so paied me.

"Blushman, my boy," he said, "what's all this? Never mind; you must come with me. A little in the slump? Never mind; I have got a notion that it will soon put you straight."

Put me straight—put straight what was broken down! I smiled at the notion, but waved to him to proceed.

"You must come with me," he said. "I is a sehrome. I am going to-night to the Strongbows, out to Triton Villas. You don't know the Strongbows; I do."

I did not see how this concerned me, and was about to interrupt him with what is called in our legal dialect a demurrer, when he stopped me.

"You must come with me," he said. "You must know the Strongbows; you must go out to Triton Villas."

This was more pertinent, so I withdrew my demurrer, and substituted what is called—still in our legal jargon—a traverse.

"Impossible," I said. "Graver matters engross me. It was not thus that a Scarlett, a Follett—a Sir William—would, I mean—"

"I know," he said, "exactly. But as a favor—a particular favor, old friend—oblige; never have asked you for any thing." This was scarcely consistent with truth; yet I did not allude to a trifling loan, barely three weeks old.) "Do, do, do now."

In short, I weakly consented. I gave way—I bound myself to go out to the Strongbows, positively for one night only, as I think I have seen it in some public notices. As he was going out, he said, thoughtfully, "We can join in a cab, you know; that will just do;" and went his way.

At night he came, and we did join in a cab—at least as far as mere occupancy went; but in a more figurative and poetical sense, I might be considered the sole tenant. My friend had forgotten his purse —unfortunately, as I considered it: I had brought mine—fortunately, as he considered it. We entered the Triton Villas, the home of the Strongbows.

It was a party. The house was not to say large—on oath, I should adhere to the statement that it was small. It stood by itself in a little garden, and, being lit up, looked like a square card lantern. There was a small hall, where hats and coats were shoveled up together in a mound of wearing apparel. Sounds of feeble pianoforte-playing issued from the room.

We entered. I was made known to the hostess by my friend, who straight cut the social painter—I believe that is the usual term—that joined him to me, and stood cut himself to sea. I scarcely saw him again that night, and the social painter could scarcely see that he had prompted him to solicit my company. And as this reflection occurred to me, I suddenly saw before me a miracle of strength, symmetry, and beauty—that is, a miracle of female strength, symmetry, and beauty.

I was amazed. She overpowered me with her presence. Such a form! More a hint than a positive manifestation of secret strength; yet nothing of prepossession. Her features were the world's stoutness suggests itself with horrible indelicacy; and yet it is miles away from the truth. A cruel, cold mould was that which cast the face of the great Bass Rock. I looked up and measured her with admiration. I spoke with her, and to my joy found she had a mind of the most strength and poetical muscularity. She candidly told me that I did not reach to that ideal, and my heart sank; but she was, she said, in search after the same ideal, which was the next best thing, and my heart rose again. We presently understood each other, and—we were friends forever. She was amused at my unrestrained and almost childish admiration. She told me many things that night (on the stairs). How she had taken care of daring deeds; of her hero who, with a single stroke of his keen falchion, cleft a sheep white at her own request, and then went with a lamb on the savage desert; of her third hero, who had pulled down a tree with his single arm; of her brother, who had fought with a sword to get him one at circuses, lying upon their backs upon a target, and their offspring into the air, and catch them on the sharp spikes of their feet. I told her of the athletic man I had once seen, who threw fifty half hundred-weights in succession over his head, and caught the fifty-first behind. She eagerly broke in and asked me had I ever seen Herr Rotz, the German professor, who lifted an ordinary man with his teeth? I had not. We grew enthusiastic in our mutual confidences. "I will tell you a secret," she said, "as you are the only one I ever met who understands me. Mamma and papa know nothing of it. They would kill me if they did."

I smiled at this pardonable little exaggeration of filial reverence. Papa and mamma were a little man and a little woman, of wretched muscular development. But I smiled only in my sleeve, for, felt that no muscular charms of person ought to emancipate her from parental control. "Yes," I said, angrily, "do tell me. I long to hear those things."

"Well," she said, bending down her—may I call them massive?—yes, massive shoulders. "No," she said, raising her massive shoulders, "no, I wouldn't tell you. You will laugh."

"Laugh," I said, wounded deeply; "do you take me for one of those loathsome beings for whom you order, who have no feeling for the beautiful, the strong, the—"

"What is it, Captain Rideabout?" she said, sweetly, to that officer, who was standing over her. A chill passed athwart my heart like a knife. Captain Rideabout! and then I noticed his fierce proportions; Goliath in a dress-suit. I hated and scorned him with a deep, deadly, defiant, passionate scorn.

He took her hand, and led her off. While, with a horrible gnawing I marked their progress. I had to own myself, with a frightful pang, that they were suited. The Captain was a Hercules, another creature, one of the vertebrate order called a brother-officer, came crawling up, and to him the man Rideabout handed her. Rideabout then went his way, mopping and fuming himself with his handkerchief; he suffered by the exertion indeed.

The other was a weedy thing—a mere reptile. If I may be pardoned the noun. His action was unresentful; I could see that he was overpowered also. He writhed in a corner, and, then, after an interval, came—I declare yes—that—that beast (I vow and him somewhat) again advanced. I suppose per son for the measure that was now about commencing: and she, I grieve to say, yielded. And yet to my writhing in a corner I could not be expected to see, as they floated, rather surged, with a gentle roll round the room. Other more ordinary dancing by fell away, when their gaze was drawn before a ship's keel. Going away, I caught her for a moment. My friend had come to me an hour before, and proposed, with a strange effrontery, that we should again "join in a cab" home. Following my massive charmer as she floated by I agreed mechanically, and he had me out to secure a vehicle. That conveyance had been retained now more than an hour, and I did not regret it. Strange to me As did not; though we were to "join."

I caught her for a moment, in the moral sense of the word. "Sit down," she said; "I want to talk to you."

"You must tell me," I said, "this secret. What is it like? Something large, grand, stupendous?"

"I can't," she said, smiling; "you would laugh at my weakness, for a weakness it is."

A confession in her! Physical? No. But I was burning to know.

"Something that I am sadly addicted to," she said, with meaning, "and daren't tell you. Good-night; come and see me. You understand me, I can see."

Perhaps I did. But with reference to that Rideabout, did he understand?—as well, or perhaps better? "I should like," I said aloud, "to have that misinformed beast here in this cab, say under the seat."

"Hallo!" said my friend; "asleep, eh? How did you like it, though? A little too small a crib, eh?"

"Small!" I said, indignantly. "What do you call large? What do you call symmetry? What do you call massiveness, shape, outline, proportions? I say," I continued, excitedly, "what do you call these? For a judge?" I added, derisively. "Talk of what you know—pipes, bats, and the United Suffield Duffers. There's your line."

He was amazed at my warmth, and did not resume the subject. I waited for him with an intellectual bludgeon raised to smash him if he should, in fact, intend to.

"We shall go out there to-morrow," I said, "you and I."

"I can't," he said. "I have an engagement."

"The Duffers, I suppose?" I said, scornfully. But them off. I have no engagement. We go."

He was again cowed. He agreed. We went next day. We joined in a cab; but he proposed it feebly.

We got to Triton Villas. We saw her. Papa, mamma, and all the world, except a younger sister, were out. She was beautiful and ferocious look. I made Aix devote himself entirely to this child of nature. The child took him presently to show him her rabbits. "Now," I said, "for it. But the secret," I said; "what you are addicted to. Do, do, do tell me."

"Ah, it is a vice," she said, with a sigh; "an unwomanly vice. The world would point at me if they knew. The mouth of an enemy," she added, slightly, "would make a great brain, you know."

Where had I heard that? "But this obscure language," I said.

"It is growing on me every day," she said, mournfully. "I am enslaved to it, and can not shake it off. If I told you you would despise me, and yet I must tell you."

I was growing alarmed. These were phrases usually applied to one species of human vice the most degrading and loathsome. Surely—surely—for one so young, so grand, so noble—ah! that was it. To keep that splendid system well strung, who knows but that she neglected. And yet I could not shut out her image, that is to say, that particular image, with its horrid accompaniment. It was always before my eyes.

She wrote to me, inviting me to go and see her; she wanted to talk to me, she said: I understood her. (I did understand her.) In a postscriptum she added, "Perhaps I may confide to you the little weakness you were so curious about."

I wrote back a half mysterious, half scornful—I wonder what she thought of it. I told her bitterly that I knew all, had discovered all; that the necessities of my career in my legal studies would prevent my having the pleasure of waiting on her; but that, as a friend, my, an acquaintance, I trusted she would not resort to this, few words of friendly counsel. I would venture to give her, for her own sake. Firstly, I said, "fly the fatal seductress." I will gradually impair your strength, weaken your powers, and stupefy the faculties. Every time you yield to the fascination, think, ch think how you are hurrying to destruction."

An answer arrived next day, couched in very mysterious language. She could not understand the tone of my letter. If I had discovered, as I said I had, what she was engaged in, there was nothing, indeed, to prevent her doing it. Many good and eminent persons had before given way to the same weakness. For her part she gloried in it, and thought it raised up the patient. "Impair my strength!" she added; "how little you know— After—after every bout I feel myself stronger and stronger." I thought I of course knew what she did; the most confirmed dram—I mean benigs—that is their fatal delusion.)

I strove to banish her from my mind, but ineffectually.

Two months passed away. It was to much for me. I could keep me to a thread. It must end one way or the other; I chose the other way. I would go and see Triton Villas merely out of curiosity.

I stood at the gate with mingled feelings. Before me was the fatal window. I paused. Should I go? Was it mere curiosity? Prudence said yes, and in I went.

I saw her: she was good-natured, genial, warm. She reproached me gently with my absence. She was afraid I was offended. She was more grieved than angry. I could see, and, sudden impulse, I told her that we should have a reconciliation. I love scenes of reconciliation.

But you must come to us now. Next week we are to have a ball and festival; in short, I am going—"

"Away?" I said, with a start of alarm.

"That you may be said, a little after—what? Did they not tell you? I thought you knew it. It has been settled some time."

"That you were to go away?" I said.

"Yes," she said, "and my marriage also."

"Your marriage?" I started from my seat.

"Ah! you do vile impostor in some country—" I could not think of a word for a moment, "or scullion—who has dared—"

"Hush!" she said, amused and flattered at my warmth. "If Captain Rideabout heard you—"

"Better and better," I said, bitterly; "nothing could be better or more suitable."

"Well," she said, modestly, "it is considered a good match; and do you know," she added, "he has been so good, so kind, so generous about that little—you know—weakness of mine, which I hinted to you. He will not require me to give it up—"

"Ha! ha!" I laughed; "what reveling you will have together!"

"Yes," she said; "the truth is, I have found out he is just as much addicted to it as I am. Wasn't it good? And more," she added, "he was actually so kind as to bring me in the materials by stealth. Wasn't it good of him?"

"Excellent," I said, bitterly.

"Only yesterday," she added, "such a delicate little surprise as he gave me—only think, knowing my taste, a whole canzone."

"Of the materials, I suppose," I said.

"Yes," she said, "of the very newest kind. Wasn't it considerate of him? I must show them to you."

She went to a little cupboard and brought out a small quarto, and said, and took me out by one—Goodness! what a mystery was here! A light began to break in on me.

"Look," she said, "two gymnastic clubs, just my weight and size; and, look here, a set of dumbbells, beautifully finished—ain't it charming! A balance rope; a portable pole, jointed so as to be carried about; a patent chest-expander; a—"

I saw it all, and put forward my hand to stop her.

"I used to practice with them at night up in my room. When popa and mamma were gone to bed I would sit up till all hours. Nothing like practice. See how I twist them about!"

She flourished the club over her head, twirled it, twisted it, and then held it out in the air steadily for many moments. It was on a line with her mouth.

I saw the whole picture of that fatal night before me, with only the addition of the blind drawn up, and how the fatal shadow became projected.

BEN'S BEAR.

Twenty years ago my father, a half-pay captain, emigrated to Lower Canada. He bought a farm in the vicinity of Stanstead, where he settled with a family of three boys and an infant girl. Being were too many of us for his means in England, where boys often cost more than they are worth—and possibly this is sometimes true of girls. Benjy, or Ben as we nineteen when we went into the bush: a brave boy, and a good leader for his younger brothers, and a good protector for his sisters, who were younger still.

We had a log-house, as most settlers had then, to begin with. It was quite an aristocratic edifice for that region, having three large rooms, while most log-houses had but two rooms, and many but one. It was called with lumbuk laste, which was to divide the rooms, for we were to spend one winter in it. We moved to our "opening" the 1st of May, and had the summer before us. We were full of health and hope. A new country and a new life, with all before you to conquer, and the consciousness of strength to make the conquest, is a combination inspiration.

Ben's bear was his first winning in the game which he had set himself to play with the wild nature of the woods. I was then ten years old, and that bear is the one thing that stands out most clearly in the dim distance of thirty years ago. Ben had shot the mother bear, and the same ball that killed her killed one of the cubs. The other he brought home in his bosom. "Poor little fellow!" he said, "he is too young to mourn for his mother, and I intend to be a mother to him." And he kept his word.

The small beast slept with Ben, always laying its nose over Ben's shoulder. His grew apace. I used to think we could see him grow. He was very fond of milk and butter, and he ate bread and milk, and mush and milk with avidity. During the first winter his was a numbed sort of half life. In the early spring he was a happy bear, going every where with his master, and only miserable if he lost sight of him. He was entirely obedient to my brother, and always woke him in the morning. As my father was about to build a frame-house, he sent Ben to buy material of a man who had a saw-mill in the next town. This was Bruin's first affliction, for he could not accompany his master. Ben stole away from him, and when the bear knew that he was gone he began a search for him. He went to my brother's bed, beginning at the head, inserted his nose under the sheets and blankets, and came out at the foot; then he turned, and reversed the process. The strange search he would keep up by the hour, if he were not shut out of the room. He took possession of his master's clothes and other belongings, and used them so roughly, still seeking for their owner—inserting himself into legs of trowsers and sleeves of coats—that my mother locked every thing in a wardrobe. Nothing of Ben's was left out, except a large fobe Bible, which rested on the top of the wardrobe, or was often cast on the floor. Up this the bear contrived to climb, and taking the Bible in a tender embrace, he curled himself up and dropped to the floor with it. My mother attempted to take it from him, but for the first time he showed fight. Many blows from the broom-stick were administered, but the bear held fast to the book, and my mother came off second best from the contest. This was fatal to her authority, as we discovered afterward.

When Ben came back the bear's joy knew no bounds. It was half in love for the sawyer's daughter, and had no eyes what because of it. He showed his disrespect for my mother by taking the butter from the table and eating it before her eyes. Ben gave him a drubbing for the robbery, and he submitted to Ben's authority, but butter and honey, and sweets of all kinds, were appropriated if they were not at hand to enforce good behavior. My mother was very unhappy, between her love for Ben and her fear for Bruin. She grew unreasonably afraid of the bear, and, what was worse, the bear knew it. She complained to Ben; but he only said, "Mother, you have only to be resolute with him. Ellen can drive him away from the table, because she is not afraid of him."

"But I am afraid of him," said my mother, "and I think he will do me harm yet."

"Give him a taste of a hot poker, mother, and I'll answer for him afterward."

"I would not try it for the world," said my mother.

The bear had his own way very completely, till a circumstance occurred which resulted more bravely for the peace of the family than my mother's mild remonstrances. We had a neighbor, a Mr. Bennett, who had a very lovely daughter of seventeen. Ben fell in love with her, as in duty bound, she being the prettiest girl in the New World. He had been unable to get any clew to her sentiments toward him. She had spent a considerable portion of the past year with a married sister in Stanstead, and Ben and the brother-in-law being friends, it was there my brother had seen her. Her coolness toward him was a great mystery to the lovelorn lover. I believe Ben would have served seven years merely to know how she regarded him. At last he hazarded into a state so perilous that even his bear could not comfort him. About this time Alice Bennett came home to remain, and, in neighborly kindness, she and a younger sister came to visit us. She had never seen Ben's bear, and did not even know of its existence. Ben shut Bruin into his bedroom in compliment to our guests, and the afternoon passed pleasantly to all but the prisoner. When the time came for Alice and her sister to go home, my brother and I prepared to bear them company through the woods to their opening. Ben incautiously opened his bedroom for his bear, never thinking of Bruin, and came running to catch us. The liberated bear ran after his master, and jumped for joy upon him, hugging him after the manner of bears. Ben turned and saw Alice in the fo'ter terrible embrace. She shrieked as a girl with a good voice only can shriek, but instead of running away, she rushed up to my brother and tried to help him like a brave girl, crying, "Dear, dear Ben, you will be killed!"

My brother threw off the beast, and caught the fainting Alice to his glad heart, saying, "Dear Alice, he is a tame bear, and will do you no harm."

The poor girl looked like a broken white lily, she was so frightened at herself and the bear. She could hardly realize that Ben was not killed, and she was ashamed of having been betrayed into an avowal of a tenderness for Ben. When she recovered her wits she said, "Oh, I'll never venture again!"

"Indeed you will," said Ben. "I'll banish Bruin, or imprison him, or do any thing you wish."

It was surprising how much power Ben became regarding faults on the bear's part that he had heretofore made light of. My mother had no need to complain of stolen butter, or a hasty delivery of honey on its way from the pantry to the tea-table. Ben suddenly discovered that his pet was a nuisance. "I'll see how he will like solitude in his own log, mother," he said, in the most considerate manner, when he had taken a plum-pudding from a table in my mother's hands, and had carried a leg to the woods with it.

"I am glad you saw fit to imprison it," said my mother.

"He must have a prison," said Ben.

And so it came to pass that the poor bear was chained in the centre of the space that had been cleared and leveled for our new house, with the light surveyor's chain used to restrain him. The bear immediately described a circle, limited by the length of his chain, which he walked over, turning a somersault always at one point, and only stopping to eat, or pay attention to Ben if he came in his vicinity. Why he inaugurated his particular and peculiar exercise I am unable to say. But Ben soon noticed a tame bear keep up the circle and the somersault hour after hour, and day after day. He did not say a bit chain, nor threaten to shut it, as poor mortals do with chains, but apparently accepted it as a provision of Ben's superior wisdom. This state of the case, if he had but known it, was quite ignored at bedtime, when he would inevitably break his chain to get into his master's bedroom. His indomitable desire to be at the foot of Ben's bed, and to hug an old vest under it, was sure to make him break away from any breakable restraint. There was a private opening in the floor, by which made of small logs "cobbed up;" that is, the ends notched with an axe, and the end of a log fitted into each notch. The roof was of boards, intended for the new house, held in place by heavy stones. The first night the poor beast occupied his new den he raised the boards in his struggle to get out, impelled by the desire to seek his master. He got his head out, and then hung by his neck, and was nearly killed before he could get down for him, and my mother rejoiced. I think Ben was not very sorry. Under other circumstances he would have mourned for the loss of his sublimely ugly pet; but he had a new and lifelong pet in prospect—perhaps many other pets after that—and he had no need of, and no place for, a bear.

HOSPITAL AND CAMP INCIDENTS.

THE SANITARY COMMISSION AMONG THE SOLDIERS.

III.

PROBABLY in no department of the work of the Sanitary Commission have more significant results been achieved than in that of Special Relief, organized at the outset for the succor of wounded soldiers. By its various agencies the Commission has in this department made itself the guardian of thousands of homeless soldiers, protecting them in their rights, providing lodging-houses and food, rescuing them from the hands of thieves and sharpers, collecting pensions and pay, conducting them to their homes, and giving them medical treatment, and nursing when occasion demanded; in a word, seeing that all impediments to their progress and to their restoration are met by corresponding provision for temporary supply and relief.

The arrangements for this part of the work are organized upon a thorough and constantly-enlarging system, having its centre at Washington, and thence radiating to every important field of the war. At Washington, a principal feature is the "Home," where food, care, and assistance are given to men who are honorably discharged, and whence they are sent by railroad in the care of special agents to their destination. At this "Home," also, relief is administered to men from battle-fields and hospitals; as many as five hundred a day have sometimes been received and cared for; and from December, 1862, to October, 1863, 7187 persons were there entertained. Since it opened 86,986 nights' lodgings have been furnished, and 331,315 meals provided.

"Homes" of the same description are maintained by the Commission at Boston, Nashville, Cairo, Memphis, Louisville, Cleveland, and Cincinnati, in and since which cities there are also "Lodges," maintained in the vicinity of railroads, all of which have rendered most important aid in improving the sanitary condition of our troops. One of these Lodges is immediately connected with the Paymaster's Department, and has in connection with it a Pension Agency, which has been in operation for nearly a year with branches in Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago, Louisville, and Cincinnati. This latter Agency has served to the soldiers already an aggregate expense of from eight to ten thousand dollars, while at the same time rescuing them from imposition and a world of trouble and anxiety.

Another service rendered to the soldier is the collection of back pay. It was found that many men in hospital, with families sorely in need of as much as they could give them, were unable to obtain a dollar to send to them, or at least it was hedged about by "regulations" as to be beyond their power to collect it. An agent of the Commission soon ascertains the investigation and the removal of difficulties, and, as an evidence of his success, it is stated that in one week the pay of fifty-six men was transmitted to every part of a thousand dollars, almost every dime of which was sent to the suffering families at home. Thus, for and while, the work of the Commission bears its beneficent fruits.

Still another branch of Special Relief is the "Nurses' Bureau," which has been in one in Washington and one in Annapolis, where sick and weary women-nurses may rest and recuperate their wasted energies. The Commission also provides lodges for the wives and mothers of men in hospital who flock to those points to aid in the care of wounded sons and husbands.

Some of the records of the lodges about Washington, though brief and abrupt, are full of eloquence as to the good work they have performed. Thus: "A man shoeless, shirtless, and stockingless, fest frost-bitten and weak, was brought to the Lodge in the early morning for the wanderer. We kept him nine days, scarcitated his regiment, and returned him to the front." The story of a life saved, perhaps of a family reunited, lies in this short record. And here is another: "A soldier picked up wandering, and lodged. He was out of care he died the next day;" yet, doubtless, some heart was cheered by knowing that the dead soldier had been cared for under unto him in his last hours as he journeyed home to the camping-ground beyond the river. Another case still is that of a sailor who died after an amputation, and who seemed dying, but who, under the care of his nurse, rallied, and the second day, looking into her eyes, said, in a tremulous way with emotion, "You have saved my life for my wife."

Such are some of the conspicuous features of the work of the Sanitary Commission among the soldiers. The enumeration of its works might be indefinitely extended; but sufficient facts have been presented to show the organization it enjoys, and its claim to a still more cordial appreciation at the hands of the people. It only remains to exhibit, briefly, the financial and other evidences it has accumulated as to the character, temperament, and habits of the soldiers among whom it has carried its ministry of mercy.

And first, next to their courage, the uncomplaining temper of our troops and their cheerful acquiescence in the hardships and more serious sufferings of war, are conspicuously exhibited by the testimony of these Commission records. "Well, Charley, how are you?" asks a surgeon, dressing a wound as he talked, "what's the matter?" "Oh, not much, doctor; only a hand shot from the wrist." Or, "Well, Jack, you got a fight hand to carve his way to some of the world's highest places, but you've got a leg that will turn on the top of the hill of his country, and he counted it a little thing. But had he not reached already an exalted place, higher than many attain in this life? Or, "Jack, with the soul of heroism burning in them, over attain? So it was every where on that field. "Only a scratch," replied all through all its horrors; "did we hear either whimper or plaint. An Illinois lieutenant, as brave a fellow as ever drew a sword, had both legs torn off by a shell, and lay on his thighs—fairly impaled by the bullet. His wounds were angry with fever; every motion was torture; the more severe that he tended by as few as could, but they let him slip, and he fell perhaps six inches. But it was like a dash from a precipice to him, and he wailed out like a little child; tears wet his pallid, thin face, and he only said, "My poor child, how will they tell her?" It was only for a moment; his spirit and his will were sufficient up together, and, with a half smile, he said, "Don't tell any body, boys, that I made a fool of myself!"

A soldier, struck down with bullets, lay on a blanket gasping for breath. "Jemmy," said a comrade, with one arm swung up in a sling, and who was going into the fight, "I'm a-fuming!—Jemmy, what shall I tell them at home for you?" "Tell them," said he, "that there's plenty enough left of me to get to!" and held down here a minute, till Kate there is enough of me left to love her till I die."

No thought or word of complaint, only cheerful resignation and perfect content even in the face of death. And what wonder, since death comes to all who "fight well and die well crowned and victorious, leading the tired feet over paths strewn with garlands to the summer-land lying so close to the borders of this chiller clime!

The tenderness and generosity of the soldier is another point clearly illustrated by the records of the Commission. However stern in the battle's front, in the hour of suffering he is kind, gentle, full of sympathy and compassion. The Wisconsin State agents were one day distributing relief to the Wisconsin soldiers in a Western hospital. One of them, lying seriously wounded, received some of it, but presently said: "I didn't like it; it made me feel bad to have things given to me and not to the boy lying next to me. But I made it all right; for I divided with him."

After the battle of Perryville a Federal soldier wandering over the field found a rebel, wounded and helpless, lying exposed to a cold and pelting rain. The Federal picked the sufferer a few questions, and seeing how much he suffered, took off his coat and put it over the wounded man. Some days after the rebel was brought in a prisoner, with the Union coat in his possession, and in reply to a question as to where he got it, told the story of the Federal soldier's kindness, adding, "I shall never shoot that man, any how."

Such facts have been observed, do not bear up as well under disaster as our own men. There is not only more whimpering, but more fretfulness and bitterness of spirit evinced, chiefly in want of regard one for another. But there are exceptions even in this. Among the sick and wounded who were one day taken on board a Sanitary Steamer in the James River were several rebels. One who was near death said, gently, to the nurse: "God forgive me, Sissy, if it was wrong. I thought it was right, but I don't like it; that's the truth. I would rather have died for the old flag; but I thought it was right. There, let them bury that with," showing a bracelet of hair on his arm. "It's my wife's, honey; it is. My watch you may keep;" and so the rebel and Union man—patients now—had all his speech and marking all his action until, at the rolling of the Recording Angel, he answered "Here!" and was gone.

One other characteristic of the Northern soldier must be mentioned, as unmistakably attested by the Commission records of Commission agents. He is a believer in God, understands his own accountability, and is not ashamed to stand up for the honor of His name. The Bible and books of camp prayer-meetings are held daily; and thousands of stern, determined veterans, who have gone into the battle's thickest time and time again, are found weeping before the altar, lifting their hearts to Him who is over all, the great Captain of our armies. Such a picture is encouragement in a fact like this; and whatever agency tends to develop and sustain this religious feeling deserves the support of all right-thinking men.

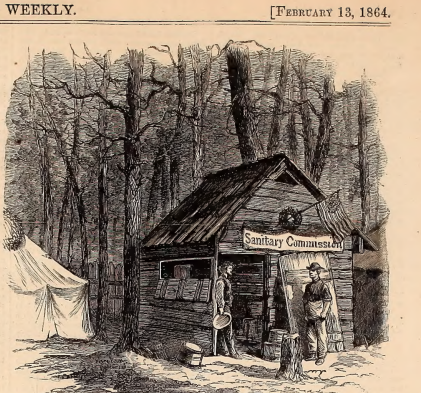
Providence—it is no irreverence to say—works with and through agencies. Commissions, various results have sustained such marked relations to their causes; gifts have found their way by such channels to the hands of the precise persons which the givers would have chosen above all others to benefit; difficulties that seemed insurmountable have so melted away; and circumstances of the most untoward irremediable disasters have been so overcome, that the blindest eye could not fail to discern, and the dullest heart to acknowledge, the presence of an enlightened controlling Influence, whose sympathies and energies were altogether in co-operation with this great Christian charity. Here is consolation for the future in this thought. It helps us to look beyond the fogs that lie on the lowlands of error and selfishness and unbelief, and to the shining heights where God is, and victory awaits the True and Just. Especially does this thought stimulate and encourage us in behalf of the Commission. We are workers with the Infinite One in every endeavor or expended in this cause.

Sometimes, dear Madam, you wonder what becomes of your gifts; whether they are wisely and faithfully appropriated; whether, in hospital or field, they pillow your boy's head, soothe his pain, and, the dressing-gown your fingers embroidered wraps any wasted, fading form; whether the slipper your needle worked once warms a soldier's foot. Go to the records of this Commission and you have your answer. On every field your brave boys encounter, in the dreary and blanked trees of Paradise, under which all weary, suffering ones might find shelter and rest. In every hot, loathsome hospital—how will God blossoms from those trees of yours lying, fragrant and beautiful, in their pale hands, and nestling in their careless breasts. Brothers, women of the North, are blessed by your work, and they appreciate it as true men should. Be encouraged: the Lord Jesus takes care of your gifts, and reads them where you would have them go. "What do the women say about us boys at home?" slowly asked a poor wretch of a lad of one who sat at his side. That brow of his ached for the touch of a loving hand. He had walked through rough, stony places; tangled briers, sin, folly had been his on the right hand and the left; but he felt still a mother's influence on his soul, leading him into the Jane Lamb of God. And the very tenderest thought was the question "What do the women say of us at home?" He was turning over a little silken needle-book that some laughing girl had sent, and some one had sent in the Sanitary Commission, working on its covers the words, playfully perhaps, "My bold soldier-boy." The friend sitting by simply pointed to that legend. The reply struck home to his heart, and he burst into tears. They were not the women he meant.

Of this Question was answered; the evidence of woman's interest was before his eyes, and he was content. His eyelids closed slowly, his breathing grew calm, and soon sleep touched him, and he was dreaming. It was just then that touched him and brought him peace to his last hour.

After the battle of Hanover Court House there was great suffering among the wounded for want of blankets and other essential clothing. Even these scenes of life were scarcely to be had. Finally, however, an army surgeon forced his way to White House. There he found the Sanitary Commission and told them the story of the soldiers' sufferings. At once clean sheets, blankets, bedsacks, and pillows, were packed, and, with boxes of condensed milk, farina, tea, coffee, sugar, oranges, and lemons, were sent off to the hospitals. "When I departed," says the surgeon, "there was not a State represented in my hospital but found some article bearing the marks of home. As I left one from Pennsylvania to his bed, and he saw upon the clean white sheet the name of his family and his home, his convulsive sobs startled all around, making the whole hospital weep."

CONVALESCENT CAMP, ALEXANDRIA, VIRGINIA.



COOK-HOUSE AT GENERAL HOSPITAL, GETTYSBURG.

In December last a Vermont regiment was encamped behind Arlington Heights, in Virginia. The men of the regiment were brawny and robust, but protracted exposure had occasioned an unusual degree of sickness among them; and application was made to the Sanitary Commission for supplies, medical and otherwise. The regiment, from some cause, had never been fully supplied with blankets, and many of the sick were consequently destitute of the most necessary protection from the cold. The wants of the men once discovered to the Sanitary Commission, arrangements were immediately made to supply them, and in a day or two one hundred and fifty blankets—one hundred and forty nine had been asked for—were forwarded to the regimental headquarters. These blankets, thus bestowed, were the gifts of patriotic associations in various parts of the country, most of them having been made by the wives and sisters of volunteers.

In this regiment was a private whom we will call Andrews—a large, lusty fellow, who had been broken down by severe service, and was considered by all as beyond hope of recovery. He had behaved with marked bravery in every engagement in which his regiment had participated, and was a universal favorite among his fellows. Though naturally courageous and stout-hearted, his physical prostration had seriously affected his mind, and he was full of despondency, expecting momentarily to die. When the supplies of the Sanitary Commission were conveyed to the camp, the condition of this man was brought particularly to the attention of the agent having them in charge. He, full of sympathy for the suffering fellow, provided him with all possible comforts, such as fruits, medicines, and agreeable food, adding to his supplies a sick-blanket, which he carefully folded over the patient as he lay on his hard, board bed.

The following day, visiting the regimental camp a second time, the agent was met by the Colonel with the information that Andrews was much better, and promised, after all, to recover. "Would you believe it," said the Colonel, "the sight of that blanket seemed to bring the fellow right back to life; his whole manner brightened; his very fingers grew nettlesome, clutching the blanket with a very ecstasy of delight."

The agent hurried to the sick man's tent, and found him, indeed, vastly improved. His face brightened as the agent approached, but he did not take his gaze from the blankets. Presently, pointing with his long, thin finger to a corner of the blanket, he whispered, "That, Sir, has been better medicine than all your hospital stuff. It has put new life into my veins; if I'm ever a well man it'll be because God sent me this blanket."

The story of the blanket was a simple one. It had been made by the soldier's wife living far away among the Vermont hills, and had been sent with other contributions from the same neighborhood to the Sanitary Commission. The woman was poor, her home was humble, but she had a true heart, and having nothing else to give she had cut up the silk dress in which she was married and converted it to the purpose mentioned. On one corner she had worked her name, and with that mark only had sent it on its mission, little dreaming what that mission would be. The blanket, laid over the soldier, immediately caught his eye; the material seemed familiar; he had certainly seen it before, and that thought roused his whole nature. Presently, pulling up the corners to his face—he was too weak to raise himself—and passing the whole slowly before his eyes, he saw the name dearer to him than all the world besides, and in an instant the whole story of her sacrifice for the soldiers' sake was daguerreotyped upon his thought. What wonder that, under the flood of memories which that moment came over him, sweeping away all thoughts of self, all despondency and gloom, he grew hopeful again, realizing that he still had something to live for and a work to do. He recovered; and to his dying day unhesitatingly he will be a believer in the medicinal properties of blankets. Surely that was a special Providence which sent to this man this precise gift—a tonic which strengthened and saved him when nothing else, it may be, could have brought him safely through.

The brave and noble men who march a-field with their lives in their hand, to battle for the life of the nation, deserve our fullest sympathy and encouragement. Through no channel can we so certainly and effectually reach and serve them as in that offered by the Sanitary Commission. Let it be our care to keep that channel ever full and flowing. So, blessing our soldiers, shall we win blessings for ourselves. So, women of the North,

"When peace shall come, and homes shall smile again,
A thousand soldier-hearts in northern climes
Shall tell their little children in their rhymes
Of the sweet saints who blessed the old war times."

HEAD-QUARTERS OF THE UNITED STATES SANITARY COMMISSION AT GETTYSBURG, PENNSYLVANIA.

REMEMBRANCE.

THE turmoil of the busy world
May sweep across my path,
And storms may come, with seeming power,
To crush me in their wrath;
Yet recollections of the past,
And of our friendship true,
Shall forge a firm, unyielding chain
To bind my heart to you.

And when in after-years you read
Each page of Memory's book,
I would not wish my name might be
In unexpected nook;
But ask that when life's noon is past,
And wanes its sunshine brief,
Within that volume I may claim
One bright, unsullied leaf.

GENERAL MEIGS.

GENERAL M. C. MEIGS, whose portrait we here give, was born in Georgia. He was appointed to West Point from Pennsylvania, in 1832, and was graduated at that institution in 1836, ranking the fifth in his class, and receiving the appointment of Second Lieutenant First Artillery. In November of the same year he was transferred to the Corps of Engineers. He was promoted to a First Lieutenant of Artillery October 19, 1838. General Meigs was for many years overseer of the works involved in the extension of the Capitol at Washington, in the exercise of which duty his taste was no less judicious than his skill. He also superintended the construction of the Potomac Aqueduct, in which he planned an arch which is said to be the largest arch of a single span in the world. At the beginning of the war he resigned his position as First Lieutenant, and was appointed Quarter-master of the Army. At present he is detailed by the Secretary on inspection duty in the West.

INDIAN CHIEFTAINS FROM THE FAR WEST.

OUR readers will be interested to know something about the two Indian Chiefs, ITATABA and ANTONIO AZUL, the most powerful of all the chieftains west of the Rio Grande, whose portraits we give on this page. Itataba left San Francisco on the 23d of January, for a visit to Washington and New York. He is chief of the Mojaves—the great tribe of the Colorado Valley—and is the finest specimen of the unadulterated aboriginal on this continent. He rules over several subordinate tribes with an iron hand. He is fifty-five years old, six feet in height, has a magnificent bodily presence, and an amount of physical strength which enables him to march fifty miles a day through the burning lands of Arizona. The only thing which has yet excited an expression of wonder in his travels was the sight of a school of whales on his way to San Francisco. Antonio Azul, the ally of Itataba, is head chief of the Pimos of the Gila, and furnishes a striking contrast to Itatuba. His face betokens a frank and amiable disposition. His tribe is very intelligent, and numbers 6000 men. The costume of the sketch is that commonly worn by the tribes from the Rio Grande to the Colorado.

ITATABA, CHIEF OF THE MOJAVES.

ANTONIO AZUL, CHIEF OF THE PIMOS.

THE LINDELL HOTEL OF ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.

THIS vast hotel, a view of which appears on page 100, is the work of an association, incorporated in 1859 under the style of "Leclede Hotel Company." The name was derived from Pierre Laguede Leclede, the early founder, who planted a colony on its site one hundred and seventeen years ago, under the protection of France. Not far from the time of laying the foundations in 1857, the name was changed by Legislative enactment to "Lindell Hotel," in compliment to the brothers Jesse G. Lindell and Peter Lindell, who were large contributors to the enterprise. Both of the brothers are now dead—the latter dying less than a year since at the age of eighty-six. The company proceeded unceasingly with their task, first under the Presidency of Dietrick A. Jonarry, and then under that of Levin H. Baker. After a lapse of seven years they saw their Herculean labor completed. Mr. Thomas Walsh, who was the architect in chief, besides drawing upon the ample resources of his own skill, visited Europe for the purpose of examining the plans of the most celebrated foreign hotels. His researches decided him to adopt and combine the shops and courts of Bolton and French models with the vestibule system of England.

The main front looks southward and lies on Washington Avenue; on the east side runs Sixth Street, on the west Seventh Street, and on the north Green Street. The design is Italian, of the Venetian school, and the building is of very substantial nature, being constructed of brick, iron, and stone. The hotel consists of two parallel buildings, extending east and west the length of the whole front, with a space of forty-five feet between them, and connected only in the centre, and both extreme by wing buildings running north and south, and leaving between them two courts, one of which is to be used for a gentleman's recreation, and the other for a lady's conservatory. While the outer connecting buildings and the eastern flank extend to the full depth of the lot, the space that would be occupied by the western flank has been reserved for the erection of a theatre, to connect with the building. The principal or southern front is divided into five compartments, as its base line, the centre and both extreme divisions forming projections, and the two receding divisions forming on the first and second stories colonnades between them. The three principal elevators on the ground-floor are supported by columns, imposts, and arches, forming a continuous arcade around the three fronts, imparting strength to the building and allowing sufficient light for the shops and basements. The pedestals of these columns extend down to the basement floor, and are supported by inverted arches.

The Lindell is six stories high exclusive of attic and basement, both which are equivalent to nearly two stories more. The height from sidewalk to cornice is one hundred and twelve feet. The stone used (rich cream-colored magnesian limestone) is from the Gratiott quarries, not far above the mouth of the Illinois River. The east and south fronts are of this stone, and show much elaborate carving. The north and west fronts are faced with brick, ornamented by cut-stone window trimmings.

The basement extends under the entire structure, courts and sidewalks, and comprises the following: The laundry, five rooms, a general linen-room, connected by steam-rise waters with the distributing-rooms on each story. The baker and pastry-cook have each two rooms; the butcher and fish-monger have one large room each; the grocer and green-grocer have one room each; there are twelve large wine-vaults and six coal-vaults. The steam-engine and the boiler are outside the building. There are, moreover, two dining-rooms for the hotel help and those of the guests of the house, and a large saloon, 63 by 64 feet, to be used as a general bath-room. There are other rooms of minor importance in the basement.

Entering the first story from Washington Avenue, the guest finds himself in a vestibule which has a variegated marble floor, with columns supporting a handsomely fresco-ed ceiling. In the courts in the eastern and western parts of the ground-floor are to be separate colonnades for both sexes, ornamented with beautiful fountains, evergreens, &c. On the same floor is the saloon, the billiard-room, public and private offices, luggage-rooms, coat-room, wash-rooms, water-closets, and vaults. Encircling the public offices are thirty-six connecting shops and stores connecting with the interior of the house by a walk all around the rear doors. These shops will be leased to all kinds of dealers, railway companies, etc.

Leaving the large vestibule, the guest can ascend to the right or left of the main entrance to the second story, which is reached by two grand staircases, running up the entire height of the building. This story is divided into public and private parlors, reading and writing rooms, suite-rooms, club rooms, etc., all spacious, lofty, and magnificently furnished throughout. The gentlemen's public reception-room is located over the main entrance, and is thirty-five by twenty-five feet. The dining-rooms are on this floor.

The third story is divided into sixteen suits of rooms for the accommodation of family parties. Each suite consists of three or more rooms—a parlor, bedroom, wash and bath room, closets. There are also on this floor or story eligible bedrooms for the accommodation of transient guests and boarders who have no families.

The fourth, fifth, and sixth stories are divided into suits of three or more rooms and single rooms. The rooms on all very large, well lighted, ranging in size from thirteen by sixteen feet to thirty-one by twenty-five—connected by spacious corridors twelve feet wide by sixteen to twenty feet high, with triple windows (nearly the width of the halls) at their extremities, give good ventilation, aided by twenty patent ventilators through the roof. There is not a single dark room in the whole building.

The whole building, taking it from basement to attic, has 530 rooms. These of public character are numerous and spacious beyond those of any other hotel either on the continent.

The parlors are eighteen or twenty in number, the whole second story front being one continuous range, and adjoining those on the sides, the house has a parlor range of more than one hundred yards. The furnishing of these parlors is in such a style as the general character of the edifice, consisting of Axminster, Brussels, and English velvet carpets; brocatelle, satin damask, and lace curtains; rosewood, walnut, and gilt mirrors; chairs, and sofas, generally of Elizabethan, Louis XIV., and other renaissance styles.

The bricks laid on the walls would be sufficient to pave an area of more than thirty-eight acres. There are 740 tons of cast and wrought iron, 77 acres of plastering, 850 windows, 650 inside doors. The plate-glass would cover an acre of ground, the floors seven acres. The sheeting, or wash-boards, laid in a continuous line, would reach thirteen miles. Besides the marble flooring and other flagging, 300,000 feet of flooring boards have been laid, requiring 30,000 yards of carpet to cover them. There are 32 tons of nails-weight, 16,0 0 feet of gas-pipe, 120,000 pounds of lead and 30,000 of iron pipe for water, 87,700 feet of steam-pipe for heating it, and 32 miles of bell-wire. The actual cost of the building is $850,000, which, with the ground (valued at $325,4 0), makes the whole value $1,276,400—not to speak of furniture, $200,000 worth of which is now being imported and put in. So the house, fully completed and furnished, will cost nearly a million and a half of dollars!

The lessees who have undertaken the task of constituting this gigantic establishment are Messrs. JOHN H. SPARR and JOHN C. FARRA. Both have long been known in the West as accomplished hosts, and had previously been associated together in the proprietorship of hotels in St. Louis. The "Lindell" was formally inaugurated on the 30th of November by a grand "Opening Ball." Nearly three thousand persons, from quite half the States of the Union were present. There were five orchestras, to whose music 120 sets, or 700 dancers, occupied the floor at a time. The whole affair was most successfully conducted, and furnished a fitting prelude to the opening of the largest and most magnificent hotel in the country, and the largest in the world, with the possible exception of the Hôtel de la Paix, of Paris.

GENERAL M. C. MEIGS.

WILLIAM MAKEPEACE THACKERAY, ÆTAT. 53.
BORN IN CALCUTTA A.D. 1811: DIED AT LONDON, DECEMBER 24, 1863.

THE LOVER'S WISH.

I WOULD not be the rose that blooms
Where gay parterres are spread,
Nor yet the rosy wreath that twines
Round beauty's graceful head.

No! let me be the rose that wins
A glance and smile from thee
When none are by, thy beating heart,
Thy blushing cheek, to see:

Long treasured for the giver's sake,
When nature's charms are past;
And claiming still, though dry and sere,
A fond look to the last.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

MORTON'S GOLD PENS are now sold at the same prices as before the commencement of the war; this is entirely owing to the Manufacturer's improvements in machinery, his present large Retail Business and Cash-in-Advance System; for, until he commenced advertising, his business was done on Credit and strictly with the Trade.

The Morton Gold Pens are the only ones sold at old prices, as the makers of all other gold pens charge the Premium on the Gold, Government TAX, &c.; but Morton has in no case changed his prices, Wholesale or Retail.

Of the great numbers sent by mail to all parts of the world during the past few years, not one in a thousand has failed to reach its destination in safety; showing that the Morton Gold Pen can be obtained by any one, in every part of the world, at the same price, postage paid by receiver.

Reader, you can have an enduring, always ready, and reliable Gold Pen, exactly adapted to your hand and style of writing, which will do your writing vastly cheaper than Steel Pens; and at the present almost universal High-Pressure Price of everything, you can have a Morton Gold Pen cheaper, in proportion to the labor spent upon it and material used, than any other Gold Pen in the World. If you want one, see "The Pen is Mightier than the Sword," in next column.

VALENTINES
To the Trade.

Call or send to Head-Quarters. Catalogues sent free by mail. A better assortment, on more liberal terms, than any other dealer can offer. Address

BENJ. W. HITCHCOCK, 400 Broadway, N. Y.
(Store and Manufactory.)

Silver Rings for 10 cents
Pure Coin.
Send 3 cents for postage if ordered singly.
See particulars in another column.

VALENTINES.

Enclose One Dollar to STRONG, and receive one of his fine VALENTINES in a HANDSOME BOX. It will be sent free by mail on receipt of the above. Address

T. W. STRONG, 98 Nassau Street, New York.

DEAFNESS OVERCOME by using Haslam's Sound Magnifying Tubes. They can be concealed. Send for a descriptive pamphlet to R. HASLAM, 23 John St., New York.

S. T.—1860.—X.

What does it mean? A receipt for making "DRAKE'S PLANTATION BITTERS." Sent free by mail.
Tru Sta. Address Box 2900, P.O., New York.

Caution
FROM
The American Watch Company.

It having come to our knowledge that imitations of the American Watch have been put upon the market in great numbers, calculated, by their utter worthlessness, to injure the reputation of our genuine products, to protect our own interests and the public from imposition, we again publish the trade marks by which our Watches may invariably be known.

We manufacture four styles of Watches:

THE FIRST has the name

"AMERICAN WATCH CO., Waltham, Mass.," engraved on the inside plate.

The SECOND has the name

"APPLETON, TRACY & CO., Waltham, Mass.," engraved on the inside plate.

The THIRD has the name

"P. S. BARTLETT, Waltham, Mass.," engraved on the inside plate.

All the above styles have the name "American Watch Co." pointed on the dial, and are warranted in every respect.

The FOURTH has the name

"WM. ELLERY, Boston, Mass." engraved on the inside plate, and is not named on the dial.

All the above described Watches are made of various sizes, and are sold in gold or silver cases, as may be required.

It is hardly possible for us to accurately describe the numerous imitations to which we have alluded. They are usually inscribed with names so nearly approaching our own as to escape the observation of the unaccustomed buyer. Some are represented as made by the "UNION WATCH Co., of Boston, Mass."—no such company existing. Some have the name of "Soldier's Watch," to be sold as our FOURTH OF WM. ELLERY grade, usually known as THE "SOLDIER'S WATCH;" others as the "AMERICAN WATCH CO.," &c., &c., &c., others the "P. S. BARTLEY," instead of our P. S. BARTLETT, besides many varieties named in such a manner as to convey the idea that they are the veritable productions of the American Watch Company.

A little attention on the part of buyers will protect them from gross imposition.

ROBBINS & APPLETON,
Agents for the American Watch Company,
162 BROADWAY, N. Y.

Lenhart's Elements of Music.

A clear and Systematic Arrangement of Rules for the Pianoforte. To which are added Surprising Facts in Practice, and George's Celebrated Letters on the Art of Playing the Piano. This New Hand-Book of Elements will be found to be the best work of the kind for beginners. Price 40 cts. Sent post-paid. OLIVER DITSON & CO., Publishers, Boston.

BILLIARD BALLS.—PATENT CORKSCREWS PRO-CURED. Warranted for six months. 2¼ and 2¾ in., $10 per set. 2 in. Bagatelle, $5; 1¾ in., $3 per set. French cue tips, $2 and $3 per box; chalk, $3 gross. For sale at WELLING'S, 707 Centre St., New York, sign of the Golden Elephant.

DO YOU WANT LUXURIANT WHISKERS OR MUSTACHIOS?—My Ointment will force them to grow heavily in six weeks (upon the smoothest face) without injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post free, to any address, on receipt of P.O. order. R. G. GRAHAM, No. 169 Nassau Street, N. Y.

"THE PEN IS MIGHTIER THAN THE SWORD."

THE GOLD PEN—THE BEST OF ALL PENS,
MORTON'S GOLD PENS,
THE BEST PENS IN THE WORLD.

On receipt of any of the following sums in Cash, the Subscriber will send by return mail, or otherwise, as directed, a Gold Pen of Pens—selected by the same according to description, viz.:

GOLD PENS WITHOUT CASES.

For 25 cents, the Magic Pen; for 38 cents, the Lucky Pen; for 50 cents, the Always-Ready Pen; for 75 cents, the Elegant Pen; and for $1, the Excelsior Pen.—These Pens are not numbered, but correspond in size to numbers 2, 4, 5, and 6 respectively.

THE SAME PENS IN SILVER-PLATED EXTENSION CASES, WITH GUARD CHAIN.

For 50 cents, the Magic Pen; for 75 cents, the Lucky Pen; for $1, the Always-Ready Pen; for $1 25, the Elegant Pen; and for $1 50, the Excelsior Pen.

These are Gold Pens, with Iridium Gold Pens, with Iridomina Points, the average wear of every one of which will far outlast a gross of the best Steel Pens; although they are unwarranted, and, therefore, not exchangeable.

MORTON'S WARRANTED PENS.

The name "A. MORTON," and "Number," and "Quality," are stamped on the following Pens, and the points are warranted for six months (except breakage and accident).

The Numbers indicate size only. No. 1 being the smallest, No. 6 the largest adapted for Ordinary Use. No. 4 the smallest, and No. 10 the largest Mammoth Gold Pen, for the desk.

Long and Medium Nibs of all sizes and qualities. Short Nibs of Numbers 4, 5, 6, and 7, in Gold, made only of first quality.

The Long and Short Nibs are fine pointed; the Medium Nibs are Broad, Coarse Business points. The engravings are facsimiles of the nibs of the Pens.

GOLD PENS, WITHOUT CASES.

For $2 75 a No. 2 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 3d quality.

For $3 00 a No. 2 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 3d quality.

For $3 25, a No. 3 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 3d quality.

For $4 00, a No. 3 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 2d quality; or a ⅞ 6 Pen, 3d quality.

For $5 75, a No. 3 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 2d quality.

For $6 25, a No 6 Pen; $8 75 a No. 7 Pen; $9 25a No. 8 Pen; $14 a No. 9 Pen; $5 No. 10 Pen—all 1st quality.

THE SAME GOLD PENS, IN SILVER EXTENSION CASES, WITH GUARD CHAIN.

For $1 50 a No. 1 Pen, 1st quality; or a No 2 Pen 3d quality.

For $1 75, a No. 2 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 3d quality.

For $2 00, a No. 2 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 3d quality.

For $2 50 a No. 4 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 3d quality.

For $3 00, a No. 5 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 2d quality.

For $3 50, a No. 6 Pen, 1st quality.

GOLD PENS, ALL FIRST QUALITY, IN SILVER-MOUNTED DESK HOLDERS.

For $2 00 a No. 4 Pen; for $2 25 a No. 5 Pen; for $2 75 a No. 6 Pen; for $3 50 a No. 7 Pen.

For $4 00 a No. 8 Pen; for $5 a No. 9 Pen; and for $6 a No. 10 Pen.

The "1st Quality" are pointed with the very best Iridium Points, carefully selected, but one of this quality are sold with the slightest imperfection which skill and the closest scrutiny can detect.

The "2d Quality" are superior to any Pens made by him prior to the year 1860.

The "3d Quality" he intends shall equal in respect to Durability, Elasticity and Good Writing Qualities (if only true considerations) any Gold Pens made elsewhere.

With regard to the Cheap Gold Pens, he begs leave to say that, previous to operating his New and Patented Machinery, he could not have made such Writing and Durable Pens, for the price, had the Gold been furnished gratuitously.

Parties ordering must in all instances specify the "Kind" or the "Number" and "Quality" of Pen they desire wanted, and be particular to describe the kind they prefer—whether Gold Holder, Silver, or Pen.

All remittances sent by mail in registered letters are at my risk; but to all who wish to avoid the extra charge (if registering), in addition to the price of goods ordered, I will guarantee Safe Delivery.

Parties sending Gold or Silver will be allowed the full premium on the day received.

TO CLUBS.—A discount of 10 per cent. will be allowed on sums of $15, of 15 per cent. on $30, and of 20 per cent. on $40, if sent to one address at one time.

Address, A. MORTON,
No. 25 Maiden Lane, New York.

New and Important Work.
For the Naval Service.
Squadron Tactics, under Steam.

By Francis H. Gerdes,
Commander United States Navy. Published by authority of the Navy Department. In use we unite, octavo.

Fully illustrated with Eighty-Four Wood Cuts.

Copies sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of price.

Just published by D. VAN NOSTRAND,
No. 192 Broadway, New York.

Agents Wanted for the Army.
New Army Watches.

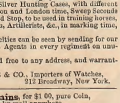
Every Soldier should have the Magic Railway Time-Keeper. It has beautiful Gilt Hunting Cases, and is fitted with new Patent Pivot Indicator, to save trouble of opening, and keeping out the breakage of our brass setting. The handsomest and most useful Watch ever offered $15. Every officer should have the CELEBRATED TIME PIECE STOP WATCH.—The highly useful Watch has beautiful and heavy Silver Hunting Cases, with different faces for Washington and London time, Sweep Seconds dial. Superior reflected Crystal Glasses in hunting boxes, and also by Spectators, Artillerists, &c., in marking time, $25.

All the leading novelties can be seen by sending for our Circulars. We want Agents in every regiment on unusually liberal terms.

All Watches mailed free to any address, and warranted for 12 months.

ARRANDALE & CO., Importers of Watches,
212 Broadway, New York.

Silver Chains, for $1 00, pure Coin, Sent anywhere by mail.
See advertisement in another place.



Elliot's New Repeaters

Are now ready. The most safe, compact, durable, efficient, cheap, and reliable Revolvers made. Carry large balls (.36 calibre), are simple to handle and fire—accurately carried in the vest—whole length five inches—four barrelled, every chamber fired. The Trade supplied.
ELLIOT ARMS CO., 474 Broadway, N. Y.

SMALL-POX.
LET THE INTERESTED READ.
REMEMBER!

BRANDRETH'S PILLS take hold and expel the matter of disease. How vastly important, then, when first attacked with fever or any contagious disease, or sick from any cause whatever, they should be used at once, before the disease takes root. When it is floating through the circulation, while it has not fixed its deadly fangs in any particular organ, two or three doses will drive it out, and health will be restored.

B. BRANDRETH, M.D.

MR. BISSELL'S LETTER.
FOUR PERSONS CURED OF SMALL-POX BY BRANDRETH'S PILLS.

NEWCOMB, ESSEX CO., N. Y., Sept. 13, 1861.

DOCTOR BENJAMIN BRANDRETH, New York.

Dear Sir: In our family we have used your excellent pills for several years, and have found them to be a nevervailing remedy in mild and severe cases of sickness, but their full value we did not fully appreciate until last winter, when the small-pox visited so many families in this and the surrounding towns. I was first attacked, and supposed I had a cold; took four pills and some warm drinks; next day no better, took four more; still no better, and my wife said I should take eight; did so, and then the Small-pox began to show itself. On the fifth day I took to my bed, and in less than four days I was covered from head to foot with pustules. I continued to use the pills daily, and took no other medicines whatever except your Vegetable Universal Pills. The pox was less than four days in coming to a head, and, as the fever came time they dried up. I began to attend some to my sick in about two weeks, but in three weeks I was attending to my regular business, having quite recovered by my usual health. I took eighty pills during my sickness, in doses of four to eight pills, according to effect; being careful to procure two or three evacuations a day; and though covered from head to feet with the disease, yet it has not left a mark upon me, which is one of the benefits and certainly to be exactly by the use of Brandreth's Pills. I and my family found this to be so in our experience of their effects in this fell disease.

My wife, son, daughter, and Aunt Polly for one hundred miles around us, was attacked with the disease about the time I was getting well over it. From the first she underwent the same treatment, and prepared herself to conduct its virulence by a free use of the pills. In six days, and while confined to her bed, and scarcely able to move from extreme weakness, she used twenty-six pills, or a little over an average of four pills per day. And what was the consequence of this continued purging with Brandreth's Pills? On the Tuesday she was obliged to take to her bed; by Friday the pustules were all filled; and by the following Tuesday she had dressed herself and in one week after was attending to her regular household duties, on the recommencement of all her neighbors. One fact deserves notice; although she was covered with the disease, yet it has left no mark whatever on her skin, which is now as evidence of the self-ordeal it has passed under.

Mrs. Wetherbee, my daughter, her husband, and their only child, were all stricken down by the Small-pox. Mrs. W. had a light, and only some seven pustules came out. She used thirty pills in fourteen days. Alonzo, her husband, had a severe attack, and took the pills all through, in large doses as noted. They both recovered in fourteen days from its commencement. Their little boy Daniel, about fifteen months old, had the disease badly; he had little room to vomit him. He was covered from head to foot; he was like a huge scab; and for days he lay insensible. We all supposed he would die—that nobody could save him. His head was bandaged for several days, and my wife said this must be remedied—that perhaps if the boy could be purged he might revive. She had read over your circular and Dr. Lull's experience, and gave him one pill, crushed, in some warm water. The pill produced no effect, but she was impressed with your remarks upon the necessity and importance of having the bowels purged in Small-pox, and in all serious sickness whatever: so she gave him another pill. Still no effect. She then pounded three pills, and added warm water, and gave them to the boy to drink. Still no effect. Then the little sufferer lay without motion, except the rapid breathing and peculiar signs of speedy dissolution evident to all. At he died. In another hour the child began to stir, and his bowels only been opened, and we then commenced to give him three pills in two hours, or at the rate of one and one-half per hour, and a total of fifteen months had taken thirteen pills, they operated, and most fully. The stools were black as pitch, and most offensive. Every one was satisfied that the active and nonvirulent matter which the pills had brought away, and that the pills had saved another life through the providence of God.

In an hour after the pills operated the child began to be gun to revive, and took some refreshment. He continued to improve until he got well. He is not marked with the disease. It seems proper to state that, though it took thirteen pills to open his bowels, yet two days after he had a full, natural evacuation without medicine, and his bowels have been regular up to this day, which is nearly nine months from the time of his sickness, nor has he used a pill since. He is a lively, intelligent, and healthy boy as can be seen. I have cheerfully will ever be grateful to you, and they and myself and wife desire you to publish this letter, which, if need be, can be certified to by all the residents of this and the surrounding towns.

I am, very respectfully, yours,
DANIEL BISSELL,
For many years Supervisor of the Town.

We certify to the truth of the above. (Signed)—POLLY BISSULL; ALONZO WETHERBEE; MARY WETHERBEE; BISSELL ROOT, Postmaster, Schroon River; ERASTUS P. ROOT; THOMAS E. CARY, Justice of the Peace, Town of Long Lake; CYRUS P. KELLOGG, Supervisor of Town of Long Lake, 1859; WILLIAM WOOD, Enquette Lake; WM. HELMS, Forked Lake; W. H. PLUMBLEY, Forked Lake; AMOS HOUGH, Forked Lake; EZEKIEL PALMER, Long Lake Hotel.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES, BRANDRETH BUILDING, NEW YORK.

Observe D. BRANDRETH in white on Government Stamp.

Soldiers of the Union!!

Read the following Letters received from your Comrades as endorsements of the World Known and World Tried

REMEDIES, KNOWN AS
Professor Holloway's Pills and Ointment.

You will here find unsolicited testimonials received from all parts of the country where our army of occupation is in force.

See to your Health!

All of you have some one interested in your welfare, then do not delay.

Your Life is Valuable!!

Not only to yourselves, but to your Fathers and Mothers, Sisters, Wives, and Brothers. Then while you may, purchase your Health!

For 30 cents, 70 cents, or $1 10,

Will, when expended in these medicines, bring you down to the present and Mail, address

The following are genuine letters, on file for inspection at this office,

80 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

QUARTERMASTER'S DEPARTMENT, }
20th Illinois Volunteers, }
FOLLY ISLAND, S. C., November 26, 1863.

Prof. HOLLOWAY, 80 Maiden Lane, N. Y.:

SIR: Enclosed please find two dollars, for which send me one dollar's worth each of your celebrated Pills and Ointment, by return mail. Please attend to this at once, for I am much in need of the above remedies. Address

Lieut. A. W. FELLOWS, Q. M.,
20th Illinois Vols.

CAMP NEAR BRANDY STATION, VA., }
January 7, 1864. }

Prof. HOLLOWAY:

DEAR SIR: I have heard a great deal of talk about your famous Pills, and as I never was in need of them until now, I want to try them, as Diarrhœa is very prevalent at the present time: send me two boxes of the ointment.

Yours, &c.,
JOSEPH WALSH,
Co. E, 5th Regt., Excelsior Brigade.

FULASKI, TENNESSEE, }
January 16, 1863. }

Prof. HOLLOWAY:

DEAR SIR: Enclosed you will find 50 cents, for which I wish you to send me some of your valuable Pills; send them by mail. I enclose 10 cents for postage. Address

ISRAEL C. HALL,
Co. D, 9th Ill. Vols.
Fort Royal, S. C.

CAMP ON THE EXCELSIOR BRIGADE, }
January 1, 1864. }

Prof. HOLLOWAY:

SIR: Please send me for the enclosed 50 cents the worth of it in Pills; enclosed find 15 cents to pay postage, and you will oblige. Address

Yours, &c.,
Serg't. W. FOWERS,
Co. E, 5th Regt. Excelsior Brigade,
Washington, D. C.

MORRIS ISLAND, S. C., }
January 21, 1864. }

Prof. HOLLOWAY:

Please find enclosed the sum of one dollar for Pills. I have Diarrhœa, and can't get it stopped, so I want to try your Pills.

Yours, &c.,
WILLIAM CHRISTY,
Co. D, 104th Regt., Penn. Vols.
Morris Island, S. C.

Ballard Patent
Breech Loading Rifles and Carbines.

Carrying the copper water-proof cartridge, and also using ordinary loose ammunition. This arm is so constructed by all competitors to be superior to any other ever offered to the public. Its range and accuracy are unsurpassed, while as a rare guarantee against getting out of order. The greatest advantage of the fire with either loose or cartridge ammunition makes it superior to all others. These arms are being manufactured by military property and have been adopted both by the General Government and a number of States. We have the highest testimonials of efficiency and durability.

We now offer to the Public our new Cartridge and loose ammunition loading receiver. The arm has no equal as a belt or pocket weapon. No one making a Rifle Carbine arm should be without one.

For further information send for descriptive circular.

P. S. Do not forget that both Rifles and Pistols may be had with either copper cartridge or loose ammunition.

MERWIN & BRAY, Sole Agents,
193 Broadway, N. Y.

Gold! Gold!! Gold!!!
30,000 Watches, Chains, &c., &c., &c.
Worth $150,000.

To be sold for One Dollar each, without regard to value, as the Gifts and Jewelry will be distributed will over be sold to get. Send 30 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and also receive the Circular containing full list of articles and particulars. Also terms to Agents, which are very liberal, both Local and Town in the country.

Six Certificates can be ordered for $1, thirteen for $2, thirty-five for $5, and one hundred for $15.

Address C. F. SHULTS,
285 River Street, Troy, N. Y.

American Needle Co., 442 Broadway, N.Y.
J. W. BARTLETT,
NEEDLE Manufacturer for all the SEWING Machines.
☞ Bartlett's Burnished Hand Needles. ☜
Heckle, Gill, Comb, Card Pins, &c., &c.
☞ We find Bartlett's Burnished Needles a wonderful improvement over others for Sewing Machines or Hand Sewing. Try sample 25c., and for 50 cents, or more quantity by mail."—Miss. DEMOREST.
Or a Beautiful Needle Book and 200 Needles for One Dollar.

PHOTOGRAPHIC MAGNIFIER, a charming accompaniment to photographic albums. $1 50. Godfrey, 631 Pearl, N. Y.

Holiday Presents.

J. H. Winslow & Co.

100,000

WATCHES, CHAINS, &c., &c.

Worth $500,000.

To be sold for One Dollar each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for till you know what you are to get.

SPLENDID LIST!!

OF ARTICLES TO BE SOLD FOR ONE DOLLAR EACH.

100 Gold Hunting Cased Watches.....	$100 00 each.
100 Gold Watches.....	60 00 each.
200 Ladies' Gold Watches.....	35 00 each.
500 Ladies' and Gents' Silver Watches....	15 00 each.
1000 Vest and Neck Chains.....	5 00 to 10 00 each.
1000 Gold Lockets.....	5 00 to 10 00 each.
2000 Gold Pens.....	2 00 to 5 00 each.
2000 Cameo Brooches.....	4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Mosaic and Lava Brooches.....	4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Lava and Florentine Brooches..	4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Coral, Opal, and Em. Brooches..	4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Cameo Ear Drops.....	4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Mosaic and Lava Ear Drops....	4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Lava and Florentine Ear Drops..	4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Coral, Em., and Opal Ear Drops..	4 00 to 6 00 each.
2500 Gent's Breast Pins.....	2 50 to 8 00 each.
2500 Vest Chains.....	2 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Fob and Guard Chains.....	2 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Sets of Sleeve Studs.....	2 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Sleeve Buttons.....	2 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Plain Rings.....	2 50 to 5 00 each.
2000 Stone Set Rings.....	2 50 to 5 00 each.
2000 Lockets.....	2 50 to 10 00 each.
2000 Ladies' Jewelry.....	2 00 to 10 00 each.
1000 Gold Pens, Silver M'ted Holders	4 00 to 5 00 each.
1000 Gold Pens, with Silver Extension Cases and Pencils.....	4 00 to 6 00 each.

All of the above kinds of Goods will be sold for one dollar each. Certificates of all the various articles, stating what each one is above, are first put into envelopes, sealed up, and mixed; and when ordered, are taken out without regard to choice, and sent by mail, thus giving all a fair chance. On receipt of the Certificate, you will see what you can have, and may say it is not your option to send the dollar and take the article or not.

In all transactions by mail, we shall charge for forwarding the Certificates, paying postage, and doing the business. Of course, which must be inclosed when the Certificate is sent for. Five Certificates will be sent for $1; eleven for $2; twenty-five for $5; sixty-five for $10, and a hundred for $15.

AGENTS.—Those acting as Agents will be allowed ten cents on every Certificate ordered by them, provided their Remittance amounts to one dollar. Agents will receive Circulars for every Certificate, and remit 15 cents to us, either in cash or postage stamps. Great caution should be used by our correspondents in regard to giving their correct address, Town, County, and State. Address

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,

208 Broadway, New York.

HEAD-QUARTERS

For Veteran, Cavalry, Army Corps, Company, and Division Pins of every Description.

On the receipt of $1, I will send you a Solid Silver Shield, or either Cavalry, Artillery, Division, or Co. Pin with your Name, Regt., and Co. handsomely engraved upon it, or a fine Gold Pen with Extension Case and Pencil, or a Stylish Vest Chain or Neck Chain, or a California Diamond Ring or Pin, or a Sleeve Button Ring; and for $3 I will send you a Solid Silver new style CAVALRY Pin, engraved as above. Any article selling for 50 cents or more Pins at one time will be allowed 15 cents each.

R. B. HAYWARD,

Manufacturing Jeweler, 308 Broadway, N. Y.

SALISBURY, BRO. & CO.,

AGENTS FOR THE UNITED STATES FOR THE CELEBRATED

LIBERTINE

Extension Holders and Gold Pens,

Of the most handsome and durable construction, put up in new fancy case of cut flutes each, and not sold in any less quantities. They will retail for $3 each.

For 1 dozen for $10 25
Or 3 dozen for 25 00

Sent by mail or express, prepaid. Address

SALISBURY, BRO. & CO., Providence, R. I.

Military and Naval

COLLECTION AND BANKING OFFICE.—SOLDIERS, BROWN & CO., No. 54 Wall St., New York, adjust and collect every variety of just claims against the Government or State Head-Bodies relating hereto, &c., and by mail, free.

Printing-Press for Sale.

One Taylor Double Cylinder, five Rollers, Table Distribution, Bed 39x51. Price $2500.

Apply to ADAMS & BROTHERS, 329 Pearl St., N.Y.

$60 A MONTH! We want Agents at $60 a month, expenses paid, to sell our Excelsior Family Sewing Machine. 13 other articles. 3 circulars sent free. SHAW & CLARK, Biddeford, Maine.

George A. Ely & CO.

ARMY WATCHES.

Solid Silver Hunting Cased Lever Watch, Jeweled English Movement and Silver Cap, a perfect time-keeper, only $11.

THE GREAT PEDLAR WATCH, especially for Soldiers, in very HEAVY SOLID SILVER HUNTING CASED ENGLISH LEVER MOVEMENT, JEWELED, in finely finished engine turned engraved or plain cases, WARRANTED a perfect time-keeper, only ..... $15.

GOLD COMPOSITE, same as above ..... $16.

LADIES' SOLID GOLD COMPOSITE WATCH, very small, only ..... $16.

A very fine double bottom Silver English Hunting Watch, full Jeweled, CHRONOMETER BALANCE ..... $25.

Officer's Watch.

GENUINE SOLID SILVER WATCHES, IN 4 OZ. STERLING SILVER CASES, FULL JEWELED, and DOUBLE BOTTOM CASES .....

American Lever Watch, same as above, with CHRONOMETER BALANCE .....

SPLENDID 18 carat very heavy Gold AMERICAN WATCHES, in 40 pennyweight cases .....

Same as above, with Chronometer Balance $70

GOLD HUNTING ENGLISH LEVER WATCH, Hunt Lever, Centre Balance, M. J. Tobias $35

Constantly on hand Watches of every description.

We will send any of the above Watches to any address on receipt of price, free of expense. Register letter and name at our risk if properly sealed. Great inducements, send for our Circular.

GEORGE A. ELY & CO., IMPORTERS, 208 BROADWAY, N. Y. P. O. Box 5614.

☞ We give a handsome Gold Plated Chain with every Watch.

ARTIFICIAL LEGS
& ARMS SELPHO'S PATENT.

The best Substitutes for NATURAL LIMBS ever invented. Established 24 years. 694 Broadway.

SOLDIERS' Co PINS & CORPS BADGES

Every Co., from A to M, and every Corps Badge worn by the Army, constantly on hand, engraved to order, and sent free on receipt of price. Also Cavalry and Artillery Badges. Send for Illustrated Catalogue. Address C. L. BALCH & CO., 305 Broadway, New York.

WATCHES

FOR

THE ARMY.

Superbly finished watches, the beauty of which is only equaled by their cheapness.—N. Y. Weekly, July 25th.

Particularly valuable for officers in the army, and travelers.—Frank Leslie's, Feb. 21.

Prettiest, best and cheapest time-pieces ever offered. —N. Y. Illustrated News, Jan. 16.

Magic Time Observers,

The Perfection of Mechanism!

Being a Hunting, or Open Face, or Lady's or Gentleman's Watch combined, with Patent Self-winding Improvement.

A most pleasing novelty. One of the prettiest, most convenient, and decidedly the most reliable timekeeper for general and reliable use ever offered. It has within it and connected with its machinery its own winding attachment, rendering a key entirely unnecessary. The cases of this Watch are composed of two metals, the outer one being fine 16 carat gold. It has the improved ruby action lever movement, and is warranted an accurate timepiece. Price, superbly engraved, per case of half dozen, $204. Solid silver watches in same movement, $150. If sent by mail, the postage is 26 cents; registering, 20 cents.

Silver Watches!

First-Class Hunting Time-Pieces.

FOR ACCURACY OF MOVEMENT, BEAUTY OF MATERIAL, AND ARTISTIC ELEGANCE IN FINISH, THESE WATCHES MUST UNDER

UNIVERSAL APPROBATION!

An invitation so faultless that it can hardly be detected by the most experienced judges. The material being of the best metals, the outer one first quality Silver and the inner one German Silver, it can not be recognized by cutting or heavy engraving, making it not only in appearance, but in durability, the best resemblance of Solid Sterling Silver in existence.

The sale of these watches in the army is a source of enormous profit, retailing, as they very readily do, at $25 and upward. Many hundred dollars can be made in a single day-day by any one of ordinary business tact!

As a Watch-present, it is justly regarded as unsurpassed, tastefully engraved, white enamel dial, and fancy cut hands, in most pleasing style. Price, per half dozen, $66; postage, $3 38; registering, 20 cts. Sold only by the case. Can be safely sent by mail.

☞ TERMS CASH, INVARIABLY IN ADVANCE. No agents employed. Money must be sent directly with us. If money is sent us by express or mail in a registered letter, it is at our risk. Orders will meet the most prompt and faithful attention.

HUBBARD BROS, Sole Importers,

Broadway, cor. Courtlandt St., New York.

To Compositors.—Wanted, three strictly first-class Compositors, used to Book-work. Apply to Mr. Manning, Foreman of HARPER & BROTHERS' Composing Room, N. Y.

Portable Printing Offices.

For the Army and Navy Hospitals, Merchants, Steamboats, &c. Those who wish to print neatly, cheaply, and expeditiously. Circular sent free. Address ADAMS PRESS CO., 24 Beekman Street, N. Y.

Diamond Parlor Matches

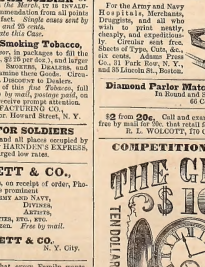
In Round and Silk Boxes,

At 24 Beekman Street, N. Y.

$2 from 20c. Call and examine, or ten samples sent free by mail for 20c. that retail for $2. by

R. L. WOLCOTT, 16 Chatham Square, N. Y.

COMPETITION DEFIED!



AN ELEGANT TWO DOLLAR CHAIN

We offer to sell our WATCH, which is of the HIGH EST QUALITY IN MANUFACTURE, AN ACCURATE TIME-KEEPER, and in short a perfect Hunting pattern, as the low price of TEN DOLLARS.

It is therefore recommended all wanting either an OFFICER'S GOLD or SILVER WATCH, Hunting Cases, to remit us $10, when they will receive a Solemon Watch, protected by ourselves, each sealed and post-paid, at our expense.

Our CHAIN is the admiration of all those who have seen it. In beauty and cheapness it cannot be surpassed. ONLY TWO DOLLARS.

☞ Recollect, the OLD ESTABLISHED AND RELIABLE AGENCY, where all orders are attended to with the utmost promptitude, carefulness and secrecy. Goods forwarded to Southern ports in the most compact, reliable and expeditious manner.

Address THOMAS ORMSBY,
General Purchasing Agent, 86 Nassau St., N.Y.

Cavalry and Artillery.

Solid Silver. $1 25. Solid Silver. $1 25.

Solid 18 k. Gold, $5 00. Solid 18 k. Gold, $5 00.

Sent by mail to all parts of the U. S. Address Gold Corps, Co., and Division Pins, engraved to order, by the single pin, 10c, or 100c, and sent to any part of this country. Terms cash in advance. Send for a circular. Address

DROWNE & MOORE,

Manufacturing Jewelers, 208 Broadway, New York.

$75 A MONTH.—Agents wanted to sell Sewing Machines. We will give a commission on all Machines sold, or employ agents who will work for the above wages and all expenses paid. For particulars address

BOYLAN & CO., DETROIT, MICH.

RHEUMATISM.

USE THE ELECTRO-METALLIC INSOLES, BELTS, AND ANKLETS. THEY ARE AN INFALLIBLE REMEDY for RHEUMATISM, COLD FEET, &c. METTAM & CO., No. 629 Broadway, N. Y.

Insoles, $1 per pair; Belts, $3; Armlets, $1 50 each. Sent by mail for extra amount.

HARPER & BROTHERS

Have Just Published:

FIVE YEARS OF PRAYER, with the Answers. By Rev. SAMUEL IRENÆUS PRIME, D.D., Author of "The Power of Prayer," "Prayer in Europe and the East," "Life of Rev. Dr. Murray," &c. 12mo, Cloth, $1 25.

Works by W. M. Thackeray.

VANITY FAIR. A Novel. With Illustrations. 8vo, Cloth, $2 00.

THE NEWCOMES. Illustrated. 8vo, Cloth, $2 00.

PENDENNIS. A Novel. With Illustrations. 2 vols. 8vo, Cloth, $4 00.

THE VIRGINIANS. With Illustrations by the Author. 8vo, Cloth, $2 00.

THE ADVENTURES OF PHILIP. A Novel. Engravings. 8vo, Cloth, $2 00.

HENRY ESMOND. A Novel. 8vo, Paper, 75c.

LOVEL THE WIDOWER. A Novel. With Illustrations. 8vo, Paper, 75c.

THE ROSE AND THE RING. A Fireside Pantomime. Numerous Illustrations. Small 4to, Cloth, 75 cents.

THE GREAT HOGGARTY DIAMOND. A Novel. 8vo, Paper, 75c.

ROUNDABOUT PAPERS. With Illustrations. 12mo, Cloth, $1 25; Half Morocco, $2 00.

THE ENGLISH HUMORISTS OF THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY. 12mo, Cloth, $1 25; Half Morocco, $2 00.

THE FOUR GEORGES. With Illustrations. New Edition. 12mo, Cloth, $1 25; Half Morocco, $2 50.

Published by HARPER & BROTHERS,

Franklin Square, New York.

☞ Sent by mail, postage-free, on receipt of price.

A Splendid Mother's or Bridal Present.

HARPER'S

Illuminated and Pictorial

BIBLE.

Including the Apocrypha. Superbly embellished by over Sixteen Hundred Illustrations, exquisitely engraved by Adams after Designs by Chapman, exclusive of a Series of Rich Illuminations in Colors, comprising Frontispieces, Presentation Plate, Family Record, Titlepages, &c. The whole forming a magnificent Folio Volume.

Price, Morocco, gilt edges, bevelled and paneled sides, $25 00; Morocco extra, gilt edges, $32 00; Full Calf, marbled edges, bevelled sides, $38 00; Full Roan, marbled edges, $16 00.

Harper's Pictorial Bible is printed from the standard copy of the American Bible Society, and contains Marginal References, the Apocrypha, a Concordance, Chronological Index, Table of Weights and Measures, Tables of Weights, Measures, &c. The large Frontispieces, Title Plate, the Old and New Testament Family Records, Presentation Plate, Historical Illustrations, and Initial Letters to the Books of the Old and New Testaments, &c., are from original designs, made expressly for this edition, by J. G. Chapman, Esq., of New York, in addition to the which there are numerous large Engravings, from designs by distinguished modern artists in France and England; to which a full index is given.

HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers, New York.

For sale by A. WILLIAMS & CO., Boston; SMITH, ENGLISH & CO., Philadelphia; CUSHING & BAILEY, Baltimore; FRANCK TAYLOR, Washington; ROBERT CLARKE & CO., Cincinnati; GEORGE STEARNS, Louisville; J. CLUGGE & CO., Chicago; DAWSON & BROTHERS, Montreal.

HARPER'S

NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE

For February, 1864.

TERMS.

One Copy for one Year	$3 00
Two Copies for One Year	5 00
An Extra Copy will be allowed for every Club of Ten Subscribers, at $2 50 each, or 11 Copies for $25 00.
Payment invariably in advance.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE and HARPER'S WEEKLY, together one year, $5 00.

HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers.

Circulation over 100,000.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

TERMS.

One Copy for Four Months	$1 00
One Copy for One Year	3 00
One Copy for Two Years	5 00

And an Extra Copy will be allowed for every Club of Ten Subscribers, at $2 50 each, or 11 Copies for $25.

Payment invariably in advance.

TERMS TO ADVERTISERS.—Seventy-five Cents per line for Inside, and One Dollar per line for outside Advertisements each insertion.

Vols. I., II., III., IV., V., VI. and VII. for the Years 1857, 1858, 1859, 1860, 1861, 1862, and 1863 of "HARPER'S WEEKLY," handsomely bound in Cloth extra, Price $5 00 each, are now ready.

HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers.

FISK & HATCH.

Bankers and Dealers in Government Securities, AND AGENTS FOR THE UNITED STATES FIVE-TWENTY LOAN.

No. 38 Wall Street, New York.

THE NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW. NO. CCII.—For January, 1864.

Edited by Professor James Russell Lowell and Chas. Eliot Norton, Esq.

Contents: Art. I. Life of William H. Prescott; II. The Bible and Slavery; III. The Amalgamation System; IV. The Bibliotheca Sacra; V. Immorality in Politics; VI. The Early Life of Governor Winthrop; VII. The Sanitary Commission; VIII. Russia's Life of Jesus; IX. The President's Policy; X. Critical Notices.

Articles I. and II. are from James Russell Lowell, on The President's Policy, is thus spoken of by the New York Evening Post:

"The North American, after this, should be a favorite at the White House. Mr. Lincoln will find, in some of the views which this article takes of his public course, an explanation of his official acts quite as satisfactory probably, as any which his own dexterity of statement, and that is not small, could furnish."

The North American Review is published quarterly, on the first days of January, April, July, and October. The numbers of about three hundred pages each, containing matter equal to an ordinary octavo volume.

Terms. Five Dollars a year, or one dollar and twenty-five cents a number.

CROSBY & NICHOLS, Publishers,
117 Washington Street, Boston.

Volunteers. Attention!—For the derangements of the system incidental to the change of diet, Wounds, Eruptions, and exhaustion which every Volunteer is liable to, there are no remedies so safe, convenient, and available as HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT, 25 cents per box.

Watches Given Away.

Agents and Dealers look at the Great Chance to make Money we offer, by engaging in the sale of our Newspaper, THE NEW YORK PEERLESS. Only $15 capital required to obtain a Watch, Pair, with first order. We also offer Splendid Steel Engravings. $10 invested will yield $50. Send before such inducements were offered. Full particulars in Circulars, mailed free.

G. S. HASKINS & CO., 30 Beekman Street, N. Y.

The Oldest Established Print Package House in the U. S.

Straight Hair made Wavy!! without heat' ing it, by using Iuia's Patent Hair Crimpers. For sale at Variety Store.

Shults' Ongnent, warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in six weeks, or money refunded. Sent postpaid, for 50 cts. Address C. F. SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

AGENTS WANTED in every regiment and garrison, and on board every naval vessel, to circulate the U. S. ARMY AND NAVY JOURNAL—the only paper exclusively devoted to the interests of the Army and Navy. Terms address W. C. CHURCH, 179 Broadway, New York. See advertisement inside.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY,
Manufacturers of Photographic Materials,
501 Broadway, New York.

Card Photographs.

Our Catalogue now embraces considerably over

FOUR THOUSAND

different subjects, for which additions are continually being made of Portraits of Eminent Americans, etc., viz.:

73 Major-Generals,	575 Statesmen,
199 Brigadier-Generals,	127 Divines,
259 Colonels,	116 Authors,
84 Lieut.-Colonels,	39 Artists,
297 Other Officers,	112 Stage,
60 Officers of the Navy,	46 Prominent Women,
147 Prominent Foreign Portraits.

2,500 COPIES OF WORKS OF ART,

Including reproductions of the most celebrated Engravings, Paintings, Statues, &c.

Catalogues sent on receipt of Stamp.

An order for One Dozen Pictures from our Catalogue will be filled on receipt of $1.90, and sent by mail, Free.

Photographic Albums.

Of these we manufacture a great variety, ranging in price from 50 cents to $50 each.

Our ALBUMS have the reputation of being superior in beauty and durability to any others.

The smaller kinds can be safely sent by mail at a postage of six cents per oz.

The more expensive can be sent by express.

We also keep a large assortment of

Stereoscopes and Stereoscopic Views

Our Catalogue of these will be sent to any address on receipt of Stamp.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY,
Manufacturers of Photographic Materials,
501 Broadway, New York.

Friends or relatives of prominent military men will confer a favor by sending us their likenesses to copy. They will be kept carefully, and returned unsigned.

EF" FINE ALBUMS MADE TO ORDER for Congregations to present to their Pastor, or for other purposes, with suitable inscriptions, &c.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Agents, male or female, Soldiers, and all having time to spare, are particularly requested, as a favor, to send us their address, and we will send in return, free, information for which they will be reasonable. We offer extra inducements. From $5 to $25 per day in Express. We want addresses from every county in the U. S., and from every settlement in the Army. Address in full, RICHARDS & CO., 37 and 39 Nassau Street, Box 3131, N. Y.

AMERICAN METALLIC COLLARS.

The only enameled "Turn-over" Collar made in metals. Send $1 for a "Turn-over" or 75 cents for a "Cloth-ed," to Box 3513, and receive it by return mail. American enameled Metallic Collar Co., 84 Pine St., N. Y.

F. GROTE, Manufacturer of Ivory Goods, 75 Fulton St., New York, cor. Gold. Billiard, Bagatelle, Pool Balls, The Tip Balls and Plain Checks in great variety. Marqueries and Napkin Rings, and all other kind of Ivory Goods, wholesale and retail. Also Manufacturer and Importer of Cues, Cue Leather, Chalk, &c. The only place to get a good set of enameled Billiard Balls at reduced prices. All Orders by mail promptly attended to.

A REAL TROUBLE.

"Thought it was perfectly horrid! Yes—and the Wretch said it was time that American Ladies of Taste made their own Fashions; and would you believe it, Papa sided with him, and Mamma and I become severely angry, and went to Bed."

A Bad Breath—The Greatest Curse the human family is heir to. How many lovers it has separated—how many friends forever parted. The subject is a delicate, your nearest friend will not mention it, and you are ignorant of the fact. To effect a radical cure, use the "BALM OF THOUSAND FLOWERS" as a dentifrice, night and morning. It also beautifies the complexion, removing all tan, pimples, and freckles, leaving the skin soft and white. Price 50 cents. For sale by all druggists.

The Trade supplied by HOWARD, SANGER & CO., 160 and 167 Chambers Street, N. Y., and for sale by all Druggists.

GOLD PENS AND CASES

Retailed at wholesale prices. 14 kt. Gold Pen, Solid Silver Case, $1 00, warranted for one year, guarantee accompanying each Pen. Send for a circular. Pens repaired on receipt of 50 cents.

E. S. JOHNSON, 15 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

GUNS, PISTOLS, Military Goods,

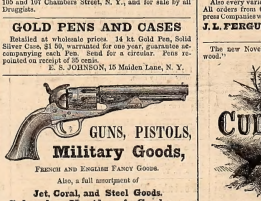
French and English Fancy Goods.

Also, a full assortment of

Jet, Coral, and Steel Goods.

Schuyler, Hartley & Graham,
19 Maiden Lane & 230 Fulton Street, N. Y.,
31 Rue du Chateau d'Eau, Paris.
Sands St., Birmingham, Eng.

Mason & Hamlin's



MASON & HAMLIN CABINET ORGAN

CABINET ORGANS

FOR FAMILIES, CHURCHES, AND SUNDAY SCHOOLS; ADAPTED TO SECULAR AND SACRED MUSIC.

A great improvement upon the Melodeon, Harmoniums, &c. Recommended as the best instruments of their class in the world by more than two hundred of the most eminent musicians in the country. Prices $85, $100, $105, $150, to $250. Illustrated catalogues, with full descriptions, sent free. Address MASON BROTHERS, New York, or MASON & HAMLIN, Boston.

Remington's

ARMY AND NAVY REVOLVER.

Approved by the Government.

Warranted superior to any other Pistol of the kind. Also Pocket and Belt Revolvers. Sold by the Trade generally.

E. REMINGTON & SONS,
Ilion, N. Y.

$35 WATCHES. $35

Genuine Full-Jeweled American Lever Watches, in 4 Ounce Coin Silver Hunting Cases, Gold Joints, for $35.

Also every variety of good Watches at equally low rates. All orders from the Army must be pre-paid, as the Express Companies will not take bills for collection on soldiers.

J. L. FERGUSON, Importer of Watches.
208 Broadway New York.

The new Novel, by the author of "Neighbor Jackwood."

Ready at all principal bookstores. Published by J. E. TILTON & CO., Boston.

Office or Vermilye & Co., Bankers,
No. 44 Wall Street, New York, Jan. 25, 1864.

WE have notice from the General Subscription Agent in 59 Loan that the whole amount of this loan authorized by law has been taken by subscribers. We can not, therefore, furnish as heretofore the bonds at par and interest.

We shall be pleased to fill orders for these bonds at market rates, and shall endeavor to keep constantly on hand, ready for immediate delivery, a full assortment.

We also buy and sell all kinds of Government Stocks.

The new FIVE PER CENT INTEREST-BEARING LEGAL-TENDER NOTES.

SIX PER CENT CERTIFICATES OF INDEBTEDNESS.

SEVEN-THIRTY TREASURY NOTES.

SIX PER CENT COUPON and REGISTERED BONDS

1881.

U. S. QUARTERMASTERS' CHECKS.

Maturing Certificates COLLECTED or CASHED on favorable terms.

VERMILYE & CO.,
Government Agents Five-Twenty Loan.

UNIVERSAL CLOTHES WRINGER

OVER 50,000 SOLD IN 1863.

BOTH SELF-ADJUSTING AND ADJUSTABLE.

The only wringer with the potent

COG-WHEEL REGULATOR,

which positively prevents the rolls from BREAKING OR TWISTING OFF THE SHAFT.

A GOOD CANVASSER WANTED

in every town. We offer liberal inducements, and guarantee the exclusive sale.

Descriptive circulars sent free

R. C. BROWNING, No. 347 Broadway, New York.

$2 to $5 a day!—Agents wanted, local or traveling, everywhere. Business honorable, easy, and attractive. Article quick sale to citizen or soldier, and alike useful to man, woman or child. Particulars sent free, or box samples by mail for 21 cents. Address

A. J. BESTOR, 9th Main Street, Hartford, Conn.

Fogg's Double-Action Patent Lever SKATE BUCKLE,

Manufactured and for sale on Straps, at wholesale, by E. STEVENS, Manufacturer of Steam Straps and Leather Goods, 210 Pearl St., New York, 62 Milky St., Boston.

FINE WATCH FREE,

And $15 Per Day Easy.

Agents should be careful in directing their orders for our Original and "only Genuine" Extra Large Size Stationery Packages, which have become so popular through the fine quality and value of their contents. As we have several imitators, who copy our Styles, Advertisements, Premiums, &c., we are the only manufacturers of the "Celebrated Richards Prize Packages," and none are genuine unless bought direct from us. We will do what we have done for years past, present free to every one who will form our agents a Fine Gold or Silver Hunting-Case Watch, of genuine English Movements, and warranted a correct time-keeper. These watches are worth $50 each, or cost, at retail, from the first order. No one else does this. A single one of our Underpaid Packages contains more really valuable articles than any half dozen others ever sold. Among the surprising presents of "our package" will be found Fine Stationery, Pens, Pencils, Envelopes, Engraving, Ladies' Fashion Plates, Designs for Needle-work, Colored Engravings, Household Companions, Letter-Writer's for 1864, Useless Useless, Comic Songsters, Book-Keepers, Military Likenesses, Games, 40 Compositions for Soldiers, Many Ways to get Rich, Yankee Notions, Fancy Articles, Rich and Costly Presents of Fashionable Jewelry, &c., &c., all together worth many dollars, for only 25c. Agents make immense profits. 100 to 200 per cent. allowed. We guarantee agents can even make $15 per day. Our regular agents average that. Our Packages stand even, one above all others for quality and quantity of contents. Agents wanted in every camp and town in the country. Goods sent safe to all parts of the army. Send for our Great New Circular for 1864, containing Extra Premium inducements, free. P. C. RICHARDS & CO., 102 Nassau St., N. Y. Only Original and Largest and Cheapest Prize Package House in the World.

$7. WATCHES. $7.

A Beautiful Engraved Gold-Plated Watch, Lever Cap, small size, English Movements, perfect time-keeper. Sent free by mail, in neat case, for only $7. A Solid Silver, same as above, $7. Specially adopted to the ARMY.

$15 European Timekeeper. $15

A Superb "Extra Double Gold Plated" engraved Hunting Case Watch, Maple Spring, "Genuine English Musical Movements," Independent Action, Self Balance, correct timekeeper, "warranted one year." Sent free by mail on receipt of a $100 Watch, used by English Army Officers. Sent free by mail for only $15.

English Coney Watch, for ladies. "Rich designs."$18

Genuine English Patent Lever, Levers, Gilt Cap, $23

Army Watches of all Descriptions very low.

We do not sell the poor Swiss Imitation Watches. Our customers should beware of parties advertising in imitation of us.

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper, of Aug. 22, says: "Messrs. Norton & Co. have considered how to offer desirable things in a watch—cheapness and reliability. Even if it is worth but $7 a watch must have an excellent timekeeper, there will be greater punctuality in all the affairs of life."

CHAS. P. NORTON & CO., 38 & 40 Ann Street, N. Y.

The Celebrated CRAIG MICROSCOPE, combining Instruction with Amusement, is sold, complete for $3 75; with a beautiful Mounted Objects for $3; with 24 Objects, $5, by

HENRY CRAIG,
126 Broadway, New York.

Also, he will mail, pre-paid, the Believer, or Perfected STEREOSCOPE, with a sliding Focus and Field-Piece, accommodating all eyes; for $3 40; with 12 assorted views, $5. A liberal discount to the trade.

A Household Word.—Buy your Housekeeping Articles at BASSFORD'S Cheaper Institute, New York.

WARDS SHIRTS SENT EVERYWHERE BY MAIL OR EXPRESS

Ready made or to measure, at $12, $15, and $20 per doz.

Self-Measurement for Shirts.

Printed directions for Self-Measurement, list of prices, and drawings of different styles of Shirts and Collars sent free everywhere.

FRENCH FLANNEL OVERSHIRTS, $3 00, $3 75, and $4 50 each; all cut one yard long. A single shirt sent by mail or express at the same and 63 cents postage for each shirt.

Send the size of your neck. Also

STEEL COLLARS

ENAMELED WHITE,

Having the appearance and comfort of linen, have been worn in England for the last two years in preference to any other collar, as they are readily cleaned in one minute with a sponge.

To Military Men and Travellers they are invaluable. "From $1 each; sent by post to any part of the Union on the receipt of $1 15.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

Agents Wanted in every Town in the Union.

S. W. H. WARD, 387 Broadway, N. Y.

Learn to Skate in One Hour by using The American Parlor or Floor Skate, Hard Rubber Rollers, Anti-friction Axles, Frederick Screws, 215 Pearl Street, New York, 68 Kilby Street, Boston.

Dyspepsia Tablets,

For Indigestion, Heartburn, &c., manufactured only by S. G. WELLING, and sold by druggists generally. 50 cents per box. Depot No. 307 Centre St., New York, second floor. Sent free by mail for 65 cents.

The Cheapest Watches in AMERICA.

ESPECIALLY ADAPTED FOR THE ARMY.

Splendid Solid Silver Hunting-Cased Watches, fine English and American Movements.

11, 15, 25, and 35 Dollars.

See our Advertisement on Page 111. Send for Circular.

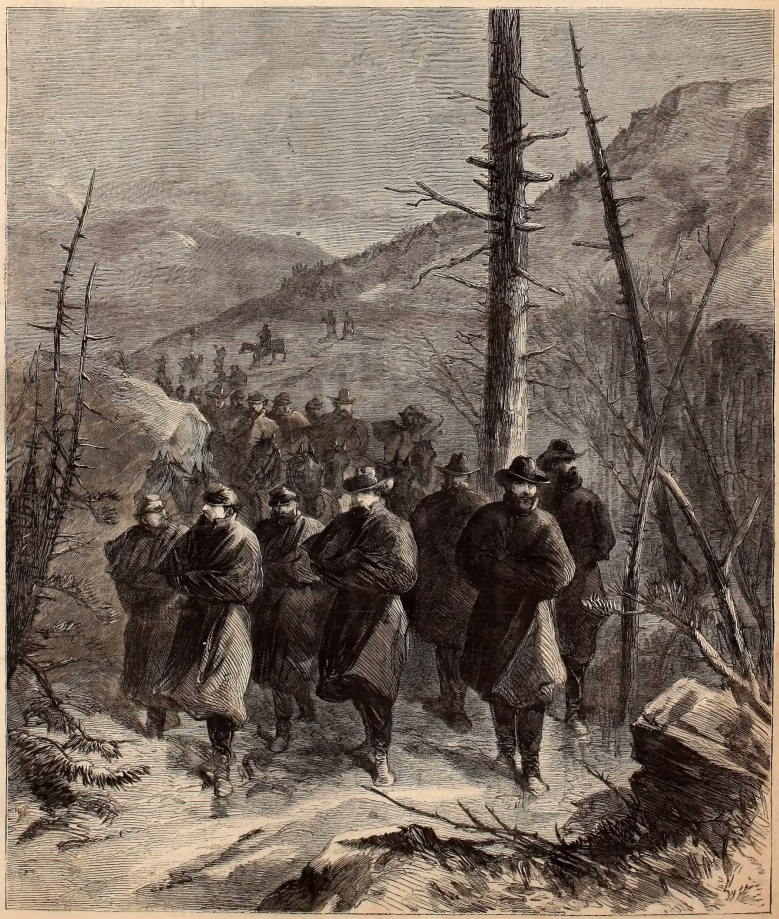
GEORGE A. ELY & CO., 302 Broadway, New York.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION.

VOL. VIII.—No. 373.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 20, 1864. [$1.00 FOR FOUR MONTHS. $3.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1864, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.



GENERAL GRANT CROSSING THE CUMBERLAND MOUNTAINS, JANUARY 7, 1864.—[SEE PAGE 118.]

GOD BLESS YOU, SOLDIER!

God bless you, soldier!—when our sky
Was heavy with impending woes,
When traitors raised the battle-cry,
When fear met fear in every eye,
You rushed to meet our foes.

God bless you, soldier!—when our light
Of hope grew dim and courage waned,
When freedom veiled her face from sight,
Your valor dashed away the night,
And morning clear remained.

God bless you, soldier!—scarred and worn,
Wearied with marchings, watchings, pain,
All battle-stained and battle-torn,
Bravely have all your tasks been borne,
You have not fought in vain.

God bless you, soldier!—think not we
Alone revere and bless your name,
For millions now and yet to be,
Millions your arm has rendered free,
Shall sing your deeds and fame.

God bless you, soldier!—when the air
Grows heavy with the battle's roar,
Sheltered beneath His love and care,
May Victory with her garlands rare
Adorn you evermore.

God bless you, soldier!—when the dove
Of peace the flag's nest shall share,
With home and hearts made warm with love,
With joys below—with joys above,
God bless you here and there!

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 20, 1864.

CONSTITUTIONAL OPPOSITION.

THERE are several members of Congress who please themselves by asserting that they constitute a healthy constitutional opposition to the Government, and who insist that it is wrong to call them unpatriotic, merely because they do not approve the method and policy of the Administration in conducting the war. They protest that the Administration is not the Government, and that they may censure all its acts without being justly liable to be called traitors.

The reply to this specious strain is very simple. The Government of the United States is defending its existence against an able and desperate rebellion. The Constitution confers upon that Government every power whatever which is necessary to its maintenance. It may, in the last extremity, wage war, and whatever is lawful in war is lawful for that Government. That extremity is now reached, and we are at war; consequently no measure of legitimate warfare can be censured as unconstitutional. It can not, for instance, be urged that, as the Constitution declares that no man shall lose life or property without due course of law, therefore no rebel shall be shot and no rebel's stores seized. The only point of debate is the practical wisdom of certain measures for prosecuting the war. Is it good policy? that is the question; not, is it unconstitutional? For what rights have traitors under the Constitution? The life of every one of them is constitutionally forfeited.

Now to oppose the war, under whatever pretext, is to favor the rebellion, and compass the overthrow of the Government. Is, then, encouragement to the rebellion a legitimate constitutional opposition? We do not speak of the honesty of men who take this course, we are considering the excuse by which they justify it. Their excuse is, of necessity, if they can persuade the country that the war is wrong, to a counter-revolution and the success of rebellion. Do they suppose that to be a sound and healthy opposition to the conduct of the war?

Of course we know that they claim to be as good war men as any body. They are, first, in favor of the war; and, second, they are opposed to prosecuting it. Try the quality of their war feeling by their record. Suppose the Government took every traitor to the hands of his party in Congress. Would they continue the war or attempt to negotiate? Look at the leaders, who supply its arguments and philosophy, and direct its action. Is it not such men as Vallandigham, William B. Reed, Horatio Seymour, George W. Woodward, and Fernando Wood. Other than the party which rests its support upon the views of these leaders, there is no serious opposition to the Government. And what these leaders believe is known to the whole country. They are of opinion that the difficulty should be settled by negotiation and compromise. That is to say, they do not oppose the method and policy of the Government in waging the war, but they are opposed to the war itself. Wood says that there is no such thing as a War Democrat. Their opposition, therefore, is neither Constitutional nor legitimate. For they propose to treat with citizens who refuse by force to obey the laws, and their demand is simply that the absolute authority of the Government shall be overthrown. This is practically the ground of the whole opposition in Congress. They voted at the very outset for Wood's proposition to send Commissioners to Richmond, by not voting to lay it upon the table. Failing to carry the distraction of the Government by a direct vote, they struggle in every way to thwart and perplex its movements. They are aiming to retard the prosecution of the war, and so they play into the hands of the rebels, who hope by prolonging it to weary the loyal States and create a reaction. That these men are in a hopeless and futile minority in Congress, as they are in the country, does not lessen the shame of their conduct nor the scorn in which history will hold them. They will not be retooled as a legitimate opposition who saved civil liberty. They will be known as political parricides to whom power, not malice, was wanting.

A SHORT SERMON UPON A SECRET TEXT.

WHETHER political differences should affect social intercourse is an old question which is asked and pondered much in these days. But that they always have done so, is not a question. The history of the old Federalists and Democrats suffices to answer it in this country.

But however foolish and unnecessary it may seem for a free-trader to refuse to employ a protectionist, or the friend of a bank to decline to dance at the ball of its enemy, we can not forget that at the present time civil war rages, and the proper relations of men are not to be expected. President Washington was a Federalist and Jefferson a Democrat; and it would have been very foolish for his Excellency upon that ground to decline to invite Jefferson to his house. But would General Washington have invited Benedict Arnold to his table, or any man whom he knew to sympathize with Arnold, or indirectly to help him?

The case is not different now. Here, for instance, is a man who gives his fortune and his wisdom to the country, and whose sons are killed by traitors in battle. And next door to him lives a man who virtually excuses the treason, and thwarts the efforts of the Government to subdue the traitors. Can the first man see in the second any thing else than an accessory to the murder of his children? Can the second man justly regard political differences so fine and fanaticism upon the part of the first? Is not the avoidance of the second by the first a simple instinct? The need not be stated, but we need not insult him; but can he possibly hobnob with him upon the ground that they honestly dissent and must agree to differ?

Mr. Webster and Mr. Clay might have retired from the Capitol to dine together after the one had utterly demolished the other in a political debate. But is civil war a political debate? If Mr. Hayne had left the Senate Chamber, raised the flag of revolt, and shot Mr. Webster's son to the heart, is it a great pity that Mr. Webster should have carried political differences so far as to be unwilling to request the honor of Mr. Hayne's company to supper? In a civil war men must be judged and treated according to the colors they show. If they choose the enemy's color they must expect, and they ought to receive, the treatment of an enemy. If you shake hands with Judah Benjamin's brother you will not recoil from Judah Benjamin's abettors. But if you think that Jefferson Davis is justly responsible for the blood that desolates the land, how can you affect indifference toward those who virtually befriend him?

Clearly, when political differences have ended civil war, they are earnest, and ought upon one side or the other, will wish to associate familiarly either with those who are so shallow as not to feel the terrible reality of the condition, or those whose sympathies belong to the party which he opposes with arms.

MASKS AND FACES.

MR. PRUYN, representative from the Albany District of this State, in his maiden speech in Congress, said that his party had a right to require that the Administration should be faithful to the Constitution of the United States. But he might justly have claimed more. He might have truly declared that every citizen of the United States had the same right, and ought to insist that the Constitution be respected. And then he might fairly have gone a step further, and announced that if the President, as the chief executive officer of the Government, transcended his constitutional powers, he ought to be impeached and punished.

But, on the other hand, neither Mr. Pruyn, nor any citizen or party, has the right to hold that every law of Congress and act of the Administration shall be considered unconstitutional until some court has declared otherwise. The policy of the party with which Mr. Pruyn allies himself proceeds upon the ground that Congress and the Administration are to be held guilty until they prove their innocence. The whole burden of the speeches which inflamed the mob and led to the riots of last summer—apart from their mean appeals to ignorance and passion—was that the draft was unconstitutional. What followed, what was intended to follow, in an ignorant mind? That the law might be justly resisted. "We think the law unconstitutional," said Governor Seymour. "Is it unreasonable that we should wish to have a decision upon that point?" And he did; if you will make your case and bring it to a court of sufficient authority. Any man in the land has the right to question the Constitutionality of any law, and to bring it to the test of a decision, but he has no right meanwhile to disobey the law or to encourage others to disobey it. Still less has he the right to assume that every act of an Administration which he does not like is unconstitutional. For if this were so, it would be the manifest duty of Congress and of the Executive to disregard any such law to the detriment of the court before it could be considered valid; in which case "the co-ordinate powers" of the Government disappear, and Congress and the President become mere functionaries of a court.

The object, as every intelligent citizen will see, of this incessant effort to delay and thwart the operations of the Government, is to prolong the war, weary public patience, create popular disgust, and thereby open the chance for return to political power of the remains of the party which administered the Government while the conspiracy was ripening that has now burst into deadly war. Nor will it be forgotten that the leaders of the party, which are now, under the old party names, seeking for restoration, were the very part of that party which most steadfastly and most bitterly palliated and excused the rebels, and counted upon the success of the conspiracy. These gentlemen have kept bad company too long. The louder they cry "Constitution" the more clearly the people of the country remember that under the same cry they connived at the overthrow of the Government, and plotted its ruin. They will live to learn that the Constitution is perfectly competent to save the Government and take care of its enemies.

GENERAL GRANT.

IT is understood that the Congressional caucus of the opponents of the Administration is considering the policy of ascertaining if General Grant will consent to stand as a candidate for the Presidency against Mr. Lincoln. The fact, if itself, shows their conscious desperation, for General Grant is about as good a representative of their views and sympathies as Mr. Lincoln himself. He is a man unreservedly devoted to the war—brave, simple, successful, and therefore immensely popular. If he low his name to be used at this time, we shall have practically lost the services of our most conspicuous General; for every movement he will be fighting for the Presidency and not for the country. And what fighting for the Presidency is we have seen in the campaign of Mr. Clellan.

Besides, General Grant is not likely to forget what every body else remembers—that the military chieftains who have been raised to the Presidency have been elected long after their campaigns were ended. Taylor and Jackson and Harrison had long finished their work before they were nominated for the White House. But General Grant is still engaged in an unfinished war, and Shakespeare long ago said—

"The mighty warrior famoush for fight,
After a thousand victories once foiled,
Is from the book of honor razed quite,
And all the rest forgot for which he toiled."

Should any great disaster befall the army of the West before the election, would not the most fanatical chances of its General? And is it not reasonable to suppose that he would avoid such danger to himself by waiving the chance of the risk? If any thing could prevent Grant's moving upon the enemy's works it would be his nomination at this time for the Presidency.

Probably there is no man in the country who has so clear a conviction of this truth as General Grant himself. And if he should hear that the nomination had been offered him and accepted, we are very sure that the regret of the country would be equal to its sympathy and admiration if the successful superior of the policy of the war was nominated for the Presidency, but that the great army of the West with its Captain had been paralyzed.

THE SOLDIERS' VOTE.

THE other day in the House of Representatives Mr. Myers, of Pennsylvania, said that Judge Woodward, of that State, late candidate for Governor, had declared that soldiers should not vote. Genereus man! He was willing that the whole Pennsylvania force should be withdrawn from the army; and as the Ohio and other State elections occurred at the same time, he was willing that the forces of those States also should be withdrawn for the same purpose. Judge Wood is a shrewd man and loyal patriot was perfectly willing the soldiers should vote, provided that the method of voting should be so arranged as to help the rebels.

The reader will remember that just at the time of the Pennsylvania election Lee was advancing and threatening Meade. The rebel newspapers had openly wished for the success of Judge Woodward's friends as an encouragement to the rebellion. His election would have been hailed by all the enemies of the Government as a sign of the yielding spirit of the people, and the bells of Richmond would have rung for joy. Suppose his plan had been adopted, and the soldiers called home to vote. They might have defeated him even more signally than he was defeated; but if, by the consequent weakening of the army, Lee had won a victory in Virginia, the rebel joy would have been the same.

To insist that the soldiers shall vote only upon condition of their coming home is to propose that the army be virtually disbanded from time to time, that is a proposition which it seems hardly possible that any faithful friend of the Government should support; and yet it was in favor of its author that General M'Clellan wrote a letter upon the eve of the election. Is it surprising that Mr. Cox, of Ohio, the next friend of Vallandigham, when he was prophesying the election of that noble patriot as Governor of the State, declared that two hundred thousand Obioans would escort him from the frontier, and that in 1864, "with Seymour or M'Clellan" as President, all would be sure? What would be sure? Merely that the bells of Richmond would ring for joy.

The Union soldiers are merely citizens of the United States fighting for their country and its Government; shall their patriotism and self-sacrifice disfranchise them? Shall every loyal man who volunteers and marches to battle understand that his going has practically strengthened the friends of the enemy behind him? Suppose that the loyal voters exist, and the disloyal and their friends stay at home and elect a State Government which requires the soldiers to return. Is it not a question whether they have not done more harm than good by going? And do Judge Woodward and his friends suppose that the soldiers do not see and understand it?

A RULE THAT WORKS ONE WAY ONLY.

MR. CALHOUN'S famous dogma of sovereign State rights was adopted and defended with a view to the contingency of disunion. It was an adroit appeal to pride which has proved as strong as Calhoun knew it was. It was the argument of the rebels for secession, and of their Northern allies for letting them go. In the South it declared that the Constitution was a treaty among equal sovereign States, and that any one might withdraw at its option. In the North it asserted that the national Government had no right "to coerce States," and could not prevent its own destruction. In both it did the work it was designed to do—it connived at the helpless ruin of the Government.

But of our pleasant vices the gods make whips to scourge us. State sovereignty was an admirable doctrine for the purpose of destroying the Union; but when it threatens the Confederacy its own friends howl. Since for the gross, it seems, is not always for the gander. North Carolina, according to the State-rights doctors, had a perfect right to withdraw from the Union; but to resume authority from the Confederacy is in their opinion infamy itself. The Wilmington Journal, one of the most virulent State-rights papers, says that "the man who would strike down the Confederacy, while at the same time professing extravagant and exclusive devotion for and devotion to North Carolina, deceives, and deceives for a purpose. The thing ought to mark its own reprobation, and this reprobation ought forever to be stamped upon it by public opinion that the hypocritical cant would for very shame's sake—if shame be left with such men as the aforesaid device."

If the word Confederacy be changed to Union there is no more wholesome doctrine than this. But it was just as true before as it is to-day. It plunged into the pit as it is now, and its condemnation is just as applicable to Copperheads at the North now as it always was to secessionists at the South.

COMMON SENSE.

MR. THOMAS BARNES, a member of the British Parliament, lately made a speech in his constituents, in which he said a great many sensible things. One of them is peculiarly applicable to us at the South. He said that in 1862, he had two hundred acres of land in Jamaica and confided it to an agent who believed in freedom for the cultivation of cotton. He paid cash wages, and the first week fifty negroes applied for work, next week fifty more, and then two hundred and thirty. They worked most cheerfully, and as that frequently a hundred applicants were turned away; and in one year they had cleared, fenced, and planted two hundred and ten acres of cotton, of which Mr. Barnes laid samples upon the table before him.

"This," says the London Spectator, "is practical sense; but it is odd that such an illustration should be necessary to convince an English audience that a negro, like every body else, works best whenever it is made worth his while. Nobody ever saw an Englishman working until that point had been settled."

A SIGN OF THE TIMES.

A VERY remarkable sermon was preached on the last Thanksgiving-day in the Episcopal Church of the Holy Trinity in Philadelphia, by the pastor, the Rev. Phillips Brooks, and was immediately requested for publication by more than sixty gentlemen of that congregation. A most substantial and truly conservative sentiment of that city. The sermon is remarkable because Philadelphia is a place which trade and social life have had peculiarly bound to the South; and because the Episcopal Church has been very slow as a body to discuss any social or political question whatever. But in this discourse there is a glowing exaltation of feeling, a fervent plainness of speech, which is a natural and effective tribute to the cause, and a touching illustration of the character of the preacher.

It is a sermon upon the mercies of Reoccupation. Its controlling thought is that the Divine mercies are always "of the character of a reoccupation of some province of mercy which has been inhabited before, but only partially realized and enjoyed." Thus the race begins in Paradise; is not fit for it; falls out, and must struggle back. The child starts with unrealized purity of character, goes astray, and must finally, if he would be happy, become as a little child again. The preacher then pursues his idea into the national blessings of reoccupation: first, that of territory; second, that of the principles and fundamental truths of the Government. And here, of course, he presently comes to the fundamental principle of human rights, personal liberty. In this discussion Mr. Brooks says:

"Christianity, I believe, will never cease to serve that the Church of Christ was led, and not leading, in the crusade against human slavery in the United States. . . . . I rejoice in this last struggle, whereby it is fighting its way into its dishonest grave, that of old miracles creative, the most feeble of all follies, if it had not been the most inspired of all impieties, which has been dignified so many years with the name of 'The Bible Argument for Slavery'" [Mark, 2, 12. Versions differ] "—I am told you built my fay—some of you will understand it by your own—when in the most conservative of all conservatives the Episcopal Church, the resurrection by a Bishop of this same old so-called Bible Argument for Slavery offered to the laity of this diocese to an utterance which no man can mistake of utter enmity to slavery, and whatever his say thing to do with it."

This is but one of the mercies of reoccupation mentioned by the preacher, who well says that we are not now to thank God for the Sanitary days, since our own are the memorable days of American history. The discourse is an event, as well as a sermon, and merits the meditation of every thoughtful citizen.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

CONGRESS.

SENATE.—February 3. A letter from the Secretary of War relative to military orders concerning elections in Border States was referred to Military Committee.

Several memorials, petitions, and resolutions of no general importance were presented and referred.—The Judiciary Committee, having reported that Mr. Hale, in acting as counsel in the case of Vallandigham, had acted as he was discharged from further consideration of the subject.—The Revenue bill was taken up, and an amendment imposing a duty of 60 cents per gallon on all spirits sold or distilled, and imposed for exportation before July 1, was adopted.

—Mr. Wade introduced a bill repealing the acts allowing persons drafted to hire substitutes and to exempt themselves in the United States free of duty.—The bill providing for a uniform rate of postage was passed.—February 4. A memorial was presented and referred asking for aid to promote the education of skilled labor in the United States.—Lane reported bill setting apart a portion of Texas for citizens of Kansas.—The President was asked, if consistent with the public interest, to furnish information in regard to the Expedition and Invasion of Florida and why it had been subsequently destined to be.—Resolution passed directing the Secretary of the Interior to sell as a matter of course his books and documents in his custody.—The bill equalizing the pay of soldiers was taken up. Mr. Sumner opposed the retrospective feature of the bill, thought it was in favor of those who had received large bounties, while others received little or nothing. Wilson, Pomeroy, and Lane of Kansas advocated the retrospective character of the bill as a matter of right and justice. Mr. Wilson said there were about 90,000 colored soldiers, mostly enlisted since the last six months. It was stated that the retrospective feature of the bill involves an expense of a million and a half of dollars.—The International Revenue bill came up. Mr. Hendricks made an amendment fixing the duty on distilled spirits at 40 cents. He claimed that so high a tax on spirits would produce nothing in the Treasury and be subject to that section. Mr. Fessenden replied that we should not rely on direct revenue as much as on duties on liquor. Liquor would bear the tax imposed by the Finance Committee as no matter where its cattle are driven to market the tax fall upon the consumer. In England the tax was double that bill, by 70 per cent. The amendment was rejected; and the bill as amended by the Finance Committee was passed.—February 5. Mr. Sumner presented petitions from all parts of Africa, Hayti, and Liberia, for the privileges of voting. He said that in the last Congress he had presented a similar petition, which was referred to the Committee of which Mr. John Y. Mason, now a rebel, was chairman, the record that he returned to the Senate was, presenting it, that motion remains upon the records unacted upon.—A petition was presented from citizens of Kentucky praying for compensation for losses occasioned by the late Invasion, and for such a distribution of the Confederate of Kansas, asking for indemnification for losses during the rebellion; and a petition from volunteers who enlisted in the autumn of 1861, asking for the bounty of $25, were presented and referred.—Mr. Sumner introduced a bill repealing all laws for the rendition of fugitives slaves, and another repealing perfect equality before the law in the United States courts, and providing against the exclusion of witnesses on account of color.—He also introduced a series of seven resolutions to the following effect: (1) That the rebellion is an attempt to found a new nation based on the institution of slavery, and is simply slavery in arms. (2) That the rebellion can not be crushed without crushing slavery, and slavery can not be crushed without crushing the rebellion; that forbearance and tolerance to the one is forbearance and tolerance to the other; and that it is therefore our supreme duty to utterly destroy slavery as the belligerent rapine: if this is undone nothing is done, and all our blood and treasure will have been poured out in vain. (3) That in dealing with this war the National Government is not trammeled by any clause of the Constitution of Sovereignty and those of War; in virtue of the rights of Sovereignty the belligerent rights are subject to the National Government, which is bound to guarantee to each State a republican form of government, and to protect it from invasion; and in virtue of the rights of War the rebels are liable to all the conditions of the belligerent which is that of giving "indemnity for the past and security for the future." (4) That in seeking to overthrow slavery of the belligerent States the rebellion must not be allowed the least power of action, and that every power in the Constitution must be rejected which does not fully provide against the overthrow by revival of slavery; and that to attain this the Government should maintain a civil and military government over the rebel region until adequate protection is stamp upon its character of freedom. (5) That it is the duty of Congress to see to it that no State is restored to the Union until safeguards are established for all its persons, including the colored race, and especially that no man there may be made a slave; and that the best system of reconstruction is that which most effectually destroys slavery. (6.) That slavery being the enemy of the human race, it is the constant duty of Congress to "secure the extinction of slavery even in States geographically loyal." (7.) That, in addition to the guarantee stipulated by Congress, the Constitution should be so amended as to prohibit slavery everywhere within the limits of the Republic."—Mr. Anthony introduced a joint resolution repealing the joint resolution to amend the Constitution, passed March 3, 1861. (That resolution, which was drawn by a rebel, and which Buchanan passed the Senate by 24 to 12 on the 24 of March. It is in the following words: "No amendment shall be made to the Constitution which will authorize or give Congress power to abolish or interfere with any State with the domestic institutions thereof, including that of persons held to labor or servitude by the laws of said State.") Mr. Anthony said, in moving the repeal of this resolution, that the repeal would open a new era in the downfall of slavery. If he had been asked a few years ago whether he would have voted to butter down the walls of Sumter or to invade Virginia, he would have answered No. Yet this and more had been done, because it had been made necessary by those who had entered into this unholy rebellion.—Mr. Saulsbury said that when the resolutions and petitions of Mr. Sumner were presented he had moved for their postponement. He moved that the whole batch go together; we had about as much of the negro as we could bear.—Mr. Doolittle introduced a bill authorizing the people of Nevada and Colorado to form Constitutions and State Governments preparatory to admittance on Territories.—The Enlistment bill came up, the special subject of giving freedom to negro recruits and their families being under consideration. Mr. Carlile spoke at length. He did not believe there would be an early cessation of hostilities; the rebels were not, as had been said, on the verge of starvation. The Union could not be restored by the exercise of executive power by the Federal Government. We should not inaugurate a measure which would render death preferable to reunion. We should distinguish between those who were led on in arms and those who were willing and anxious for connection with us. In his legislative capacity he would not interfere with slavery in the States; but as a military commander he would use slaves as he would use any other means employed by the enemy. We must conquer our own prejudices before we could conquer the rebels. The war measure was always an intermediate one. The Union was as desirable for the rebels as for us. He did not believe we have tried the coercive power of the Government; but we have not tried the power of kindness. In all cases falling subjects to the military department, where they properly belong.—February 6. Mr. Wilkinson, from a resolution to petition on his desk signed by 100,000 citizens praying Congress to put an end to the cruel and inhuman fits of prosses of African descent. There petitions, he said, were an expression of the popular voice. Mr. Saulsbury objected to the course of Mr. Sumner in presenting those petitions. Mr. Wilkinson, in reply, said that Senators Seward and Crittenden presented petitions asking for the abolition of slavery during the civil war, and no fear was turned to them. If the Crittenden resolutions had been adopted there would have been no civil war. Mr. Hale said they were not passed because the party with which Mr. Saulsbury acted refused to vote for them. Mr. Saulsbury said that every member of that party voted to take them up.—A resolution to print one thousand was proposed by Mr. Clark, several Senators, wrought, and thoughts, refuse to print them and laid on the table. The Crittenden proposition was the most wicked ever presented on earth. It recognized the conduct of 1776 and forbade the abolition of slavery without the consent of Virginia sleveswomen, and of Kentucky and the other Border Slave States. Mr. Powell and Saulsbury defended the memory of Crittenden. Mr. Powell said that he had no desire to aspers the memory of the deceased Senator, for he was personally friendly to him; but he had only criticized his proposition. Mr. Johnson deprecated the attack on the dead. Crittenden was guiltless every moment of delay was dangerous; whatever was the cause of our troubles, he believed that we were prepared to get out of them. The Father of his Country held slaves at the time of the Revolution. Washington would never before the bar of Heaven as the perpetrator of the crime of 1776. Mr. Sumner of the Republican party prevented the passage of the Crittenden Compromise by means of the Chase Bill, which provided for time when a rather Cabinet and President were organized. Mr. Saulsbury said that he was not willing to allow traitors to relieve the country from the crime and treason committed by them.—Mr. Sumner's resolutions were passed.

—The Military Committee reported the House bill reviving the grade of Lieutenant-General, and the bill was passed making him Commander-in-Chief, and this recommending General Grant to the position.—February 8. Sumner introduced a bill forbidding speculation in gold, silver, and foreign exchange; all forfeitures to be paid into the Treasury. Persons on such to be recoverable: referred to Finance Committee.—Mr. Wilkinson, on leave, introduced a bill for Constitution, giving to each State one elector for each million of inhabitants, and one for a fraction of a million over a million. The Electoral College to be divided by ten into six parts, each part to represent one State; the candidate voted for of the six thus chosen to be selected by lot one to be elected, the other five to be considered defeated.—The bill to clarify Committee.—The bill for the enlistment of colored troops was called up, and postponed until Thursday, February 11.

HOUSE.—February 3. After unimportant business the Enlistment bill was taken up. Mr. Wadsworth opposed it, and maintaining that this is not a public war. Mr. Conkling replied that the Constitution says in terms that the States in rebellion are still in the Union; and that we have a right to treat them accordingly as to their property on land, except in certain specified cases.—The Committee of the Whole.—February 4. Mr. Ashley, of the Committee of the Whole. The amendment repealing the fifth section of the act of 1862 was lost by a vote of 58 to 58. Amendment making the commutation to $400; thus leaving the section as it stands. Mr. Ashley moved to strike out from the bill from the Committee on Military Affairs the words that "all persons who shall hereafter engage in the procuring of a substitute, such payment shall operate only to exempt such person from draft for the time being," and his name shall be retained on the roll in filling future calls, &c. Mr. Garfield said that the amendment to man paying this commutation would be exempted for two years, while the bill of 1862 was for but one. Carried. On motion of Mr. Harrington, the following was added to the bill: "Provided, that no person who is now in the military service of the United States, and who has been honorably discharged, shall be liable to draft under this act." Mr. Ashley moved to strike out the clause which provides that the President may call out the militia of the States to the number of 300,000. Mr. Wadsworth opposed the motion. He thought that the States in rebellion are still in the Union; and that we have a right to treat them accordingly as to their property on land, except in certain specified cases.—The Committee rose.—February 5. Mr. Ashley, of the Committee of the Whole. The amendment repealing the fifth section of the act of 1862 was lost by a vote of 58 to 58. Amendment making the commutation to $400; thus leaving the section as it stands. Mr. Ashley moved to strike out from the bill from the Committee on Military Affairs the words that "all persons who shall hereafter engage in the procuring of a substitute, such payment shall operate only to exempt such person from draft for the time being," and his name shall be retained on the roll in filling future calls, &c. Mr. Garfield said that the amendment to man paying this commutation would be exempted for two years, while the bill of 1862 was for but one. Carried. On motion of Mr. Harrington, the following was added to the bill: "Provided, that no person who is now in the military service of the United States, and who has been honorably discharged, shall be liable to draft under this act." Mr. Ashley moved to strike out the clause which provides that the President may call out the militia of the States to the number of 300,000. Mr. Wadsworth opposed the motion. He thought that the States in rebellion are still in the Union; and that we have a right to treat them accordingly as to their property on land, except in certain specified cases.—The Committee rose.—February 6. Mr. Ashley, of the Committee of the Whole. The amendment repealing the fifth section of the act of 1862 was lost by a vote of 58 to 58. Amendment making the commutation to $400; thus leaving the section as it stands. Mr. Ashley moved to strike out from the bill from the Committee on Military Affairs the words that "all persons who shall hereafter engage in the procuring of a substitute, such payment shall operate only to exempt such person from draft for the time being," and his name shall be retained on the roll in filling future calls, &c. Mr. Garfield said that the amendment to man paying this commutation would be exempted for two years, while the bill of 1862 was for but one. Carried. On motion of Mr. Harrington, the following was added to the bill: "Provided, that no person who is now in the military service of the United States, and who has been honorably discharged, shall be liable to draft under this act." Mr. Ashley moved to strike out the clause which provides that the President may call out the militia of the States to the number of 300,000. Mr. Wadsworth opposed the motion. He thought that the States in rebellion are still in the Union; and that we have a right to treat them accordingly as to their property on land, except in certain specified cases.—The Committee rose.—February 7. Mr. Ashley, of the Committee of the Whole. The amendment repealing the fifth section of the act of 1862 was lost by a vote of 58 to 58. Amendment making the commutation to $400; thus leaving the section as it stands. Mr. Ashley moved to strike out from the bill from the Committee on Military Affairs the words that "all persons who shall hereafter engage in the procuring of a substitute, such payment shall operate only to exempt such person from draft for the time being," and his name shall be retained on the roll in filling future calls, &c. Mr. Garfield said that the amendment to man paying this commutation would be exempted for two years, while the bill of 1862 was for but one. Carried. On motion of Mr. Harrington, the following was added to the bill: "Provided, that no person who is now in the military service of the United States, and who has been honorably discharged, shall be liable to draft under this act." Mr. Ashley moved to strike out the clause which provides that the President may call out the militia of the States to the number of 300,000. Mr. Wadsworth opposed the motion. He thought that the States in rebellion are still in the Union; and that we have a right to treat them accordingly as to their property on land, except in certain specified cases.—The Committee rose.—February 8. Mr. Ashley, of the Committee of the Whole. The amendment repealing the fifth section of the act of 1862 was lost by a vote of 58 to 58. Amendment making the commutation to $400; thus leaving the section as it stands. Mr. Ashley moved to strike out from the bill from the Committee on Military Affairs the words that "all persons who shall hereafter engage in the procuring of a substitute, such payment shall operate only to exempt such person from draft for the time being," and his name shall be retained on the roll in filling future calls, &c. Mr. Garfield said that the amendment to man paying this commutation would be exempted for two years, while the bill of 1862 was for but one. Carried. On motion of Mr. Harrington, the following was added to the bill: "Provided, that no person who is now in the military service of the United States, and who has been honorably discharged, shall be liable to draft under this act." Mr. Ashley moved to strike out the clause which provides that the President may call out the militia of the States to the number of 300,000. Mr. Wadsworth opposed the motion. He thought that the States in rebellion are still in the Union; and that we have a right to treat them accordingly as to their property on land, except in certain specified cases.—The Committee rose.—February 9. Mr. Ashley, of the Committee of the Whole. The amendment repealing the fifth section of the act of 1862 was lost by a vote of 58 to 58. Amendment making the commutation to $400; thus leaving the section as it stands. Mr. Ashley moved to strike out from the bill from the Committee on Military Affairs the words that "all persons who shall hereafter engage in the procuring of a substitute, such payment shall operate only to exempt such person from draft for the time being," and his name shall be retained on the roll in filling future calls, &c. Mr. Garfield said that the amendment to man paying this commutation would be exempted for two years, while the bill of 1862 was for but one. Carried. On motion of Mr. Harrington, the following was added to the bill: "Provided, that no person who is now in the military service of the United States, and who has been honorably discharged, shall be liable to draft under this act." Mr. Ashley moved to strike out the clause which provides that the President may call out the militia of the States to the number of 300,000. Mr. Wadsworth opposed the motion. He thought that the States in rebellion are still in the Union; and that we have a right to treat them accordingly as to their property on land, except in certain specified cases.—The Committee rose.—February 10. Mr. Ashley, of the Committee of the Whole. The amendment repealing the fifth section of the act of 1862 was lost by a vote of 58 to 58. Amendment making the commutation to $400; thus leaving the section as it stands. Mr. Ashley moved to strike out from the bill from the Committee on Military Affairs the words that "all persons who shall hereafter engage in the procuring of a substitute, such payment shall operate only to exempt such person from draft for the time being," and his name shall be retained on the roll in filling future calls, &c. Mr. Garfield said that the amendment to man paying this commutation would be exempted for two years, while the bill of 1862 was for but one. Carried. On motion of Mr. Harrington, the following was added to the bill: "Provided, that no person who is now in the military service of the United States, and who has been honorably discharged, shall be liable to draft under this act." Mr. Ashley moved to strike out the clause which provides that the President may call out the militia of the States to the number of 300,000. Mr. Wadsworth opposed the motion. He thought that the States in rebellion are still in the Union; and that we have a right to treat them accordingly as to their property on land, except in certain specified cases.—The Committee rose.—February 11. Mr. Ashley, of the Committee of the Whole. The amendment repealing the fifth section of the act of 1862 was lost by a vote of 58 to 58. Amendment making the commutation to $400; thus leaving the section as it stands. Mr. Ashley moved to strike out from the bill from the Committee on Military Affairs the words that "all persons who shall hereafter engage in the procuring of a substitute, such payment shall operate only to exempt such person from draft for the time being," and his name shall be retained on the roll in filling future calls, &c. Mr. Garfield said that the amendment to man paying this commutation would be exempted for two years, while the bill of 1862 was for but one. Carried. On motion of Mr. Harrington, the following was added to the bill: "Provided, that no person who is now in the military service of the United States, and who has been honorably discharged, shall be liable to draft under this act." Mr. Ashley moved to strike out the clause which provides that the President may call out the militia of the States to the number of 300,000. Mr. Wadsworth opposed the motion. He thought that the States in rebellion are still in the Union; and that we have a right to treat them accordingly as to their property on land, except in certain specified cases.—The Committee rose.—February 12. Mr. Ashley, of the Committee of the Whole. The amendment repealing the fifth section of the act of 1862 was lost by a vote of 58 to 58. Amendment making the commutation to $400; thus leaving the section as it stands. Mr. Ashley moved to strike out from the bill from the Committee on Military Affairs the words that "all persons who shall hereafter engage in the procuring of a substitute, such payment shall operate only to exempt such person from draft for the time being," and his name shall be retained on the roll in filling future calls, &c. Mr. Garfield said that the amendment to man paying this commutation would be exempted for two years, while the bill of 1862 was for but one. Carried. On motion of Mr. Harrington, the following was added to the bill: "Provided, that no person who is now in the military service of the United States, and who has been honorably discharged, shall be liable to draft under this act." Mr. Ashley moved to strike out the clause which provides that the President may call out the militia of the States to the number of 300,000. Mr. Wadsworth opposed the motion. He thought that the States in rebellion are still in the Union; and that we have a right to treat them accordingly as to their property on land, except in certain specified cases.—The Committee rose.—February 13. Mr. Ashley, of the Committee of the Whole. The amendment repealing the fifth section of the act of 1862 was lost by a vote of 58 to 58. Amendment making the commutation to $400; thus leaving the section as it stands. Mr. Ashley moved to strike out from the bill from the Committee on Military Affairs the words that "all persons who shall hereafter engage in the procuring of a substitute, such payment shall operate only to exempt such person from draft for the time being," and his name shall be retained on the roll in filling future calls, &c. Mr. Garfield said that the amendment to man paying this commutation would be exempted for two years, while the bill of 1862 was for but one. Carried. On motion of Mr. Harrington, the following was added to the bill: "Provided, that no person who is now in the military service of the United States, and who has been honorably discharged, shall be liable to draft under this act." Mr. Ashley moved to strike out the clause which provides that the President may call out the militia of the States to the number of 300,000. Mr. Wadsworth opposed the motion. He thought that the States in rebellion are still in the Union; and that we have a right to treat them accordingly as to their property on land, except in certain specified cases.—The Committee rose.—February 14. Mr. Ashley, of the Committee of the Whole. The amendment repealing the fifth section of the act of 1862 was lost by a vote of 58 to 58. Amendment making the commutation to $400; thus leaving the section as it stands. Mr. Ashley moved to strike out from the bill from the Committee on Military Affairs the words that "all persons who shall hereafter engage in the procuring of a substitute, such payment shall operate only to exempt such person from draft for the time being," and his name shall be retained on the roll in filling future calls, &c. Mr. Garfield said that the amendment to man paying this commutation would be exempted for two years, while the bill of 1862 was for but one. Carried. On motion of Mr. Harrington, the following was added to the bill: "Provided, that no person who is now in the military service of the United States, and who has been honorably discharged, shall be liable to draft under this act." Mr. Ashley moved to strike out the clause which provides that the President may call out the militia of the States to the number of 300,000. Mr. Wadsworth opposed the motion. He thought that the States in rebellion are still in the Union; and that we have a right to treat them accordingly as to their property on land, except in certain specified cases.—The Committee rose.—February 15. Mr. Ashley, of the Committee of the Whole. The amendment repealing the fifth section of the act of 1862 was lost by a vote of 58 to 58. Amendment making the commutation to $400; thus leaving the section as it stands. Mr. Ashley moved to strike out from the bill from the Committee on Military Affairs the words that "all persons who shall hereafter engage in the procuring of a substitute, such payment shall operate only to exempt such person from draft for the time being," and his name shall be retained on the roll in filling future calls, &c. Mr. Garfield said that the amendment to man paying this commutation would be exempted for two years, while the bill of 1862 was for but one. Carried. On motion of Mr. Harrington, the following was added to the bill: "Provided, that no person who is now in the military service of the United States, and who has been honorably discharged, shall be liable to draft under this act." Mr. Ashley moved to strike out the clause which provides that the President may call out the militia of the States to the number of 300,000. Mr. Wadsworth opposed the motion. He thought that the States in rebellion are still in the Union; and that we have a right to treat them accordingly as to their property on land, except in certain specified cases.—The Committee rose.—February 16. Mr. Ashley, of the Committee of the Whole. The amendment repealing the fifth section of the act of 1862 was lost by a vote of 58 to 58. Amendment making the commutation to $400; thus leaving the section as it stands. Mr. Ashley moved to strike out from the bill from the Committee on Military Affairs the words that "all persons who shall hereafter engage in the procuring of a substitute, such payment shall operate only to exempt such person from draft for the time being," and his name shall be retained on the roll in filling future calls, &c. Mr. Garfield said that the amendment to man paying this commutation would be exempted for two years, while the bill of 1862 was for but one. Carried. On motion of Mr. Harrington, the following was added to the bill: "Provided, that no person who is now in the military service of the United States, and who has been honorably discharged, shall be liable to draft under this act." Mr. Ashley moved to strike out the clause which provides that the President may call out the militia of the States to the number of 300,000. Mr. Wadsworth opposed the motion. He thought that the States in rebellion are still in the Union; and that we have a right to treat them accordingly as to their property on land, except in certain specified cases.—The Committee rose.—February 17. Mr. Ashley, of the Committee of the Whole. The amendment repealing the fifth section of the act of 1862 was lost by a vote of 58 to 58. Amendment making the commutation to $400; thus leaving the section as it stands. Mr. Ashley moved to strike out from the bill from the Committee on Military Affairs the words that "all persons who shall hereafter engage in the procuring of a substitute, such payment shall operate only to exempt such person from draft for the time being," and his name shall be retained on the roll in filling future calls, &c. Mr. Garfield said that the amendment to man paying this commutation would be exempted for two years, while the bill of 1862 was for but one. Carried. On motion of Mr. Harrington, the following was added to the bill: "Provided, that no person who is now in the military service of the United States, and who has been honorably discharged, shall be liable to draft under this act." Mr. Ashley moved to strike out the clause which provides that the President may call out the militia of the States to the number of 300,000. Mr. Wadsworth opposed the motion. He thought that the States in rebellion are still in the Union; and that we have a right to treat them accordingly as to their property on land, except in certain specified cases.—The Committee rose.—February 18. Mr. Ashley, of the Committee of the Whole. The amendment repealing the fifth section of the act of 1862 was lost by a vote of 58 to 58. Amendment making the commutation to $400; thus leaving the section as it stands. Mr. Ashley moved to strike out from the bill from the Committee on Military Affairs the words that "all persons who shall hereafter engage in the procuring of a substitute, such payment shall operate only to exempt such person from draft for the time being," and his name shall be retained on the roll in filling future calls, &c. Mr. Garfield said that the amendment to man paying this commutation would be exempted for two years, while the bill of 1862 was for but one. Carried. On motion of Mr. Harrington, the following was added to the bill: "Provided, that no person who is now in the military service of the United States, and who has been honorably discharged, shall be liable to draft under this act." Mr. Ashley moved to strike out the clause which provides that the President may call out the militia of the States to the number of 300,000. Mr. Wadsworth opposed the motion. He thought that the States in rebellion are still in the Union; and that we have a right to treat them accordingly as to their property on land, except in certain specified cases.—The Committee rose.—February 19. Mr. Ashley, of the Committee of the Whole. The amendment repealing the fifth section of the act of 1862 was lost by a vote of 58 to 58. Amendment making the commutation to $400; thus leaving the section as it stands. Mr. Ashley moved to strike out from the bill from the Committee on Military Affairs the words that "all persons who shall hereafter engage in the procuring of a substitute, such payment shall operate only to exempt such person from draft for the time being," and his name shall be retained on the roll in filling future calls, &c. Mr. Garfield said that the amendment to man paying this commutation would be exempted for two years, while the bill of 1862 was for but one. Carried. On motion of Mr. Harrington, the following was added to the bill: "Provided, that no person who is now in the military service of the United States, and who has been honorably discharged, shall be liable to draft under this act." Mr. Ashley moved to strike out the clause which provides that the President may call out the militia of the States to the number of 300,000. Mr. Wadsworth opposed the motion. He thought that the States in rebellion are still in the Union; and that we have a right to treat them accordingly as to their property on land, except in certain specified cases.—The Committee rose.—February 20. Mr. Ashley, of the Committee of the Whole. The amendment repealing the fifth section of the act of 1862 was lost by a vote of 58 to 58. Amendment making the commutation to $400; thus leaving the section as it stands. Mr. Ashley moved to strike out from the bill from the Committee on Military Affairs the words that "all persons who shall hereafter engage in the procuring of a substitute, such payment shall operate only to exempt such person from draft for the time being," and his name shall be retained on the roll in filling future calls, &c. Mr. Garfield said that the amendment to man paying this commutation would be exempted for two years, while the bill of 1862 was for but one. Carried. On motion of Mr. Harrington, the following was added to the bill: "Provided, that no person who is now in the military service of the United States, and who has been honorably discharged, shall be liable to draft under this act." Mr. Ashley moved to strike out the clause which provides that the President may call out the militia of the States to the number of 300,000. Mr. Wadsworth opposed the motion. He thought that the States in rebellion are still in the Union; and that we have a right to treat them accordingly as to their property on land, except in certain specified cases.—The Committee rose.—February 21. Mr. Ashley, of the Committee of the Whole. The amendment repealing the fifth section of the act of 1862 was lost by a vote of 58 to 58. Amendment making the commutation to $400; thus leaving the section as it stands. Mr. Ashley moved to strike out from the bill from the Committee on Military Affairs the words that "all persons who shall hereafter engage in the procuring of a substitute, such payment shall operate only to exempt such person from draft for the time being," and his name shall be retained on the roll in filling future calls, &c. Mr. Garfield said that the amendment to man paying this commutation would be exempted for two years, while the bill of 1862 was for but one. Carried. On motion of Mr. Harrington, the following was added to the bill: "Provided, that no person who is now in the military service of the United States, and who has been honorably discharged, shall be liable to draft under this act." Mr. Ashley moved to strike out the clause which provides that the President may call out the militia of the States to the number of 300,000. Mr. Wadsworth opposed the motion. He thought that the States in rebellion are still in the Union; and that we have a right to treat them accordingly as to their property on land, except in certain specified cases.—The Committee rose.—February 22. Mr. Ashley, of the Committee of the Whole. The amendment repealing the fifth section of the act of 1862 was lost by a vote of 58 to 58. Amendment making the commutation to $400; thus leaving the section as it stands. Mr. Ashley moved to strike out from the bill from the Committee on Military Affairs the words that "all persons who shall hereafter engage in the procuring of a substitute, such payment shall operate only to exempt such person from draft for the time being," and his name shall be retained on the roll in filling future calls, &c. Mr. Garfield said that the amendment to man paying this commutation would be exempted for two years, while the bill of 1862 was for but one. Carried. On motion of Mr. Harrington, the following was added to the bill: "Provided, that no person who is now in the military service of the United States, and who has been honorably discharged, shall be liable to draft under this act." Mr. Ashley moved to strike out the clause which provides that the President may call out the militia of the States to the number of 300,000. Mr. Wadsworth opposed the motion. He thought that the States in rebellion are still in the Union; and that we have a right to treat them accordingly as to their property on land, except in certain specified cases.—The Committee rose.—February 23. Mr. Ashley, of the Committee of the Whole. The amendment repealing the fifth section of the act of 1862 was lost by a vote of 58 to 58. Amendment making the commutation to $400; thus leaving the section as it stands. Mr. Ashley moved to strike out from the bill from the Committee on Military Affairs the words that "all persons who shall hereafter engage in the procuring of a substitute, such payment shall operate only to exempt such person from draft for the time being," and his name shall be retained on the roll in filling future calls, &c. Mr. Garfield said that the amendment to man paying this commutation would be exempted for two years, while the bill of 1862 was for but one. Carried. On motion of Mr. Harrington, the following was added to the bill: "Provided, that no person who is now in the military service of the United States, and who has been honorably discharged, shall be liable to draft under this act." Mr. Ashley moved to strike out the clause which provides that the President may call out the militia of the States to the number of 300,000. Mr. Wadsworth opposed the motion. He thought that the States in rebellion are still in the Union; and that we have a right to treat them accordingly as to their property on land, except in certain specified cases.—The Committee rose.—February 24. Mr. Ashley, of the Committee of the Whole. The amendment repealing the fifth section of the act of 1862 was lost by a vote of 58 to 58. Amendment making the commutation to $400; thus leaving the section as it stands. Mr. Ashley moved to strike out from the bill from the Committee on Military Affairs the words that "all persons who shall hereafter engage in the procuring of a substitute, such payment shall operate only to exempt such person from draft for the time being," and his name shall be retained on the roll in filling future calls, &c. Mr. Garfield said that the amendment to man paying this commutation would be exempted for two years, while the bill of 1862 was for but one. Carried. On motion of Mr. Harrington, the following was added to the bill: "Provided, that no person who is now in the military service of the United States, and who has been honorably discharged, shall be liable to draft under this act." Mr. Ashley moved to strike out the clause which provides that the President may call out the militia of the States to the number of 300,000. Mr. Wadsworth opposed the motion. He thought that the States in rebellion are still in the Union; and that we have a right to treat them accordingly as to their property on land, except in certain specified cases.—The Committee rose.—February 25. Mr. Ashley, of the Committee of the Whole. The amendment repealing the fifth section of the act of 1862 was lost by a vote of 58 to 58. Amendment making the commutation to $400; thus leaving the section as it stands. Mr. Ashley moved to strike out from the bill from the Committee on Military Affairs the words that "all persons who shall hereafter engage in the procuring of a substitute, such payment shall operate only to exempt such person from draft for the time being," and his name shall be retained on the roll in filling future calls, &c. Mr. Garfield said that the amendment to man paying this commutation would be exempted for two years, while the bill of 1862 was for but one. Carried. On motion of Mr. Harrington, the following was added to the bill: "Provided, that no person who is now in the military service of the United States, and who has been honorably discharged, shall be liable to draft under this act." Mr. Ashley moved to strike out the clause which provides that the President may call out the militia of the States to the number of 300,000. Mr. Wadsworth opposed the motion. He thought that the States in rebellion are still in the Union; and that we have a right to treat them accordingly as to their property on land, except in certain specified cases.—The Committee rose.—February 26. Mr. Ashley, of the Committee of the Whole. The amendment repealing the fifth section of the act of 1862 was lost by a vote of 58 to 58. Amendment making the commutation to $400; thus leaving the section as it stands. Mr. Ashley moved to strike out from the bill from the Committee on Military Affairs the words that "all persons who shall hereafter engage in the procuring of a substitute, such payment shall operate only to exempt such person from draft for the time being," and his name shall be retained on the roll in filling future calls, &c. Mr. Garfield said that the amendment to man paying this commutation would be exempted for two years, while the bill of 1862 was for but one. Carried. On motion of Mr. Harrington, the following was added to the bill: "Provided, that no person who is now in the military service of the United States, and who has been honorably discharged, shall be liable to draft under this act." Mr. Ashley moved to strike out the clause which provides that the President may call out the militia of the States to the number of 300,000. Mr. Wadsworth opposed the motion. He thought that the States in rebellion are still in the Union; and that we have a right to treat them accordingly as to their property on land, except in certain specified cases.—The Committee rose.—February 27. Mr. Ashley, of the Committee of the Whole. The amendment repealing the fifth section of the act of 1862 was lost by a vote of 58 to 58. Amendment making the commutation to $400; thus leaving the section as it stands. Mr. Ashley moved to strike out from the bill from the Committee on Military Affairs the words that "all persons who shall hereafter engage in the procuring of a substitute, such payment shall operate only to exempt such person from draft for the time being," and his name shall be retained on the roll in filling future calls, &c. Mr. Garfield said that the amendment to man paying this commutation would be exempted for two years, while the bill of 1862 was for but one. Carried. On motion of Mr. Harrington, the following was added to the bill: "Provided, that no person who is now in the military service of the United States, and who has been honorably discharged, shall be liable to draft under this act." Mr. Ashley moved to strike out the clause which provides that the President may call out the militia of the States to the number of 300,000. Mr. Wadsworth opposed the motion. He thought that the States in rebellion are still in the Union; and that we have a right to treat them accordingly as to their property on land, except in certain specified cases.—The Committee rose.—February 28. Mr. Ashley, of the Committee of the Whole. The amendment repealing the fifth section of the act of 1862 was lost by a vote of 58 to 58. Amendment making the commutation to $400; thus leaving the section as it stands. Mr. Ashley moved to strike out from the bill from the Committee on Military Affairs the words that "all persons who shall hereafter engage in the procuring of a substitute, such payment shall operate only to exempt such person from draft for the time being," and his name shall be retained on the roll in filling future calls, &c. Mr. Garfield said that the amendment to man paying this commutation would be exempted for two years, while the bill of 1862 was for but one. Carried. On motion of Mr. Harrington, the following was added to the bill: "Provided, that no person who is now in the military service of the United States, and who has been honorably discharged, shall be liable to draft under this act." Mr. Ashley moved to strike out the clause which provides that the President may call out the militia of the States to the number of 300,000. Mr. Wadsworth opposed the motion. He thought that the States in rebellion are still in the Union; and that we have a right to treat them accordingly as to their property on land, except in certain specified cases.—The Committee rose.—February 29. Mr. Ashley, of the Committee of the Whole. The amendment repealing the fifth section of the act of 1862 was lost by a vote of 58 to 58. Amendment making the commutation to $400; thus leaving the section as it stands. Mr. Ashley moved to strike out from the bill from the Committee on Military Affairs the words that "all persons who shall hereafter engage in the procuring of a substitute, such payment shall operate only to exempt such person from draft for the time being," and his name shall be retained on the roll in filling future calls, &c. Mr. Garfield said that the amendment to man paying this commutation would be exempted for two years, while the bill of 1862 was for but one. Carried. On motion of Mr. Harrington, the following was added to the bill: "Provided, that no person who is now in the military service of the United States, and who has been honorably discharged, shall be liable to draft under this act." Mr. Ashley moved to strike out the clause which provides that the President may call out the militia of the States to the number of 300,000. Mr. Wadsworth opposed the motion. He thought that the States in rebellion are still in the Union; and that we have a right to treat them accordingly as to their property on land, except in certain specified cases.—The Committee rose.—March 1. Mr. Ashley, of the Committee of the Whole. The amendment repealing the fifth section of the act of 1862 was lost by a vote of 58 to 58. Amendment making the commutation to $400; thus leaving the section as it stands. Mr. Ashley moved to strike out from the bill from the Committee on Military Affairs the words that "all persons who shall hereafter engage in the procuring of a substitute, such payment shall operate only to exempt such person from draft for the time being," and his name shall be retained on the roll in filling future calls, &c. Mr. Garfield said that the amendment to man paying this commutation would be exempted for two years, while the bill of 1862 was for but one. Carried. On motion of Mr. Harrington, the following was added to the bill: "Provided, that no person who is now in the military service of the United States, and who has been honorably discharged, shall be liable to draft under this act." Mr. Ashley moved to strike out the clause which provides that the President may call out the militia of the States to the number of 300,000. Mr. Wadsworth opposed the motion. He thought that the States in rebellion are still in the Union; and that we have a right to treat them accordingly as to their property on land, except in certain specified cases.—The Committee rose.—March 2. Mr. Ashley, of the Committee of the Whole. The amendment repealing the fifth section of the act of 1862 was lost by a vote of 58 to 58. Amendment making the commutation to $400; thus leaving the section as it stands. Mr. Ashley moved to strike out from the bill from the Committee on Military Affairs the words that "all persons who shall hereafter engage in the procuring of a substitute, such payment shall operate only to exempt such person from draft for the time being," and his name shall be retained on the roll in filling future calls, &c. Mr. Garfield said that the amendment to man paying this commutation would be exempted for two years, while the bill of 1862 was for but one. Carried. On motion of Mr. Harrington, the following was added to the bill: "Provided, that no person who is now in the military service of the United States, and who has been honorably discharged, shall be liable to draft under this act." Mr. Ashley moved to strike out the clause which provides that the President may call out the militia of the States to the number of 300,000. Mr. Wadsworth opposed the motion. He thought that the States in rebellion are still in the Union; and that we have a right to treat them accordingly as to their property on land, except in certain specified cases.—The Committee rose.—March 3. Mr. Ashley, of the Committee of the Whole. The amendment repealing the fifth section of the act of 1862 was lost by a vote of 58 to 58. Amendment making the commutation to $400; thus leaving the section as it stands. Mr.

THE GANDERS.

THE P[illegible]—SKETCHED BY A. R. WAUD.—[SEE PAGE 122.]

RAILROAD ACCIDENT IN KENTUCKY.

RAILROAD ACCIDENT.

WE represent, through a sketch from one of our special artists, A SCENE ON BOARD A RAILROAD CAR at the time of the late accident on the Louisville and Nashville Railroad, near Lebanon Junction. The principal cause of most of these accidents has been the effect of intensely cold weather on the iron rails which, becoming filled with frost, are made brittle and easily broken. Says our correspondent: "A leading railroad man said to me a short time since, 'You do not see any railroad men on the cars in this weather unless it is absolutely unavoidable.'"

In case of accidents arising from the above cause there is unusual confusion on board. In addition to the chances of being hurled down some steep embankment there is the havoc made in the floor by the torn-up rails breaking through into the car, while the helpless passengers are jostled from one side of the car to the other. No one can realize the position except by actual experience."

THE DEATH OF GUERRILLA BURROUGHS.

A FEW days ago a negro sentinel belonging to Colonel John A. Nelson's regiment shot Burroughs for attempting to escape from the small-pox hospital at Portsmouth, Virginia. We give a sketch representing this interesting incident on this page. Burroughs was captured shortly after Butler assumed command of the Department, was tried, and sentenced to death as a guerrilla; and while awaiting execution was seized with the small-pox and conveyed to the hospital. Colonel Wheldon, upon his convalescence, gave orders for his removal to the jail; but the Lieutenant commissioned to execute these orders brought no warrant, and was refused admission by the sentinel, who was a negro. Burroughs, supposing from the altercation that friends had come to his assistance, tried to escape through the window. On hearing the noise the sentinel opened the door, and seeing the prisoner in the act of passing out fired at him and killed him.

THE NEGRO SENTINEL SHOOTING THE GUERRILLA BURROUGHS.

THE FLAG OF THE UNION.

Ho for the Flag of the Union!
Let it float out free and fair,
For we love it like the sunshine,
And the stars and azure air.
Ho for the Flag of the Union,
The stripes and the stars of light!
A million arms shall guard it,
And may God defend the right!

From tower, and mast, and belfry,
From the church's sacred spire,
Fling out its starry radiance,
Flag of the waving fire!
Ho for the Flag of the Union,
The stripes and the stars of light!
A million arms shall guard it,
And may God defend the right!

Ay, brothers, let us love it,
And let every heart be true,
And let every arm be ready,
For we've glorious work to do.
Ho for the Flag of the Union,
The stripes and the stars of light!
A million arms shall guard it,
And may God defend the right!

Dear Flag, thy radiant glory
A host will cherish,
Ten million hearts are beating
As the heart of one man beats.
Ho for the Flag of the Union,
The stripes and the stars of light!
A million arms shall guard it,
And may God defend the right!

GEN. GRANT CROSSING THE CUMBERLAND.

We give on page 113 an interesting sketch of GRANT'S ADVANCE ACROSS THE MOUNTAINS FROM KNOXVILLE TO LOUISVILLE, a tour involving great hardships, but in a measure necessary, in order to obtain information of the country. The journey was made in the severest days of the winter, and the roads in many places were so covered with ice as to necessitate the dismounting of the entire party. The route lay through Cumberland Gap to Barbourville, where the General arrived on the 7th of January, and thence through London and Lexington, thus leading across two mountain chains. The sketch represents Grant and his immediate party, with a number of orderlies in the rear, passing through the Cumberland Gap, the mountains towering above them on all sides, and presenting a scene of unrivaled picturesqueness.

GEN. GRANT CROSSING THE CUMBERLAND.

[From CHARLES DICKENS'S "All the Year Round."]

A WHITE HAND AND A BLACK THUMB.

THIRTEEN CHAPTERS.

CHAPTER VII.

On the day after Miss Polly-my-Lamb Humpage's little indisposition, that young lady, discovering that her hero required no further examination, repaired to the drawing-room about, nay, pardventure a little before, the noontide hour. Such an odd little face looked out at her from the great mirror! It was like that of a spoiled school-pet, who, having played truant, steals into her place, half penitent, yet exhibitingly convinced of forgone forgiveness. Polly-my-Lamb smiled, and, smiling, looked so pretty, that she pardoned herself on the spot.

Twelve. Miss Humpage had resolved not even to glance by accident at the window till the clock had fairly struck; but she would do something to show her interest; and, accordingly, at the second stroke, turned and glided to the window. What did she behold? A broad black velvet back and shoulders, a head, with golden curls, slightly inclining toward the right shoulder, as though studying an object in the lap of a pallet, and the top of a small hat. Mr. Haggerdorn was at work—at work upon a battle-piece! Yes, it was evident, from the fury with which he every now and then returned to the assault, that it was a martial subject, the glory and passion of it mounting, like a blush, visibly across the cheek to the very brow of the canvas. For two full minutes Polly remained rooted to the spot, her pretty lips half opened, and her soft brown eyelovers veiled. Then, recollecting herself, she moved quickly away, still, however, observing—how could she help it? as she idled busily about the room —that the work went eagerly forward, and never ceased, until the clock struck one.

And now, remarked something within Polly's breast, the gentleman will perhaps turn round; but it's rather of the latest, we imagine!

Mr. Haggerdorn doubtless thought so too; for though that gentleman did revolve, and, pretending to draw down the blind, was at especial pains to untie a knot in the cord, he never so much as glanced toward the road, but adjusted the blind to his fancy, and withdrew to dinner.

The next day, and the next, presented the like phenomenon of professional abstraction, and total indifference to neighbors, on the part of the black velvet back; and during that period Polly-my-Lamb passed through such a variety of mental conditions as filled her with astonishment. Surprise, anger, regret, impudence, disappointment, love, assailed the poor little heart in turn—sometimes all together—so that none could tell what might have been the result, had not this conflict of parties ended, as is generally the case in wider revolutions, by the sudden triumph of one. Of course the new fetters galled a little, and Miss Humpage, from the liveliest and sweetest of companions, became silent, cold, inclined to solitude, nay, touching so nearly upon the morose, that poor Miss Scorcold, extremely puzzled, decided upon leaving the matter to cure itself, and passed the greater portion of her time in her own chamber.

Whether the tidings were conveyed to Mrs. Goodall, nurse, in the course of some return "pop-over" on the part of Mrs. Ascroft, or to what other little bird is fine the carriage of this matter, was never clearly ascertained. Certain it is, that it quickly became known at number twenty-seven, with singular circumstantiality, that Mr. Haggerdorn had received a commission from a wealthy Portuguese merchant to execute an important family historical picture.

This, by far the most ambitious of the young artist's attempts, was to be called the Battle at Bridge, and was illustrative of a passage in the life of a beautiful ancestress of Señor Torre-Dias, who had been abducted (voluntarily) from the arms of her family by her lover and a band of chosen cavaliers.

A couple of hundred of the friends of the house assembled with an alacrity not permissible on occasions, pursued the fugitives, and overtook them at a bridge (without a parapet, as in all bridge battles, for greater convenience in flinging over), upon whose slippery surface five noble cavaliers took post to abide the onset. The moment grasped by the painter is that in which the lady of the battle looks for an instant whether to continue her flight, or avert the bloody struggle by returning to her efficacious kiss. No wonder our young enthusiast was enthralled by such a subject! The picture was, moreover, to be completed in nine days, and, as yet, he had not touched the canvas! Ah, which, to do any thing like justice to, must be of surpassing loveliness. There was, no doubt, a difficulty in obtaining a model of sufficient beauty.

Miss Humpage listened with a calm disdain, as Mrs. Goodall, affecting to dust some pet china, detailed by installments the above particulars, but the idea of allotting nine days for the completion of such a work, by such a hand, almost upset her gravity.

Nine days? Nurse must have been mistaken in that. It was no matter.

Mrs. Goodall vindicated her memory. Remembered distinctly, 'cause of the poor young man.

How, because of what? It did not signify. Miss Humpage required her smallest scissors.

Him that was all but a-dying a few days ago, to think of finishing an 'istory picture!

Salt or fresh, the very mention brought a bright color to Miss Polly's cheek.

Was—was he going to be married, then? She thought —that—it really was of no consequence. And a bit of bobbin.

But the glances at the window were more frequent that day.

A Turkish lady, whose rich husband had drowned and deserted her, too, told a story in which the artist her heart was changed to "black velvet." Too frequent association with a similar material was certainly beginning to tell upon Polly.

The picture proceeded, nay, rather went dashing, plunging on toward completion. With the exception of the lover allotted to the lady of Señor Torre-dias' late blind, but never suffered them to stray abroad. Once, Polly thought of placing herself experimentally at the window, handpainted at any hour, but this idea was smothered as soon as born. It was too like asking an alms, and though her heart was full of tears and bursting for charity, Polly was then demand it.

The situation was becoming intolerable. There was something worrying in the speechless misunderstanding, to which the ordinary opportunities of reconciliation were denied. What a very irritable young man Mr. Haggerdorn must be, indeed! And this anger and—and—obstinacy, for a little quarrel!

And even if it were a caprice, was it not fit and unlikely, and—and—that a young heroine should say more about this person, or even think about him.....What could be mean, now, by behaving that face—his heroine's—blush? Artists loved to introduce familiar faces into their more important compositions. Mr. Haggerdorn might be a creative, a cousin, some friend, you know, or even a strange countenance might have caught his errant fancy. You wouldn't, Miss Humpage, be so fatuitiful, or it would spoil all. Polly chanced to look up, and caught sight in the glass of a cheek so dyed as blushes that she stamped her little foot with passion.

"I think I am bewitched," said Polly-my-Lamb. "But I'll not be made the sport of any man. There it goes! Henceforth, till I am mistress of my own thoughts, I'll—sit in the next room. Intrude there if you can!"

As she flung the defiance toward the object apostrophized, Polly involuntarily accompanied it with a darting look. And so did we, the little hands tightened on the velvet arms of the chair, she half lifted herself with unconscious contraction of the muscles, which the rich color flickered like a darting banner, and passed utterly away.

Another figure was visible in the artist's room. A beautiful—ah, there it was!—face looked gayly up to the head that crowned the black velvet body; bright white skin, flashing teeth, sparkling eyes, braided hair—the Portuguese beauty herself! A such had been the real fugitive, far less surprising is it that five rational individuals, with no particular interest in the matter, and each, probably, with an ideo of his own, should have taken post upon that slippery bridge, with their backs toward the city, than my did not pitch them over the artist world.

The two were not alone. A very tall gentleman, with long, dangling beard, and a corpulent country, engaged in criticising the unfinished picture, but not enjoying the undivided attention of his two companions.

Polly-my-Lamb, from her position, invisible to the party, remained in a manner fascinated by the scene. Presently a change took place in the grouping. A chair was raised and carefully adjusted upon a small platform. The young lady, with a laugh, shook her tresses hair into disorder, threw a wild look into her splendid eyes, and placed herself in the chair in the attitude of a "sitter." The father—or is it brother?—or is it guardian?—likewise assumes a position, and yet, to appear perfectly at ease, takes out a cigarette.

And Inez sits, looking like Cleopatra at her very best—perhaps when she gave that first state-dinner to hook-nosed Julius, and all the worries about Antony were as yet unwritten on her soft brown cheek; and Inez smiles, and pouts, and tosses her proud little head, and—what is that scintillation? The sparkle of her eye? No. On reflection, the is shaking her head.

Inez was evidently a very willful, petted person, and accustomed to give a considerable amount of trouble. She appeared to talk incessantly, holding the cigarette all the while between her pearly teeth. She sighed at the chair at least half a dozen times, ters of a minute to peep over the artist's shoulder, and see what progress had been made. She roused the tall artist with an alacrity not permitted to a cane, pursued the fugitives, and overtook them at a bridge (without a parapet, as in all bridge battles, for greater convenience in flinging over), upon whose slippery surface five noble cavaliers took post to abide the onset. The moment grasped by the painter is that in which the lady of the battle looks for an instant whether to continue her flight, or avert the bloody struggle by returning to her efficacious kiss. No wonder our young enthusiast was enthralled by such a subject! The picture was, moreover, to be completed in nine days, and, as yet, he had not touched the canvas! Ah, which, to do any thing like justice to, must be of surpassing loveliness. There was, no doubt, a difficulty in obtaining a model of sufficient beauty.

Miss Humpage listened with a calm disdain, as Mrs. Goodall, affecting to dust some pet china, detailed by installments the above particulars, but the idea of allotting nine days for the completion of such a work, by such a hand, almost upset her gravity.

Nine days? Nurse must have been mistaken in that. It was no matter.

Mrs. Goodall vindicated her memory. Remembered distinctly, 'cause of the poor young man.

How, because of what? It did not signify. Miss Humpage required her smallest scissors.

Him that was all but a-dying a few days ago, to think of finishing an 'istory picture!

Salt or fresh, the very mention brought a bright color to Miss Polly's cheek.

Was—was he going to be married, then? She thought —that—it really was of no consequence. And a bit of bobbin.

But the glances at the window were more frequent that day.

A Turkish lady, whose rich husband had drowned and deserted her, too, told a story in which the artist her heart was changed to "black velvet." Too frequent association with a similar material was certainly beginning to tell upon Polly.

The picture proceeded, nay, rather went dashing, plunging on toward completion. With the exception of the lover allotted to the lady of Señor Torre-dias' late blind, but never suffered them to stray abroad. Once, Polly thought of placing herself experimentally at the window, handpainted at any hour, but this idea was smothered as soon as born. It was too like asking an alms, and though her heart was full of tears and bursting for charity, Polly was then demand it.

The situation was becoming intolerable. There was something worrying in the speechless misunderstanding, to which the ordinary opportunities of reconciliation were denied. What a very irritable young man Mr. Haggerdorn must be, indeed! And this anger and—and—obstinacy, for a little quarrel!

And even if it were a caprice, was it not fit and unlikely, and—and—that a young heroine should say more about this person, or even think about him.....What could be mean, now, by behaving that face—his heroine's—blush? Artists loved to introduce familiar faces into their more important compositions. Mr. Haggerdorn might be a creative, a cousin, some friend, you know, or even a strange countenance might have caught his errant fancy. You wouldn't, Miss Humpage, be so fatuitiful, or it would spoil all. Polly chanced to look up, and caught sight in the glass of a cheek so dyed as blushes that she stamped her little foot with passion.

"I think I am bewitched," said Polly-my-Lamb. "But I'll not be made the sport of any man. There it goes! Henceforth, till I am mistress of my own thoughts, I'll—sit in the next room. Intrude there if you can!"

As she flung the defiance toward the object apostrophized, Polly involuntarily accompanied it with a darting look. And so did we, the little hands tightened on the velvet arms of the chair, she half lifted herself with unconscious contraction of the muscles, which the rich color flickered like a darting banner, and passed utterly away.

Another figure was visible in the artist's room. A beautiful—ah, there it was!—face looked gayly up to the head that crowned the black velvet body; bright white skin, flashing teeth, sparkling eyes, braided hair—the Portuguese beauty herself! A such had been the real fugitive, far less surprising is it that five rational individuals, with no particular interest in the matter, and each, probably, with an Inez of his own, should have taken post upon that slippery bridge, with their backs toward the city, than my did not pitch them over the artist world.

The two were not alone. A very tall gentleman, with long, dangling beard, and a corpulent country, engaged in criticising the unfinished picture, but not enjoying the undivided attention of his two companions.

Polly-my-Lamb, from her position, invisible to the party, remained in a manner fascinated by the scene. Presently a change took place in the grouping. A chair was raised and carefully adjusted upon a small platform. The young lady, with a laugh, shook her tresses hair into disorder, threw a wild look into her splendid eyes, and placed herself in the chair in the attitude of a "sitter." The father—or is it brother?—or is it guardian?—likewise assumes a position, and yet, to appear perfectly at ease, takes out a cigarette.

And Inez sits, looking like Cleopatra at her very best—perhaps when she gave that first state-dinner to hook-nosed Julius, and all the worries about Antony were as yet unwritten on her soft brown cheek; and Inez smiles, and pouts, and tosses her proud little head, and—what is that scintillation? The sparkle of her eye? No. On reflection, she is shaking her head.

Inez was evidently a very willful, petted person, and accustomed to give a considerable amount of trouble. She appeared to talk incessantly, holding the cigarette all the while between her pearly teeth. She sighed at the chair at least half a dozen times, ters of a minute to peep over the artist's shoulder, and see what progress had been made. She roused the tall artist with an alacrity not permitted to a cane, pursued the fugitives, and overtook them at a bridge (without a parapet, as in all bridge battles, for greater convenience in flinging over), upon whose slippery surface five noble cavaliers took post to abide the onset. The moment grasped by the painter is that in which the lady of the battle looks for an instant whether to continue her flight, or avert the bloody struggle by returning to her efficacious kiss. No wonder our young enthusiast was enthralled by such a subject! The picture was, moreover, to be completed in nine days, and, as yet, he had not touched the canvas! Ah, which, to do any thing like justice to, must be of surpassing loveliness. There was, no doubt, a difficulty in obtaining a model of sufficient beauty.

Miss Humpage listened with a calm disdain, as Mrs. Goodall, affecting to dust some pet china, detailed by installments the above particulars, but the idea of allotting nine days for the completion of such a work, by such a hand, almost upset her gravity.

Nine days? Nurse must have been mistaken in that. It was no matter.

Mrs. Goodall vindicated her memory. Remembered distinctly, 'cause of the poor young man.

How, because of what? It did not signify. Miss Humpage required her smallest scissors.

Him that was all but a-dying a few days ago, to think of finishing an 'istory picture!

Salt or fresh, the very mention brought a bright color to Miss Polly's cheek.

Was—was he going to be married, then? She thought —that—it really was of no consequence. And a bit of bobbin.

But the glances at the window were more frequent that day.

A Turkish lady, whose rich husband had drowned and deserted her, too, told a story in which the artist her heart was changed to "black velvet." Too frequent association with a similar material was certainly beginning to tell upon Polly.

The picture proceeded, nay, rather went dashing, plunging on toward completion. With the exception of the lover allotted to the lady of Señor Torre-dias' late blind, but never suffered them to stray abroad. Once, Polly thought of placing herself experimentally at the window, handpainted at any hour, but this idea was smothered as soon as born. It was too like asking an alms, and though her heart was full of tears and bursting for charity, Polly was then demand it.

The situation was becoming intolerable. There was something worrying in the speechless misunderstanding, to which the ordinary opportunities of reconciliation were denied. What a very irritable young man Mr. Haggerdorn must be, indeed! And this anger and—and—obstinacy, for a little quarrel!

And even if it were a caprice, was it not fit and unlikely, and—and—that a young heroine should say more about this person, or even think about him.....What could be mean, now, by behaving that face—his heroine's—blush? Artists loved to introduce familiar faces into their more important compositions. Mr. Haggerdorn might be a creative, a cousin, some friend, you know, or even a strange countenance might have caught his errant fancy. You wouldn't, Miss Humpage, be so fatuitiful, or it would spoil all. Polly chanced to look up, and caught sight in the glass of a cheek so dyed as blushes that she stamped her little foot with passion.

"I think I am bewitched," said Polly-my-Lamb. "But I'll not be made the sport of any man. There it goes! Henceforth, till I am mistress of my own thoughts, I'll—sit in the next room. Intrude there if you can!"

As she flung the defiance toward the object apostrophized, Polly involuntarily accompanied it with a darting look. And so did we, the little hands tightened on the velvet arms of the chair, she half lifted herself with unconscious contraction of the muscles, which the rich color flickered like a darting banner, and passed utterly away.

Another figure was visible in the artist's room. A beautiful—ah, there it was!—face looked gayly up to the head that crowned the black velvet body; bright white skin, flashing teeth, sparkling eyes, braided hair—the Portuguese beauty herself! A such had been the real fugitive, far less surprising is it that five rational individuals, with no particular interest in the matter, and each, probably, with an Inez of his own, should have taken post upon that slippery bridge, with their backs toward the city, than my did not pitch them over the artist world.

The two were not alone. A very tall gentleman, with long, dangling beard, and a corpulent country, engaged in criticising the unfinished picture, but not enjoying the undivided attention of his two companions.

Polly-my-Lamb, from her position, invisible to the party, remained in a manner fascinated by the scene. Presently a change took place in the grouping. A chair was raised and carefully adjusted upon a small platform. The young lady, with a laugh, shook her tresses hair into disorder, threw a wild look into her splendid eyes, and placed herself in the chair in the attitude of a "sitter." The father—or is it brother?—or is it guardian?—likewise assumes a position, and yet, to appear perfectly at ease, takes out a cigarette.

And Inez sits, looking like Cleopatra at her very best—perhaps when she gave that first state-dinner to hook-nosed Julius, and all the worries about Antony were as yet unwritten on her soft brown cheek; and Inez smiles, and pouts, and tosses her proud little head, and—what is that scintillation? The sparkle of her eye? No. On reflection, she is shaking her head.

Inez was evidently a very willful, petted person, and accustomed to give a considerable amount of trouble. She appeared to talk incessantly, holding the cigarette all the while between her pearly teeth. She sighed at the chair at least half a dozen times, ters of a minute to peep over the artist's shoulder, and see what progress had been made. She roused the tall artist with an alacrity not permitted to a cane, pursued the fugitives, and overtook them at a bridge (without a parapet, as in all bridge battles, for greater convenience in flinging over), upon whose slippery surface five noble cavaliers took post to abide the onset. The moment grasped by the painter is that in which the lady of the battle looks for an instant whether to continue her flight, or avert the bloody struggle by returning to her efficacious kiss. No wonder our young enthusiast was enthralled by such a subject! The picture was, moreover, to be completed in nine days, and, as yet, he had not touched the canvas! Ah, which, to do any thing like justice to, must be of surpassing loveliness. There was, no doubt, a difficulty in obtaining a model of sufficient beauty.

Miss Humpage listened with a calm disdain, as Mrs. Goodall, affecting to dust some pet china, detailed by installments the above particulars, but the idea of allotting nine days for the completion of such a work, by such a hand, almost upset her gravity.

Nine days? Nurse must have been mistaken in that. It was no matter.

Mrs. Goodall vindicated her memory. Remembered distinctly, 'cause of the poor young man.

How, because of what? It did not signify. Miss Humpage required her smallest scissors.

Him that was all but a-dying a few days ago, to think of finishing an 'istory picture!

Salt or fresh, the very mention brought a bright color to Miss Polly's cheek.

Was—was he going to be married, then? She thought —that—it really was of no consequence. And a bit of bobbin.

But the glances at the window were more frequent that day.

A Turkish lady, whose rich husband had drowned and deserted her, too, told a story in which the artist her heart was changed to "black velvet." Too frequent association with a similar material was certainly beginning to tell upon Polly.

The picture proceeded, nay, rather went dashing, plunging on toward completion. With the exception of the lover allotted to the lady of Señor Torre-dias' late blind, but never suffered them to stray abroad. Once, Polly thought of placing herself experimentally at the window, handpainted at any hour, but this idea was smothered as soon as born. It was too like asking an alms, and though her heart was full of tears and bursting for charity, Polly was then demand it.

The situation was becoming intolerable. There was something worrying in the speechless misunderstanding, to which the ordinary opportunities of reconciliation were denied. What a very irritable young man Mr. Haggerdorn must be, indeed! And this anger and—and—obstinacy, for a little quarrel!

And even if it were a caprice, was it not fit and unlikely, and—and—that a young heroine should say more about this person, or even think about him.....What could be mean, now, by behaving that face—his heroine's—blush? Artists loved to introduce familiar faces into their more important compositions. Mr. Haggerdorn might be a creative, a cousin, some friend, you know, or even a strange countenance might have caught his errant fancy. You wouldn't, Miss Humpage, be so fatuitiful, or it would spoil all. Polly chanced to look up, and caught sight in the glass of a cheek so dyed as blushes that she stamped her little foot with passion.

"I think I am bewitched," said Polly-my-Lamb. "But I'll not be made the sport of any man. There it goes! Henceforth, till I am mistress of my own thoughts, I'll—sit in the next room. Intrude there if you can!"

As she flung the defiance toward the object apostrophized, Polly involuntarily accompanied it with a darting look. And so did we, the little hands tightened on the velvet arms of the chair, she half lifted herself with unconscious contraction of the muscles, which the rich color flickered like a darting banner, and passed utterly away.

Another figure was visible in the artist's room. A beautiful—ah, there it was!—face looked gayly up to the head that crowned the black velvet body; bright white skin, flashing teeth, sparkling eyes, braided hair—the Portuguese beauty herself! A such had been the real fugitive, far less surprising is it that five rational individuals, with no particular interest in the matter, and each, probably, with an Inez of his own, should have taken post upon that slippery bridge, with their backs toward the city, than my did not pitch them over the artist world.

The two were not alone. A very tall gentleman, with long, dangling beard, and a corpulent country, engaged in criticising the unfinished picture, but not enjoying the undivided attention of his two companions.

Polly-my-Lamb, from her position, invisible to the party, remained in a manner fascinated by the scene. Presently a change took place in the grouping. A chair was raised and carefully adjusted upon a small platform. The young lady, with a laugh, shook her tresses hair into disorder, threw a wild look into her splendid eyes, and placed her-the artist had attended it in person, she was prepared to descend with a calm and dignity that literally astonished herself.

On the landing-place Polly was greeted by Mr. Hartshorne and her much-recovered aunt, and together they proceeded to the parlor.

There, on an extemporized easel, stood the wonderful picture, shrouded from view, as yet, in a green cloth, which Mr. Haggerdorn, grasping with a somewhat agitated hand, prepared to twitch off on the young lady's entrance.

He bowed respectfully and murmured some words, to which Polly, not comprehending them very clearly, returned an almost inarticulate reply. She made a slight movement with her hand. Off went the cover.

A mass of things in violent action, trampling chargers, frightened oxen, furious men, crimson dust, blue trees, green heavens, a rushing cataract, a peaked bridge, all these, and somewhat more, though present, were scarcely seen, for Polly's eyes were nailed upon the prominent figure, a noble damsel on a pillion, which looked as if painted by Irish butter, who, pausing in her headlong flight as the shock of arms reached her, reined round her cowslip-colored steed, and, with wild neglect and diluted eyes, seemed to ask counsel of the spectator what upon earth she should do?

And well might Miss Humpage involuntarily open her blue eyes, for not only was the countenance Polly's own, but it was executed with a precision unsurpassable in art! Not the very minute finish of the portrait one whit less extraordinary than the resemblance of feature. In that one little gem of a face genius had been content to vindicate itself: but that so thoroughly that all the surrounding extravagance and impossibilities rendered it absolutely forgotten or overborne. Quentin Matsys—Arthur Haggerdorn—other little boys—love's Royal Academy possesses the finest schools of art in the world!

For a few seconds Polly stood gazing as if in a dream; then, awaking, found herself alone. Not quite alone, for the young artist was kneeling at her feet, kissing the little passive hand, exclaiming in a tongue I dare not offer to render in the original Cave Polly managed to interpret (I never could understand), that she was, had been, ever would be, his life, his soul, his treasure, star, angel, and the holder of as many other honorary and incongruous appointments, that it is to be hoped some, at least, were sinecures. Passionately inquired if Polly believed he could have existed in England without one gracious look? Explained that, when Polly ceased to appear at the window, he, in dread of having offended, would never again to court that happiness, until he had prepared a proof (behold it!) that he needed not encouragement to impress her during image forever and forever on his soul!

That the Señor Torre-Diaz, though given to sleep in studios, was awake to every generous impulse, had a pretty taste for art, and was his poor mother's only friend.

That the señora—(caprice itself)—liked the fun of sitting for somebody else's picture beyond every thing, though herself and dress into the most graceful attitudes and bewitching folds, and half crying, like a spoiled child, that English manners forbad the possibility of her being a witness of the surprise Miss Humpage must evince on seeing the finished work.

The rest of Mr. Haggerdorn's observations were couched in the purest dialect of the Low Countries, which I don't speak.

As for Polly, her feelings—so far as they were susceptible of analysis—included a sense of recovering from the concussion of a shower-bath, dancing a sarabind, witnessing a display of fireworks, and stretching over a precipice at the risk of her neck, to catch the accents of an Æolian harp. Taking her situation in the gradual, the young person can only be likened to the commandant of a fortress, who has crammed it with brave defenders, but forgotten his commissariat. The pride and resentment stored up in Polly's heart were altogether disproportioned to the gentler thoughts now crowding back, nay, even peeping out, exurient as ever, from their original cells, as though they had never been cast in! Why, therefore, prolong a history so fabulous? As well surrender frankly: at least so far as to acknowledge the commanding position of the foe. For there was a further consideration.

Polly-my-Lamb did not take away her hand: but she looked down with a sort of grave, sweet pity upon the young suitor; then gently bade him rise and follow her.

He did so mechanically, hardly conscious of what was passing, till he found himself standing in front of the picture of a benevolent-looking old gentleman, in a brown coat and powdered wig, who appeared to smile on both of them.

Polly raised her hand.

"There is my answer," she said, her tears falling. "I have sworn to him, before Heaven, a calm, irrevocable vow. By virtue of that pledge I may never marry until my father's murder is avenged, nor then, unless it be the man who avenges it."

"You promise me?" asked young Haggerdorn, with startling abruptness. "To be no wife of him who shall track your father's murderers?"

"At least of no one else," replied Polly, firmly but mournfully.

"Ah! promise, promise! All, zen, shall be most well!"

"Well?"

"Smile not, dear young dames. There is power, I in my withmost spirit believe, to do six things. Love can—very thing contrive. Shall he not take on prisoner? I love you. Good. I am painter. Again, I love you. Good. I am avenger. Now, promise!"

Polly looked at him in amazement.

"Yes!" said she, incredulously: yet gradually inclining, as she gazed on those bright, animated features, to partake his enthusiasm. "Alas! Mr. Haggerdorn, what can you have learned of the haunts and hiding-places of crime? How can you, young, strange, inexperienced almost as myself, hope for success, where men, bold and cunning, trained to the work of detection, have owned themselves defeated? How—"

"Only promise," reiterated the young man. (She hesitated.) "Not to me—not to Arther Haggerdorn; but to him, young—old, all little, or poor, who shall fulfill his doleful desire. For the love of Heaven, promise."

Polly surrendered at discretion.

"I do promise," said she. Then, with a pitiful certainty of the disappointment he was incurring, when his excitement should have subsided, she added, "Reflect, however, for one moment, Mr. Haggerdorn. You have no clew, not even a suspicion to guide your efforts. This is building on air."

"You have promised. Zat is no more but success!" was the confident rejoinder. "Ze single traite—he found a clew."

"Ay, here it is," said Polly, taking from a cabinet the mysterious muff-like which Sir James Pollhill, at her request, had committed to her custody. "And what has this told us? It is more than doubtful if the person suspected to have been its owner had any share in my father's murder, and if he had, the wretch has escaped us, and left the country."

"Whither, think they, he has fled?"

"To France—to Holland—to America—who knows? There is safe refuge on either shore for the miscreants."

"To Holland? I, too, thither go. Something points me that way. Remember only your gracious promise, dear lady, and all is done. Trust to me all box—it shall be my care. Ze picture complete, I will restore it, and with it I will bring you my own self the murderer—I swear it. I know it. You have promised."

Polly mechanically placed it in his hand.

"I have promised."

"It is enough: I ask not more. Farewell—farewell!"

As he stooped to kiss her hand, Mr. Hartshorne and Miss Humpage entered them, so quietly as they had withdrawn. There was a singular expression on the latter's face, and even Mr. Hartshorne lacked something of his usual composure. The explanation—a fact he, however, tried to cover with an embarrassed laugh.

"Your coachman's sleeping powers are exhausted, Arthur," he said. "He has driven off!"

"He has driven off!" said Arthur, and, however evincing any remarkable consternation.

"Baggage and all. Don't be alarmed. He will return in the afternoon, in time to carry you to the extra post-coach, which, as we have learned, will go to Harwich to-night, with government property and passengers. I have secured a place for you," added the little doctor, hesitating, "if Miss Humpage will pardon."

As he drew Arthur aside, Miss Sercold sidled up to her friend, and, taking her hand, pressed it with a significance of congratulation with which Polly, though perplexed, could have dispensed.

"Darling, I am so happy!" murmured the elder lady.

Polly intimated her satisfaction, trying, nevertheless, to look as though she accepted it rather as a pleasing fact in their domestic history than as implying any new phase in her own.

"So very—very blest!" continued Miss Sercold. "Such a sudden wave of joy!"

"Bless! Wave! Joy, Polly. "My dear aunt —I—"

"Can not realize the pleasing pain!" said her friend, sentimentally. "No more can I. That he should have snatched the first moment—"

"The last—" suggested Polly.

"When we had not set eyes on each other these five weeks, to ask me to be his."

"Whose, aunt?"

"Hartshorne's—John's, my love. To whom was I referring, do you imagine?" asked her friend, softly.

Polly looked at her—she was not jesting. It was clearly no delusion now. Miss Humpage returned in the presence of her friend's hand with what gravity she might.

"But how, dear aunt," inquired the curious young lady, "could you have never confessed to him his wooing? Surely to-day was not the first—"

"We have corresponded, dear," replied Miss Sercold, with a blush, "and I have—I have—there, with pulsatilla, and ended in—in—this. John would like to have called, of course: but he is the most thoughtful, the most considerate of men. He felt, I sense means, that you were not in good spirits, and feared that the sight of others' happiness might only increase your melancholy. Now, darling—I was in trouble, you know—and—he spoke."

"Oh!" said Polly.

Mr. Hartshorne, who had only prolonged his confidences with Arthur until his betrothed had communicated her secret, now approached Miss Humpage, and paid his compliments with an ease that, under the circumstances, did him great credit, after which he took his leave. Arthur followed him, though less self-possessed, was sensible that he too should take his leave.

Not another word, and but one more look, followed between the pair. That sufficed. On the one side it ratified the promise; on the other, reiterated the assurance of success. Four or five hours later the sleepy coachman returned, and without being permitted the briefest interval of repose, transported Mr. Haggerdorn to the yard of the Merry Privateer, Tower Links, whence the extra post-coach was to depart for Harwich.

CHAPTER VIII.

Nor yet was the business of that eventful day complete.

Polly-my-Lamb sat before the picture of her father in deep meditation, not unmingled with self-reproach, as she remembered how freely, of late, hopes purely selfish had been permitted to entwine themselves with the great end and purpose of her life. Strive as she might, however, she could not new discounect them, nor could she conceal from herself that the failure of each attempt to do so was not a source of pain! But then, this youth—who was he? Under what pretext could one in his position become the claimant of her hand, unless as the fulfiller of the object she had in view? Good. It was in this character alone that she had given him her promise. Of course he understood that? Not for any personal interest she could have supposed to take in him. Miss Humpage applauded her own excellent wisdom, foresight, and hard-heartedness, in which last she felt herself distinctly outstripped. She had promised her hand and wealth to him who should trace her father's murderer. To such a man alone—

Polly had exactly reached this satisfactory conclusion, when she was interrupted by the entrance of Stephen, who announced Sir James Pollhill, and, without further ceremony, ushered in that excellent magistrate. He was attended by Mr. Armour, still cabin confidential, who comported himself with more real humility than on former occasions.

"Are you prepared, my dear young lady," said Sir James, bowing Polly's head with a meaning smile, "for tidings of considerable importance?"

Polly colored and looked at Armour.

"Not to keep you in suspense, my dear," resumed Sir James, "you must know that we have obtained the most satisfactory testimony of the return to this country of the persons supposed to be implicated in the—the affair of your poor father. Even the most distant relations, cousins and cousins' cousins, to the remotest degree, and many of them able cottagers of moderate times we committed, two nights since, on the Harwich Road, within a few miles—Mr. Lamb, I believe?"

Polly had uttered an unconscious exclamation.

"Go on, Sir, I beg," faltered the young lady.

"The parties in question were traced to their haunt, and by this time to-morrow (we have to concert measures with an officious country justice, who has a fiance by the name of Lamb, in the extract of your) Lord Lob will be in our hands. Eh, Armour?"

"If he is not, Sir James, may I never take their trail! I'll be answerable for the consequences!"

"Enough. I thought, my dear," continued the magistrate, turning to Polly, "that you would be glad to learn the matter placed beyond all doubt. And now, Armour, you can return to the office. I will be with you in an hour, or less."

The officer withdrew. It did not, however, appear that the excellent magistrate had any thing especial to say. Nor had he. This was merely one of those little methods to which he occasionally had recourse, by way of checking the vanity of his subordinates, and reminding that individual that, after or as he was, there were depths of consultation into which not even he—at least as a matter of course—was admitted. Sir James, therefore, remained seated on, without much significance, till, receiving no reply, he looked steadily at his companion, and saw that she was in deep and agitated. His entrance brought matters to a crisis. The poor little girl, overcome with mingled emotions, burst into a violent flood of tears.

The good magistrate, somewhat alarmed, and not a little puzzled, quickly discovered, however, that these were tears of a healthful character. With his mind, irrespective of the agitating feelings conjured up by the information he had brought, and touched by the sight of those beautiful eyes suffused, they fell with so much tact and gentleness, to probe the wound, that he ended by winning her confidence and the full acquiescence of the secret of Polly's vow.

Let it be owned that Polly-my-Lamb was, in her heart, not a little astonished at the collected—not to say indifferent—manner in which Sir James received the communication. His legal friend, who had heard against a smile, and, to say truth, with difficulty overcame it, as the good gentleman pictured to himself the successful, accomplished issue of the fettered tyrant of the highways, presenting himself at the footstool of the heiress, and claiming the promised reward of his services and talents.

Aware, however, of the serious light in which Polly was prepared to view the matter, he contented himself with giving her the important hint of Mr. Armour's coveting any other reward than such as his cognizance (and the Government) might bestow. To this, he added, somewhat hesitatingly, the probable fulfillment of this rather unadvised pledge it should be needful to inform the officer of the extraordinary circumstances which led to it. Sir James, on his reach, he, Sir James, would venture to affirm, on the part of both had respectful ears, that he would prefer accepting a reasonable composition in money to aspiring to a station for which he was, by his habits, his education, alike unfitted.

With this prompt analysis of the excellent Armour poor Polly was fain to be content. The glowing face of the young lady, which had been the cause of her future, but at least it would never be replaced by the cool, supercilious visage of this Bow Street runner. "This?" Such was not the case, and she would have applied some few months since to one who seemed the appointed instrument of vengeance. Poor Polly! Her mind could not stir without a pang!

Sir James walked back to his office, absolutely chuckling with delight at the success of his ruse, but with a keen sense of the ridiculous; and by the time he arrived in Bow Street the joke, as it always does, had undergone such colored modifications that he found it impossible to refrain from confiding it to the party most interested, certain that the young gentleman's wits would be equal, though more subdued and respectful relish.

Much to his surprise, Mr. Armour heard the story cut with a dry, unmoved face, and without any comment, and, almost before Sir James had well concluded, the magisterial mind became sensible of a painful suspicion that not only was Mr. Henry Armour a vain, but also an ambitious man; that, in fact, in his view, the gigantic jest had diminished to a pigmy. Briefly (in the plain English in which undoubtedly Mr. Armour had the case hastily before himself), that he had as good a right to the lady's hand as any other fellow, so that he fulfilled the conditions required. The officer, however, did not deem it advisable to give utterance to his feelings at the moment, while Sir James, on his side, was too anxiously intent upon bringing the coming enterprise to a successful issue to enter into any discussion that might have the effect of damping his lieutenant's zeal. So let the morrow care for itself.

They plunged at once into the preparatory arrangements. In that occupation we leave them.

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

EITHER ONE LATE HOURS.—"He was as wild as he was good-natured, and had only to be asked for every thing and able to exhaust them all in one night, he was forcibly driven to remark upon the next morning to explain his property to get through them."—Extract from an Unpublished Irish Novel.

A SCORCH CONVINCED.—Why is Earl Johnny not to be blamed for stopping the runs?—Because the little laird did it in Mersey. (Its concise!)

Humor is the essence of true wit, that is, of sterling wit. Wit, in its purest form, is a flash of thought, and, like a flash of lightning, it is quick, brilliant, and startling. Humor is the more worldly element, which, while it partakes of the nature of wit, is more practical, more diffused, and more generally available.

A LONG DRAWN OUT AFFAIR.—Mr. Lincoln's reasoning with Fernando Wood.

A BOOK DRESSED OUT.—Bound in calf.

A BOOK DRESSED OUT.—Bound in calf.

A LOVE OF A BONNET.—Cupid.

A LOVE OF A BONNET.—Cupid.

A LOVE OF A BONNET.—Cupid

ST VALENT
18
BLOCKADING SQUADRON

INES DAY
64.
ARMY OF T

A MILITARY BALL.

ON ARMY of the Potomac, taking advantage of the cessation of hostilities during the winter, indulges now and then in a festive entertainment. The presence of soldiers' wives with their husbands in camp gives, of course, the crowning charm to these gatherings. We present our readers this week, on page 116, a sketch of a ball lately given by the Third Army Corps. The upper compartment of the picture will give our readers some idea of the difficulties which failed to prevent the arrival of visitors. Below this is the dancing-hall, made up of tents, and decorated with flags and evergreens. Another portion of the sketch gives a view of the supper-room. While the fortunate soldiers who have engagements at supper with their ladies, those not so successful are engaged in what is called the "gander" dance, which our artist has faithfully represented on the same page.

This ball was quite a success; a score of Generals attended; and it was altogether an event to break up the monotony of every-day flourishes in camp. It was the first opportunity that gave the ladies staying with their husbands in camp a chance to come together.

BECKY VANE'S VALENTINE.

THE rain was pattering with steady, sighing monotone against the little square window of the long wooden building—a window from which the only prospect, a range of far-off hills veiled in heavy mist, was dreary enough. Nor was it strange that Allan Revere, thinking of the orange-groves and jasmine-scented air his own bright land, should find the groaning sigh upon his pillow, and closed his burning eyes.

"This pain is perfectly intolerable!" he muttered, with momentary irritation; for Allan Revere, who would have thrown himself upon the bristling bayonets of a regiment of soldiers without flinching, and had fought like a tiger even while the scarlet blood ebbed from his life's fountains until insensibility came to his relief, was a very child in hospital, like many another brave soldier. "It throbs and burns with every breath I draw: the bandages are heated before long. Why does not some one come to bind on fresh ones?"

"Can't say, I'm sure, Sir," said the little surgeon in the next bed, who had been whiling away the tedious hours with quavering snatches of song: "My leg feels as though it were on fire."

"Oh no, it doesn't," said the spectacled surgeon, who had entered from the next ward just in time to catch the last words. "All your fancy, my man! And how are you getting along, my Confederate friend?"

"I'm getting very cross, Doctor, if that will do you any good," said Allan, sharply.

"Hum-m-m!" commented the surgeon, gravely, feeling the young man's pulse: "considerable fever—inflammation running very high—"

"It'll run away with me altogether before a great while, Allan Revere. "Well, Doctor, I have lain here four hours, and not a soul has been near me to change the bandages or bathe the wounds! If you intend to kill me I wish you'd do it at once, and not keep me lingering here!"

"Well, there has been rather a lack of nurses latterly," said Dr. Gower, skillfully unbandaging the fevered wrappings; "but I'm expecting a Vermont lady here to-night—"

"A Yankee nurse!" said Allan Revere, with an indescribable curve of his mustache.

"Yes; just that," said the Doctor, rather shortly: "she was a Massachusetts man himself, and nothing but the chivalric sense of delicacy which pertains to every true gentleman restrained him from a cutting retort.

"Will she wear sowhide shoes and talk through her nose, Doctor?" persisted the invalid, maliciously.

"Really I don't know. Will you have the kindness to turn a little more on your left side?"

"There; will that do? Don't bring her into this ward, Doctor, please; I feel a presentiment that a Yankee nurse at all that is needed to finish me."

"Aren't you a little cross to-night, Mr. Revere?" asked the surgeon, smiling. "Now lie still and be a good boy, while I attend to Charley Bryan's leg."

Allan Revere mentally made up his mind to interrupt the Doctor on his returning way and "spread it out" with him; but the cool lotions and quieting draughts, added to the weak languor of his frame, proved too much for any belligerent intentions, and he drifted away into a quiet sleep, that carried him back to Floridan everglades and sunbathed swamps, while the chill rain dripped in ceaseless tune on the wooden roof over his head, and the wind moaned around the lonely hospital like a homeless spirit.

It was nearly midnight when he woke, with a convulsive start, and a strange fancy that every vein in his wounded arm was filled with molten fire.

"Water—ice—water!" he cried; "my arm is burning up! Help, some one, for mercy's sake! don't let me die here like a dog!"

There was a slight rustle through the fire-lit darkness; a shaded lamp glowed along the aisle, and he saw the hazel shine of a woman's pitying eyes beaming down on his face.

"You are the wounded Floridian," said a soft voice. "Dr. Gower told me about you. Stay—I see—that the water is; your bandages have become incensed."

Light and cool as a falling snow-flake her qu'k hands wet the cloths in healing lotions, and replaced their folds.

"Now, the other one!" pleaded Revere.

"Not now. Dr. Gower says it will injure it to be opened again at present."

"But it burns like a live coal!"

"I am sorry; but it will be better soon."

"You will not bathe it?" said the young man, contracting his brows.

"No."

"Then I shall do it myself!" he asserted, raising himself on one elbow.

"Lie down again; you must not."

"Must not!"

Allan Revere looked defiantly at the melting hazel eyes and the little firm mouth. The next minute she had passed her arm lightly under his shoulder and laid him back, like a helpless child, on the pillow. He flushed and frowned, but could not help smiling.

"How strong you are, little woman!"

"Now will you lie still?" she asked, gravely regarding him.

"I suppose I shall have to," he returned, ungraciously.

And this was Allan Revere's first experience of the Yankee nurse.

"What are you thinking about, Miss Vane?"

What was she thinking about? That would have been rather a hard question to answer to the dark-eyed young Confederate; for, sitting in the dreary hospital ward, with all her fretful patients asleep, and tended, and coaxed into momentary quiet, she was back among the box-borders and snow-fringed cedars of the farm-house garden at home, the sunset burning redly over the rocks, and the little brook slipping noisily across mossy ledges and greenish-smooth masses of stone past the very door-yard.

"I am not quite sure, Mr. Revere; I believe I was thinking about going home."

"Then you are going?"

"Next week."

Allan Revere was sitting up in a cushioned chair, having obtained the privileges of convalescence, but he was very pale still.

"And I believe," went on Becky Vane, who was the very soul of candor, "that I was also thinking of this being St. Valentine's Eve."

"One of your Yankee saints?"

"Mr. Revere!"

"Pardon me, Miss Vane; I know I'm a petulant brute. But go on; I was thinking of St. Valentine."

"As if you didn't know! I was only remembering how the country boys and girls observe the day up in those great New Hampshire snows where odd inn novations are unknown."

"Tell me about it," said Allan. "I am interested in their legends of the unknown North."

"Well," said Becky, stitching away calmly at her work, "just to prove that chivalry is not necessarily a growth of southern soil, St. Dorothy you, Mr. Revere, with the recital of how our youthful swains think nothing of watching all night long for the first glimpse at their window, so that her first glance may fall on their faces in the light of St. Valentine's dawn, thereby entitling them to the privilege of being her Valentines all the year."

And I suppose a Valentine sometimes turns into a husband?"

"Often."

Becky Vane rose as she spoke, and went across the room to bathe the forehead of a poor teamster, all whose glorious calf had cracked her ear.

"Confound the fellow!" muttered Revere; "I wish his head was in Orcino!"

Yes we Mr. Allan Revere had forgotten the days when Becky's soft fingers cooled the pain beneath his fetty curls. So selfish are we all; and yet Allan had a noble heart after all.

The stars of the chill February night hung like golden shields over the red glow that announced the near neighborhood of Washington. Vane, wrapped in a gray shawl that made her look like a little nun, came out of her tiny cabin to begin the day's labors in them. blankets and bandages and wards. For poor Charley Bryan had floated down the turbid currents of the river Death with the turn of the night, and Becky knew that she must make his shroud by noon! Do not shrink, reader; these are but the veritable records of hospital life! She had seen death in many shapes since that long winter, and ceased to fear his ghastly accessories—his sable pall.

As she crossed the threshold a tall figure with the auroral glow of sunrise on its pallid features met her glance. She started, with a stifled cry.

"Miss Vane!"

"Mr. Revere!"

"I knew you the need, have I not, Miss Vane? I may be your Valentine?"

He could see her cheek blaze scarlet in the dim light—he could feel the little hand striving to escape from his hold.

"I do not know what you mean, Mr. Revere!"

"Becky Vane, you know the love of him!"—you must know how dearly I love you! Becky, my dear little Valentine, will you promise to be my wife some day? I shall never have necessary you were to my existence until you spoke of going away —and, Becky, I shall go with you."

"But, Mr. Revere—"

"Allan, if you please."

"Allan, then—I am a Yankee girl."

"Darling, I know. I have given my parole until the end of the war; shall I parole myself to you until my life's end?"

"I can trust you, Allan," she whispered.

"Then I may go home with you?"

"Why, I suppose you will as I am not help it!" she answered, with edifying demureness.

"But give me one loving word, Becky, before you go."

"Indeed I shall not, Mr. Revere. Go back to your ward; the idea of a wounded man standing out in this cold, raw air! What would Dr. Gower say?"

"I don't care a fig for Dr. Gower."

"But for my sake, Allan."

He bent over her hand a second, leaving the ferrent touch of his lips on the velvet fingers, and went in like a docile child.

And Becky Vane, with dewy hazel eyes and cheeks that burned like rubies, slipped away to work on poor Charley Bryan's shroud, and Love and Death went side by side, as they have done many a time before.

"Why, yes," said Dr. Gower, "I'll make out your discharge any day; there's no objection now that you are going so well. So you are going North, eh? By-the-way, Mr. Revere, what do you think of Yankee nurses now?"

"What do they think of me? is the most important question I should think, Doctor," laughed the Floridian. "But from this day beneforward I shall believe in genuine saints!"

"Indeed! and who may yours be?"

"St. Valentine."

IN THE "LIBEY."

I COULD never think of Jem as dead, though I certainly had no definite grounds for my belief to stand on—in the very tenth, too, of the formidable fact that all effort to find him—and many and strenuous ones had been made—had thus far proved futile. He had enlisted as a private—Jem had always a dash of romance about him—and had marched nothing to distinguish him and Jem Delacroix, sangled heap at Gettysburg; and yet I could never fancy his poor body lying under that mournful slab raised for "the unknown," though bankrupt of reasons for my conviction.

So when I found myself at Richmond, with that ominous ignorance of the soul for winnowing out the few grains of good perdus in a whole harvest of evil, my heart gave a quick upward bound at the thought, "Perhaps I shall find Jem here"—Jem was my younger brother, and my pet from petticoats up—otherwise the outlook wasn't too bright.

The whole thing had a dash on our Northern, which was in about-as good fighting condition as the general run of hospitals, took fifty of our boys at a time, and I was one of them on our first day. Simms I think, with his leg just off, and their surgeons; probably by way of padding for an article in the Examiner—I have no other reason, as we were all non-combatants, and they had already mouths enough to feed—and there we were, huddled together in the main building Delacroix, a cool, resolute fellow, Robert Allan, and myself, with the surgeons lying all about, some groaning and ghastly with pain, and the most unrelieved sun beating down upon us, scorching out our very lives as we stood there in the entrance room. Probably some red tape was to be unwound somewhere—but at last they brought carts into which they huddled the sick and wounded, and started off, jolting and jostling them as they drove recklessly over the rough pavement very much after the manner of a farmer with a load of pigs.

Allan said something about it and was immediately overhauled by the Chief of Police, the Provost Marshal, and Heaven knows what all, and then we were relieved by the Richmond authorities of whatever money we were so unfortunate as to have about us, and marched off to the entrance of the "Libey," or to Libey Prison. Then I began to look out for Jem and got my first sup of disappointment. They had placed us with the officers' room. And Jem was not a private, and might be one of the hundred and fifty tramping aimlessly over our heads, or in some of the rooms under us. But I knew other prisons, and either case he might almost as well have been in Soudan for all hope of meeting him; or, and it was my hope in that first day in the hospitals, where it was possible that we should be allowed to do service. Delacroix suggested that.

The Libey was a queer prison, was in the third story and crowded, for there were already some two hundred officers confined there. The air was stifling, packed with so many human beings, the heat intolerant in pitilessly at the broken unshaded windows, added to which, at that moment, were the fumes of the new lime-wash with which the cooking of the rations. Ah! if the tender, white-handed mothers and wives, if the gay girls dancing in Northern drawing-rooms could have looked in this inane, loveless, uncoiled room, with unglazed panes at best, and frequently only bits of canvas and strips of boards nailed over the openings, unplastered walls, unsweet thing belonging to common decency or comfort, filthy beyond description, the floors grown half-terrible to them, and, through the sweet delicious waits-music, would sound out something like a wail! But there was no wailing or sense of pain detailed for cooking and scrubbing service, and in due course of time I had my turn at both, and fell into it, I think, as naturally as I could have fallen out over my secret wonder at Delacroix when similarly employed, he was so precisely the man that it was impossible to imagine such proficiency in anyone.

I had always an undefined notion that the laws of nature contained a special clause for his benefit, and that he could never avail ever dare face him, much less offer him its horns.

As for poor Allan he succumbed at once, and went about in a dazed way indeed, though I question of more calibre might be pardoned for being a little down on their luck. There were put up bare wooden bunks for about half of us; the rest must sleep on the floor: pillows and mattresses there were none—a blanket you might have if you were fortunate enough to have brought one with you, otherwise none. The rations were scanty; but water, the muddy, unwashed water of the James River, was even more grudgingly doled out. I thought of the old border-riders vowing candles as long as their sabres, and Mr. Mary when in a scrape. I would have given one as long as the Bunker Hill monument to St. Croton could he have interfered in our behalf. Not specially brute this, but still I maintain worth the chronicling; for to keep up good heart and firm courage, as the majority of our men did, and, indeed, unwearied, half-starved, as we soon were, and treated like dogs through long monotonous days of a dreary and cheerless captivity, needs more pluck—enduring pluck of the kind that will bear a strain on it, than ever was required for a forlorn hope.

Meanwhile the days crawled on—dragged is too fast a word for prison time—and constantly I was on the sharp look-out for Jem. As Delacroix had said, we soon obtained access to the hospitals for Union soldiers, visiting them daily. They were three in number, and from the first hour of our entrance I should have thought complaint a blasphemy. They used to bring there the poor wretches from the tobacco factories and Belle Isle, worn almost to skeletons, sometimes with the skin literally dried on the bone, moving masses of filth and rags, snatching at any article of food as they passed, groveling and struggling weakly for it like dogs, many of them actually in the agonies of death, taken there that they might be said to have died in hospital. In one day the ambulance brought us eighteen, and eleven out of them died; in fact, the new Belle Isle ward, with its numerous cots, was half little medicine to give them, and no food but a heaps of disease—tainted bread and sweet potatoes; and this for men down with dysentery and typhoid pneumonia. These, too, were men in the last stages of disease: hundreds more, fit subjects for hospital treatment, were left on the island and in the prisons for lack of hospital accommodation. In the three Union hospitals the average of deaths was forty a day. We lived in an atmosphere of death; corpses were on every side of us. We did what we could; but after all it was little more than standing with our hands fast bound to witness sufferings that we could not alleviate. I had done looking for Jem. I hoped now that he was dead. Better that his handsome head lay low among a heap of unknown slain than to have been tortured all these months in a Richmond prison.

Our own condition was not improving. The weather was growing colder, and the wind whistled most unpleasantly through our broken windows. Stoves were put up, but no fuel was given to burn in them; and sleeping on bare planks, without mattress or covering, was getting to be a problem. There was a falling off also in the matter of rations —corn-bread and three ounces of pork were our daily allowance; added to this, daily brutality and insolence on the part of the under-keepers, dead silence from home, and the hopeless winter setting in; but the edge of all this was blunted for me by the hospital horrors. My very sleep was dreadful with its huge graves and piles of dead, calling on those who, thank God! will never know how they died.

One morning the ambulance had brought a load of fourteen from the island, and when I came to the hospital, a little later than usual, I found Delacroix standing by the side of one of them—a young man, judging from the skeleton-like but still powerful frame—an old one, from the pinched and ghastly face—a dying one, at all events. Used as we were to horrors, I saw that Delacroix was laboring under some unusual emotion. He was white to the very lips. I understood why when he muttered in my ear the word "Starving!" Low as it was uttered, the dying man heard it, and said,

"Yes," he said, feebly, "it is quite useless, gentlemen—no," turning from the bread that Delacroix offered; "I loathe it now. For days and days I have been mad for it. I have had murder in my heart. I thought if one died the rest might have a better chance; but I am powerless in the wind."

He stopped, seemingly from exhaustion, and lay a few moments silent; then the pitiful voice commenced again.

"We were very brave for a while; we thought help was coming. We never dreamed they could go on at home eating, lying and dancing merrily while we were dying by inches. I think if my brother knew— If ever you get back I charge you, General Grant, and Robert Lee, and Secretary of the —Maine. Tell him that his brother Jem starved to death in Belle Isle, and that thousands more are— Ah! just Heaven! the pain again! I—I—Christ! help me! have—"

The words died away in inarticulate ravings. He threw up his arms wildly over his head; his whole frame racked with the most awful throes. And I knew that he never so wanted, so horribly transformed, that I had not known him. His glazing eyes had not recognized me. His few remaining hairs were matted long, raving curls. I never knew that his brother was by his side. I died over and over again, standing there in my utter helplessness. I think I never so thanked God for him his meaning fell away into the merciful silence of death.

Delacroix, who had remained with me, vented his grief and wrath in the bitterest curses I had ever heard. My grief was so vast that I could not then fully comprehend it. There were in store for me days of future horror, and a constant recrimbrance of his agony, of maddening thought of that most awful and protracted torture, cold, hunger, disease, and, finally, all at once—a sense of relief in silence till they had taken him away, with the nine others dead out of the fourteen brought there in the morning, and then were dismissed back with Delacroix. It was after sundown, but the first sight that saluted us in the prison was a row of pails and brushes, and the keen-eyed dashing the officers for the duty of scrubbing. At that Delacroix burst out, angrily,

"Do you think we did you think we are going to sleep on these floors after they are scrubbed, and sleeping on them for days? Is your Government trying to kill us with sleeplessness, since it can't starve us out? Already we have walked all one night this week, because lying down was impossible."

The keeper turned, with an ugly grin on his brutal face:

"Since you are so delicate you can stay the dungeons for a day or two. You won't be troubled with scrubbing there; and you will find the company that is fit for a Yankee—in the vermin."

So Delacroix was marched off to the dungeons, as poor Davies had been the week before, though scarcely over the typhoid fever—as Major White and Colonel Straight have since been, and many another hapless officer, for a trivial offense or none at all. They kept him there three days in that noisome hole. He came out looking a little pale, but plucky as ever. The spite of a brutal man is a hound that never tires. The keeper watched his opportunity, swore that he saw Delacroix looking out at window (this high offense was punishable with death), and put him down again—for four days, this time. Then we got another turn of the hand-screw. We were no longer allowed to attend the hospitals. Delacroix's eyes flashed.

"There goes the last obstacle to escape. While I thought I could be of use to our poor fellows here I would not go; but now—I have had plenty of time to think down there, and I have thought to purpose. I have a plan. If you like you can try it with me; if not, I go alone."

To know how sounded that word "escape" one must first have realized a prison. The walls are enormous, and failure meant the damp dungeons of the Libey, of which Delacroix gave so glowing description. The plan, however, was feasible. By agreement each managed to secure a sleeping-place near the door, and when all was quiet and little on, shoes slung around our necks, to the upper story, where was a sky-light, through which we were soon out on the roof, and in present possession of our freedom, though it was to be regretted that it was so many stories high. We went straight to the end of our roof, Delacroix, in his walks, having noted that the second building above us was empty; but the adjoining house, unfortunately, was a two-story building, so that we were forced to descend by help of the lightning-rod, which Delacroix did well enough, going down hand over hand with the ease of a cat; while I, less agile, met with one or two slips, and came down with a final thump, which should have startled the guards below, but did not, luckily for us. Then we found ourselves on a level with the third-story window of the next house—the empty one.

"But how if it shouldn't be empty?" I whispered.

"It is empty," returned Delacroix, energetically, leaning across the little chasm of division to open the sash. "Now, will you go first?"

In I went—bare floor—empty rooms—open doors—that looked unbolted, at any rate. Delacroix followed; and then we began to make our way down in the Egyptian darkness, getting several stumbles, and nearly breaking our necks on the last flight of stairs—a most villainous one. The lower door was bolted, but, being on the inside, it proved no such mighty matter to open it. Then there was a cold, damp rush of air, and we dimly made out that we were in a small back yard, with locked by tall buildings, showing ghost-like against the sky. The gate was locked, and we did not stop to pry it open, but took the fence in gallant style, and away! Scarce any one was stirring, and walking leisurely through the dark and quiet streets, by morning light we were well out of Richmond; and now commenced the real perils of our journey; first the frightening light, which urged us to all possible speed in finding a cover. Delacroix had a pocket-compass, and by it we struck a northeasterly course, going on bravely till presently we came plump on—peril number two. "Down!" whispered Delacroix, dropping on hands and knees in the grass. I followed his example in all haste, and so we crawled our way some hundred yards onward. Suddenly Delacroix clutched my wrist. Something was shrieking in the air—a shell, with regular sound, caught all the more readily from our nearness to the ground, and with it a curious, faint hushs, growing nearer, sounding out loudly over on the raw air. Both exclaimed, at the same instant, "Cavalry, by George!" It was an even chance whether they would ride us down or miss us; but there was nothing left save to crouch lower in the grass, and crouch we did. Doubtless some recent saint at home was praying for us, for the chance proved in our favor. On they came, at an easy gallop, spurs and sabres jingling, and chatting carelessly; passed us, little dreaming who were their neighbors for that moment; died away into silence the echo of hoofs and tinkle of spurs. But now daylight was a very positive affair indeed, for further travel too dangerous, and even Delacroix admitted, with a groan, that remaining where we were was our only safety.

"Remaining where we were" sounds like ease and rest—a very pleasant phrase, in fact, conveying a notion of repose; but it was a marvelously hard thing to do. There was the probability of discovery; then, peril of peril, we were in a very positive state of sleepiness, and dropping off continually, to wake up in a panic, fancying that our foes were upon us. We were chilled to the heart, what with night-dews, and raw air, the dampness of the earth, and the enervation of our imprisonment; and as the day grew on we grew ravenous as to hunger. Surely night was never before half so welcome, though words have not in them an expression of the difficulties of our way. The sacred soil reach to our tired feet as if it had been in the Secession interest, and were all the briers sworn rebels they could not have caught and torn us more pertinaciously. Once we blundered into a morass. "Courage, quoth Delacroix, "the Libey dungeons are worse." Twenty times over I should have lain down in a silken degnar, had it not been for his undaunted courage, pushing on spite of every thing, himself included.

Daybreak found us in the "open," quite out of reach of cover. A little ahead the road turned sharply, cutting off our view, but both heard a sound of singing, to which quick steps sounding out in the frosty air became time, and the singing and tramping grew every moment plainer. It was coming toward us. Delacroix laid a hand on his pistols, but I had already caught the words,

"Berry early in de mornin', when de Lor' pass by,

When de Lor' pass by, and invite me to come," chanted to one of the barbaric refrains, so often heard on the plantations, and stayed his hand. The next moment the singer came in sight—a negro, as I had thought. He would have passed us without seeming notice, but Delacroix stopped him, saying, briefly,

"We are Union officers, runaways from Richmond; weary, starving, and in want of a hiding-place. Will you help us?"

A sudden gleam lighted up the man's dark face.

"Sartain, mas'r. De Linkum men fight for dem nigga—nigga help when he kin. Dis chile hide mas'r safe as of he be in Washington."

"And if he betrays us—"

"I'll blow his brains out," returned Delacroix, promptly.

"Small consolation that."

"It is our only chance, at any rate, and besides the sky won't fall. He is honest."

But for all that he watched him like a cat. At the first suspicious move our colored friend would have found short shrift. I had my hand on my knife, and Delacroix's revolver was in dangerous readiness. As yet, however, there was no need for action. We met not a soul, and guiding us to a fodder-house, he assured us that we might rest there at ease till dark.

We were so dead tired that we scarcely waited for the end of his reassurance before we threw ourselves on the floor and were off asleep. From it rest as deep and sweet as the peace of Heaven I was startled by a hand on my shoulder. My knife was out on the instant.

"Cut de pone, mas'r, not me," cried our negro guide, retreating to some shorn. He had brought us some corn pones. We fell on them like starved wolves, and then off to sleep again, till the dark made it safe to recommence our journey. Our guide did not take the road, however, but struck across toward what we recognized as the colored quarters of a plantation. "Safer here," he observed, contentiously, ushering us into one of the low wooden buildings. We had expected solitude and silence, and got a babel. The room was crowded, and fresh comers pouring in every moment.

"It is a trap!" cried, Delacroix. "We are betrayed."

"Mas'r coo quick," answered our guide; "dis am a 'spension ob de feelin' to de cullud brer, dat all. Every one, big and little, come to bress de Lor' and de brave Linkum cosifers. Heruden, de de gemmen seats; you, Cæsar, you lunt-gimmens twelve-year-old boy, "quit dat yer. Git de oder little chaps and deflect yousselves as pickets. Seize marsh rout and keep your eye on de shoddier; hold he head so high. Can't eben see poor nigga, he neck great man. O Lor'! tink de nigga no 'count; nober tink so when pickers in de Linkum men right under he nose, he! he! Sue, push dat yer chicken dis way. Lizy, gib us de pone and milk. Year stan' midgie and winkin'. Step about gabe, be spry."

It was plain that this was a man in authority, though how much power he had I knew not, and how much to a ragged military coat, minus the buttons, and a hat, curiously jammed and broken, was too delicate an analysis for the present occasion. The room was crowded, for the news of our hiding had gone from mouth to mouth through the entire plantation, and every one was on the qui vive to see us. There was little or no noise; but the intense, thrilling excitement on every dusky face was a thing to see to be forgotten.

"Telled ye so!" cried one old woman; "allers said de good Lor' bear de groanin' and sighin' somewhere. He 'member he people, and he 'member he Abraham Lincoln. Bress de Lor' dat I live to see dis day. 'Oh yer years sence dey sell away my little Sue. 'O Lor', undo dem like a vine;' and she turn, he see, he did a debby prayer; but I hears it in de Bible—hearn Mas'r Arnold read it he ownself; and now, Lor' grant he Linkum make 'em no 'count, spit like a wheel rollin', rollin', can't fin' no rest till dey roll straight down to eberlastin' ruin; and de jubilees comin' and de Lord bress dem dat helpin' in De Lor' ob glory keep 'em safe; and eh! mas'r, tell de good Linkum men strike hard—he's groan he such a weary time."

She was interrupted by our guide, who plainly thought his prerogative in danger.

"Dat's enough, Aunt Dinah. Sums how women's tongues kin run. Time to sperse, ladies and gemmen, and, 'member now, no noise. Now of mas'r's ready—"

The sentence was completed by a sudden dropping of his military coat and dignity together, placing him at once in his former light as any every-day member of society. The remainder of our journey had in it little of adventure. Our guide led us around the pickets, sometimes by a wide sweep, "He hold he head so high—tink nigga no 'count," and ferried us across the Mattapony. Here we were given into the keeping of another negro, and a damp but monotonous day in the woods, were treated to another plantation supper, and another day hiding, another night in packing through morass and forest, another guide. As good old Bunyan has it, "we went on," to purpose "—some rough and foot-sore; but at last we reached the Rappahannock. There our guide left us, and there we passed a day of anxious watching for a boat to drop down and wishing for a few of them on shore. The programme was simple now. We had only to wait till midnight, take our boat, and drop down with the river to the gun-boats; but oh! those hours of chilled and aching waiting!

The friendly woman wound us with open arms gazed at us with a sort of terror, so wan, ragged, haggard, ghastly, was our appearance. Delacroix looked at least five years older than I—but what marvel if I have changed—I have always in my ears that moaning voice, "Tell him that his brother Jon starved to death on a board." I had in the vision before me night and day of that writhing frame, that tone, raving agony; and there are thousands more to freeze and starve! God help them!

ST. VALENTINE'S DAY.

THE winter twilight was saddening into night. Through the heavy flutings of the silken curtain one might see the ice-bright stars, shooting steely streams of light athwart the melancholy tides of crimson that bolted the dreamy southwest with a zone of blood. There was no illumination in the parlor save the red, intense shine of the sea-coal fire—you could hear the soft ticking of the gilded clock on the mantle, and the clinking fall of whittled cinders, while the canary dozed on its perch, a ball of downy gold, and the milk-white chalices of the superb Egyptian lily in the window drooped downward as if some lotus breath had swept their fiery hearts!

Agatha Bell was sitting with her slender feet half buried in the spotted tiger-skin that lay before the fire, and her hands tightly clasped on her lap—a fragile, slight girl, with a pure Greek face, and pearly eyelids whose silky fringe softened the blue fire of strangely passionate eyes. Melancholy as a fair statue she sat there, and Captain Granger, whose wistful glance crept toward her, ever and anon, in a pale, and thoughtful countenance which filled Harry Bell's boy-brain with wonder, could not tell whether she heard his low voice or not. But as he talked she smoothed down the boy's brown hair with a caressing touch, it was so like the shining braids that circled Agatha's haughty head.

"Oh, Uncle Granger!" said Harry, drawing a deep breath, and balancing himself expertly on the edge of his chair, while both elbows rested on the Captain's knee. "I say, Captain John!"

"Well."

"I mean to be a soldier when I grow up, and won't I polish into those plaguey rebels! That's," added Harry, sagely, "if I can be in your company; I don't want to fight under any one else!"

And the boy of eleven drew himself up into a martial attitude, with flushed cheeks and sparkling eyes. Captain Granger smiled, and still watched the profile so delicately outlined against the fire, while he wondered if earth held no spell to unlock the pale lips and unseal the proud heart!

"I like soldiers!" pursued Harry. "Every boy likes 'em, except Agatha! She don't; but then you know, Captain John, she's nothing but a girl. She thinks they're conceited—the officers, you know—and she says she can't bear 'em."

"Does she?"

Captain Granger's cheek burned under its swarthy sun-touch as he looked full at Agatha. She met his gaze quietly, and her own, which never had glowed into roses, but she did not answer the question in his face. The young man rose and put Harry's hand gently, but decidedly, away.

"Does she say that? I am very sorry, Harry, my boy!"

He waved, and went out without another word. The scar of a sabre-cut, received at Gettysburg, was yet fresh on his breast, and something throbbing within burned with the fiery, smarting pain of the moment when the cruel blow came down.

"He's gone!" said Harry, dolefully. "Do you suppose he'll come back, Agatha? Agatha! I say, wasn't that a jolly yarn about the Confederate sergeant and his two horses?"

And Harry, with his much-bethumbed Latin Grammar, with the secret wish that life was all a cavalry ride with "Captain John" at its head!

Agatha Bell was sitting before the glass next day, brushin out the shining brown waves of her lovely hair, which fell from into her room with the velocity of an 11-inch shell!

"Hallo, Agatha! Don't you believe he's gone?"

"Who?" said Agatha, abstractedly, not caring in the least for his wit.

"Who? why Captain John! Gone down into Tennessee somewhere, and don't I wish I was going with him! I believe you, my boy, I do!"

He stopped short in an extempore series of gymnastics at the strange sound of his sister's voice.

"Gone! Did he leave no message for me?"

"No! What message should he leave? He gave me no message for you, child, and told me to be sure not to forget him; but he never spoke any thing about you!"

Harry resumed manipulating his new gift in a suicidal manner, but Agatha went on brushing her hair, while the mirror seemed to swim before her vision, and the strange sound of his voice rang in her heart. He had gone—and without a farewell word!

Well, let him go! He should learn that her heart could be as cold as his own!

And no one knew why it was that Agatha drooped and blanched as the slow weeks dragged on their weary days.

The low February sun fluttered its level pennons of light into her dainty little room, whose crimson and gold were in such strange mode you think of it the inside of some pink shell. She was sitting at her desk writing to the one dear friend who knew all her heart-secrets, and, by the by, what would a woman do if she could not sometimes unburden her heart —if the healing balm of another woman's sympathy was denied to her when the weight was so sore?

"Agatha! I say, Agatha!"

She looked up with a little start as Harry's elbow came down among her paper-knives and sheets of blue-paper and nick-nacks innumerable.

"Well?"

"I wish you'd just lend me your alabaster inkstand a minute; I've broken t'other one, and I'm in an awful hurry!"

"Harry, I do wish you wouldn't use such language!"

"Well, I won't, if you'll give me the inkstand."

"But I can not; I am writing to Alice Moore."

"Hang Alice Moore; let her wait. There, don't look so frightened at me; you know I don't mean any thing! But you two're dreadful fellows, and if it don't go by to-night's mail it will be too late. Come—that's a dear girl!"

"A Valentine! Harry, I thought you had outgrown such nonsense!"

"It's the latest thing, Agatha!" exclaimed the boy, bursting into a chuckling laugh, and standing ecstatically on one leg, while he mysteriously unfolded the wad of blue-colored complications. "It's a soldier, don't you see? running away just as fast as he can jump. Ain't it funny, eh? And I'm going to send it to Captain John; won't it make him laugh?"

Agatha smiled, but very faintly.

"I've put H. B. in the corner, so he'll know who sent it, but I've tried two or three times to direct it, and the envelope's all got dotted. You direct it, Agatha, please; he don't know your handwriting, and he'll be so puzzled! Here's a nice envelope—just exactly the right size, and I'll promise not to fire off my pistol in the yard for a whole week!"

"Leave the Valentine here, then, and I'll see to it when I've finished my letter."

She wrote on, absent and rather sad; and when Harry came, at twilight, to receive his precious missive for the post she was watching the lurid sky from the window with eyes that saw none of the blood-red radiance.

"The letters are there on the table, Harry; don't drop out late."

When the boy was gone she leaned her forehead against the cool glass and cried a little. Tears are sovereign medicine in some diseases.

The rack of inky clouds hung low over the leafless Tennessee woods that stormy February night, the wind howled sadly through the dreary mountain gorges, and the fire on Captain Granger's cabin-hearth danced and flickered as the gusty currents of the blighted night came down the stone chimney. It was not a cheerful place for a man who had been brought up in purple and fine linen; but Captain Granger cared not a whit for his material wants, and the liked the wailing blast and the smoky fire, being just in that state of mind when a man prefers to be as uncomfortable as possible.

"Stephens!"

Private Samuel Stephens, who enjoyed the honor of being special attendant to the Captain, and who was the man of interest mending his linen by the aid of a dazzling needle and a pair of iron-bowed spectacles, immediately rose up and saluted.

"Yes, Captain."

"I wish you would go and see if the mails are in."

The private laid down his spectacles and needle, denuded his finger of a ponderous steel thimble, and went out scratching.

"Though," soliloquized Captain Granger to himself, "what the use of sending him may be I don't know. I never get any letters; I never expect 'em. Only it is rather hard to see the other fellows brighten up over the long epistles of their mothers, sisters, and sweet-hearts, and feel that there's nobody to care a pin for you, dead or alive. However, a newspaper's better than nothing. Will, Stephens, what are you looking so mysterious about?"

"Nothing, Sir, only I've got a Valentine from Jemima Starkweather; those gals is so full of fun and nonsense," said Samuel, in whole face indiant. "And—beggin' your pardon, Captain"—he added, presenting a tiny, lilac-enveloped missive, "I shouldn't wonder if you'd guess right. It's the fourteenth o' February, and leap year at that!"

"Nonsense!" said Granger, vexed to feel the blood rising into his forehead. "You can go, Stephens, I don't need you at present."

"The New York paper, Sir, but I do not know the handwriting," he muttered, drawing nearer to the guttering tallow-candle, as Private Stephens closed with a salutation and left the room. "I don't know as I should write to me; however, I sha'n't find out until I open the letter, so here goes! 'My dearest love!' Why, it's a woman's hand! Captain John, you're raving helplessly at the log walls, it's rather an agreeable surprise to learn that I am any body's 'dearest love.' Hang Cæsarean nonsense! I'll read it raving, raving his eye down the page. "Hallo! what's this? 'Don't hesitate to say how miserable I am since you left Grandpa'—gone away!"

He turned the page with a hand that trembled like a leaf, and read the signature of Agatha!"

"It's a hoax!" he ejaculated, the cold sweat breaking out at every pore. "This letter was never intended for me! It's got into the wrong envelope somehow; that must be the solution of the mystery!"

He rose up, and walked once or twice across the cabin floor, very pale, and with knitted brows.

"I don't care," he muttered, fiercely; "I will read it, if it were a dishonorable thing, twenty times over! Why, my life's hanging on the issue as it is! No, I will not. I never did a mean action yet, and I will not begin now."

But he took a letter envelope from the little leathern desk upon his pine table, and sealed the lilac sheet closely within it.

"I will take it to her myself, and receive an explanation from her own lips," he thought. "And then—then I'll go—anywhere—for the chance of a fool of yourself than nature originally intended!"

"I guess the Captain has got a Valentine sure enough," said Private Samuel Stephens to himself as one of his companions in arms. "He's lookin' as bright's a new dollar."

Nor was Samuel far wrong in his conjectures.

Agatha Bell was bending over the creamy scrolls of her tall Egyptian lily, in the frosty light of the winter's day, when a footstep on the porch startled her from a sad reverie. She turned only to behold the brown face, and bright, earnest eyes of Captain Granger, and to have both her hands imprisoned in his grasp.

"Agatha—my dearest, I will not be put off. Lift up those shy eyes—tell me if I may call you my own?"

She was weak and nervous, and worn with sleepless nights; and so, poor child, she surrendered without even a parley.

"But, John, why did you come—how did you know—?"

"That you loved me? Why, did not you send me a Valentine?"

"A Valentine? Never!"

He watched her haughty figure straighten up with an amused smile.

"Let me understand! And you will deny it in the face of this?"

He broke open the sealed envelope—she caught it from him in a flood of rosy blushes.

"John, I did not know; I never intended—"

"Of course you didn't. But I may read it now?"

"No, Sir! A Valentine indeed!"

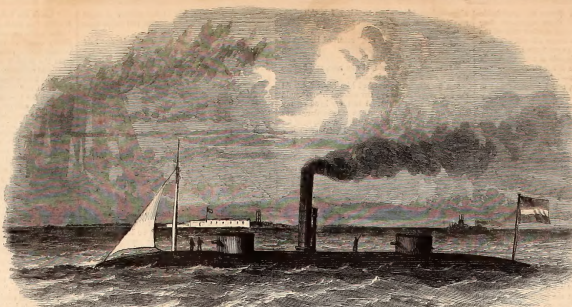
People view things with different eyes; and no it happened that what Agatha Bell indignantly denies that she ever sent a Valentine in the course of her whole life, Captain Granger declares as positively that if it had not been for the good offices of St. Valentine he never would have been betrothed to the prettiest girl in New York.

And what is more singular still, they are both of them!

THE NEW REBEL RAM.

On this page we print a sketch representing the rebel Ram at Mobile. The object of this Ram is the same intended to have been accomplished by the famous Manassas against our fleet off New Orleans in October, 1861, viz., the annoyance of our blockading vessels. The Richmond, which survived the attack of the Manassas without any serious damage, is now off Mobile, and probably has no fears of annihilation from this new monster. The Ram is turned by means of a jib, and the picture represents her as seen from a point near Sand Island.



THE NEW REBEL RAM AT MOBILE.—[FROM A SKETCH BY AN OFFICER ON BLOCKADE DUTY.]

COLUMBIA, S. C.

We publish below some sketches illustrative of Columbia, the capital of South Carolina, and of the Richland Jail, in which are confined Union prisoners captured in the vicinity of Charleston.

One of these sketches, entitled CITY HALL, is a view from the east windows of the prison. Above the building floats the Confederate flag. In the balcony about the tower a watchman paces his round at night, calling aloud the quarter hours; and in the fore-ground of the sketch is the high board-fence of the jail-yard.

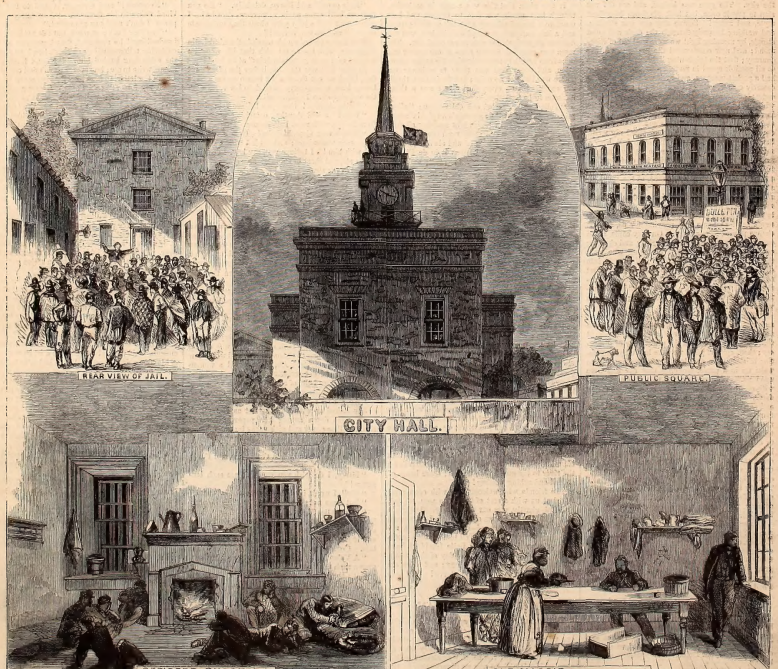
Another sketch represents a rear view of the prison itself, and a Sabbath Service held in the Yard. The building is of small stone, or brick, marked to imitate large stone blocks. On the first, or ground floor, are confined the Union officers; those of the army in two rooms nearest the front, on the left of the building, as shown in the sketch; those of the navy in one large room on the right. Of the two rear rooms, on the same floor, looking into the jail-yard, that on the right is occupied by the guard; that on the left for the temporary confinement of Confederate prisoners. The rooms on the second floor were occupied by the Union privates taken at Fort Wagner until their removal to Richmond; now conscripts and deserters for the Confederate army are there detained. The third floor is given up to the criminals from the civil courts.

On the other side of the City Hall is a picture of the PUBLIC SQUARE of Columbia, opposite the Old Court-house, before which slave auctions are to be often seen.

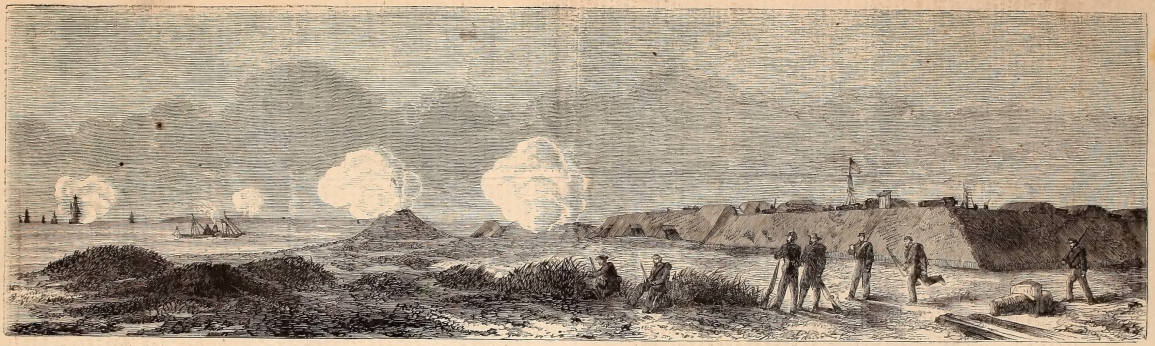
Against the corner lamp-post is the bulletin board of the Carolinian office—to be seen a little way up the street. On this the latest intelligence from the front is posted, and of course it is watched with interest from the jail windows by the Union prisoners, who surmise the nature of the news from the conduct and manners of those reading it. If favorable to the Confederates, they rub their hands exultingly as they stand about it in groups, exchanging congratulations on its signs of promise. If adverse, they read it slowly and walk sadly away—with, perhaps, a lifting of the hat and scratching of the head, or a spasmodic jerking of the foot at every other step, as though seeking vent for their feelings of disappointment and regret. By this corner passed the veteran regiments from the army of Northern Virginia to reinforce Bragg before the battle of Chicamauga.

The sketch entitled OLD MAGGIE represents a portion of the room occupied by the army officers. The long table is made to serve for meals by day and as a bed at night. Underneath it is the box in which is kept the corn-meal served with fresh meat every three or four days. Above are the water-bucket and cup, with the large pan in which Old Maggie, the colored cook, brings the meat and soup which she has prepared. Some shelves are seen against the walls, on which the soldiers pile their cups and bowls and their packages of purchased rations.

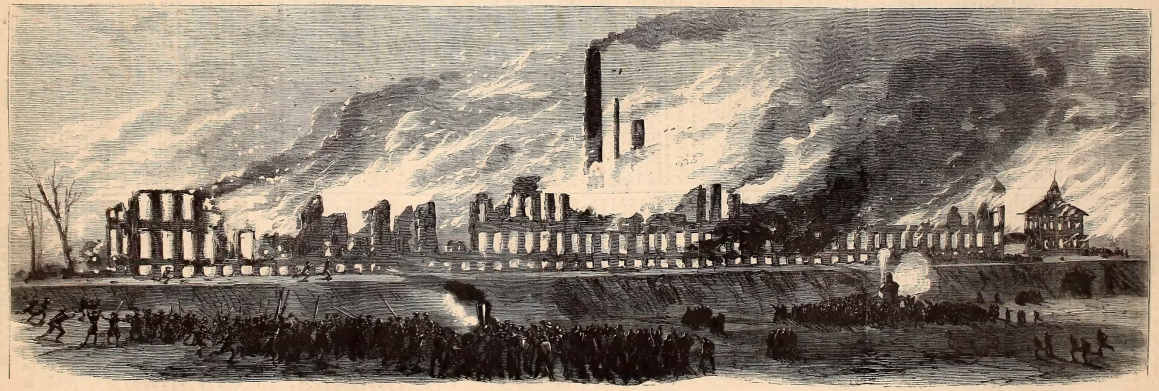
The picture at the right of the above represents the other portion of the officers' quarters. Here, in the open fire-place, a cheerful wood-fire blazes in these long, cold winter evenings, and around it the officers sit, recounting army experiences, discussing the probabilities of the future, or telling stories to beguile the tedious hours. Of home and dear ones but little is said, for those are subjects it will not do for prisoners to dwell upon. On the mantle are a few books, a prison candlestick, pipe, cup, coffee-pot, and piece of corn-bread of Old Maggie's make. The sound of the coffee-mill, just beneath, awakes the later sleepers in the early morning to memories of the home kitchen of boyhood days.



SCENES IN AND AROUND RICHLAND JAIL, COLUMBIA, SOUTH CAROLINA.



FORT FISHER, COMMANDING THE NEW INLET ENTRANCE TO CAPE FEAR RIVER.—THE BRITISH STEAMER "HANSA" RUNNING THE BLOCKADE UNDER THE GUNS OF THE FORT.—[From a Sketch by an English Artist.]



THE DESTRUCTION BY FIRE OF COLT'S ARMORY, AT HARTFORD, CONNECTICUT.—From a Sketch by J. B. Russell, Jr.—[See Page 126.]

THE SINGERS.

O merry sings the nurse by night,
Brooding over the fire;
And merry sing the sailor-boys
When noisy winds blow higher;
And red and merry in the blaze
Sing the men round the foundry fire.

O merry sing the reapers, sunk
Chin-deep in the yellow corn;
And merry sing the shepherds
When the shivering sheep are shorn;
And merry sing the millers
Watching the flowing corn.

Ay! merry sings the woodmen's gang
When toods the stately tree;
And merry sings the pilot
By night on the summer sea;
And merry sing the fishermen
When winter gales blow free.

And merry sing the soldiers
In vaulted barrack-room;
And merry sing the weavers
Over the clattering loom;
And merry sing the light-house men
Amid the murk and gloom.

But merriest far is my Lucy's song
To the infant at her breast,
Watching, with those Madonna eyes,
Our dear one hushed to rest,
What time the red light fades along
The bright line of the west.

ARMY AND NAVY ITEMS.

THE blockade of the Narrows has been resumed. The Nansemond is stationed off Thompson's Neck for the examination of vessels; and the Mount and Tyler cruise along the North River, as far as the Narrows and Sandy Hook.

Gen. mounted deserters have arrived at the Park Barracks, from Alexandria, Virginia.

The "Jackson Fleet" will soon be ready to depart from this port for New Orleans. It consists of a number of light steamers, some of them iron-clad, and of light draft, to cruise in the lagoons and rivers of the Mississippi inaccessible to large ships.

Major-General McCLELLAN left Springfield, Illinois, for New Orleans on the 5d instant.

Army mules are going to GRANT'S department in large numbers, but are to be used on such routes for supply trains, for East Tennessee, as the roads are impassable for wagon loads.

A young lady from Pennsylvania enlisted at Oswego, in this State, a few days since. Her sex was discovered by a fellow-soldier, who gave information to the authorities, and she was arrested and placed in confinement. She is "only sixteen years of age, pretty, intelligent, and modest."

Owing to the failure of a previous contractor, the Navy Department has taken precautions to have the work of building the gun-boats vessels at Norfolk and Wilmington duly performed. The works are the Cumberland, Congress, Merrimac, Raleigh, the Columbus, the small steamer Whitehall, and the line-of-battle ships Pennsylvania, Delaware, and Philadelphia.

The chief of the military detective force of Washington reports that, since the month of January, over fifty commissioned officers were arrested for various offenses, and six hundred and twenty enlisted men.

The steamer D. C. Taylor, which contained forty thousand dollars' worth of commissary stores for our troops at Nashville, was recently destroyed by fire at Louisville, Kentucky, a few days ago.

The Postal Match Bill of Iowa has telegraphed to the President that the State withdrew its quota by volunteers, rendering a draft there unnecessary.

At a special meeting of the Senate Military Committee to consider the Home Bill conferring the rank of Lieutenant-General on General GRANT it was decided to report the bill without amendment. It is understood that some opposition will be made to it when it comes before the Senate.

The reports that General THOMAS is to succeed General MEADE in command of the Army of the Potomac are probably without foundation.

Mr. FESSO'S bill, to facilitate and hurry the payment of bounties and arrears of pay to the heirs of deceased soldiers, now only awaits the action of the Senate to become a law.

Admiral DU PONT has been commoned before the Committee on the Conduct of the War for the purpose of explaining his opinion as to the best ordnance for the naval service.

The following Generals were in Louisville last week: Major-Generals GRANT, ROSECRANS, BURNSIDE, CADWALLADER, STONEMAN, SCHOFIELD, CRITTENDEN, and SCHENCK; Brigadier-Generals WADSWORTH, ALLEN, CAPPLES, THOMAS, STARKWEATHER; and Rear-Admiral PORTER.

Major-General HANCOCK is in New York, having a commission to reward his old corps to the number of a thousand men.

There is great activity at the Charlestown (Massachusetts) Navy-yard in fitting out vessels for Port Monroe.

Illinois having, under every call, exceeded her quota, she was on the 1st of January or at any other time, subject to a draft.

In the case of the Chesapeake, the Judge of the Admiralty Court, at Halifax, Nova Scotia, has decided to release the vessel and cargo to her owners.

Major-General BURNSIDE left Washington for General GRANT'S Department last week. He is to have command of his old corps, the Ninth Territory, with his headquarters at East Smith.

Admiral Lee commanding the North Atlantic Blockading Squadron, advises the Secretary of the Navy of the destruction by the notorious blockade-runner Will Gordon, at New Topsail Inlet, where she was ashore and discharging her iron ballast.

Since the advent of General STEELE Arkansas has furnished more volunteers for the Union army than any equal number elsewhere. Counties where JEFF DAVIS'S conscript officers could not find a score of men, have since sent full companies to the Union army.

General BANKS has been temporarily put in command of the forces in Kentucky, General ANDREW having been placed on the Court-Martial at Cincinnati.

A Washington correspondent states that Gen. HALLECK has announced his intention of resigning, if the House Bill, making Grant Lieutenant-General passes the Senate.

The ship Contest, owned by A. A. LOW BROS., of New York, was burned by the Alabama, on the 11th of November.

Captain IVES, of the Tenth Massachusetts, and Captain READ, of the Third Ohio Volunteers, are to be tossed and sent to Salisbury, and put to hard labor, in retaliation for the similar treatment of two captains captured by Jeremiah, and now at Johnson's Island.

The Maine regiment, 1000 strong, have embarked from Portland for New Orleans.

Sherman's cavalry advance occupy Benton, 60 miles south of Little Rock, Arkansas.

FORT FISHER, N. C.

AN English artist in the South writes as follows concerning the accompanying illustration: "Herewith I send you a sketch of Fort Fisher, commanding the approach to Cape Fear River, the entrance to Wilmington, North Carolina. I was down there one night, and, as it is twenty-five miles from the town, it was impossible to get back that night, so I had to rough it in a cassemate till morning. As luck would have it, we discovered a blockade-running steamer, the Honna, under our guns at dawn, and at the same time the Yankee blockaders also became aware of her presence and opened fire, thinking, as she had already got inside the bar (the Yankees are always on the watch of late), they would destroy her before she made the inlet. To get within range they had to expose themselves to the metal of the fort, which soon drove them off, leaving the Honna at liberty to make her way safely into the river. The distant point of land is Cape Fear. Fort Fisher is one of the strongest coast defences I have seen, not excepting any of those at Charleston, that have hitherto held an entire ironclad fleet at bay."

THE FIRE IN COLT'S ARMORY.

We publish on page 125 an illustration, from a sketch by Mr. J. H. Russell, Jr., of the late extensive fire at Colt's Armory, Hartford. The buildings destroyed were the front main building, 500 feet long by 60 feet wide, and three stories in height; the wing of the same width and height, and 60 feet long; and the office, two and a half stories high. The main building contained the small-arms-gun and pistol machinery, and employed eight hundred workmen. Nearly every thing movable was saved, including seventy-seven Gatlins' worth of stock, and pistols packed for shipment.

The fire originated in the attic, from what cause is unknown, but by the watchman who was hourly connecting the old with the new Armory. The firemen were successful in preventing the fire from spreading to the adjoining wing, saving the Government rifles, which are made in that building.

The Armory burned was built by Mr. Colt in 1852 of Portland stone, and was thought to be fire-proof. The new Armory, which is built of brick, was added two years ago to meet the extension demand for the Colt's Patent fire-arms out of the war. The entire loss from the fire is estimated at about $1,000,000. Colonel Colt never had the buildings insured, but upon his death Mr. E. K. Root, then elected President of the Company, obtained insurance on the entire Armory to the amount of $650,000. This fire is a serious loss to Hartford, and especially as it throws out of work between one and two thousand mechanics and workmen. It will take the Company two years to rebuild and put their establishment on its former footing.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

MORTON'S GOLD PENS are now sold at the same prices as before the introduction of the new law. It is entirely owing to the Manufacturer's improvements in machinery, his present large Retail Business and Cash-in-hand, that he can offer the following reduction of goods ordered. I will guaranty their safe delivery.

Parties ordering must state if the registered letters are at my risk; and to all who send twenty cents (the charge for registering) I will forward, by return mail, a pamphlet containing the Law, Rules, Regulations, and Prices.

Address, A. MORTON,
No. 25 Maiden Lane, New York.

HEAD-QUARTERS
For Veteran, Cavalry, Army Corps, Company, and Division Pins of every Description.

On the receipt of $1, I will send you a Solid Silver Shield, of an 18 carat Gold Pen, Extra Fine, with your Name, Regt., and Co. handsomely engraved upon it, or a fine Gold Pen and Pencil, Silver Mounted, or a new style Vest Chain or Neck Chain, or a California Diamond Ring; and for $2, a Solid Silver Ring; and for $3, 50, I will send you a Solid Silver new style CAVALRY PIN, engraved as above. Address, J. T. HAYWARD,
No. 27 Maiden Lane, New York.

Manufacturing Jeweler, 208 Broadway, N. Y.

Drums and Fifes for the Army.

FREDERICK DEVRIES, Flute and Fife Maker, German Silver, from $50 down to $12 50 each. Cheap Drums, from $8 50 each. Fifes, from $3 50 each, to $40 each. Elegant German Silver Fifes, from $6 to $10 each. Engraving $1 per word. Address, FREDERICK DEVRIES, A. Pond & Co., Manufacturers of Musical Instruments and Publishers of Military Music,
No. 547 Broadway, N. Y.

ALL ARTICLES FOR SOLDIERS

At Baltimore, Washington, and all places occupied by Union troops, should be sent by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 74 Broadway. Soldiers charged low rates.

Union Playing Cards.

Colonel for King, Goddess of Liberty for Queen, and Major for Jack. Colonel's head on each deck. Republic, Shield, Stars, and Flags are the suits, and you can play all the usual games. Two packs, in cases, mailed free on receipt of $1. The usual discount to the trade. Send for a Circular. Address ATWOOD & COMPANY,
453 Broadway, N. Y., or 165 William Street, N. Y.

Military and Naval

COLLECTION and BARGAIN OFFER.—SOLDS, BOOKS & PAPERS, 1776 to 1865. New York, select and collect every variety of just claims against the Government or States. Hand-Books containing laws, &c., sent by mail, free.

Ivory Photographic

SLEEVE BUTTONS (Patent applied for), with perfect likenesses of the President, Generals Grant, Rosecrans, Burnside, McClellan, Hooker, and others, $1 00 per pair. Free from observation. $1 50. Ball Ear Rings to match, $1 50. White and Black Studs, Oval, for sale at WELLS' LINE, 707 Canal St., N. Y., sign of the Golden Elephant.

"THE PEN IS MIGHTIER THAN THE SWORD."
THE GOLD PEN.—THE BEST OF ALL PENS.
MORTON'S GOLD PENS,
THE BEST PENS IN THE WORLD.

On receipt of any of the following sums in Cash, the Subscriber will send by return mail, or otherwise, as directed, a Gold Pen or Pens—selecting the same according to description, viz.:

GOLD PENS WITHOUT CASES.

For 25 cents, the Magic Pen; for 38 cents, the Lucky Pen; for 50 cents, the Ambidexter Pen; for 75 cents, the Elegant Pen; and for $1, the Excelsior Pen.—These Pens are not numbered, but correspond in size to numbers 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 respectively.

THE SAME PENS IN SILVER-PLATED EXTENSION CASES, WITH PENCILS.

For 50 cents, the Magic Pen; for 75 cents, the Lucky Pen; for $1, the Always-Ready Pen; for $1 25, the Excelsior Pen; and for $1 50, the Elegant Pen.

These are Well-Finished, Good-Writing Gold Pens, with Iridosmia Points, the usual quality of every one of which will far outlast a gross of the best Steel Pens: although they are numbered, and, therefore, not exchangeable.

MORTON'S WARRANTED PENS.

The name "A. Morton," "Number," and "Quality," are stamped on the following Pens, and the points are warranted for six months, except against accident.

No. 1 is the indicable size of Pen. No. 1 being the smallest, No. 6 the largest, adapted for the pocket; No. 4 the medium, and No. 10 the largest Diamond Gold Pen, for the desk.

Long and Medium Nibs of all sizes and qualities. Short Nibs of Numbers 4, 5, 6, and 7, and made only of first quality.

The Long and Short Nibs are fine pointed; the Medium Nibs are Broad, with Iridosmia points. The engravings are fac-similes of the sizes and styles.

GOLD PENS WITHOUT CASES.

For $0 75 a No. 1 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 8 Pen, 2d quality.

For $1 00 a No. 2 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 3d quality.

For $1 25 a No. 3 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 3d quality.

For $1 50, a No. 4 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 3d quality.

For $1 75 a No. 5 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 2d quality.

For $2 00, a No. 6 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 7 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 8 Pen, 3d quality.

For $2 50, a No. 7 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 8 Pen, 2d quality.

For $3 00, a No. 8 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 9 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 10 Pen, 3d quality.

For $3 50, a No. 9 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 10 Pen, 2d quality.

For $4 00, a No. 10 Pen, 1st quality.

THE SAME PENS, IN SILVER EXTENSION CASES, WITH PENCILS.

For $1 50 a No. 2 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 2d quality.

For $1 75, a No. 2 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 3d quality.

For $2 00, a No. 3 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 3d quality.

For $2 25 a No. 4 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 3d quality.

For $2 50, a No. 5 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 2d quality.

For $3 00, a No. 6 Pen, 1st quality.

For $3 50, a No. 7 Pen, 1st quality.

For $4 00, a No. 8 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 9 Pen, 2d quality.

For $5 00, a No. 10 Pen, 1st quality.

For $2 00 a No. 2 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 3d quality.

For $2 50 a No. 3 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 3d quality.

For $3 00, a No. 4 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 3d quality.

For $3 50, a No. 5 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 2d quality.

For $4 00, a No. 6 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 7 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 8 Pen, 3d quality.

For $5 00, a No. 7 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 8 Pen, 2d quality.

For $6 00, a No. 8 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 9 Pen, 2d quality.

For $7 00, a No. 9 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 10 Pen, 2d quality.

For $8 00, a No. 10 Pen, 1st quality.

In regard to the Cheap Gold Pens, he begs leave to say that, previous to the Duties and Gold Premium, his machines, he could not have made so Good Writing and Durable Pens for the Money as the Gold Pens made since, notwithstanding.

Parties ordering must in all instances specify the "Name" or the "Number" and "Quality" of the Pens desired, and, if possible, describe the kind of Pen they prefer—whether stiff or limber, coarse or fine.

All remittances should be in Registered letters or at my risk; and to all who send twenty cents (the charge for registering) I will forward, by return mail, a pamphlet, containing the Law, Rules, Regulations, and Prices.

Parties ordering Pens will be allowed the full premium on the day received.

To GILTS, and Clergymen, 10 per cent. will be allowed on sums of $15, if 15 per cent. on $25, and of 20 per cent. on $40, if sent to one address at one time.

Address, A. MORTON,
No. 25 Maiden Lane, New York.

Drums and Fifes for the Army.

FREDERICK DEVRIES, Flute and Fife Maker, German Silver, from $50 down to $12 50 each. Cheap Drums, from $8 50 each. Fifes, from $3 50 each, to $40 each. Elegant German Silver Fifes, from $6 to $10 each. Engraving $1 per word. Address, FREDERICK DEVRIES, A. Pond & Co., Manufacturers of Musical Instruments and Publishers of Military Music,
No. 547 Broadway, N. Y.

ALL ARTICLES FOR SOLDIERS

At Baltimore, Washington, and all places occupied by Union troops, should be sent by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 74 Broadway. Soldiers charged low rates.

Union Playing Cards.

Colonel for King, Goddess of Liberty for Queen, and Major for Jack. Colonel's head on each deck. Republic, Shield, Stars, and Flags are the suits, and you can play all the usual games. Two packs, in cases, mailed free on receipt of $1. The usual discount to the trade. Send for a Circular. Address ATWOOD & COMPANY,
453 Broadway, N. Y., or 165 William Street, N. Y.

Military and Naval

COLLECTION and BARGAIN OFFER.—SOLDS, BOOKS & PAPERS, 1776 to 1865. New York, select and collect every variety of just claims against the Government or States. Hand-Books containing laws, &c., sent by mail, free.

Ivory Photographic

SLEEVE BUTTONS (Patent applied for), with perfect likenesses of the President, Generals Grant, Rosecrans, Burnside, McClellan, Hooker, and others, $1 00 per pair. Free from observation. $1 50. Ball Ear Rings to match, $1 50. White and Black Studs, Oval, for sale at WELLS' LINE, 707 Canal St., N. Y., sign of the Golden Elephant.

BRANDRETH'S VEGETABLE PILLS

Are infallible for costiveness, spasms, loss of appetite, sick headache, giddiness, cause of blushing after meals, dreariness, drowsiness, and sleeping pains, and all disorders of the stomach and bowels.

DR. Original Letter at 294 Canal Street, New York.

J. J. C. COOK, publisher of the Saturday Evening Post, Bensington, Vt., says: he was attacked with DYSPEPSIA, and suffered so severely from it, that not a particle of food could be swallowed without occasioning the most uncomfortable sensation in his stomach. For five years he suffered from this dreadful complaint, when he used BRANDRETH'S PILLS. The first he did not seem to benefit him much, but the second produced a change, and by the time he had taken six boxes a COMPLETE CURE was effected. He says: "My dyspepsia was gone, and my expectation of an early death vanished."

BRANDRETH'S PILLS are sold at the PRINCIPAL OFFICE, 294 CANAL ST., and 4 UNION SQUARE, N. Y.

DR. In all cases get new style, with my private stamp upon each box by permission of the Honorable Commissioner of Stamps. Observe DR. BRANDRETH in white, which insures the genuine Pills.

Caution
FROM
The American Watch Company.

It having come to our knowledge that imitations of the American Watch have been put upon the market in great numbers, calculated, by their utter worthlessness, to injure the reputation of our genuine products—to protect our own interests and the public from imposition, we again publish the trade marks by which our Watches may be variably be known.

The genuine have four styles of Watches:

The first has the name

"AMERICAN WATCH CO., Waltham, Mass.," engraved on the inside plate.

The second has the name

"APPLETON, TRACY & CO., Waltham, Mass.," engraved on the inside plate.

The third has the name

"P. S. BARTLETT, Waltham, Mass.," engraved on the inside plate.

All the above styles have the name "American Watch Co." painted on the dial, and are warranted in every respect.

The reverse has the name

"WM. ELLERY, Boston, Mass." engraved on the inside plate, and is not named on the dial.

All the above described Watches are made of various sizes, and are sold in gold or silver cases, as may be required.

It is hardly possible for us to accurately describe the numerous imitations to which we have alluded. They are usually inscribed with names so nearly approaching our own as to cause the unwary observer of the encasement buyer. Some are represented as made by the "UNION WATCH CO., of Boston, Mass."—no such company existing. Some are named the "ELLERY WATCH," to be sold as our Formers or WM. ELLERY grade, usually known as our "SOLDIER'S WATCH;" others are named the "APPLETON WATCH CO.;" others the "P. S. BARTLETT," instead of our P. S. Bartlett, besides many varieties named in such a manner as to convey the idea that they are the veritable productions of the American Watch Company.

A little attention on the part of buyers will protect them from gross imposition.

ROBBINS & APPLETON,
Agents for the American Watch Company,
182 BROADWAY, N. Y.

Ballard Patent Breech Loading Rifles and Carbines.

Carrying the copper water-proof cartridge, and the most reliable and effective arms in use.

This arm is now admitted by all competitors to be superior to any other ever offered to the public. Its simple construction and perfect workmanship are a sure guarantee against getting out of order. The perfect adaptation of loading with either kind or loose ammunition alone makes it superior to all others for the service, and for both sporting and military purposes, and have been adopted both by the General Government and a number of States. We have the highest testimonials of their efficiency and durability.

We also offer to the Public our new Pocket Rifle and Carbine, chambered for pistol ball cartridge. This arm has no equal as a belt or pocket weapon. No one wishing a first-class arm should be without one.

For further particulars send for descriptive circular. P. S. Do not forget that both Ballard Pistols may be used with either copper cartridge or loose ammunition.

Address, C. H. BALLARD,
102 Broadway, N. Y.

Two Dollars made from twenty cents; or ten dollars sent free by mail for 99c. Mail Pistol for $5, by R. L. WOLCOTT, 170 Chatham Square, N. Y.

HARPER & BROTHERS
Have Just Published:

LIFE ON A GEORGIAN PLANTATION. Journal of a Residence on a Georgian Plantation in 1838-1839. By FRANCES ANNE KEMBLE. Illustrated. $1 50.

ELEANOR'S VICTORY. A Novel. By Miss BRADDON, Author of "Aurora Floyd," &c. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

FOLLAR & SON, MERCHANTS' MANSION, 1 Bowery, N. Y., sell wholesale and retail, at lowest cash, free of charge, a genuine Pipe for 6 Dollars. Pipes cut to order.

New Catalogue of Jewelry

Sent free. Address
THOS. CAFFERTY & CO.
Providence, R. I.

500 Wonders of the World.

Whiskers and Moustaches, Gold and Silver-Lace Courtship, &c., the Hunter's Secret, Angler's Secret and a host of other Secrets for making money worth a fortune to any one, all sent free for 25 cts. Also Agents wanted.
Address J. W. STEPHENS, Morristown, N. J.

Holiday Presents.

J. H. Winslow & Co.,

100,000

WATCHES, CHAINS, &c., &c.

Worth $500,000.

To be sold for One Dollar each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for till you know what you are to get.

SPLENDID LIST!!

OF ARTICLES TO BE SOLD FOR ONE DOLLAR EACH.

100 Gold Hunting Cased Watches..... $100 00 each.
100 Gold Watches..... 60 00 each.
500 Ladies' Gold Watches..... 25 00 each.
800 Ladies' and Gent's Silver Watches.. 15 00 each.
2000 Vest and Neck Chains..... 6 00 to 10 00 each.
2000 Gold Band Bracelets..... 3 00 to 10 00 each.
2000 " " " ..... 3 00 to 5 00 each.
2000 Cameo Brooches..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Mosaic and Florentine Brooches.. 4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Lava and Florentine Brooches.. 4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Coral, Opal, and Em. Brooches.. 4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Cameo Ear Drops..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Mosaic and Jet Ear Drops..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Lava and Florentine Ear Drops.. 4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Coral, Em., and Opal Ear Drops 4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Gent's Breast Pins..... 2 50 to 8 00 each.
2000 Watch Keys..... 2 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Fob and Ribbon Slides..... 2 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Sets of Bosom Studs..... 2 50 to 6 00 each.
2000 Sleeve Buttons..... 2 50 to 6 00 each.
2000 Pairs Sleeve Buttons..... 2 50 to 6 00 each.
2000 Stone Set Rings..... 2 50 to 6 00 each.
2000 Lockets..... 2 50 to 10 00 each.
2000 Sets Ladies' Jewelry..... 5 00 to 10 00 each.
10000 Gold Pens, Silver M'nted Holders 4 00 to 5 00 each.
10000 Gold Pens, with Silver Extension Cases and Pencils..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.

All of the above list will be sold for one dollar each. Certificates of all the various articles, stating what each one can have, are first put into envelopes, sealed up, and mixed; and when ordered, are taken out without regard to choice, and sent by mail, thus giving all a fair chance. On receipt of the Certificate, you will see what you can have, and then it is at your option to send one dollar and take the article or not.

In all transactions by mail, we shall charge for forwarding the Certificates, paying postage, and doing the business, 25 cents each, which must be inclosed when the Certificate is sent for. Five Certificates will be sent for $1; eleven for $2; thirty for $5; sixty-five for $10; and one hundred for $15.

AGENTS—Those acting as Agents will be allowed ten cents on every Certificate ordered by them, provided their remittance amounts to one dollar. Agents will collect 25 cents for every Certificate, and remit 15 cents to us, either in cash or postage stamps. Great caution should be used by our correspondents in regard to giving their correct address, Town, County, and State. Address

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,

398 Broadway, New York.

SALISBURY, BRO. & CO.,

AGENTS FOR THE UNITED STATES FOR THE CELEBRATED

ALBERTINE

Extension Holders and Gold Pens,

Of the most handsome and durable construction, put up in new fancy cases of one dozen each, and not sold in any less quantities. They retail for $1 each.

Price, per dozen..... $10 25
Or for one..... 25 50

Sent by mail or express, prepaid. Address

SALISBURY, BRO. & CO., Providence, R. I.

Printing-Press for Sale.

One Taylor Double Cylinder, five Rollers, Table Distribution, Bed 26×31. Price $2500.

Apply to HARPER & BROTHERS, 329 Pearl St., N.Y.

$60 A MONTH! We want ...gents at $60 a month, expenses paid. We will sell our Everlasting Pencils, Oriental Burners, and 13 other articles. 15 circulars sent free. SHAW & CLARK, Biddeford, Maine.

Gold! Gold!! Gold!!!

30,000 Watches, Chains, &c., &c., &c.

Worth $150,000.

To be sold for One Dollar each, without regard to value, and not to be sold for until you know what you are to get. Send 20 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time get our Circular containing full list of articles and particulars. Any terms to Agents. Much work in every Regiment and Town in the country.

BE CAREFUL not to order of us for $1, thirteen for $2, thirty-five for $5, nor one hundred for $12.

Address C. F. SHULTS,

285 River Street, Troy, N. Y.

RHEUMATISM.

USE THE ELECTRO-METALLIC INSOLES, BELTS, AND ARMLETS. They are an infallible Remedy for Rheumatism, Cold Feet, &c. SPENCE & CO., No. 629 Broadway, N. Y.

Insoles, $1 per pair: Belts $3; Armlets, $1 50 each. Sent by mail on receipt of 25 cents additional.

DO YOU WANT LUXURIANT WHISKERS OR MUSTACHES?—My Ointment will force them to grow heavily in six weeks upon the smoothest face without skin or injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post free, to any address, on receipt of m order. R. G. GRAHAM, No. 109 Nassau Street, N. Y.

$75 A MONTH.—Agents wanted to sell Sewing Machines. We will give a commission on all Machines sold, or employ agents who will work for the above wages and all expenses paid. For particulars address

BOYLAN & CO., DETROIT, MICH.

GET THE BEST.

Text-Book on Botany.

By Professor ASA GRAY, of Harvard University.

For comprehensiveness of design, exactness and closeness of description, accurate and scientific analysis of plants, and beauty of illustration, these books have no equal.

HOW TO STUDY BOTANY.—Botany for young people, with 250 drawings from models. Price 60 cts.

LESSONS IN BOTANY AND VEGETABLE PHYSIOLOGY.—An introduction to the Manual for the use of beginners, in schools.

MANUAL OF BOTANY.—A comprehensive Flora of the Northern States, to which is added Gardeu Botany. A complete class-book for Academies and colleges. pp. 338.

ANALYSIS AND LESSONS in one volume, $3.

STRUCTURAL AND SYSTEMATIC BOTANY, with 1,500 cuts. price $2 50.

A circular containing prices, descriptions, and testimonials from the highest sources will be sent upon application.

Books furnished for examination and for introduction at greatly reduced prices. Address, the Publishers,

IVISON, PHINNEY, BLAKEMAN & CO., Nos. 48 and 50 Walker Street, New York.

Agents Wanted for the Army

New Army Watches.

Every Soldier should have the Magic Railway Time-Keeper. It has brought Silver Compound Hunting Cases, with new Patent Tress Indicator, to save trouble of opening case, and to control the Set Hands to the second.

The handsomest and most useful Watch ever offered $15.

Every Officer should have the DOUBLE TIME DUPLEX STOP WATCH.—This highly useful Watch has beautiful Silver Compound Hunting Cases, with different Indexes for Washington and London time, Sweep Seconds with Superior adjustment. To be used in driving horses, and also by Sportsmen, Artillerists, &c., in marking time, &c.

All the leading novelties can be seen by sending for our Catalogue. We send goods to any part of the country on usually liberal terms.

Our Watches mailed free to any address, and warranted for 12 months.

ARRANDALE & CO., Importers of Watches,
212 Broadway, New York.

Diamond Parlor Pistols.

In Rosin and Glass Boxes,
60 Courtlandt Street, N. Y.

We are now offering our Celebrated Gold Pens and Extension Silver Plated Holders at the following low prices for Cash:

No. 1 Magic Gold Pens and Holders, per dozen, $5 50.
No. 2 " " " " 7 00.
No. 3 Albertine fine Gold Pens and Holders, per doz. 9 00.
No. 3 " " " " 9 00.
No. 3 Always Ready " " " 11 00.
No. 9 " " " " 12 00.

These Pens and Holders are all warranted, and will retail from $2 to $8 each.

A discount of 25 per cent. will be made on all sums of $50 and upwards. Our Pens and Holders have nice fancy Cases, containing one dozen each, and are sold in less quantities. Send by mail or express pre-paid.

Address SALISBURY, BRO. & CO.,
Providence, R. I.

CANVASSERS

Wanted everywhere to sell "FISH'S UNION ATTACHMENTS," designed to support Vessels or Shells over all Sizes of a common width of Bore. Sells at sight. EVERYBODY WANTS IT. PRICE 50 CENTS. Actual sum can make $10 a day. Send for a Circular. 398 Pearl St., N. Y., or send for a circular. WM. D. ROSSITA, Agent.

In Press—Excelsior Music Book for Violin, Flute, Fife, or Cornet, by note that does not clog the beginner. When the boys come home. Your fortune is too great for them. My love is on the battle-field, 25c. Violin Strings 25c. mailed. MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS illustrated price list sent on receipt of post stamp.

FREDERICK BLUME, 288 Bowery, N. Y.

Cavalry Badges.

Annexed is a fac-simile of the handsome and style Cavalry Badge. Sent free to any officer on receipt of price, with Name, Co., and Regiment handsomely engraved thereon.

Solid Silver, letters in gold relief..... $3 00
Solid Silver, letters in gold..... 2 00
Solid Silver, letters in gilt enamel..... 1 50
Also new style Artillery Badge, with every style Cap, Pin and Corps Badge worn by the Army. Send for our illustrated Catalogue.

Address C. L. BALCH & CO., 319 Broadway, N. Y.

Portable Printing Offices.

For the Army and Navy Hospitals, Merchants, Druggists, and all who wish to print neatly, cheaply and expeditiously. Circular sent free. Address C. P. GOLDSMITH, 21 cents. Adams Press Co., 31 Park Row, N. Y., and 35 Lincoln St., Boston.

AGENTS WANTED.—Apply to N. M. SHAFER and J. C. PIERPONT, 339 Broadway, N. Y.

ONE CENT.

As the warm weather approaches, prepare to reduce your household expenses, by getting FISH'S KEROSENE OIL Gas

Cooking Apparatus.

One costing $4 50 will cook a meal for 5 persons, at a cost of

ONE CENT.

Thousands of them have been sold, and the demand is increasing. A Descriptive Pamphlet furnished gratis.

WM. D. ROSSITA, Agent, 398 Broadway, N. Y.

N. B.—The Trade supplied on liberal terms.

Colored Album Gems.

Views of Central Park, 3 Parts. Autumn Leaves, 4 Parts. Life of Childhood, 3 Parts. Summer and Winter Scenes on the Hudson and White Mountains. 4 Parts. Butterflies, 5 Parts. Beautiful Plants and Flowers, 10 Parts. Beautiful Birds, 5 Parts; and Comic Camp and other Scenes, 5 Parts. Each Part is a specialty, and contains 12 Pictures. Price $1 00 EACH PART, by mail, to any address. W. C. WEMYSS, 375 Broadway, N. Y.

To Compositors.—Wanted, three strictly first-class Compositors, used to Book-work. Apply to Mr. HOAGE, Foreman of HARPER & BROTHERS' Composing Room, N. Y.

Another Great Story.

NOW READY IN THE

New York Weekly,

A Story of startling interest, entitled

Glady the Lost;

OR,

The Curse of Beauty.

By Esther Serle Kenroth.

The above is one of the most intensely interesting romances ever written. It is powerfully wrought and worked up with a dramatic effect, which holds the reader spell-bound from the beginning to the close. Let no one fail to secure the opening chapters, and our word for it they will not be slow in looking after what follows.

Besides the above great story, the NEW YORK WEEKLY is now publishing a splendid romance, entitled "THE NEGLECTED WARNING, OR, THE TRIALS OF A PUBLIC SCHOOL TEACHER;" and another exciting serial will be commenced immediately, entitled "THE OWN AROUND TRAVERS, OR, THE HEROINE OF THE PRAIRIE. By WM. H. BUSHNELL, a very popular author. Added to all which it gives weekly from EIGHT to TWELVE first-class sketches, of different varieties, a large number of fine POEMS, and a variety of departments, of a useful and entertaining character, including "Present Perplexities," "Knowledge Box," "Items of Interest," etc., the whole going to form a family newspaper which, it is freely admitted by all who take it, has not its equal either in this country or the old. Price five cents for a single copy, $3 00 per year, and liberal terms offered to getters-up of clubs.

STREET & SMITH,
Editors and Proprietors,
No. 11 Frankfort Street, New York City.

☞ Specimen copies sent free.

WATCHES
FOR
THE ARMY.

Superbly finished watches, the beauty of which is only equaled by their chapness.—N. Y. Weekly, July 25th.

Particularly valuable for officers in the army, and travelers.—Frank Leslie's, Feb. 27.

Prettiest, best and cheapest time-pieces ever offered. —N. Y. Illustrated News, Jan. 16.

Magic Time Observers,

The Perfection of Mechanism!

Being a Hunting, or Open Face, or Lady's or Gentleman's Watch combined, with Patent Self-winding Improvement.

A most pleasing novelty. One of the prettiest, most convenient, and durable, cheap and cheapest timepiece for general and reliable use ever offered. It has within it one connected with its machinery for winding attachment, rendering a key entirely unnecessary. The cases of both are composed of two metals, the outer one being fine 16 carat gold. It has the improved ruby action lever movement, and is mounted on accurate timepiece. Price, superbly engraved, per case of half dozen, $3. Sample watches, in fine morocco boxes $35. If sent by mail, the postage is 50 cents; registering, 50 cents.

Silver Watches!

First-Class Hunting Time-Pieces.

FOR ACCURACY OF MOVEMENT, BEAUTY OF MATERIAL, AND, ABOVE ALL, FOR ECONOMY IN PRICE, THESE WATCHES MUST INSURE

UNIVERSAL APPROBATION!

An imitation so faithful that it can hardly be detected by the most experienced judges. The material being of new metals, the color and brilliancy of the case, both inner one German Silver, it can not be recognized by cutting or heavy engraving, and is not only in appearance, but in durability, the best resemblance of Solid Sterling Silver in existence.

The sale of these watches in the army is a source of enormous profit, retailing, as they very readily do, at $25 and upwards. The movement can be made in single pay-day by any one of ordinary business tact!

☞ Every watch warranted. In heavy hunting cases, beautifully engraved, white enamel dial, and fancy end hands, to need reasoning or setting by the Sun, $16; plainer style, $12; $8; registering, 50 cts. Sold only by the case. Can be safely sent by mail.

☞ TERMS CASH, INVARIABLY IN ADVANCE. No agents employed. Buyers must deal directly with us. If money is sent us by express or mail in a registered letter, it is at our risk! Orders will meet the most prompt and faithful attention.

HUBBARD BROS., Sole Importers,
Broadway, cor. Courtlandt St., New York.

Veteran Soldiers.

We are now prepared to furnish all Kinds of Veterna Fins for all the Regiments and Corps now in the field, at $1 60 each. Also all the various Army Badges worn by the different Armies, by the single one, 100, or 1000.

Sent to any part of the country by mail. Send for a circular. Address

DROWNE & MOORE,
Manufacturing Jewelers,
398 Broadway, New York.

American Needle Co., J. W. BARTLETT, 442 Broadway, N. Y.

NEEDLE MANUFACTURERS FOR ALL THE SEWING MACHINES.

☞ Bartlett's Burnished Hand Needles. ☞ Buckle, Gilt, Comb, Card Needles, &c., to order.

"We find Bartlett's Burnished Needles a wonderful improvement."—Mrs. Hale's Lady's Book and Mode of Sewing. Try sample 25c, any size, for 50 cents, or less quantity by mail.—Mem. Democrat.

CHLOASMA,

OR MOTH PATCHES.

Blemishes on the face, called Moth, are very annoying, particularly to ladies of light complexion, as the discolored spots on the skin show more strongly on blondes than on brunettes, but they constitute greatly in marring the beauty on either; and anything that will remove moth patches without injuring the skin in texture or color, would no doubt be considered a great achievement in medical science, but Dr. B. G. TEBBETTS, 49 Bond Street, having devoted his whole time and attention to Diseases of the Skin, will guarantee to remove Moth Patches and other discolorations from the face without injury to either texture or color of the skin. His success in this, and in other branches of his specialty—DISEASES OF THE SCALP and LOSS OF THE HAIR—has won him a reputation as UNE IN EVERY CASE. For particulars enclose stamp for circular. No charge for consultation. DR. B. G. TEBBETTS, 49 Bond STREET, NEW YORK.

George A. Ely & CO.

ARMY WATCHES.

Solid Silver Hunting Cased Lever Watch, Jeweled English Movement and Silver Cap, a perfect time-keeper, only $15.

THE GREAT NEW ARMY WATCH,

Especially for Soldiers. IN VERY HEAVY SOLID SILVER HUNTING CASES ENGLISH LEVER MOVEMENT FULL JEWELED, and in hunting finished engine turned and engraved or plain cases, warranted a perfect time-keeper, only ... $18.

Same movement, open face, only ..... $15.

LADIES' ELEGANT GOLD COMPOUND WATCH, very small, only ..... $16.

A very fine double bottom Silver English Hunting Watch, Jeweled, CHRONOMETER BALANCE ..... $16.

Officer's Watch.

GENUINE AMERICAN LEVER WATCHES, IN 4 OZ. STERLING SILVER, FULL JEWELED, AND DUSTPROOF HUNTING CASES ..... $36.

GENUINE Lever Watch, same as above, with CHRONOMETER BALANCE ..... $38.

SUPERIOR LEVER very heavy GOLD HUNTING WATCHES, in 40 pennyweight cases ..... $55.

Same as above, with Chronometer Balance ..... $57.

GOLD HUNTING ENGLISH LEVER WATCH, RENT JEWELED, Screw Balance, M. J. Tobias ..... $65.

Constantly on hand Watches of every description.

We will send any of the above Watches to any address on receipt of price, free of express. Registered letters sents at our risk if required. All Watches thus Registered, 20 cents extra. Great inducements. Send for our circular.

GEORGE A. ELY & CO., IMPORTERS, 398 BROADWAY, N. Y.

☞ We give a handsome Gold Plated Chain with every Watch.

HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK,

Have Just Published:

BULWER'S CAXTONIANA. Caxtoniana: A Series of Essays on Life, Literature, and Manners. By Sir E. Bulwer Lytton, Bart., Author of "The Caxtons," "A Strange Story," "My Novel," &c. 1 vol. 12mo, cloth, $1 50.

A POPULAR HAND-BOOK OF THE NEW TESTAMENT. By George Cumming McWhorter. 12mo, cloth, $1 25.

FIVE YEARS OF PRAYER, with the Answers. By Rev. Samuel Irenæus Prime, D.D., Author of "The Power of Prayer," "Travels in Europe and the East," "Life of Rev. Dr. Murray," &c. 12mo, Cloth, $1 25.

DRAPER'S INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT OF EUROPE. A History of the Intellectual Development of Europe. By John William Draper, M.D., LL.D., Professor of Chemistry and Physiology in the University of New York; Author of a "Treatise on Human Physiology," &c., &c. 8vo, Cloth, $2 50; Half Calf, $4 75.

FANNY KEMBLE'S GEORGIA PLANTATION. Journal of a Residence on a Georgian Plantation in 1838-1839. By Frances Anne Kemble. 12mo, Cloth, $1 75.

MR. WIND AND MADAM RAIN. By Paul de Musset. Translated by Mary Louise Shaw. Illustrated by Charles Bennett. Square 4to, Cloth gilt, 60 cents.

ROUNDABOUT PAPERS. By W. M. Thackeray, Author of "The Four Georges," "The English Humorists," "Vanity Fair," "Pendennis," "The Newcomes," "Miscellanies of Fiction," &c. With Illustrations. 16mo, Cloth, $1 25; Half Morocco, $2 25.

VERY HARD CASH. A Novel founded on Facts. By Charles Reade, Author of "It is Never too Late to Mend," "Christie Johnstone," &c. 8vo, Cloth, $1 00; Paper, 75 cents.

HISTORY OF THE SIOUX WAR AND MASSACRES of 1862 and 1863. By Isaac V. D. Heard. With Portraits and Illustrations. 12mo, Cloth, $1 50.

ROMOLA. A Novel. By George Eliot, Author of "Adam Bede," "The Mill on the Floss," "Silas Marner," and "Scenes of Clerical Life." With numerous Illustrations. 8vo, Paper, $1 25; Cloth, $1 50.

LIVE IT DOWN. A Story of the Times. By J. C. Hotten, Author of "Artemus Ward," Blake's Good Work," "Isabel; or, the Young Wife and the Old Husband," &c. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

HARPER'S NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE

For February, 1864.

TERMS.

One Copy for one Year $3 00
Two Copies for One Year 5 00
An Extra Copy, gratuitous, for every Club of Five Subscribers, at $2 50 each, or 11 Copies for $25 00.
HARPER'S WEEKLY and HARPER'S WEEKLY, together, one year, $5 00.
HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS.

Circulation over 100,000.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

TERMS.

One Copy for Four Months $1 00
One Copy for One Year 4 00
One Copy for Two Years 7 00
And an Extra Copy will be allowed for every Club of TEN SUBSCRIBERS, at $2 50 each, or 11 Copies for $25. Payment invariably in advance.

TERMS TO ADVERTISERS.—Seven cents per Line for Inside, and Five Dollar per Line for Outside Advertisements each insertion.

The II., III., IV., V., VI. and VII. for the Years 1857, 1858, 1859, 1860, 1861, 1862, and 1863 of "HARPER'S WEEKLY" handsomely bound in Cloth extra, Price $5 00 each, are now ready.

HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS.

QUITE SATISFACTORY.

MISTRESS M'CLIMSET. "What does this mean, BRIDGET?—sitting in a man's lap in my kitchen!"

BRIDGET. "Why, Ma'am, it's only my cousin just from the Army; and I'm only sittin' in his lap to keep warm. Cool's so high, you know, Ma'am, and I let the fire go down; and I'm so cold!"

GOLD PENS AND CASES

Detailed at wholesale price: 14 kt. Gold Pen, Solid Silver Case, $1 50, warranted for one year, guarantee accompanying each Pen. Send for a circular. Pens repointed on receipt of 25 cents.

R. S. WILKINSON, 19 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

FISK & HATCH.

Bankers and Dealers in Government Securities,

AND

AGENTS FOR THE UNITED STATES FIVE-TWENTY LOAN,

No. 38 Wall Street, New York.

Millinery Business For Sale.

For sale one of the most SELECT PRIVATE Millinery Establishments in the City of New York, assuredly located, and doing a first class cash paying trade, LONG LEASE; parties with an account of 10 bonnets, and for this cause will be sold on favorable terms. Apply on the premises, The Spondulix, 12 Waverly Place, New York. The STOCK is SMALL. No agents need reply.

JUST OUT. ENTIRELY NEW.—Ladies' and Gentlemen's Matrimonial and Quizzical Valentine Writer. Sent, free of postage, for 30 cents. Address C. SIBLEY, Box 3295, P. O., Philadelphia, Pa.

HOW TO BE A GENTLEMAN

Read that excellent new hand-book, indispensable for all who would really know

HOW TO WRITE, HOW TO BEHAVE,
HOW TO TALK, HOW TO DO BUSINESS.

One handsome 12mo vol., 600 pages, sent by first post for $2. Agents wanted. Address FOWLER & WELLS, No. 308 Broadway, New York.

Holloway's Pills and Ointment.—Caution to the Purchaser.—As they have been lately imitated, the public should learn that there is a sure test of their genuineness, viz., the water-mark, "Holloway, New York and London," which appears in every leaf of the book of directions, visible when held between the eye and the light. Sold at the manufactory, No. 80 Maiden Lane, New York, and by all Druggists. HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT are now retailed, even to the high price of Drugs, &c., at 30 cts., 70 cts., and $1 50 per Box or Pot.

13 MORE AGENTS WANTED.—Business Light and Respectable! No Capital required!. Salaries, according to exposition, $75 to $100 per month, salaries increases. For Agents' Instructions, Samples of Goods, &c., address ROSS, B. CARTER & Co., Inventor's Exchange, Boston, Mass.

Attention, Army Butlers.

We desire to call your special attention to one of the most valuable and saleable articles for the use of the army—perhaps a portion of medicine that has cured the public but for more than twenty years, and has become familiar in every household. This article, "PERRY DAVIS' VEGETABLE PAIN KILLER," needs no introduction. Every body knows it; the soldiers know it, and you have only to keep it to sell it. No remedy is more efficacious in curing diarrhœa, cramps, dysentery, colds, coughs, slight wounds or bruises, and many other ailments incidental to a soldier's life. It is light and convenient to carry, and can be resorted to on the march as well as in camp without trouble. Every one used both internally and externally, its value can not be over-estimated.—In fact, the soldier wants it, and must have it, and to keep such an article is the duty of every butler.—Louisville Journal.

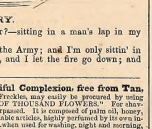
SPECIAL NOTICE.

AGENTS, male or female, SOLDIERS, and all having some time to spare, are particularly requested, as a FAVOR, to send us their address, and we will send in return, FREE, information for which they will be THANKFUL to offer EXTRA INDUCEMENTS. From $6 to $15 per day can be made. We want addresses from EVERY COUNTY in the U. S., and from EVERY HAMLET in the Army. Address in full, RICHARDS & CO., 37 and 39 NASSAU STREET, Box 3121, N. Y.

Straight Hair made Wavy!! without heating it, by using Ives's Patent Hair Crimpers. For sale at Variety Stores.

A Beautiful Complexion free from Tan. Pimples and Freckles, may easily be procured by using the "BALM OF THOUSAND FLOWERS." For shaving it is unsurpassed. It is composed of palm oil, honey and other valuable articles, highly perfumed by its own ingredients, and when used for washing, night and morning, renders the skin soft and white, and free from blemish. Price 50 cents.

The Trade supplied by HOWARD, SANGER & CO., 105 and 107 Chambers Street, N. Y., and for sale by all Druggists.



Putnam Clothes-Wringer.
The only reliable Self-Adjusting Wringer.
No wood-work to swell or split.
No thumb-screws to get out of order.

WARRANTED WITH OR WITHOUT COG-WHEELS.

It took the FIRST PREMIUM at Fifty-Seven State and County Fairs in 1863, and is, without an exception, the best Wringer ever made.

Instead of believing the statements of parties interested in the sale of other Wringers,

Try it, and Judge for Yourself.

TEST IT THOROUGHLY WITH ANY AND ALL others, and, if not entirely satisfactory, return it.

It will wring say thing from a thread to a bed-quilt without alteration.

Patented in the United States, England, Canada, and Australia. Agents wanted in every town.

No. 2, $5 50; No. 1, $6 00; No. A, $8.

Manufactured and sold, wholesale and retail, by

The Putnam Manufacturing Co.

No. 13 Flatt Street, N. Y., and Cleveland, Ohio.

S. C. NORTHROP, Agent.

STAMMERING

And Stuttering cured by Bates's Patent Scientific Appliances. For (New Edition of) descriptive Pamphlets and Drawings, address H. G. BATES, 217 W. 23d St., N. Y.

(A CARD.)

TO PHYSICIANS AND INVALIDS.

The Rev. CHARLES E. KING, formerly Secretary to the London Evangelical Alliance, and recently consulted, as resident Minister and Physician, with the Venezuelan Mission, will send FREE of Cost (as the Prescription which he successfully treated, while in charge of the large Mission Hospital, upward of one hundred cases of CONSUMPTION in the first, second and third stages.

The remedy is equally adapted to the treatment of Asthma, Catarrh, Bronchitis, and all affections of the Lungs, Throat and Air-Passages while it speedily invigorates the enfeebled NERVOUS SYSTEM, and energizes the deranged functions of the Stomach, Liver and Bowels

Address, with stamp,

Rev. CHARLES E. KING,
Station D, Bible House,
New York.

P. S.—I wish publicly to acknowledge the generosity of those publishers who, from a sense of humanity, have given this advertisement gratuitous insertion. Religious papers are earnestly requested to copy.

FINE WATCH FREE, And $15 Per Day Easy.

Agents should be careful in directing their orders for our Original and "only Genuine" EXTRA LARGE SIZE Stationery Prize Packages, which have become so popular through the fine quality and value of their contents. As we have several imitators, who copy our Styles, Advertisements, Premiums, &c., we are the only manufacturers of the "Celebrated Stationery Prize Packages," and none are genuine unless bought direct from us. We still do as we have done for years past, present first to every one who sets as our agent a Fine Gold or Silver Hunting-Case Watch, "Genuine Stationery Movements," and warranted a correct time-keeper. These watches are presented on the spot or sent with the first order. No one can deny this. A single one of our Wonderful Packages contains more really valuable articles than any half dozen others ever sold. Among the surprising contents of "each package" will be found Fine Stationery, Pens, Pencils, Envelopes, Engravings, Ladies' Fashion Plates, Designs for Needle-work, Cottage Ornaments, Household Companions, Letter-Writer's Instructor, Puzzles, Amusements, Gent's Pocket Calendars for 1864, Union Emblems, Comp Companions for Soldiers, Military Lithographs, Games, Army Advice, Rare Recipes, Many Ways to get Rich, Yankee Notions, Fancy Articles, Rich and Costly Presents of Fashionable Jewelry, &c., &c., all together worth many dollars, for only 25c. Agents make immense profits. 100 to 200 per cent allowed. We guarantee more agents can make $15 per day. Our regular agent average that. Our Packages stand same as ever, where all others fail quality and quantity of contents. Agents wanted in every camp and town in the country. Goods sent safe to all parts of the army. Send for our Great New Circular for 1864, containing Extra Premium Inducements, free. S. C. RICHARDS & CO., 102 Nassau St., N. Y. Only Original and Largest and Oldest FIVE Package House in the World.

HOYT'S HIAWATHA
Hair Restorative.

The standard preparation for the hair. Warranted in all cases to restore faded and gray hair and whiskers to their ORIGINAL color. It restores the natural shading of one hair with another, and thus gives a life appearance instead of the dull dead black of dyes, so that the most critical observer can not detect its use. It does not require previous soaping and washing, and hours for its applications, nor does it stain the skin; but is so readily applied and easily wiped from the skin as any hair-dressing. It does not claim to make the hair come in when it has once fallen out; nothing will do that, whatever may be advertised to the contrary; but it will prevent it from falling out, make it soft and silky, and cleanse it and the scalp from all impurities and humors, and entirely overcome the bad effects of previous use of preparations containing sulphur, nitrate of silver, &c.

HOYT'S IMPERIAL
COLORING CREAM.

An appropriate accompaniment to the HIAWATHA; oils and colors the hair at the same time, and changes light hair with ease, to a beautiful brown or black. Sold everywhere. JOSEPH HOYT & CO., 10 University Place, N. Y.

N. B.—See Business Notice Preceding this.

The Cheapest Watches in AMERICA. THE GREAT NEW ARMY WATCH, Especially for Soldiers,

Solid Silver Heavy Hunting Cased Lever Watch, warranted a Perfect Time-Keeper $15

SEE OUR ADVERTISEMENT ON PAGE 127 FOR WATCHES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

GEORGE A. ELY & CO,
208 Broadway,
New York.

☞ Send for Circular.

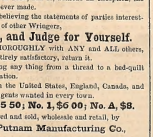
The new Novel, by the author of "Neighbor Jackwood."



CUDJO'S CAVE.

Ready at all principal bookstores. Published by J. R. TILTON & CO., Boston.

Shults' Ongent, warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in six weeks, or money refunded. Sent postpaid, for 30 cents. Address C. F. SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

Cancer! Cancer!

HAVE YOU A CANCER? If so, you are undoubtedly much troubled about it. Give yourself no undue anxiety concerning it, but put yourself under the hands of Dr. Jones, and, if mortal skill can avail, you may yet be saved. Do not wait until the disease has reach of remedy; Dr. Jones treats, also, with much success, that class of diseases called Nervous, and which arise from want of Nervous Vitality; such as Neuralgia, Rheumatism, St. Vitus' Dance, Epilepsy, Dropsy, Torpid Liver, Consumption, Lockjaw, Asthma, Lumbago, Ulcers, Crooked and Weak Spine, Irregular and Deficient Menstruation, Leucorrhœa, and all diseases peculiar to the female sex.

☞ Persons at a distance can receive the necessary advice on writing and inclosing two stamps to repay postage. Address DR. AUBUR D. JONES, 142 EAST NINTH ST., near Broadway, N. Y.

Remington's

ARMY AND NAVY REVOLVER.

Approved by the Government.

Warranted superior to any other Pistol of the kind. Also Pocket and Belt Revolvers. Sold by the Trade generally.

E. REMINGTON & SONS,
Ilion, N. Y.

$35 WATCHES. $35
Genuine Full-Jeweled American Lever Watches, in Dunce Coin Silver Hunting Cases, Gold Joints, for $35.

Also every variety of good Watches at equally low rates. All orders from the ARMY must be pre-paid, as the EXPRESS will not take bills for collection on soldiers.

J. L. FERGUSON, Importer of Watches,
208 Broadway New York.

OFFICE OF WARDS & CO., Bankers,
No. 44 Wall Street, New York, Jan. 22, 1864.

WE have notice from the General Subscription Agent of the 5-20 Loan, that the whole amount of this loan authorized by law has been taken by subscribers. We can not, therefore, furnish as heretofore the bonds at par and interest.

We shall be pleased to fill orders for these bonds at market rates, and shall endeavor to keep constantly on hand, ready for immediate delivery, a full assortment.

We also buy and sell all kinds of Government Stocks.

THE NEW FIVE PER CENT INTEREST-BEARING LEGAL-TENDER NOTES.

SIX PER CENT CERTIFICATES OF INDEBTEDNESS.

SEVEN-THIRTY TREASURY NOTES.

SIX PER CENT COUPON and REGISTERED BONDS 1881.

U. S. QUARTERMASTERS' CHECKS.

Maturing Certificates COLLECTED or CASHED on favorable terms.

VERMILYE & CO.,
Government Agents Five-Twenty Loan.

$7 ARMY WATCH. $7

A BEAUTIFUL ENGRAVED GOLD PLATED WATCH, Double Case, Lever Cut, jewelled in seven holes, cut bushes, "English Movements," and correct time-keeper, sent free by mail to any part of the country, ... $7.

A SOLID SILVER WATCH, same as above, only $7. Specimens sent to the Army.

$15 European Timekeeper. $15

A SUPERB "Extra Double Gold Hunting" engraved Hunting Case Watch, Magic Spring, "Genuine English Jewelled Movements," Independent Second, Self Balance, a perfect timekeeper, "warranted one year." WILL STAND A RIDE, and is as

Exact Imitation of $100 Watch,
Used by the British Army Officers,

Sent free by mail, in elegant Morocco Case, for only $15.

THE CELEBRATED ENGLISH LEVER WATCH, for Indies. "Rich enamelled dial, richly jewelled movements, extra heavy gold plate, in STERLING SILVER HUNTING CASE." "Will stand all tests." EXACT COPY of $100 watch, perfect in "Every Article." SENT free by mail, in richly embossed Turkey Morocco Case, for only ..... $15.

ENGLISH STERLING SILVER LEVER WATCHES, engraved Hunting Case, jewelled movements, "Genuine English Real English Duplex Gold Watches. Fine article, from ..... $40 to $100

Good Watches, for Army use, of all descriptions. We are sole importers of the above styles of Watches. Catalogue of trade prices mailed free.

FRANK LESLIE'S Illustrated Newspaper, of Aug. 22, says: "MESSRS. SORTON & CO. have combined two very desirable things in a watch—cheapness and reliability. When it is known that for $7 a person can have an excellent timekeeper, there will be greater punctuality in all the affairs of life!"

ADDRESS ORDERS, P. NORTON & CO., Importers, 38 & 40 Ann Street, N. Y.

The Celebrated CRAIG MICROSCOPE, combining Instruction with Amusement, complete in all, is mailed, pre-paid, for $3 25; or with 6 beautiful Mounted Objects for $5; with 24 Objects, $8, by

HENRY CRAIG
335 Broadway, New York.

Also, he will mail, pre-paid, the Beliscope, or Perfected STEREOSCOPE, with a sliding Focus and Field-Piece, accommodating all sizes, for $6; with 12 assorted views, $9. A liberal discount to the trade.

A Household Word.—Buy your Housekeeping Articles at BASSFORD'S, Cooper Institute, New York.

WARDS SHIRTS SENT EVERYWHERE BY MAIL OR EXPRESS

Ready-made or to measure; at $32, $29, and $25 per doz.

Self-Measurement for Shirts.

Printed directions for Self-Measurement, list of prices, and rules for self-measurement for Shirts and Collars sent free everywhere.

WARD'S ALL FLANNEL OVERSHIRTS, $8 00, $7 75, and $4 50 each: all cut one yard long. A single shirt sent by mail on receipt of the cash. Half a dozen postage for each shirt.

Send the size of your neck. Also

STEEL COLLARS

ENAMELED WHITE,

Having the appearance and comfort of linen, have been worn in Europe for two years, and are found superior to any other collar, as they are readily cleaned in one minute with a sponge.

To Military Men and Travellers they are invaluable. ☞ Price $1 each; sent by mail to any part of the Union on the receipt of $1 15.

WARD'S, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL
AGENTS WANTED in every Town in the Union.

S. W. H. WARD, 387 Broadway, N. Y.

Watches Given Away.

Agents and Dealers look at the Great Chance to make Money we offer, by engaging in the sale of our NEW NOVELTY STATIONERY PRIZE PACKET. Only $1 capital required to start. A VERY VALUABLE WATCH, &c., GIVEN AWAY. We also offer SILVERED STEEL ENGRAVINGS. $10 invested will yield $50. NEVER before such inducements were offered.

Full particulars in Circulars, mailed free.

G. S. HASKINS & CO., 36 Beekman Street, N. Y.,
The Oldest Established Prize Package House in the U. S.

THE NEW BROWN MICROSCOPE

Magnifying real objects 500 times. MAILED FREE everywhere for 30 Cents. Five of different powers for $1 00. Address F. C. BOWEN, Box 2915, Boston, Mass.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION.

VOL. VIII.—No. 374.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 27, 1864. [$1.00 FOR FOUR MONTHS. $3.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1864, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

I WALKED adown the garden-walk
To bid my love good-by,
And as I passed the roses' stalk
What should my eyes espy
But, nestled like a brooding dove
In some sequestered spot,
The very thing I told my love—
A dear "FORGET-ME-NOT!"

I stooped and plucked the little flower:
He said, "What do you seek?"
I answered, "In the twilight hour
Let this, love, for me speak!"
I twined it softly in his vest,
His arms were round me furled—
And as I leaned upon his breast
He said I was "his world!"

His sword was girt upon his thigh,
His plume waved in the breeze;
And all the twilight seemed to sigh
Among the garden trees!
I looked into his eyes and felt
As happy maidens feel,
When first two loving spirits melt
In one for woe or weal.

He drew me closer to his heart,
My hand was on his breast;
He said, "My love! though now we part,
This heart can never rest
Until I bring you back your flower,
And claim, where now we stand,
In some sweet, future twilight hour,
This darling little hand!"

These were the words I heard him say—
The last I ever heard!
I saw him slowly ride away
While not a step I stirred.
I could not move—I saw him turn
And kiss his hand to me.
Ah! how my spirit then did yearn
For what would never be.

This little casket that I wear
The rest can better tell—
A withered flower, a lock of hair,
A blood-stained word, "Farewell!"
They buried him upon the field,
Upon the battle-plain;
And life to me can never yield
A comfort to my pain.

I often, at the twilight hour,
Steal down the garden-walk,
Where once I plucked the little flower
Beneath the roses' stalk;
And when I reach the wicker-gate,
And no one else is nigh,
I almost think I see him wait,
As then, to say "Good-by."

And sometimes, when the shadows creep
Along the garden-wall,
I hear a voice which makes me weep
Out of the darkness call.
It seems to say—as still I stand
Upon the same old spot—
"I'm waiting for that little hand—
My dear, FORGET-ME-NOT!"

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 27, 1864.

QUAKER EXEMPTION.

THE petition to exempt Quakers from military service, on the ground of conscientious scruples against war, has excited a great deal of thoughtful sympathy. The statement made in it of the undoubted moral heroism and suffering of some Quakers, among the rebels, who had been drafted and who declined to serve is very touching and impressive. In one case a man was tortured and nearly escaped with his life. In another, one was ordered to be shot, and when the file of soldiers who were to execute the sentence saw the victim and heard him calmly praying that they might be forgiven for their involuntary crime, they refused to fire. These are incidents which recall the testimony of the early Quakers. They show that the old spirit is not extinct, and that George Fox and James Naylor still survive under other names.

And yet the principle of exempting men from their share of the common public burden merely upon their assertion of conscientious objection to bearing it, is not and can not be submissible. For the evidence of this truth we need look no farther than the late proposition in Congress to exempt from service all who were sincerely opposed to the prosecution of the war. That is simply a proposition to submit to the overthrow of the Government, and with it, to the destruction of all the securities of civil and religious liberty. If the principle be admitted that the assertion of conscientious objection to war in general shall exempt a citizen, the same objection to a particular war upon any ground whatever must equally exempt him. But government of any kind, whether proceeding from the popular will or from the will of one man, is based upon force: it is the agreement that we will do, or, failing the will, that we shall be compelled to do, what the public good requires. If a man's memory, or conscience, or bread, is to be excused from punishment upon the ground that he is conscientiously opposed to the holding of private property?

Of course we do not saying that a man must submit his conscience to the law, nor denying that very bad and very wicked laws may be often made. If an honorable man, for instance, would as willingly obey a law to strike his mother, or a law to kill his child under two years of age, as a law to return an innocent man to slavery from which he was escaping, both human instinct, every noble and just feeling protests against such a law. If you could find a people who would quietly submit to perpetrate such a crime under the pretense that it was law, you would find a people so morally torpid and corrupt that it would be a relief to the world to sweep them out of it.

What, then, is the alternative? It is very plain. It is to acknowledge the necessity of government or of authority, while you refuse obedience to the special claim; and that you do by yielding to the penalty if it shall be enforced. In this country, for instance, the best citizens were constantly opposed to Mason's infamous Fugitive Slave Law. The result was that it was constantly evaded, and when occasionally executed it was with great pomp of force. It is not yet formally repealed, but it is practically obsolete, because the universal conscience of the American people repudiates it. Yet, in the days when its enforcement was attempted, it was wiser for those who rejected it to bear the penalty and go to prison rather than resist it by arms; because, from the people see the best men sent to jail for not obeying a law, they come to help asking what kind of a law is it which the purest and most peaceful people repudiate, while by submitting to penalty they acquiesce in necessary authority. If that people is not debauched, they will soon have the law changed or inoperative. If they are debauched, then a free government has failed.

If, then, the Quakers are conscientiously opposed to war, at a time when it seems to the people that their rights can be secured in no other way, it is a hard case for both sides. The prosecution of the war requires the draft. If there were any conceivable way of determining whether conscientious scruples really exist, the release from service ought to be willingly granted wherever they were established; because if the mass of the people were sincerely opposed to maintaining their liberties by fighting, they would be sincerely in favor of submitting to the rebellion, as the war would end in the destruction of the Government, the ruin of the nation, and the overthrow of all hope of civil and religious liberty—and this by consent of the people. But there can be no way devised of ascertaining the sincerity of such scruples. It is therefore plainly impossible that the mere assertion of them should be sufficient. And it seems to us that every honest and patriotic Quaker will a thousand times more willingly acknowledge the authority of the Government which he wishes to see maintained, by paying the penalty of disobedience to its law, rather than by asking for legal release from obedience upon grounds which can never be satisfactorily established.

DENDA EST CARTHAGO.

THERE are signs of the most extraordinary political freshet ever known. Four years ago it was dangerous even in many Northern cities to allude warmly to slavery. Public opinion was opposed to the discussion of the subject. Men spoke upon it at some peril to their lives. And now it seems that slavery is about to be swept away by a torrent of universal public reprobation. Whoever listens closely can plainly hear the heart of the country saying, "It is the public enemy; let it die the death."

Of course this is not the instance of an entire moral national regeneration. It is the proof only that the hour has arrived, which always arrives in the course of civilization, and without which, indeed, there would be no progressive civilization whatever, when it is clearly seen that what is true and good is also politic. It is in vain that this is distinctly shown. But when it is practically perceived a great forward step in civilization is taken. When it is generally felt that peculiar rightness has been a community becomes moral. In this country the slave despotism held us bound so long and so hopelessly, because we were so prosperous and the evil was to us at the North so theoretical, that our sympathies and human instincts pleaded in vain against our apparent interests. The argument against the slaveholder was every man whom the slave-lords did not support, was, that if he succeeded grass would grow in the streets and blood run in the gutters. What was called the "Union" party in the North before the insurrection of slavery was simply an organization of timidity, whose argument was, that it was better to let the South misgovern and ruin the country, because it would otherwise try to ruin it. That was the final philosophy of all such movements as the Castle Garden meeting, and more than those cowardly and selfish men confess it. It was a question of policy, and it seemed to them to be best to pat and pacify. "Perhaps I compromised my honor," frankly says Mr. Everett, in a recent address.

Now a great many persons who supported this policy really hated slavery, and saw the ghastly wounds it was constantly inflicting upon the country, but thought that they had no right to say any thing about it. They were ready enough to send an army of ministers to preach the protection of a huge society, to preach against the religion and convert the natives of Cochin China and Thibet—if they could get there; but they had no idea that they had any right to say to some of their neighbors who wrong. Others declined to hear or say any thing about it, under the conviction that they had no practical remedy, and to think or say that it was wrong to imbrute a man, or to sell your own daughter, or whip a woman to death because she pined when her child was stolen from her, and others, and the larger number, cared nothing about the matter, except heartily to denounce the Abolitionists as incendiaries, and to sympathize with the gentlemanly and high-toned Southerners"—meaning slaveholders. The general feeling was that nothing could be done, even if it were a bad thing, and therefore it was fast becoming the fashion to declare that it was a good thing.

The Kansas troubles opened the eyes of the great mass of the people to the fact that the system was the direct rival of every free settler in the country. The question added a material argument to its moral appeal, and from that moment the overthrow of slavery was fixed. But under the Union its extinction would be peaceful. Consequently, as a last desperate resource, its chiefs and wire-pullers counting upon the timidity of trade and the party organization of the free States fiercely to slavery. Both failed them. Every day, from the 12th of April, 1861, it has been clearer to the whole people that as slavery is the enemy of their industry, of their trade, of their peace, and of their Union, they lay on the side of the enemy. Men of all parties, of all policies, of all convictions upon other subjects, repeat the cry which long and long ago pealed suddenly from Abraham Lincoln: "It is the common enemy. Let it die the death!"

FRANCE AND THE UNITED STATES.

THE speeches of Thiers and Jules Favres in the French Chambers are the most menacing sounds that Louis Napoleon has ever heard. The criticisms of Thiers especially, upon the imperial policy, are the censure of the common sense of France upon its government. In his last discourse the historian strips the facts of the Mexican expedition of all their glamour, and shows that a French army and fleet are engaged in an enterprise which is costly without profit, and perilous without honor. A year ago the Emperor put forth a resonant programme, and sent an army to fulfill the destiny of the Latin race, and now the terrible orator of the Opposition declares that all that can be hoped is that France may be able to retire from the imperial programme without disgrace. In fact now, for the first time, Louis Napoleon tolerates a critic, and he will inevitably find that Thiers must be silenced, or that the empire is in danger.

Thiers does not fear an immediate interference upon our part. But he thinks that when our war is over our soldiers will pass into Mexico, and that consequently all the intimates rather than describes will follow. Maximilian must then be supported by French bayonets against American immigrants and the Mexican people; for Thiers says that he does not see that the Mexicans are favorable to France. Indeed, it is very clear that the shrewd old politician, whose political reputation is that of sagacity rather than of principle, is of the opinion of Richard Cobden, that Louis Napoleon has made the great mistake of his life.

Meanwhile we can do nothing but observe. If France, or any other power, directly interferes in our war, she will be called to account, as England was in the matter of the rams. But for the operations of other powers in other parts of the world, however we may consider ourselves indirectly threatened, we have but an attentive eye. Mr. M'Dougall's proposition in the Senate, to declare ourselves dissatisfied with the attitude of France, and to menace her, compels the inquiry what we can do if France replies that she does not hold herself responsible to us for her foreign policy in other countries than our own. Are we to suppose that we shall make war upon France? If so, will he indicate the army, or the fleet, or the necessary millions of dollars, with which the war is to be waged? Clearly the project is perhaps enough for the moment. The vindication of other people's honor may be wisely left until it is finally settled that we have maintained our own. Nor ought patriots of the M'Dougall school to forget that while Thiers is the most dangerous enemy of Louis Napoleon invading and conquering Mexico, Jules Favre is by the most able and unwavering leader of France in a war with the United States. It is in this view that the cautious of the Secretary of State appears to be the truest political wisdom.

THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY.

WHEN Mr. Douglas appeared at the last inauguration ball as the next friend of Mrs. Lincoln, he took symbolically the position which his party could not be summoned, if it hoped to retain any hold upon the American people. He said in effect, "I am for the Union and the Government unconditionally." He died, and left no successor. No leader of even tolerable capacity has taken his place; and the party of which he was easily the head has dwindled and dwindled until it is virtually disappeared. There are, in Congress and elsewhere, many faithful men who cling to the names Democrat and Democratic; but the disloyal men there and elsewhere assume the name, and it is a question which will finally secure it.

Had Mr. Douglas lived he would have been the dictator of the party. The hostile pressure of squatter sovereignty as a solution of our troubles was but the transparent confession that the old platform of his party, the protection of slavery, was untenable. That was the only basis upon which his party for the future was in the extreme antislavery ground. How to get it there was a tremendous, an impossible task at that time. He was frantic. He tried to ride two horses, each running furiously in opposite directions. His will was inevitable; and, like Webster, he fell and died. Yet could he have survived, he would have shown him the way to future power, and he would have dared to take it. He would have done from the floor of the Senate in the Senate, and Mr. Arnold in the House, have done from principle, and have called for an amendment to the Constitution abolishing slavery.

The true men of his party are coming to that position. They see that henceforth emancipation is as much a fixed fact in this country as independence was after the Revolution. They know that hereafter such gentlemen as Senator Saulsbury of Delaware, Bishop Hopkins of Vermont, Mr. Thomas H. Seymour of Connecticut, and Mr. Vallandigham of Ohio, are as impossible leaders of any great popular party as Aaron Burr was after the failure of his conspiracy. For such persons as these comprehend neither men nor principles, neither policy nor history. They are the flesh left upon the sides of a vessel from which the foaming wine has been poured away.

The terrible logic of events has brought all loyal citizens to the same platform. The attempt to perpetuate old names and lines has resulted in the distinct division of the late Democratic party into two wings, one of which practically sustains the rebellion, and the other the Union. Whoever studies carefully the votes in Congress will observe that such representatives as Mallory, Cox, Chanler, and the Woods, work steadily against the Union and the National Government; while such as Odell and Griswold, with their friends, support the Government, while they try to maintain an appearance of party unity with the first-named, under the pretense, as we said last week, of a "Constitutional opposition."

Why do these gentlemen pursue this course? Why do they not see that their true policy is the public repudiation of all such fellowship? They know that the self-imposed mission of Mr. Fernando Wood is the destruction of the party with which he professes to act; and the method he takes is the proposition of measures which he knows will disgust the country. So long as he is permitted to use the party name, so long the party name shares the odium of his measures and of the support of his faction. Upon his ground the restoration of the party is impossible. In this fact lies the infamy of the democratic name is sure. The only hope of its honorable salvation is in the cordial co-operation of those who value it with the predominant sentiment of the country in the hearty, open support of the emancipation policy and of the President who has adopted it. The President is the representative of all in the country who believe that the question is simply Slavery or No-slavery; the destruction of the Government or its salvation.

ABOUT FLOWERS.

THE story lately told and widely repeated that Mrs. Lincoln had sent flowers to a notorious quarter of "peace," to decorate his house for a ball, is a good illustration of the inaccuracy and injustice of the reports upon which we form our opinions of public persons and measures. The facts are merely these: There is a conservatory attached to the White House, which supplies flowers for the Presidential parties and for such Friends as the President or his wife may choose. The wife of the person in question wrote a note asking for flowers. A reply was sent that there were no flowers in the rooms of the White House required for her own purposes, and with the reply a bouquet was sent, that the wife of the President might not seem churlish in refusing.

Such a story is not worth attention, except as an illustration of the persistent hostility of criticism which has pursued the wife of the President from the beginning of the war, and as falsely as in this instance. There was a time when it was openly insinuated that she furnished information to the rebels, and was the enemy of her husband and the country. That time is long passed, but the venomous tongue of gossip still darts its poison. There was a time, too, when it was the fashion to sneer at the President as an incompetent officer and trivial joker. But of all living men in the country at this moment whose name is likely to be most illustrious in history?

PROFANITY.

UNCLE TOBY tells us that our army swore dreadfully in Flanders. He spoke of the British army; but celebrated as that still not use up the profanity in the world. For our army swears awfully in the cars and elsewhere. Why should they? Why should you, dear Northern and Western boy? What is the use or beauty of saying, "Apple-boy! G—d—your soul to h—l! Don't try to shove off your G—d— rotten old apples on me, you G—d— you!" Is it manly? Is it brave? Is it any thing but a silly swagger? To talk loud, to swear, to whistle, to shout, to take up a quiet car with quiet people, merely brings you and the whole army into contempt.

It is easy enough to see that it is generally the habit of dissipation. Of course it was get drunk, if you make yourselves beasts, dear brethren, before you get into the cars, you will infallibly behave beastly when you are there. But to have such hearty, intelligent, sound, and manly fellows as any traveler may now meet upon any train, reeking out the most odious oaths about nothing whatever is pitiful. Of all tricks it is the poorest and meanest. If you get drunk you are ashamed to be jugged; or you may murder and be hanged. If you lie you may fall into awful scrapes, after which you will never be believed again. There is some risk in these things, and where there is risk there is a certain kind of courage in braving it. But to swear flashy, to damn every body and every thing, to be a nasty nuisance with your indecent tongue—this is as honorable, as manly, as soldierly as to insult a woman who has nobody to defend her.

Our army swore dreadfully in Flanders, quoth my Uncle Toby, but he did not say that they fought more bravely for it.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

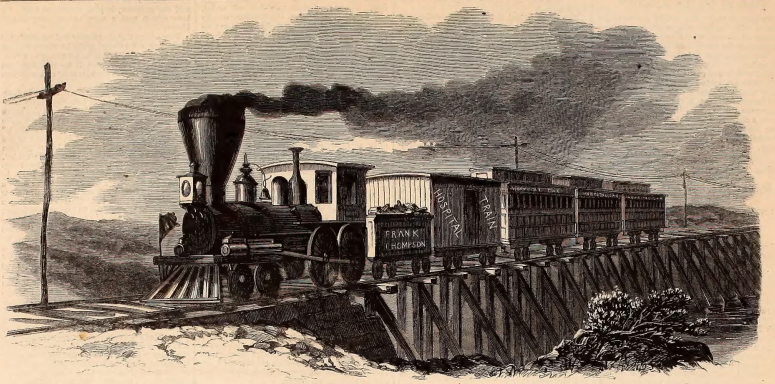
CONGRESS.

SENATE.—February 10. Mr. Trumbull, from the Judiciary Committee, reported adversely to the joint resolution for amending the Constitution just offered by Mr. Sumner, which reads, "Every where within the limits of the United States and each State and Territory thereof all persons are equal before the law, so that no person can hold another as a slave." Some time before Mr. Sumner's session, of Missouri, had offered a joint resolution to a similar purport. In lieu of both the Committee proposed the following joint resolution for amending the Constitution: "Article 13. Section 1. Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States or any place subject to their jurisdiction. Section 2. Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation." This article, if two-thirds of both Houses of Congress concur, is to be proposed to the Legislatures of the several States, and when ratified by three-fourths of those, to be valid as a part of the Constitution.—Mr. Clark offered a resolution ratifying the President's Emancipation Proclamation of January 1, 1863, and giving it the force of a statute: referred.—Mr. Brown offered amendments to the Emancipation bill, confirming the Emancipation Proclamation, abolishing slavery, and sub-

[acting colored persons to enrollment under the same supplementary to other citizens.—The Military Committee reported adversely to Mr. Grinnell's bill reducing the salaries of military officers not in the field or without command.—Mr. Sumner brought up the case of a colored surgeon of the army who had been ejected from a railroad car in the District, and offered a resolution directing the Committee on the District to inquire into the expediency of a law securing to persons equal privileges with white men in the cars within the District. He said that this officer, who held a diploma signed by that of Major, had been taken from a street car because he was black. We had better break up the whole business if we could not have it done without such outrages, which did more to injure our cause abroad and to plant back the line of a battle. How dare drides thought the outrage was on the other side; there was no cure for indecent outrage, and the person found to be rife with people of his own color, and wished to force himself upon white people, lying or insulting them, ought to know that it was no disgrace to ride with colored men, and that the outrage was the same as though a steward of the United States had been ejected, he said that there seemed to be a determination to force social as well as political equality with us in the white race. The people of this country would not stand that sentiment. Mr. Wilson rejoined that he had no wish to force negro equality upon any one; Indiana; he wished only that every man among the station should be treated with decency. Mr. Saulsbury, of Delaware, said that the Members of Congress and Heads of Departments from re-electing any candidate for acting as colonel, and in any case in which the United States are concerned, under penalty of fine, imprisonment, and disqualification for office, cause up and was debated: the clause relating to Members of Congress was stricken out, 19 to 14: but even —The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 11. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 12. The Senate was occupied with various business of no very general importance, except that Mr. Wilson made a very appropriate speech in support of his bill to forbid the issuing of passports to any persons who are not citizens of the United States.—February 13. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 14. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 15. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 16. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 17. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 18. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 19. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 20. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 21. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 22. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 23. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 24. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 25. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 26. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 27. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 28. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 29. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 30. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 31. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 32. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 33. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 34. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 35. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 36. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 37. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 38. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 39. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 40. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 41. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 42. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 43. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 44. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 45. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 46. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 47. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 48. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 49. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 50. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 51. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 52. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 53. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 54. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 55. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 56. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 57. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 58. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 59. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 60. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 61. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 62. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 63. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 64. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 65. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 66. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 67. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 68. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 69. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 70. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 71. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 72. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 73. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 74. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 75. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 76. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 77. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 78. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 79. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 80. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 81. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 82. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 83. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 84. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 85. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 86. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 87. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 88. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 89. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 90. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 91. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 92. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 93. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 94. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 95. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 96. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 97. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 98. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 99. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 100. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 101. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 102. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 103. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 104. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 105. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 106. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 107. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 108. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 109. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 110. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 111. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 112. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 113. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 114. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 115. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 116. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 117. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 118. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 119. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 120. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 121. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 122. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising colored soldiers equal pay with whites prior to the passage of the bill, it should certainly be so construed.—February 123. Some business of minor importance was transacted.—The Post-office Committee reported a bill for removing disqualifications on account of color in carrying the mail, and also declaring that no person shall, in the United States Service, be disqualified on account of color.—The Lieutenant-General bill from the House was taken up and discussed, the question being the amendment against making that office Commissioned and acting only in the armies of the Union.—Mr. Grimes. Sumner opposed to this amendment and that before the bill should be completed would be left an empty honor conferred upon one who now had the honor of the people's confidence.—February 124. The bill equalizing the pay of all soldiers was brought up. Schuyler was upon the question arising

COLT'S ARMORY AFTER THE FIRE—EXTERIOR.—[FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY N. A. AND R. A. MOORE, HARTFORD.]

COLT'S ARMORY AFTER THE FIRE—INTERIOR.—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY N. A. AND R. A. MOORE, HARTFORD.—[SEE PAGE 134.]



HOSPITAL TRAIN FROM CHATTANOOGA TO NASHVILLE.—[SKETCHED BY MR. THEODORE R. DAVIS.]

HOSPITAL TRAINS.

ONE of our special artists sends us from Chattanooga a sketch, which we here reproduce, representing a HOSPITAL TRAIN ON ITS WAY FROM THAT PLACE TO NASHVILLE, under the care of Dr. MYERS. Until very recently the transportation of our sick and wounded soldiers by rail has been attended with very severe suffering from the jostling motion of the car. It first occurred to a surgeon, while witnessing the intense agony of these poor fellows, that the difficulty might be obviated by mechanical means. Directly and upon the spot he sketched the model of a car, in the contrivance of which the problem was satisfactorily solved. The plan was immediately adopted by Government, and now constitutes the prominent feature of the hospital train. Food of the most nourishing kind is furnished the wounded men, who, when they have arrived at their journey's end, are taken directly to the hospital upon the same stretchers which answer as couches upon the car. These beds are suspended from India-rubber bands attached to the frame-work of car, and, yielding to the slightest motion of the car, are as comfortable as the beds of the hospital. Our artist has given not only an exterior view of the train, but also an interior of one of the cars, disclosing the arrangements by which the soldier's comfort is secured.

THE INTERIOR OF A HOSPITAL CAR.—[SKETCHED BY MR. THEODORE R. DAVIS.]

FIRE IN COLT'S ARMORY.

We give on page 132 a faithful picture of the mass of ruins consequent upon the fire at Colt's Armory. Our admiration is especially excited as we glance at the confused débris of what was once the most magnificent and elaborate machinery in the country. This pile of stupendous cylinders, mingled with broken gearing and the bricks of the fallen structure, quite fills up the interior. The loss of machinery alone is estimated at eight hundred thousand dollars. If the steam-pipe used for heating the building were stretched out, it would extend a full mile and about six miles. The crumbling mass of ruin reminds one very forcibly of the remains left of the stupendous buildings of antiquity.

[FROM CHARLES DICKENS'S "All the Year Round."]

A WHITE HAND AND A BLACK THUMB.

IN THIRTEEN CHAPTERS.

CHAPTER IX.

THE extra post-coach which carried Arthur and his fortunes had, by reason, no doubt, of its exceptional character, so many extra preliminaries to perform, and allows to make, that it did not remain finally from the yard of the Merry Privateer till after dusk. Government—which collective substantive, for reasons best known to itself, evinced quite a personal interest in this present coach-journey—had allowed fourteen hours for the whole to reach Dover, a distance of seventy miles; and, as these would for the most part be hours of darkness, a trusty guard had been further provided to watch over its safety.

This individual, after the fashion of other important characters, made his appearance only at the last moment: and, when he did show, nearly frightened a nervous lady-passenger into hysterics by the multitude of lethal weapons sprinkled about his person.

Just before leaving, a very weighty square box, iron-bound, and secured with a most ostentatious padlock, was borne from the inner office, and let down with great care and ceremony into the footboot.

"Treasure," said a knowing passenger to his neighbor, with a wink.

"Oh, I do wish they wouldn't!" said the nervous lady, trembling from head to foot.

"Wouldn't what, ma'am?" said the formidable guard, handling his bushy brows.

"Put it in there," pleas, Sir," said the lady, timidly. "It's like inviting them. Does government want us murdered, please?"

"They will, if we prevent it, ma'am," replied the haughty guard. "Jump in, if you please. Coach waits."

Five miles an hour, including stoppages, was regarded in those days as excellent speed. The extra post-coach displayed such energetic ways, and had been scarcely three hours on the road when they approached Ingatestone, nearly twenty miles from town.

A long hill, however, intervened, and the sudden change of pace aroused the dozing travelers to the knowledge that they were crawling up an ascent, lined on either hand by a bank and woodland. They were within a few yards of the summit of the hill, when a loud exclamation from the guard startled every body. The coach gave a rough jerk onward, as if the horses had been urged to sudden speed. Then came a halt, and an authoritative voice:

"Fling that down!"

Down went a blundgeon on the road. It was that used by the formidable guard. He had snapped it, honestly enough, at the speaker; but the piece had missed fire, the robber's pistol was at his head, and all the sovereigns in the world could not have saved his skull.

With one hand the robber took away the guard's remaining arms, the other still holding the pistol about an inch from his eye. There was a moment's pause: then the robber rose upon foot, and a white hand, sparkling with gems, but with the thumb black as ink, was extended into the circle.

"Forget your Purses. Quick, if you please. The mail for London is coming. You know very well I can't search two coaches at once."

A rapid transaction, and several purses were put into the band. Then commenced a reluctant tugging at watches.

"Keep them! Purses only! Now, Sir!" said the highwayman, touching Haggerdon.

"I have not a purse, nor much of moneys," replied Arthur, "but—"

"What's that in your hand?"

"Only a—"

"A mud-pie. I've lost my own. Toss it hith-er."

"I'll die first," said the boy.

"Young fool!" was the only retort, as the practiced hand made one swoop into the coach and vanished with the snuff-box. "Enough, gentlemen! A good journey!"

"Heaven be praised!" ejaculated the nervous lady. "Have they got the treasure, you?" inquired a male passenger of the discomfited guard.

"No, they don't got the treasure," growled the latter. "For why? There wasn't none. It were a trap, you see. The treasure's gone by the regular coach. And the robber he know'd on it."

Every aggrieved individual feels for the public. The coach was in the very act of getting into motion, when—

"Hold, there! Stop!" was shouted, and the steaming horse of the robber reappeared at the coach door. The glass dropped, as if it knew the touch of his finger.

"You—boy! Where did you steal this?" he questioned, roughly, thrusting forward the snuff-box.

"I steal not!" said Arthur, indignantly. "Zey found it in—"

The robber seized the boy by the collar, and dragged him forward, so that the light of the coachlamps fell full upon both their faces. The upper part of the robber's face was covered with a black silk mask.

"You are a thief, Sir," he muttered. "I take you into my custody. Descend. Do you hear?"

Arthur was powerless in the man's grips, and was obliged to obey.

"Drive on!" said the robber, leveling his pistol. The coachman bended his horses, and young Haggerdorn was left alone with the captor.

"Follow me, boy," said the latter, "and, if you can trust a robber's word, I swear you shall receive no injury. I must speak with you, and this is tickish ground. Follow close."

He mounted his horse with the spur, and sprang into the thicket, Arthur scrambling over the barrier as best he might. Threading the copse they crossed a little path, and entered a field. The robber passed into an orchard, and stopped before a decent cottage. Here the robber dismounted, and allowing his horse, which seemed perfectly at home, to seek his own place of concealment, conducted Arthur into the 'ut. A fire was smouldering on the hearth. The robber flung upon it a bundle of dried furze, producing a blaze which made the room as light as day.

"Now, answer truly, boy. Where did you get this box?"

Arthur replied that it had been found in a house in Jermyn Street, left there by nobody knew whom.

"You know. Speak, Sir," said the robber, seizing him by both arms with force which, though gently exerted, seemed to paralyze every nerve.

Arthur hesitated.

"I can guess," he said.

"Who?"

"Lord Loh."

"Lord Beltcleeh! These are the arms of—Who was your father, boy?"

"I never knew him."

"Your mother?"

"Dead."

The robber started.

"Dead! (His brow his hand slowly across his brow.) "My boy, this was hers, your mother's and mine!"

"Yours!"

"I am Lord Loh, your brother."

Arthur turned white as ashes.

"And—dead—mother!" he gasped.

"The murder, lad?" said Lord Loh, shoving his white teeth. "Be more particular. Which murder?"

What affair was that to you?

I mean—in Jermyn Street—the—"

"Ah! Jermyn Street—Hi?"

A light flashed across the casement. Next moment the door was dashed in, and the officer Armour, followed by half a dozen others, flung himself boldly on the Black-Thumb.

Whether the latter was actually confounded by the sudden apparition, or once overpowered with the hopelessness of escape, purposely forbore resistance—certain it is he was secured without difficulty —after which, Armour, seeing Lord Arthur and congratulating him on the safety of his person and property, requested him to accompany them to the house of the murder, a short distance off. The young man, feeling as though all were standing in a dream, assented, and, the little dwelling having undergone a rapid search, without discovering any thing of a suspicious nature, the party set forth.

CHAPTER X.

THE demeanor of Lord Lob was singular, and contributed in no small degree to the confusion of Arthur's brain. Not a word, gesture, or action of his neither turned his eyes toward his brother, nor had he addressed a single syllable to him nor to any one else. Still continuing in custody of justice, he was placed before Mr. Thickles, the magistrate of Ingatestone, who had apparently sat up to that unwonted hour in the expectation of such a visitor. Several of the coach-passengers and the guard were already in attendance; and so eager were these good folks to further the ends of justice that Arthur's testimony was not, for the present, required. The examination ended with the constitutal of the prisoner on the charge of highway robbery, the magistrate intimating that, by express order from the government, he would not be sent to the county prison, but was bound there to answer charges of a more serious nature.

So effectually, in fact, was Lord Loh compromised in the affair of the mail-robbery, previous exploit, that it was scarcely deemed necessary to take the usual measures for securing his conviction on the latter charge, and it was settled that all the outward-bound witnesses, with the exception of Arthur Haggerdon, who evinced a degree of reluctance to remain, should be allowed to proceed on their voyage.

A chaise was then ordered to convey the redoubted prisoner to town, and Arthur was about to follow the others from the room when Armour laid his arm, and shoved the boy gently back.

"Where did you tell me you got this, young gentleman?"

"I tell you not," replied Arthur, "I will not do now. Mis Humpage gave it."

"Hah!" said Mr. Armour. "Yes? Goodnight, Sir. . . . Mean she to him, did she thou, my pretty?" soliloquized the officer, with an odd confusion of persons. "Now who'd have thought it? Hurry, deep!"

Arthur found a lodging in the little village inn; but to sleep was out of the question, and he passed the greater part of the cheerless night sitting with his head buried in his hands, a prey to that complete despondency which, in such natures, succeeds, on a sudden check, to the highest hope. His guiding star had fallen, and left him in darkness. Polly was lost to him. His own brother was probably her father's assassin. He himself might be called upon to take some share in the convicting testimony, and this officer would claim the rich reward.

Mr. Armour and Lord Loh rode together in the chaise, two of the former's satellites, well armed, seated on the box, and four others trotting merrily alongside. There was no apprehension of any attempt at rescue, and the worthy officer, who felt the continued silence act painfully upon his own exhilaration of spirit, did his utmost to cheer and lead his companion into discourse. The illustrious prisoner remained inscrutable. He replied, courteously indeed, but curtly, and neither smile nor retort escaped his lips in response to the facetious. The white fine face gazed millions of miles away, and the officer felt, with discomfort, that he was better company for his captive than an indifferently-trained bobbed might have been for Socrates.

Nevertheless, as they drew near London in the early dawn, an expression passed at intervals over the robber's face, which went near to appall even Armour. Once, on a look at him, in the case of a wretched woman condemned some years since to die for many murders, all but scared the watchers from her cell. Frightful throe of the awakened spirit, in its last despairing effort to pierce upward through the load of suffocating crime!

Sufficiently cognizant of the workings of the guilty mind to form some idea of what was passing in Lord Loh's, Armour resolved to make an attempt to break it to account, and, accordingly, began in an easy tone:

"That was a nice May-game you played me, my lord, now wasn't it? Ha, ha, ha! by gad, all the queer matters you've put a hand to, that what they call in London, Jermyn Street way—was about the queerest! Whatever your folks wanted with that old chap, bothers me; and I don't mind telling you, in confidence, it did bother me. We gave it up. Then we knew for certain twas a plant of yours, up we gave it! It's just one of his games,' says the governor, 'p'raps for fun.' But there's people that don't like mystery, and, I tell you what —no, I won't, for you seem out o' sorts, and I, ah, ha, ha! Mystery, Armour, oh! a yawn, and sinking back into sorrow.

The prisoner turned, and looked at him with something of the old Haggerdon expression.

"Out with it, Henry," he said.

"Come, that's better, my lord. That's what I like to see in a gentleman for. You and me have jogged on together a good many years, comfortable, on different sides of the way to be sure. Now you win, a lot of doubles you've run upon us, but we've got three-fifths of them originals you set up with, and now we've got you, so that's even."

"Not quite," said the prisoner.

"Why, you'll have two of your contesting that?" asked the officer, as if rather injured. "You might do a deal better than that. Ah, here we are in London. Ha! where to, my lord—hands my lord—"

"Shall we? Then push on, Henry, my boy, with what you are dying to say."

"Lord Loh, my lord. You ain't a common cracksman," said the officer, deferentially; "I wouldn't be so rude as to say you was. Naturally, I'm sorry to see a gentleman of your years and privileges, and what a man like you meant by such and such things, that seemed no particular good to my body. There's a matter of fifty pounds for me more sweetly than curiosity. Bless you, they don't care what they pay to know why's why! Now you're a-going to Dover Castle, every day, perhaps books and billydoos, but all wanting to know about this, that, and t'other. You'll want a secretary, my lord."

"Accept the post, my Henry," said Lord Loh, leaning back wearily.

"I can't, my lord; you've no confidence in me even now, when it don't signify this pinch of snuff," said the officer, drawing out the mysterious box, as if unconsciously. "For example, this remarkable one. Here's a business, which don't matter, for you're not going to be hanged about that. Ten to one old man's money would give—I declare I don't know what that girl wouldn't give—to know what's inside of her father's box in manner of any secret telling. A thousand pound, nor ten, would be no good to you."

"What does she offer?"

"As if you didn't know, my lord!" said the other, with affected disbelief.

"Is it very important, Henry. What does the young lady propose?"

"To marry the man who finds out who spirited away her father, alive or dead. And her fortune, which is her own, isn't less than one hundred thousand pounds," said Mr. Armour, almost solemnly. "Lor', there's a power o' money in a poor silver's way!"

There was a minute's profound silence. Then their eyes met. The prisoner made a slight movement, that might be interrogative, with his head. Armour shook his.

"Not that, noways, my lord; but I'll tell you what, if there's any thing or any body you want looked to after the—you know, I'll give you my bond for five hundred."

"I'll think on it," was the reply. After which not another word was exchanged till the gloomy walls of Newgate received the illustrious prisoner.

CHAPTER XI.

ARTHUR returned to London within a few hours of his brother, utterly unable, under the sudden changed circumstances, to face his former house, engaged a small lodging in Skinner Street, Snow Hill, and there, in accordance with directions he had received from the police) walked down to the prison to communicate his address. Requested to wait while the governor made that fundamary accosted him in a very civil tone.

"You are claimed, I understand, Sir," he remarked, "by our latest arrival—a personage but too well known—as his near relation, though for many years a stranger. Is it so? Are you his brother?"

Arthur replied that he had, at present, no other testimony than the assertion of the person in question; but that he was well aware that his mother had had a son older than himself, of whose death she had never received assurance.

"Nature, at all events, throws he her evidence," said the governor, looking steadily at him. "I have seldom seen a more extraordinary resemblance."

Then adding that the prisoner had requested that his brother, and he only, might be admitted to his cell, he committed Arthur to the charge of a turnkey, and in another minute, in the common room in the prison, the two brothers stood once more face to face.

"Sit down, Arthur Haggerdorn, and make yourself comfortable," said Lord Loh, "and don't interrupt me so long as you understand, for you speak old and sort of lingo for a Briton. We are quite alone (no, that elbow's a dummy—stone-deaf), glancing at a warder who sat in a corner of the room. "So you needn't sing out if you find I am the greatest miscreant that ever scourged mankind. If I could only tell what, when, and why, I embraced scoundrelism as a profession, it might be useful; but I can't. I was flung into the world a little thing at Hanover, and my soul was never scraped from its begining. There's a crack in the crust now, or you wouldn't be here to peep into it, and take your oath of that! Our father, Lord Haswood, was a scoundrel (I beg the peerage's pardon) —a scoundrel, I remark, of patrcon, and I hope, for his own sake, a madman too. He gave me bread, that's true—not much even of that—he cheated my mother—our mother, with a mock-marriage (you've no chance of her company, my boy)—deserted her very likely broke her heart. How the devil, with such a fellow's blood in your veins, you ever escaped to forgot our mother, I can't tell, added the robber, almost apologetically, as he half-extended his hand, then instantly withdrew it. "But time presses; this is how I want you to say. You're in love, boy. That's enough. Don't answer. In love with Miss Jermyn Street—what's her name?—Miss Humpage, we'll call her for the present—of her substantial sire, and has commissioned you to track me out and bag me dead. She gave you that snuff-box as a talisman, thinking, I suppose, that it would leap from your pocket at the owner's approach! How did she know that box belonged to my mother?"

"She did not know that, nor even I that," said Arthur. "My mother must have intended me box of purpose. Armour, so officer, said it had been yours."

"Not mine. My father's," said the robber. "However, boy, it seems you've caught me. And now?"

Arthur gazed wistfully at his brother, but made no reply.

"Tell her," resumed the latter, speaking slowly, "I am sorry to disappoint her—very sorry, too, for my own reputation, for, by the blood of all the Hawkweeds that ever poisoned air, it was as clever a little piece of work remember; but, after, boy, your own hand is not clearer of that old man's blood than mine."

"God be praised!" said Arthur, fervently.

"That's kind, at least, since it may be . . . you your uncle!" muttered Lord Loh. "I say, you, something in return, my boy. Stay a moment; let me think." (He paused for a minute.) "If this Jermyn Street affair had been all, and I'm a single then I must have known who was in it. No; 'tis impossible. Now, there's a tidy knot of Halifax people—He must then have had accomplices, and finish. But, then, Caunter would have been down on his old pals: that won't do. Jilling George, of Liverpool? Just the evil. Exactly the kind of fancy-business he takes to. It's some foreign game, Arthur, rely upon it. Now, my friend, Jilling George (cheers Dutch and Free a magnificent there must have been much to arrange; they could have gone to nobody but him. Twas Jilling George—He must—he must! . . . Be off now, and come to me-tomorrow at noon."

He made so imperative a gesture that Arthur was fain to depart without a word; and returned, sadly enough, to his humble lodging.

Next day that period was neither swift nor sure. Nevertheless, the inhabitants of twenty-seven Jermyn Street were still at breakfast, when a rumbling, darting noise, the delivery of which began to circulate in the house that the past night had been signalized by an important capture—no less than the undoubted identity of the Black-Thumb—while the apparition of Mistress Ascroft at her window, making wild and agitated but unintelligible signs, gave a sort of color to their former report that the Harwich road had been the scene of, and the extra post-coach a sharer in, the adventure.

Presently arrived Mr. Hartshorn in high excitement. Yes. It was true. The coach had been stopped and plundered, the guard having been shot dead. The robbing could not be the occupance of the passengers, male and female, who, at sight of the black thumb, permitted themselves to be stripped like lambs, until one of the party (a very young man, who had hitherto been unable to disengage his arms from his roquelaure) kept down the carriage, flung himself upon the assailant, and, though dragged through a hedge and several fields, succeeded at length in mastering himself and delivering him up to a mounted patrol, who most opportunely made his appearance.

Great as was the interest in identifying this intrepid champion with the slight and delicate young artist, love might have overcome the obstacle had not the arrival of more authentic tidings saved him the trouble. A note from Sir James Pelhill, without especially mentioning Armour, announced the capture of the noted robber by a party of police, detached with that express design.

Then passed a long and anxious morning, unrelieved by further news, Polly wandering about, utterly unable to devote her thought: to any of her usual occupations. What was to be the result? Was Lord Loh in reality the guilty person? Hope, less as was the unfortunate: man's situation, would he not surely confess? The conviction of the authorities that the outrage was of this man's contriving was strong as ever, and Polly herself had learned to regard it as a fact. The vengeance she had invoked was about to descend. Her afther's death would be expiated. And then—the reward? . . .

Later that day the prisoner requested an interview with his captor.

Mr. Arnour, who had taken care to be within easy call, hastened to the prisoner.

"Henry, you're an ass," was Lord Lob's greeting. "It won't do. Stick, my boy, to the shop. You understand me perfectly, and you'll take my advice, Henry, because you can't help it. I entertain for you (it grieves me to think you won't believe it) a sincere professional regard. Had partial forces placed you in my gang you would thereby have been a man, Sir, equal to myself—infinitely excepted—in every quality that commands the respect and confidence of energetic practitioners in the higher walks of that art which gives you and your fellows bread. You might have bequeathed a reputation. But why dwell upon lost opportunities? As I was saying, I like you, and I don't mind putting a tolerable thing in your way, though not precisely what my worthy Henry—misled by a low but fashionable ambition—proposed to himself. Hear, then, my friend. Mr Black Thomas knew nothing of the Hompage plant. It was a foreign seed, sown, impudently enough, in my partner. You wronged us, Henry—but the injury is lost in the compliment—for, by my coronet, 'twas a masterly thing! Now, Sir, I can put this black thomb upon the man who did it, and I will."

Armour's eyes glistened, and he had some difficulty in concealing his satisfaction; but, aware that Lord Lob, when in a talking mood, especially disliked interruption, discreetly held his peace.

"This, Henry," resumed his lordship, "is the business. I will point out the individual. I speak of to—to the Honorable Arthur Haggerdorn, second son of the Earl of Hawkweed, brother, that is, to your humble servant. The poor young fool, full of his noble blood, has fallen in love with the plebeian beauty of this Humpage. He must marry her, good Henry, not you, do you see? The hopes of Hawkweed centre in him, and they are of greater import than the promotion of a silly rebellious like these. Besides, Henry, you know too much of rascal ways. Once admitted among the swells, not a man of them would be safe. But, mark me, on the day the Honorable Arthur Haggerdorn marries Miss What-you-may-call-it Humpage, Henricus Armorius pockets five thousand pounds. Is it a bargain? If so, thy fist, Henry! If not, go thy ways, and say—say truly—that thou hast heard the last accord from the lip of Lob."

Henry knew well enough that, spite of the affected bombast, the robber was in earnest. The first was given.

"Imprimis (that is, Henry, in the first place), a gone for Lob Counter. Let him be with me this evening," resumed the prisoner.

"Why, you know it's impossible, my lord," cried Armour, vastly surprised. "He's wanted over, and over, and over again, is he, Bob?"

"Let the want stand 'over.' I want him, and must have him. Get the pen."

"Supposing I did, he wouldn't come," replied the officer, reluctantly.

"Try him," said Lord Lob.

And the interview concluded.

The prisoner was right. Sir James Polhill, on learning the substance of this conversation (save that portion relating to finance), readily conceded the pass. Mr. Counter, communicated with through a friendly channel, was speedily unearthed, disguised, and admitted within those walls it had been the business of his life (after crime) to avoid. It was curious to see this mimermast, "clothed and with his one virtue, fidelity, entering the tomb-like prison with the step of a prince, and standing before his doomed captain without a shade of hesitation, save that which had its source in the latter's misfortune."

The conversation, conducted in the thieves' tongue, was brief and pithy, and may be concisely rendered somewhat as follows:

"Blubbering, old boy?" said my lord.

"(Do a variety of things to) my eyes if I know what's come to 'em!" replied Mr. Counter, affecting a delicate surprise. "But this ain't a good thing to see."

"My boss to the lads. Bid them take warning. Cut the rosal. It's low and bad. I always said so, and what an earth prompted me to that high toby touch last night, top me if I can say! I could almost feel a hand on my prad's bridle dragging him on. No matter. Jilling George of Liverpool."

"What d'ye?"

"Wanted."

"Is he to go?"

"Yes, he. Had a good spell."

"That's true, but—"

"But what?"

"Tis the first time—ever—you've—"

"Split. I know it," said his leader, fiercely. "Bob, he did me an ill turn once. Besides, I'm insulted. That fellow did the neatest thing of the day, here, under our very noses, and without a 'By your leave, my lord.' It has been the business of my life to unite the recognized courtesies of refined society with the sterner exigencies of our profession. You don't understand, my Bob. To put it simply: should we have cracked a Liverpool crib without a word to Jilling George? Bob, he goes. Tip the slang."

"Very good," said Mr. Counter, perfectly resigned to his comrade's fate. "(What was it you said he's wanted about?"

"Thing in Jermyn Street—Humpage. Go you to my brother; here's the address. Then turn on the trail. If he finds the man, he marries the heiress. He'll reward."

"Hallo, stop! He'd no hand in it."

"Who?" demanded Lord Lob.

"Jilling George."

"Pshaw! 'tis no one else."

"Just what I was going to say."

"What?"

"Tim's nobody else."

"Neither George nor nobody else? You don't mean that—"

"Yes, I do."

The two robbers looked at each other for a moment, then burst into a fit of laughter that almost infected the dead "dubosman."

"Since when have you known this, Bob?" asked Lord Lob.

"Week past."

"Can you put your hand upon him?"

"Know the dossken" (lodging).

"All right. Go to my brother, tell him every thing, as you would to me, and say I bade you trust him for reward—and—and good-by, Bob, my boy."

"Oh, curse it, there's a new Bob, relapsing into tenderness.

"Vamose, boy," said Lord Lob, hastily. "The 'dubosman's scran's coming. Remember, your captain was neither buzz-glosh, chaunter-cull, nor sneaksman; never fosced, nor nose-bed, fit cream, nor faked a fadge, nor will he be at last lagged for a ramp! . . . The worst the patterer round the Governor-general can say of him is that Lord Lob's only leary glosh, and even that his noble blood demanded. Wherefore, Robert, stow whids, tip the jigger, and have a tantarum, cheats daddles, and ting aways, my Bob!"

Translated from what may be called (at that period) the language of Tyburnia, the modern Belgravian, the chieftain's farewell might be rendered thus:

"You may retire, my friend. The turnkey's evening meal is about to arrive. Recollect that your leader was neither an appropriator of loose cash, a writer of blasphemous and songs, nor a petty, cowardly shop-lifter. He never swindled, nor sponged upon his neighbors, fought backward, or, by other blackguardism, The worst those street biographers who throng about the gallows can say of him is that Lob was a remarkably well-dressed individual, a circumstance perfectly consonant with his high birth. Wherefore, Robert, talk no more, hand the turnkey a crown, shake hands, and begone, my good fellow."

THE HEART OF MIRIAM CLYDE.

THE sun went down, and the moon came up. Miriam Clyde saw both the moon and the sun, as she was sitting. It was a long wing running out into the pleasant garden, and it was lighted by two, with three windows opening to the east, and one great bay-window to the west, each side of which were Miriam's favorite nooks, in shrewd defiance of them in the wall. The quaint room had been built for her by her father—a birthday gift from an always lavish hand. Every inch of it was her own taste, from the dainty carpet and delicate paper, to the queer-shaped tables, the quaint desk, the pictures, and the books. Yes, the books locked out of the corner, with steadfast eyes and the beauty of a dream on the brow of marble, was, somebody said, Miriam's household goddess, and she did hang age in some strange pagan fashion of her own.

She certainly loved the room and all its belongings. She had passed many pleasant hours, calculate days there—for hers was, in some senses, a lonely life. Father and mother she had; but her father was president, or superintendent, or in some way the master-spirit of long lines of railroad, and spread his time in systematic journeys, whose only apparent result was disturbing his family by a midnight arrival two or three times a week. Her mother, from chronic headache, was intensely nervous, and had a Southern desire to be let alone. So Miriam found that charm in books and solitude that so many other girls find in a cheerful home circle.

So many phases of feeling had come to her in her pleasant room: and there, this afternoon, love had sought her out. Miriam Clyde had found love there, and told her the long-cherished secret of his heart. She had accepted him—that was at noon, afternoon—and then she had been left to love her alone, and had sat there ever since, through the sunsetting and the moon-rising, wondering and doubting over what she had done.

She had no definite idea whether she loved him or not. Ignorant she was of the world and the world's ways—most ignorant of all of her own heart. She could make no excuse to herself for promising to marry this first lover of hers, except because he had asked her. She had found his friendship pleasant. What his love would be she could not yet tell. She began to think it was a mere question of how she did not care to try. There would be something fearful, it seemed, in belonging no more to herself, but to another—giving that other right to thoughts and fancies as well as heart-beats.

She rose at last, bewildered with thinking, and threw open her window to look out into the August night, restless, odorous, pulsing with stars. The fragrance from her heliotrope bed stole up to her. It was an hour when the flowers—rare, low kind, mystical flower-fragrance—she would never forget. It seemed to her that her heart came out, and stood like another young lover. She

MARRIAGE, 1759.

TAKING COMMAND OF THE ARMY. JULY 12TH 1775.

PRESIDENT.—1789.

THE MEDIATOR, 1744.

WASHINGTON'S BIRT

RESIGNING

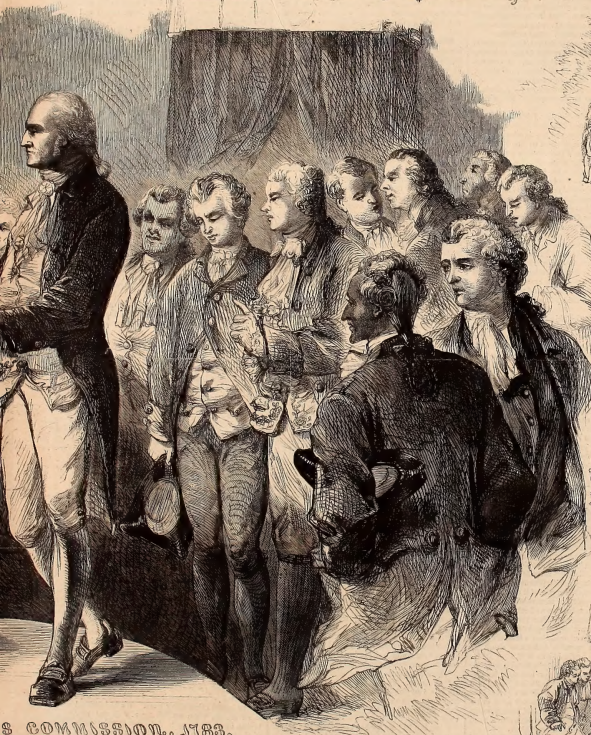
George

FEB. 22D

N PLACE, FEB. 22d 1732.

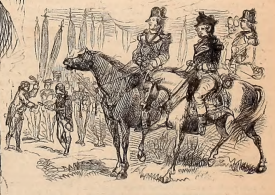
THE Life OF

SURVEYOR, 1748.



S COMMISSION. 1783.

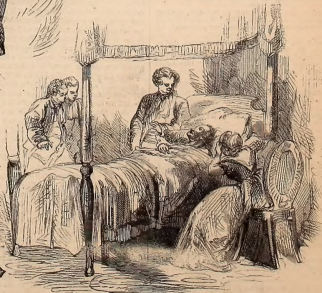
BRADDOCK'S DEFEAT, 1755.



YORKTOWN, 1781.

Washington.

1732.



DEATH.—1799.

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

A FRIEND has celebrated for his fine stock than a good education. He went to the secretary of an agricultural society in regard to entering his animals for the premium offered, and added, as a postscript, as follows: "Also enter me for the best jackass. I am sure of a premium."

"I see," said Mrs. Partington, the other day, "that a great many of the officers of our army are following the advice I used to give to my dear husband, and I am glad to see it. I used often to say to the groom about Captain Sound-sey's resignation. Now I don't know what trouble they may have had, but it's a blessed thing to be resigned. My poor Partington used to suffer from something that he called a want of energy, which was my nature for him. I couldn't make out exactly what he meant, but I looked in the Dictionary, and found that original means to found; so I suppose I was a little too warm-hearted for him, and the poor man wanted me to be kind of stiff and icy. I used to tell him to be resigned to his lot, but he couldn't seem to make up his mind to it. If he had I should have been so tickled I expect I should have put his resignation in the papers same as folks do nowadays. I felt kind of bad when Partington died, but the parson told me to be resigned, and I tried to, but I had left me and he comfortably well to do in the world, I felt resignation more and more every day, and hope these army officers are all enjoying the same great blessing."

GOOD ADVICE TO EVERY BODY.

If widow's ways you wisely seek,
Five things observe with care:
Of whom you speak—to whom you speak,
And how—and when—and where.

A farmer, who occasionally accommodated a neighbor with a stitch of bacon at the killing season, being applied to as usual, said, "I assure you I was made up and down whether I shall kill myself this year, or take a side of my father."

"When I am in pecuniary difficulties," said a penitent bankrupt, "my garden, my flowers, all fresh and sparkling in the morning, console my heart." "Indeed!" exclaimed the sympathizing friend. "I should have thought they would remind you of your trouble, for, like your bills, they are all over dew."

A month ago never made a skillful mariner. Neither do uninterrupted successes qualify a man for undisturbed happiness. The storms of adversity, like the storms of the sea, arouse the faculties and incite the invention, prudence, skill, and fortitude of the voyager.

Smith made an assertion to Jones. Jones replied that was a celebrated bi—hoky story. Smith first-rate, and then blandly requested Jones to be kind enough to place his syllables closer together upon the next occasion.

He who gives up to seem given up; and to consider ourselves of no use is the surest certain way to become useless.

A philosophic and self-possessed chip captain was passing through a crowded street at midnight, when a shrewd ghost rose up behind a tombstone, and approached him with mysterious gestures. The ancient navigator never relied his stick and gave him a crack over the head, asking him "what he meant by being out of his grave at so late an hour?"

An elderly gentleman, traveling in a stage-coach, was amused by a dispute of the world between two little boys. One of them, at last, kindly inquired if their conversation did not annoy the old man, when he answered with a great deal of naïveté, "No ma'am, I've been married twenty-eight years."

The other day a gentleman holding an official position, gave a rising young man his countenance. The ungrateful youth has since made use of the song for drinking purposes.

ARTFUL DODGING.—Master: "Where was the text the day, Jack?" Apprentice: "I dunno how—I was a thinking of gone in." Master: "What was the conclusion?" Apprentice: "I dunno, ken—I only set afore he was done." Master: "What! all to hear about the middle o't, then?" Apprentice: "I dunno ken—I sleepit a' the time."

While we are writing a little fellow opposite our window is stealing a fresh coat of paint. His time has become so high he is trying to get his board for nothing.

The most important is the first storm both in the spring of the year and in the married state; surely all the others are likely to come from the same quarter.

A married lady found her two sons quarreling, and, in hopes of saving so sad a waste of conjugal affections, uttered the following: "You young rascals, if you don't desist directly I'll tell both your fathers."

A countryman being a witness in a court of justice, was asked if he believed he was born in wedlock. "Why, Sir," answered the man; "I was born in Lincolnshire."

A paper speaks of a man "who died without the aid of a physician." Symptoms of death are exceedingly rare.

INNATE GOODNESS.—What the world calls "innate goodness" is very often a full stomach, and what it terms "vice is only a fragment of empty headache.

A writer in the Dublin University Magazine, speaking of the poor of Ireland, says: "Many thousands of them were often destitute of the only food they possessed."

"Isaac," said Mrs. Partington to her nephew, "when you enter the state legislature, choose a wonderful and well-influenced young woman. Then, my dear, your love will be indeed a source of certain." He knew she was exceedingly solemn, and proceeded to put mateens on the floor kinks.

Be temperate in diet. Our first parents ate themselves out of house and home.

We generally prefer new articles to old ones—the newmades to the old-fashioned.

A young man who has recently taken a wife says he did not find it half so hard to get married as he did to get the furniture.

Hadji Bell Beni Assand, on the return voyage to Medras, after his pilgrimage, was caught in a terrible storm, and recollecting that he had visited Mohammedan law by indulging in swine's flesh on a particular occasion, he made a due confession, and prayed for a cessation of the storm. All was in vain: the storm raged on; and the Hadji, losing his temper and piety, petulantly exclaimed, "What a fuss about a little pork!"

A club-head has just been built which is so nicely poised that the owner is obliged to part their hair in the middle to keep their balance.

If you ever become so sick that you can't keep any thing on your stomach try a mustard plaster, that will stick sure.

A gentleman, whose father had been hanged, was accustomed to say of him—"He died suddenly upon a platform at a large public meeting."

Mr. Day advertises the loss of his dog: Brown hopes he will succeed in finding him; for if "every dog has his day," he doesn't see why every Day should not have his dog.

A Dutchman being called upon to give a toast, said: "Here ish to de heroes what fit, pled, and died at the battle of Bull Run—of which I am one."

THE NEW GEN.—The "Infant Prince," the six-pounder.

Politeness is like an air-cushion: there may be nothing in it, but it cases jolts wonderfully.

If a woman was to change her sex, what religion would she be?—A He-then.

Some time since a person, more ingenious than scrupulous, paid a tradesman for some goods by a bill at two months; but on presenting it at the expiration of that period, the owner found it was payable two months after death instead of after date.

A young lady recently lost her temper, to the great delight of her friends, as it was very bad one.

A "ladies' shoemaker" advertises himself boldly as one of "the sole her system."

MY WIFE'S FATHER.

I AM naturally a benevolent man, and more inclined to pardon than to punish.

I acknowledge that human justice is fallible; that the discovery of the offender and the guilty: that the penalty is, occasionally, cruelly disproportioned to the offense; that social prejudices are begotten of carelessness and ignorance; that the reformation and rehabilitation of the criminal are higher duties than the punishment of the crime. And so forth.

But my late conviction of the practical results of a certain philanthropy has tended fatally to harden my nature, and render me skeptical. A continuance of the trial would, in all human probability, pervert me into an obstinate misanthrope.

When I say "a certain philanthropy," I allude to that peculiar virtue as developed in My Wife's FATHER.

My father-in-law—by the way, I detest that term, as applied to the parent of "the wife of one's bosom."! It smacks of the attorney, and has an odor of parchment and court-room talk about it. So I shall not use it again. My Wife's father, then, is much more homelike and cheerfully respectful that sounds!—is an elderly gentleman, who has devoted considerable time and money to the wholesale drug business, retired from the firm five years ago, to devote his time, and a moderate portion of his income, to the cause of philanthropy.

Not generally and diffusedly, however.

My Wife's father prefers to be popularly known as a "singleness of purpose;" but what—did he stand in no other relation to me than that of a fellow-being—I should call him a "fool of the first order." He, therefore, has a specialty in his benevolence. And this is the restoration to social status of the evil-doer who has undergone the penalty.

In other words, the moral and social white-washing of the Ethiop—using Ethiop in a strictly figurative sense.

For this most worthy object he has spent much of his time in prison. Not as a subject of discipline, administered on, as a philanthropist—a bearer of good-tidings, a monitor, a commuter of sentences; often as a herald of pardon and liberty. This was, perhaps, well.

But he has gone further. He has become the patron and friend (that is, he feels sure that he is the friend, though the gentility has appeared to almost every one but himself extremely dubious) of the liberated criminal. He has listened to the morning penitence, and believed in his or her penitence. Mind I don't say that such penitence is always feigned, and that the hypocrite is always to be found in the prison cell. There's no satisfaction in reading this kind of thing. Why, he hasn't even given me a body a nause except his wife, and she is only Susan!!"

Gently, gently, if you please. I will satisfy your curiosity, as far as may be done consistently. My wife had neither mother, brother, nor sister living. My family have no more to do with the story than Susan. I recently somewhat often quoted potentate the "Emperor of China."

As to nouses—that is, family names—where is the use of my story then, if any? They wouldn't be the true ones, you know.

Then I do, won't it?

Nathan, I said my wife's venerable papa, one morning to me (my baptismal appellation is Nathan), "you want a carriage, do you not?"

"Yes, Sir; I have not yet found the right sort of man, I believe. Do you happen to know of any sober, discreet, trust-worthy person in that line, my dear Sir?"

A most excellent one, Nathan. Poor fellow! he has been very badly used, and I shall be really glad to be the means of placing him in a position to show his worth and retrieve his misfortunes."

"Does he understand the management of horses?"

"Of course. That is, I have no doubt he does. He is a very intelligent man, and knows a great deal more than many of his class, especially about theology," said the old gentleman, with conviction.

"But has he been used to horses, Sir?" I asked.

"I—a—suspect he has; he must have been; for he instantly accepted the situation when I proposed it to him."

"But, my dear Sir," I ventured to object, "Susan is timid, you know, and I am very particular; and then, you know—"

"Oh, I have already spoken to Susan, who is quite pleased with him, and I shall really take it as a personal favor, my dear Nathan, if you engage William!" exclaimed Mr. Shepherd.

(I have named him, after all, you see! The fact is, I perceive I can't go on calling him My Wife's Father in every other paragraph. It spoils the style.)

"Say no more, Sir, William is engaged!" I felt myself compelled to answer.

The next day William came. His appearance was decidedly in his favor. That is, provided he had applied for a vacant place as missionary instead of the theatre.

"Have you been used to horses?" I asked him.

"I have been used to many things in my time, Sir," replied William, meekly.

"Were horses among them?"

"Horses, Sir—and asses also!" he answered, in the same tone.

For a moment I fancied the man concealed a double meaning under his last reply. But looking at his solemn face, my suspicion vanished.

"Very well, William," said I, and giving him a few directions, he was duly installed.

William drove well, but after a while I noticed that the horses seemed strangely languid in the morning. Indeed, they used them but a few hours each day, and never in the evenings. I walked round to the stable, which was in a court some distance from the house, one afternoon. William was deeply absorbed in reading Thomas à Kempis.

"William," said I, "is any thing the matter with the horses? They didn't seem bright this morning."

"It is doubtless the oats," he replied, first putting a marker in the book and placing it in his breast; "I have remarked that they had a peculiar flavor."

"Then buy better at once." And I handed him a twenty-dollar note.

For a week or two the horses improved. Then the same symptoms began to reappear.

About this time my wife and I went to the seashore for a twelve days' stay, leaving the house and the keys with Mr. She, herd.

"William," said I, "you had better consult a veterinary about the horses, and exercise them very gently while we are away."

"What the horses need, Sir," answered William, "is oats and exercise alternately."

It was remarkable what correct language the man used.

"Get it, then, and give it to them," said I, handing him money.

"There was twenty-five cents change from the purchase of oats which I omitted to return you, Sir," remarked William, producing it as solemnly as if it had been a treasure unexpectedly recovered.

"He is honest, at all events," thought I.

"He'll be a treasure to you, Nathan," cried Mr. Shepherd, when I told him of this little incident.

The fifteenth day after our arrival at the seaside I received the following missive:

"DEAR SIR,—I beg leave to inform you that your coachman is taking advantage of your being away to hire your carriage and horses as a hack from the night railway trains. He visits with them every night for the 11:20 train from the North, at the depôt, and carries passengers to the hotels or to any part of the city required. Some fifty fill give me the warrant I will arrest him. But perhaps you had better come on and see for yourself.

"Hoping you will think it best to done my duty, I am yours respectfully,

"JOSEPH BYLES, Captain Police Station.

"P.S. Come on in the 11:30 train, and you will catch him, in all probability, at the depôt."

I took Captain Byles's advice, came on by that train, and actually found William in the act of ushering two gentlemen into my own carriage. A brief explanation followed.

"The veterinary," said William, as meekly as ever, "told me the horses should be exercised only at night, and not be heated. I did not like to ride about the streets without an object at night, Sir, and I thought that the money made by taking a few chance passengers now and then might be applied to the purchase of feed for the animals. Grain is enormously high now, Sir."

"Drive me to Mr. Shepherd's, and consider yourself out of my service," was my only reply.

My Wife's Father deplored this William's injudicious conduct, "which, however, he observed, was as I perceived by his explanation, solely for my benefit and that of the horses."

"Do not turn the poor fellow off, Nathan!" he exclaimed. "He thought he was acting for the best. And who knows but what humiliation, and perhaps want, may drive him to? Let me see him in the morning, and all will be right. I beg it as a personal favor."

I consented, much against my better judgment. In the morning we went to the stable. It was locked, and William was not there.

Unfortunate man!" cried Mr. Shepherd. "Ah, Nathan, I hope you may never have cause to regret your harshness." (I didn't think I ever should particularly.)

Having a commission from Susan, we went to my home.

William, whom you have so unkindly used, Nathan," said Mr. Shepherd, as he handed me the keys, "has been most careful in airing and keeping in order your house. He has come every morning for the keys, and returned them every night. That is his return for your injustice. You will find every thing in capital condition."

We entered. Every thing did seem in order down stairs. I went up to my wife's bedroom. In the fire-place in that room was fastened, with brick-work, a small iron safe, in which we kept the table and other silver ware. We had secured it all therein when we left town. It was my property and mine only. A further search revealed the complete disappearance of every portable article of value in the house.

I looked at my tender-hearted companion. He did not appear to advantage, I thought, under the circumstances, though he was Susan's father, and though I certainly respected him highly in that connection.

"What think you of the 'unfortunate man' now, Sir?" I inquired, somewhat ironically I am afraid.

"It is sad, Nathan, it is very sad," answered the old gentleman, with humility.

"Sad!" cried I, indignantly; but controlling myself, "Where did you pick up William?" I asked.

"He—I—I reclaimed—that is, I thought I had reclaimed him, Nathan. But the temptation has proved too strong, I fear."

The simple fact was, My Wife's Father had taken the scoundrel out of jail, to which he had been sentenced for having used the same freedom with the safe of a religious book publisher, to whom he was colporteur, as he had with mine.

The "unfortunate man" is once more in forced seclusion, and I have a shrewd suspicion that he is again the object of Mr. Shepherd's philanthropic solicitude. But the restoration of the stolen plate, or even the revelation of its whereabouts, has not yet resulted from the benevolent perseverance of My Wife's Father.

III.

"SUSAN, my love," said I, one evening, not very long after the above experience, "did you ever hear of pocket-handkerchiefs having melted away in hot water, or of soap having the power to render them invisible?"

"No," replied Susan, innocently. "Why, my dear Nathan? Did you?"

"No. But I have remarked a steady decrease in the number of mine for the last few weeks."

"How odd! That's very strange. Perhaps you have lost them."

"I am sure I have not. But I am not so sure that the laundress has."

"Oh! it never can be the laundress!" interrupted my wife. "She is incapable of such a thing, I am very confident!"

"What makes you so confident, my dear? Where did you get her?"

"Oh! she must be a good woman, for she was specially recommended to me by father, who knew her before, it appeared."

(I have omitted to state that, from reasons of delicacy, I had refrained from entering into the details of her father's connection with William in my account to my wife of his rascality.)

I trust I shall not be thought disrespectful to my wife's parent if I confess that his "special recommendation" of the laundress, instead of causing me to share Susan's confidence, produced exactly the opposite effect upon my mind.

But without pursuing the subject further then, I contrived to detect the "good woman" in flagrante delicto before long, and, to spare my wife's feelings, made a covenant with the culprit that if she would quit our service, apparently of her own accord, I would say nothing about her backslidings. This was perhaps weak on my part. But I loved my wife, and Susan was reverently attached to her father, and considered him infallible.

Besides, are we not all human?

As this may be considered to the limits of a four column article, I must abbreviate somewhat, I see, my subsequent experiences of the reformatory mania of My Wife's Father.

In the progress of time I discovered, by a mathematical calculation, that the amount of sugar, tea, coffee, butter, flour, coal, and other domestic luxuries or necessities, for which I had to pay, consumed by our household of my wife, myself, and three servants, were sufficient for the comfortable maintenance of twelve persons of inordinate appetites for the good things, solid and fluid, of this world during a long period of time.

Further inquiry revealed the fact that the cook, chamber-maid, and waiter had obtained their respective places at the earnest request to me made of the benevolent "author of her being." I found that a "reformed" shop-lifter did our cooking; work; a "reclaimed" cyprian of light-fingered proclivities waited on our table; and that our cook had, previous to her "moral regeneration," been an establishment of the lowest grade for the purchase and disposal of domestic spoils similar to those the mysterious consumption of which in our own household had revived my arithmetical knowledge. All three had been more or less "unjustly" secluded from the public use by the stern decree of Law.

Nor were these all my trials.

An "ingenious mechanic" whom Mr. Shepherd had "re-formed" and patronized took away from the parlor clock to repair, and forgot, in his sudden departure from virtue and the city, to return it.

A near relative of the head of "penitentiary" hired to attend my wife in her illness, left at an early stage of her patient's convalescence, carrying with her a quantity of lace and some other articles, all of which were designed to adorn the baby. A Signaki, who had, through the efforts of Mr. Shepherd, experienced "grace" both spiritual and judicial, actually dined and spent the evening with us, at the invitation of My Wife's Father, who brought him, informally, just before we sat down to table, and introduced him as "a most interesting gentleman, whom I knew privately;" he was absent for a visit in preparing for the ministry." I found out the previous history of this embryo clergyman, when, three weeks afterward, he eloped with his partner's housekeeper ("still one more unfortunate"), and no inconsiderable amount of personal property belonging to the same soft-hearted (did I only know an excellent second father by report, I fear I should have said soft-headed) philanthropist. Finally (I have, however, omitted several minor, but annoyingly disagreeable-to-encounter instances of a similar nature), Mr. Shepherd, three months ago, sought a conference with his daughter during her temporary absence from town, and induced her to receive as an honored guest Mrs. Euphemia Leech.

"Mrs. Euphemia Leech, my dear Nathan," said My Wife's Father to me on my return, "is a lady of eminent piety and benevolence, who has led a sad her life, since the decease of Professor Leech, her lamented husband, to the amelioration of woman's lot. She seeks the down-trodden, the abandoned, the despairing of her sex, and uplifts and redeems them. She is a ministering angel to her erring sisters. Passing through the city on her noble mission, she expressed a desire to visit, with me, the institutions devoted to the punishment of crime and the reformation of vice among our unfortunate fellow-creatures. She has but a few days at her disposal, and as my widower's position precluded my offering her the hospitality of my own house, Susan gladly availed herself of the occasion to do me a pleasure by inviting Mrs. Leech to become her temporary guest. You will find her an exceedingly interesting lady, I assure you." I had no resource but to accept the uncovered hoser with meekness, congratulating myself that, at all events, my guest was a reformer, and not a reformed person, and therefore possibly an honest and respectable woman.

Mrs. Euphemia Leech, whose "noble mission" "left her but a few days to dispose of" in this city, has now been an inmate of my house for three months; her, for aught I see, does she manifest any disposition to afflict us by her departure.

Neither my wife nor myself can conscientiously aver that we have found her an "exceedingly interesting lady." She is oratorical, and her oratory is divided—like the poetry in Mr. "American Leader"—into three classes, the didactic, the pathetic, and the sentimental. The pathetic is, perhaps, her most frequent style. Her subject is ever the same:

"WOMAN'S LOT." She has bemoaned "the lot," denounced "the lot," and bullied "the lot" for our sympathetic consideration. She has said every thing about "the lot" (and nothing to speak of about any thing that could, perhaps, be said, but one thing, and that is the whole truth. She has, apparently, done every thing that could be done for "the lot" but one thing, and that is—to improve it.

For her father's sake Susan has hitherto borne the eternal jargon of her guest with extraordinary patience. With the exception of a slight remark or two about the apparent difficulty of disposing to advantage of "the lot," over which Mrs. Leech seems to hold, as it were, a proprietary claim, and a hint that she might possibly find it more profitable to exchange it for a "lot" in a more eligible situation (which observation was received with lofty scorn), I too have exhibited a stoicism of which I am rather proud. But even Susan's endurance has reached its limit, especially as the cumulative evidences of her parent's too credulous benevolence—some of which I have herein described—have been too frequent and glaring to permit my continued successful concealment of their true significance from her.

She sorrowfully confesses that her father's heart outweighs his judgment.

Has, moreover, is forced to the melancholy conviction that it will be perfectly useless to attempt his "reformation."

THE ROMANCE OF A POOR YOUNG WOMAN.

I.

WERE I first here Jane Ann Hubbs (the "poor young woman") she was at present, some years ago, eighteen, with a coarse, staring sort of beauty, plenty of bust, large extremities, and the upper lip, i. e., her hands, reddened and "knuckley" by her occupation.

For Jane Ann, or, as she was always called by her mother, Jaynar—was my washer-woman's daughter and professional assistant.

Jaynar's education had been somewhat neglected. At least I judged so from her conduct, using the objective for the possessive case; saying "them things" instead of those things; clenching "that" with "it;" with a "them" with "this," and "that there bosom, Mr. Tomkins, wouldn't bleach like this here one, nohow, Sir;" and from the fact that, in my youthful credulity, she had actually made out herself, "drawers" were written "drawrs," "socks" "soks," and "handkerchiefs" eccentrically varied from "handkercher" to "handkercha," with several ingenious modifications between.

She was given to cheap perfumery.

This I felt sure of from the fact that the peculiar odor of that article—which is ever the same by whatever title the fluid may designate itself—always pervaded my chamber on each occasion of her visits, and for some time after her departure; and because I was continually finding in one of my clean clothes before putting them away, in order to get that same peculiar odor out of their folds.

Her tastes were also refined.

Of this I became aware by her imparting to me the information, that of all the dramatic entertainments extant she infinitely preferred "Jack Sheppard."

She occasionally made use of language the reverse of polite.

Thus—but I prefer leaving this assertion unsupported by an example.

Take her "for all in all," however, Jaynar Hubbs was—not a cultivated young woman by any manner of means.

Mrs. Hubbs was, if possible, even less cultivated than her daughter (her only child, by-the-by), but she was an excellent laundress; and, for that matter, so was Jaynar. Mrs. Hubbs, herself, while a plodding, hard-working, humble old body, without an ambition beyond that of producing the whitest and most brilliant linen, was a treasure. Mrs. Jaynar Hubbs had a soul above soap and flat-irons. In her inmost being Jaynar was ambitious. Let me tell you how I discovered this trait of Jaynar's character:

In the saunterings about town I often encountered Jaynar with her basket. And, nearly always, I found her gazing—gloating, I should rather say—reverent, glittering gazing at the jewelry, the silver, or the silken draperies of a dry-goods-store window.

"Oh, if I was only rich!" I heard her exclaim, under such circumstances.

"And suppose you were, Miss Jane?" said I, approaching her.

"Oh, it's you, Mr. Tomkins!" cried she, somewhat fluttered. But instantly collecting herself—"why, if I was rich I'd buy loads of them there things—pointing to the object of her admiration—"and I'd be lovely, Mr. Tomkins?"

"They are handsome," I replied, gravely; "but something more than money is needed to render one lovely, Miss Jane."

"Sakes alive! what is it, then, I'd like to know? Good looks, I suppose! Well! there's them that has such jewels on, this day, Mr. Tomkins, that ain't no great scratch for good looks neither!"

And Jaynar contemplated her own features in the jeweler's mirror with decided satisfaction.

"I do not allude to looks," said I, "but to behavior, taste, and breeding. Fine feathers don't always make fine birds, Miss Jane. Jewels and rich apparel are but thin disguises at the best when worn by vulgar ostentation or ignorant conceit. Take my word for it—"

But Jaynar rather sulkily bade me good-day, saying, in an undertone, as she turned away, "I guess some folks are as good as other folks if they aren't book-learned;" and adding something in a still lower key, of which I could only catch the words "Mother's Aid." To whom Jaynar applied this intelligent epithet is of no consequence.

My intercourse with Miss Hubbs rather declined thereafter from this point of our acquaintance, she choosing to restrict herself to a dignified discharge of her business duties toward me in the laundry line, and sending the linen to my chambers as brief and rigidly professional as possible.

I can not say that I greatly regretted this change in Jaynar's deportment, for I had never found much fascination in her society, and her shortened stay in my rooms visibly lessened the strength and exasperation of the perfumed odor to which I have before alluded under the title of cheap perfumery—a species of fragrance for whose enjoyment my taste—perhaps I had better say smell—has never been cultivated appreciatively.

In the course of a twelvemonth I went abroad, and remained away nearly seven years in Europe.

Shortly after my return I went in search of my old washer-woman.

The house was occupied by other tenants, who knew nothing of Mrs. Hubbs, they being the fourth or fifth series of lessees of the premises since her departure from this neighborhood.

From the grocer at the corner, however, I learned that the old woman was dead, and Jaynar married.

"And does Miss Jane—that was—still continue in the laundry line?" I inquired of the grocer.

"Bless you, no, Sir! She's in the soap and tallier way now; or her husband is, at least," replied the grocer.

"Ah! she married a tallow-chandler, eh?"

"Well, not exactly that. Old Weevil's a sort of boss soaper, I believe. He has a lot or more who go round with their carts and collect the soap-fat and scrapings from door to door, and he pays them for 'em. Then he has the stuff in a kind of wholesale way to the regular chandlers. He's a mighty sharp chap is old Weevil, but hasn't any education; can't read or write, I believe, and so couldn't, or at any rate hasn't, set up a regular chandlery."

There are many tallow-chandlers who are men of education, and even cultivated gentlemen doubtless (indeed I am personally acquainted with three such); but nevertheless the "style" of several successful members of that "guild" I chanced to meet, I could not help smiling at the grocer's idea that a boss soaper—whatever the style of several successful members of that "guild" I chanced to meet, I could not help smiling at the grocer's idea that a mighty sharp chap is old Weevil, but hasn't any education; can't read or write, I believe, and so couldn't, or at any rate hasn't, set up a regular chandlery."

There are many tallow-chandlers who are men of education, and even cultivated gentlemen doubtless (indeed I am personally acquainted with three such); but nevertheless the "style" of several successful members of that "guild" I chanced to meet, I could not help smiling at the grocer's idea that a boss soaper was a tallow-chandler in a kind of wholesale way to the regular chandlers. He's a mighty sharp chap is old Weevil, but hasn't any education; can't read or write, I believe, and so couldn't, or at any rate hasn't, set up a regular chandlery."

There are many tallow-chandlers who are men of education, and even cultivated gentlemen doubtless (indeed I am personally acquainted with three such); but nevertheless the "style" of several successful members of that "guild" I chanced to meet, I could not help smiling at the grocer's idea that a boss soaper was a tallow-chandler in a kind of wholesale way to the regular chandlers. He's a mighty sharp chap is old Weevil, but hasn't any education; can't read or write, I believe, and so couldn't, or at any rate hasn't, set up a regular chandlery."

"Ah! she married a tallow-chandler, eh?"

"Well, not exactly that. Old Weevil's a sort of boss soaper, I believe. He has a lot or more who go round with their carts and collect the soap-fat and scrapings from door to door, and he pays them for 'em. Then he has the stuff in a kind of wholesale way to the regular chandlers. He's a mighty sharp chap is old Weevil, but hasn't any education; can't read or write, I believe, and so couldn't, or at any rate hasn't, set up a regular chandlery."

There are many tallow-chandlers who are men of education, and even cultivated gentlemen doubtless (indeed I am personally acquainted with three such); but nevertheless the "style" of several successful members of that "guild" I chanced to meet, I could not help smiling at the grocer's idea that a boss soaper was a tallow-chandler in a kind of wholesale way to the regular chandlers. He's a mighty sharp chap is old Weevil, but hasn't any education; can't read or write, I believe, and so couldn't, or at any rate hasn't, set up a regular chandlery."

"Ah! she married a tallow-chandler, eh?"

"Well, not exactly that. Old Weevil's a sort of boss soaper, I believe. He has a lot or more who go round with their carts and collect the soap-fat and scrapings from door to door, and he pays them for 'em. Then he has the stuff in a kind of wholesale way to the regular chandlers. He's a mighty sharp chap is old Weevil, but hasn't any education; can't read or write, I believe, and so couldn't, or at any rate hasn't, set up a regular chandlery."

There are many tallow-chandlers who are men of education, and even cultivated gentlemen doubtless (indeed I am personally acquainted with three such); but nevertheless the "style" of several successful members of that "guild" I chanced to meet, I could not help smiling at the grocer's idea that a boss soaper was a tallow-chandler

"No, you needn't," replied Mrs. W. "I guess I'll put it on. It'll carry easy that-a-way."

And suiting the action to the word, she clasped the glittering trophy round her wrist, and walked majestically out of the place.

The cheap jewelry period has expired, thought I.

"Do you know that lady?" asked I of the salesman, whom I knew quite well.

"No, do you know her, Mr. Tomkins? She has a smack of 'shoddy' about her, I should say."

"Probably," I answered; "or the equivalent of shoddy. Her name was Jaynan Hubbs when I first knew her, and her mother was my laundress. Subsequently she married a 'boss' soap-fat man, as I was told, of the name of Weevil, and—"

"Weevil!" exclaimed the salesman. "Why, that's the man that has made such a pile of money out of a contract for the hides, hoofs, and the other remains of the slaughtered cattle of one of our armies. He's just bought Ducksandrake's splendid house out, Gooseberry Street, you know, and they're going to give a tremendous opening ball or soirée, or something, next week."

"What, at this season?"

"Oh! they'll find plenty of people to go. Besides, now I remember, it's a matinée, by-the-by. So he was a soap-fat man, eh? Ha! ha! ha!"

Two days after this little incident I received, very much to my surprise, the following card, splendidly embossed and engraved in bronzed letters "old English" style:

Mr. and Mrs. Weeville

AT HOME

May the —th, from 2 till 6 P.M.

[RECEPTION AND BANQUET.]

No. 5 Gooseberry Street.

I did not go, however. My afternoon, that day, was spent in one of the Soldiers' Hospitals, where I wrote sixteen letters from sixteen poor fellows to their families. It wasn't as brilliant an entertainment as I should have enjoyed at Mrs. Weevil(le)'s, probably. But quite as useful and instructive, I fancy.

At any rate, I don't regret my absence from the one, nor my presence at the other scene of our domestic drama.

Here ends, for the present, my "ROMANCE OF A POOR YOUNG WOMAN."

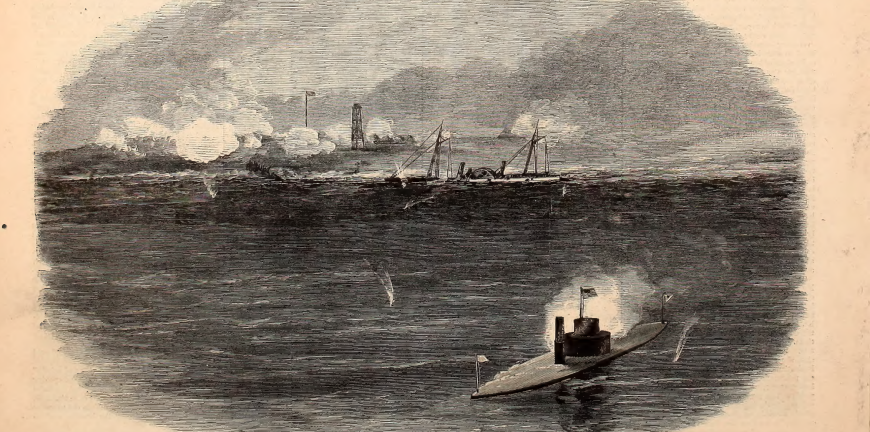
THE MALDEN BANK MURDER.

THE murder of FRANK CONVERSE, on the 15th of last December, by EDWARD GREEN, whose portrait is given herewith, has excited the most intense interest. The murder was committed in the prosperous village of Malden, a few miles out of Boston, on the Boston and Maine Railroad. It was done at noonday, in a Bank, situated in the business part of the town, and yet so secretly that it left no trace of the doer, and the murderer passed from the bank-logoffice to his own place of business, with no more suspicion attaching to him than to any other man at that time walking the streets of Malden. The victim was a boy of seventeen, son of the President of the bank, and was alone in the directors' room, in charge of $5000, which had just been counted out to him by the cashier for business use. The murderer having made a visit to the bank earlier in the day for the purpose of reconnoissance, immediately upon the departure of the cashier returned, and finding young Converse alone, drew from his pocket a six-shooter, and, placing the muzzle within a foot of the boy's head, fired, the ball entering back of the ear; another discharge was then lodged in the temple of the victim, who had fallen to the floor. To secure the bills in the drawer was the work of a moment, and the next the murderer mingled with the innocent passengers on the street. That a murder and robbery had been committed was all that transpired at the time. About three weeks afterward certain suspicious circumstances led to the apprehension of Mr. Bailey, who, upon examination, was acquitted. The name of the real murderer was not mentioned or thought of in connection with the crime; he was not one of the witnesses on Bailey's case, nor was he even mentioned in the inquest. But the "miraculous organ" through which the secret of murder always finds its way into publicity speaks through silence no less surely than through overt expression; and, in this case, the fact that there was one individual—the Postmaster of Malden—who never showed any interest in the murder, nor in the most casual manner ever mentioned it, drew the attention of two detectives, Heath and Jones, who were determined to ferret out the criminal, and also of several prominent citizens. His utter silence was the beginning of the net which soon began to close about the murderer. The other steps followed rapidly after, and as a natural consequence. The bills which had been taken were all of the Malden bank; the Postmaster was known to be involved in debt, and this would doubtless have been the motive leading to the crime. Totally unaware of suspicion, and placed, as it seemed, by his responsible position in society beyond all chances of suspicion, he would venture to pass, at least in Boston, a considerable amount of the plunder in payment of his dues. He was watched by a special detective every time he came to the city; and, step by step, the suspicious which had been aroused ripened into conviction. He had paid a debt of $700 in Malden Bank bills, and other debts of $20 and under in the same money. This, taken in connection with the remarkable silence of Green on the subject of the murder, furnished indubitable proof of his guilt, and he was arrested Sunday evening, February 7, at the residence of Mr. Lamson, whether he had been invited. He exhibited very little feeling, but confessed his guilt as soon as he found that he had been watched for the last month, and informed the detectives that they would find the rest of the money, part of it in the post-office, where it was concealed in an old boot, and the remainder in the attic of the Volunteer Fire-Engine House. The arrest of Green caused considerable surprise among his fellow-citizens, who had reposed the most complete trust in him for years. The photograph which we give was taken about a fortnight after the murder—over a month previous to his detection. Green is a young man of between twenty-seven and twenty-eight years of age, and rather short in stature. He has a wife and infant child. His wife is an estimable lady, and the fate of her husband excites in her the most heart-rending grief of which a true and honorable woman is susceptible.

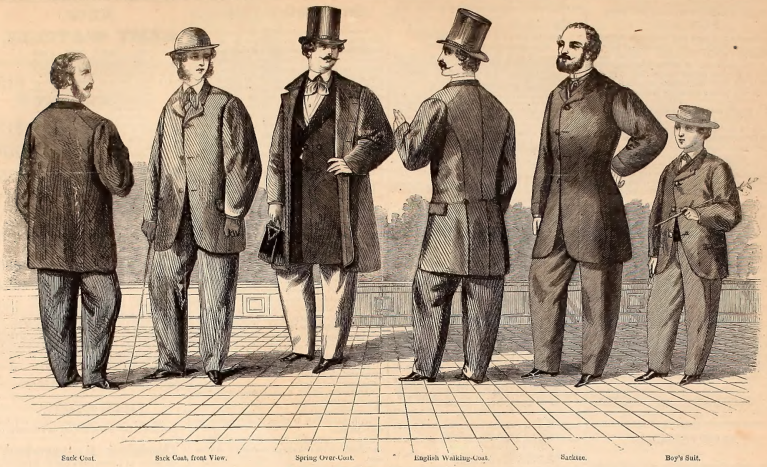
EDWARD W. GREEN.—[PHOTOGRAPHED BY MR. R. J. CHUTE, BOSTON.]

SHELLING OF A BLOCKADE-RUNNER.

WE give on this page a sketch, sent us by an occasional artist, of the destruction of an Anglo-Rebel blockade-runner, which was discovered on the morning of February 2, upon the rising of the fog which generally conceals the fleet and the shore during the dump nights of this season. She was a handsome, long, low, white, side-wheel steamer, built on the Clyde, having two smoke-stacks and two masts, of some seven hundred tons burden. The tide was down, and she was fast aground off Sullivan's Island. Four Monitors moved up in line in the beach channel, and poured their ricochet fire into her, while our heavy Parrott guns on Fort Strong (Wagner) and Battery Chatfield opened a steady fire upon her. The result was a hot engagement, which lasted all day, with all the rebel works on Sullivan's and James islands, and the destruction of the blockade-runner close to the wreck of the Isaac Smith, whose iron hull is all that remains of that steamer, imbedded in the sandy beach before the fort. The event was a source of great excitement for our brave fellows during the day, and agreeably diversified the monotony of the siege.



SHELLING A BLOCKADE-RUNNER AGROUND OFF SULLIVAN'S ISLAND.



Sack Coat. Sack Coat, front View. Spring Over-Coat. English Walking-Coat. Surtout. Boy's Suit.

SPRING AND SUMMER FASHIONS FOR 1864.

[FURNISHED BY MESSRS. KINTLAND, BRONSON, & CO., MANUFACTURERS AND JOBBERS OF CLOTHING, NOS. 45 AND 47 CHAMBERS STREET, AND 23 AND 25 READE STREET, NEW YORK.]

THE above plate represents a few of the various styles of garments manufactured by the extensive house above-named, for their Spring jobbing business.

The wholesale clothing trade in this country has become of such vast importance, as well in its magnitude as in the reduction of prices which it has occasioned in what may be justly regarded as one of the first necessities of man, that it deserves a place in our columns, and our patrons will doubtless be pleased to see other representations from the great warerooms of MESSRS. KINTLAND, BRONSON, & CO.

This branch of industry is of domestic origin, and was almost unknown forty years ago; the nearest approach to it in that day being the manufacture of clothing by a few individuals in this city who had branches for the sale of their goods at retail in some of the Southern cities. The demand from Southern merchants, however, which arose for clothing ready made for sale soon developed the wholesale clothing business, and prior to 1837 there were half a dozen or more houses in this city engaged exclusively in the trade, and some of them to a considerable extent. The business was almost wholly confined to the South, and the class of goods made up for the trade at that period was mainly of the lower and inferior grades. The revulsion of 1837 prostrated this as well as other branches of business, and extinguished the firms then engaged in it. With the subsequent revival of trade new houses entered into the business, other cities became identified with it, the Western country opened up new markets for its sale, and the business rapidly increased, until, in 1860, it had attained its zenith. Then came the war, and with it the loss of the Southern indebtedness, in consequence of which it again suffered a temporary reverse. But clothing is an indispensable commodity, and hence we find the business quickly revived under the management of larger, wealthier, and more experienced firms.

New York has always been the chief depôt of supply, and will always control the largest share of the business. New York clothing is famed far and wide for its excellence—the characteristics which distinguish it above the make of other cities being novelty in the designs, durability and taste in the material and trimmings, and superiority in the workmanship. In former times manufacturers hesitated at making anything above the medium grade of goods. But now, in addition to manufacturing heavy lines of the medium and lower grades, a first-class house like the one above-named is obliged also to keep a full assortment of fine goods, equal in every respect to the very best custom-made work.

There are now engaged in the wholesale clothing trade in this city alone over one hundred firms, with a capital invested of at least ten millions of dollars. The number of operatives in New York and vicinity who gain their living from the clothing trade is about 50,000, one half of whom may be employed on Government work and in the retail trade, and the other half by the wholesale trade, which contributes toward their support not far from ten millions of dollars a year wages. The amount of internal revenue which the Government derives from it is probably more than a million of dollars a year.

THE PARIS FASHIONS FOR FEBRUARY, 1864.

THE PARIS FASHIONS FOR FEBRUARY.

JANUARY'S fates have been sumptuous this year in the monde Parisien. On the subject of bonnets we have only to call the attention of our fair readers to the latest style of feather trimming, fully shown in our first Illustration (see page 141), and to state that black silk bonnets, abundantly ornamented with jet, are extremely fashionable at the present moment.

The general shape and trimming of ladies' ordinary dresses remain the same. It is only necessary to observe that high-necked robes are frequently worn for ceremonial occasions, when a profusion of passementerie decoration is de rigueur. The design of the passementerie is without importance, and may be confidently left to the taste of the wearer, as the greatest liberty prevails for the selection of every description of dress ornament, which thus has no risk of being disapproved as ridiculous.

THE ILLUSTRATIONS.

Fig. 1. Walking Dress.—Dark brown silk robe, trimmed round the bottom of the skirt with a wide band of black velvet, surmounted by a torsade of chenille and a narrow lace ruching. At an equal distance from the lower edge of the velvet band the trimming of the skirt is completed by a silk ruching of the same material. The corsage is ornamented to match. Black velvet bonnet, enlivened on one side with violet feathers, worn in the position indicated in our illustration.

Fig. 2. Ball Dress.—This robe is in grey de Tours, of a white ground, with black brocaded flowers; the three fixed flounces are trimmed with a gauze ruching, edged with narrow black lace. Each of the flounces, which incline rather to the left, is fastened by a large bow. The berthe on the corsage is provided with a corresponding trimming, and another bow decorates with a bow. The head-dress is composed of mother-of-pearl flowers and a white veil.

Fig. 3. Evening Dress.—Black moire antique robe, ornamented on the skirt by a narrow flounce, composed of violet gauze and violet ribbon. The corsage is plain, high-necked and fastened with jet buttons. From the narrow waistband depart two wide strangers in the dress material, bordered with guipure. The costume consists of a bouquet of violet ribbon and black lace, ornamented with jet pendants.

The millinery subject presents a very complete view of the best Parisian bonnet. It is a graceful combination of lace, flowers, and ribbon, vieing in the preponderating color.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

MORTON'S GOLD PENS are now sold at the same prices as before the commencement of the war; this is entirely owing to the Manufacturer's improvements in machinery, his present large Retail Business and Cash-in-Advance System; for, until he commenced advertising, his business was One-sixth and strictly sold by the Trade.

The Morton Gold Pens are the only ones sold at old prices, as the makers of all other gold pens charge the Premium on Gold, Government Tax, &c., but Morton has in no case changed his prices, Wholesale or Retail.

Of the great numbers sent by mail to all parts of the world during the last few years, not one in a thousand has failed to reach its destination in safety; showing that the Morton Gold Pen can be obtained by any one, in every part of the world, at the same price, postage only excepted.

Reader, you can have an enduring, always ready, and reliable Gold Pen, exactly adapted to your hand and style of writing, which will do your writing vastly superior to Steel Pens; and at the present almost universal High-Pressure Price of everything, you can have a Morton Gold Pen cheaper, in proportion to the labor spent upon it and material used, than any other Gold Pen in the World. If you want one, see "The Pen is Mightier than the Sword," in next column.

The Hero of	The Capture of
DONELSON,	100,000 REBELS,
VICKSBURG,	500 CANNON,
and	"
CHATTANOOGA.	200,000 SMALL ARMS.

1,000 BOOK AGENTS WANTED, to Supply the Splendid New Book, GENERAL GRANT AND HIS CAMPAIGNS. With a Sketch of his Life, Civil and Military. BY CULLEN K. LANDON.

Illustrated with an accurate Portrait on Steel, and Views of the Fortifications fought by Grant and his Generals.

"No terms but unconditional and immediate surrender can be accepted. I propose to move immediately on your works."—Grant to Buckner.

Our Large and Handsome Dandelene Volume. Price $1 50.

The Author, who is the Military Editor of one of the leading papers of this city, possessing unusual facilities for securing the material for this work, has produced a interesting and popular book, which is destined to have an immense circulation. Book Agents can make excellent wages by engaging in its sale.

For further particulars address DERBY & MILLER, Book Publishers, New York.  Copies sent by mail on receipt of price.

ARMY BADGES,

Watches, Gold Pens and Cases. Jewelry of all kinds at reduced rates. Send for a Circular. K. KEITH, 208 Broadway, N. Y.

J. W. EVERETT & CO.,

Will forward to any address, on receipt of order, Photographs from life of any of the prominent OFFICERS OF THE ARMY AND NAVY, STATESMEN, ACTORS, ACTRESS, FOREIGN CELEBRITIES, ETC., ETC., 20 cents each. $1 50 per dozen. Free by mail Address J. W. EVERETT & CO., P. O. Box 1614, N. Y. City. Ent' Send for a Circular.

Engraved with Initial Letter, Old English, or complete sets $1 50, free by mail. Trade supplied. JOHN F. FIELDS & CO., 409 Broadway, N. Y.

Two Dollars made from twenty cts., call and examine, or ten stamps free by mail for 30c. Retail for $2, by R. L. WOLCOTT, 170 Canal Square, N. Y.

"THE PEN IS MIGHTIER THAN THE SWORD."

THE GOLD PEN.—THE BEST OF ALL PENS,

MORTON'S GOLD PENS,

THE BEST PENS IN THE WORLD.

On receipt of any of the following sums in Cash, the Subscriber will send by return mail, or otherwise, as directed, a Gold Pen or Pens—selecting the same according to description, viz:

GOLD PENS WITHOUT CASES.

For 25 cents, the Magic Pen; for 38 cents, the Lucky Pen; for 50 cents, the Admiral Pen; for 75 cents, the Elegant Pen; and for $1, the Excelsior Pen.—These Pens are all numbered, but vary in size from numbers 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 respectively.

FINE BARREL PENS IN SILVER-PLATED EXTENSION CASES, WITH PENCILS.

For 50 cents, the Reliable Pen; for 63 cents, the Lucky Pen; for $1, the Always-Ready Pen; for $1 25, the Diamond Pen; and for $1 50, the Excelsior Pen.

These are Well-Finished, Good-Writing Gold Pens, with Iridonia Points, for everyday wear—pens of which you will far outlast a gross of the best Steel Pens; although they are sometimes sold, by peddlers, and others, as such.

MORTON'S WARRANTED PENS.

The name "A. Morton," or "Number," and "Quality," are stamped on the Engraving Pens, which pens are warranted for six months, except against accident.

The Number indicates size exactly. No. 1 being the smallest, No. 6 the largest, adapted for the pocket; No. 4 the medium, and No. 5 the largest Engraving Gold Pen, for the desk.

Fine and Medium Nibs or all sizes and qualities. Short Nibs of Numbers 4, 5, 6, and 7, and made only of first quality.

The Long and Short Nibs are fine polished; the Medium Nibs are broad, easy, and elastic. The Nibs on engravings are fac-similes of the sizes and styles.

GOLD PENS, WITHOUT SILVER CASES.

For $2 05 a No. 1 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 3d quality.

For $1 60 a No. 2 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 3d quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 4th quality.

For $1 25 a No. 3 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 3d quality.

For $1 50, a No. 4 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 3d quality.

For $1 75, a No. 5 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 2d quality.

For $2 25, a No. 6 Pen; $2 75 a No. 7 Pen; $3 25 a No. 8 Pen; $4 a No. 9 Pen; $5 a No. 10 Pen.—all 1st quality.

THE SAME GOLD PENS, IN SILVER EXTENSION CASES, WITH PENCILS.

For $1 50 a No. 2 Pen, 1st quality; or a No 3 Pen, 3d quality.

For $1 75, a No. 2 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 3d quality.

For $2 00, a No. 3 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 3d quality.

For $2 50 a No. 4 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 3d quality.

For $3 00, a No. 5 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 2d quality.

For $3 50, a No. 6 Pen, 1st quality.

GOLD PENS, ALL FIRST QUALITY, IN SILVER-MOUNTED PENCILS, WITH CASES.

For $2 00 a No. 4 Pen; for $2 25 a No. 5 Pen for $2 75 a No. 6 Pen; for $3 50 a No. 7 Pen.

For $4 00 a No. 8 Pen; for $5 a No. 9 Pen; and for $6 a No. 10 Pen.

The "1st Quality" are pointed with the very best Iridonia Points, carefully selected, and none of this quality are sold with the slightest imperfection which skill and close observation can detect.

The "2d Quality" are superior to any Pens made by him previous to the year 1860.

"The 3d Quality" he intends shall equal in respect to durability, elasticity and free-writing facilities (the only true considerations) any Gold Pens made elsewhere.

The 4th Quality are the Pens which, in view of the fact that, previous to opening his New and Patented Machines, he could not have made the Good-Writing and Reliable Pens, for the price, had the Gold been furnished gratuitously.

Parties ordering must in all instances specify the "Name" or the "Number" and "Quality" of the Pens wanted, and be particular to describe the kind they prefer, whether of a fine or coarse point, &c., &c.

All remittances sent by mail in registered letters are at his risk; and he will not send twenty cents (the charge for registering), in addition to the price of goods ordered, I will guaranty their safe delivery.

Parties sending Gold or silver will be allowed the full premium on the day received.

TO CLUBS.—A discount of 10 per cent. will be allowed on sums of $5, of 15 per cent. on $10, and of 20 per cent. on $50, if sent to one address at one time.

A. MORTON,

No. 25 Maiden Lane, New York.

BAKER'S RHEUMATIC BALM.
BAKER'S FEVER COOLER.
BAKER'S LIVER INVIGORATOR.
BAKER'S CROUP ALLEVIATOR.

are four remedies which are justly should ever be without. Price $1 per bottle each.

Also,

BAKER'S KIDNEY AND GRAVEL REMEDIES, which are invaluable.

PRINCIPAL DEPOT:

No. 154 Tenth Street, South Fourth Avenue.

Remedies sent to any address upon receipt of price.

COMPETITION DEFIED!

AND ELEGANT TWO DOLLAR CHAIN

We offer to sell our WATCH, which is of the MOST SUBSTANTIAL MANUFACTURE, AN ACCURATE TIME-KEEPER, and in Elegant Hunting patterns, at the low price of TEN DOLLARS.

We therefore recommend all wanting either an RELIABLE GOLD or SILVER WATCH, Hunting Cases, to remit us $10, when they will receive a handsome Watch, selected by ourselves, sent, sealed and post-paid, at our expense.

Our CHAIN is the admiration of all those who have seen it. In beauty and cheapness it cannot be surpassed. ONLY TWO DOLLARS.

 Recollect, the OLD ESTABLISHED AND RELIABLE AGENCY, where all orders are attended to with the utmost promptitude, carefulness and accuracy, and forwarded to their destination in the most compact, reliable and expeditious manner.

Address THOMAS ORMSBY,
General Purchasing Agent, 93 Nassau St., N. Y.

Brandreth's Pills.

The weak, the consumptive, rheumatic, costive, bilious, and delicate, after some days' use, will find renewed strength and life pervade every organ of their frames.

Every dose makes the blood purer. The nerves commence in the arteries and terminate in the veins. These pills, as a first effect, act upon the arterial blood, keeping the circulation, by which impurities are deposited in the veins, and they throw off such collections into the bowels. Observe, also, the energy derived from Brandreth's pills, expel them from the system. When first used, the pills may occasion griping, and even make the patient feel worse. This is an excellent sign, and shows the disease will soon be cured.—No great good is often achieved without some trouble in its attainment, and this rule applies to the recovery of health.

But Brandreth's Pills are innocent and sure to do good. See B. BRANDRETH on the Government Stamp in white.

Principal office Brandreth's Building, New York.

Caution
FROM
The American Watch Company.

It having come to our knowledge that imitations of the American Watch have been put upon the market in great numbers, calculated, by their utter worthlessness, to injure the reputation of our genuine products—to protect our own interests and those of the public from imposition, we again publish the trade marks by which our Watches may invariably be known.

We manufacture four styles of Watches:

The FIRST has the name

"AMERICAN WATCH CO., Waltham, Mass.," engraved on the inside plate.

The SECOND has the name

"APPLETON, TRACY & CO., Waltham, Mass.," engraved on the inside plate.

The THIRD has the name

"P. S. BARTLETT, Waltham, Mass.," engraved on the inside plate.

All the above styles have the name "American Watch Co." painted on the dial, and are warranted in every respect.

The FOURTH has the name

"WM. ELLERY, Boston, Mass." engraved on the inside plate, and is not named on the dial.

All the above Watches, Waltham Watches are made of various sizes, and are sold in gold or silver cases, as may be required.

It is hardly possible for us to accurately describe the numerous imitations to which we have alluded. They are usually inscribed with names so nearly approaching our own as to escape the notice of the unexperienced buyer. Some are represented as made by the "UNION WATCH CO., of Boston, Mass."—no such company existing. Some are named the "Soldier's Watch," to be sold as our FOURTH or WM. ELLERY grade, usually known as the "SOLDIER'S WATCH;" others are named the "APPLETON WATCH CO.;" others the "P. S. BARTLETT," instead of our P. S. BARTLETT, besides many varieties named in such a manner as to convey the idea that they are the veritable productions of the American Watch Company.

A little attention on the part of buyers will protect them from gross imposition.

ROBBINS & APPLETON,
Agents for the American Watch Company,
162 BROADWAY, N. Y.

Ballard Patent Breech Loading Rifles and Carbines.

Carrying the copper water-proof cartridge. Small sizes suitable for sporting purposes.

This arm is now admitted by all competitors to be superior to any other now offered to the public. Its simple construction and perfect workmanship are a sure guarantee against getting out of order. The great advantage of loading with either fixed or loose ammunition alone makes it superior to all others. These arms are made for both sporting and military purposes, and have been adopted both by the General Government and a number of States. We have the highest testimonials of their efficiency and durability.

We also offer to the Public our new Cartridge and loose ammunition adapted to this arm. This arm has no equal as a belt or pocket weapon. No one wishing a first-class arm should be without one.

For further particulars send for descriptive circular.

P. S. Do not forget that both Rifles and Pistols are furnished with either copper cartridge or loose ammunition.

MERWIN & BRAY, Sole Agents,
262 Broadway, N. Y.

General McClellan's Report

Is published entire, from the Official Copy, in a triple number of the UNITED STATES ARMY AND NAVY JOURNAL, the authoritative Military Gazette for Saturday, Feb. 20th, 1864. For sale by News Dealers generally, or sent, prepaid, to any address, on receipt of 35 cents.

W. C. CHURCH, Proprietor, 192 Broadway, N. Y.

Portable Printing Offices.

For the Army and Navy Hospitals, Merchants, Druggists, and all who wish to print neatly, cheaply, and expeditiously. Circular sent free. Depots of Type, Cuts, &c., at 25 cents. Adams Press Co., 31 Park Row, N. Y., and 59 Lincoln St., Boston.

AGENTS WANTED.—Apply to N. M. SHAFER and J. L. G. PIERPONT, 35 Broadway, N. Y.

Just Out.—Entirely New. Card Player's Assistant, with instructions how to play at different Games at Cards. Sent free of postage, on the receipt of 15 cents. Address E. SELLEW, Box 2279, P. O., Philadelphia, Pa.

NEW ARMY WATCHES.

THE GREAT NEW ARMY WATCH, expressly for SOLDIERS, in very heavy solid silver hunting cases, fine ENGLISH LEVER movement, full ruby jeweled, bandsome white dial and steel case hands. Engine turned, engraved, or plain cases, warranted a perfect time-keeper for one year. $15.

$15 GOLD COMPOSITE, same as above, exact imitation of the English ARMY WATCH, $15. $15

$25 FINE DOUBLE BOTTOM silver ENGLISH LEVER WATCH, with SECONDS, CHRONOMETER BALANCE, $25. $25

$35 AMERICAN WATCH, GENUINE AMERICAN LEVER WATCH, patent lever, sterling silver cases, full jeweled, and with Chronometer balance. $35

$45 AMERICAN LEVER, same as above with Chronometer Balance, 45. $45

$11 Silver Hunting Watch, fine movements, $11. $11

$16 Ladies very small hunting Gold Composite Watch, beautifully engraved, with sterling rank controls. Can scarcely be detected from gold, $16. $16

$85 STERLING 18 CARAT SOLID GOLD AMERICAN WATCH, in 40 pennyweight cases. $85 $85

$92 Same as above, with CHRONOMETER BALANCE. $92 $92

$38 GOLD HUNTING ENGLISH LEVER WATCH, best jewelled, Screw Balance M. S. Co. $38 $38

Constantly on hand Watches of every description.

We will send any of the above Watches, on receipt of price, free of express, to any address. Registered letters at our risk. If goods are not satisfactory, they can be returned 20 DAYS, GREAT INDUCEMENTS TO AGENTS. Send for our Price List.

Parties ordering will give their address plain. All orders promptly and carefully filled.

GEORGE A. ELY & CO., IMPORTERS, 208 BROADWAY, N. Y.

ONE CENT.

As the warm weather approaches, prepare to reduce your household expenses, by getting FISH'S KEROSENE OIL GAS

Cooking Apparatus.

One outfit $4 50 will cook a meal for 5 persons, at a cost of

ONE CENT.

Thousands of them have been sold, and the demand is increasing. A Descriptive Pamphlet furnished gratis.

WM. H. HOOPER & CO., 483 Broadway, N. Y.

N. B.—The Trade supplied on liberal terms.

We are now offering our Celebrated Gold Pens and Extension Silver Plated Holders at the following low prices for Cash:

No. 1 Magic Gold Pens and Holders, per dozen,		$5 50.
No. 2	"	7 00.
No. 3 Albertine fine Gold Pens and Holders, per doz.		8 00.
No. 4	"	9 00.
No. 5 Always Ready	"	9 00.
No. 2	"	12 00.

These Pens and Holders are all warranted, and will retail from $2 to $5 each.

An extra charge of 10 per cent. will be made on all sums of $50 and upwards. Our Pens and Holders have nice fancy Cases, combining elegance and utility, at small additional quantities. Sent by mail or express pre-paid.

Address SALISBURY BROS. & CO.,
Providence, R. I.

Agents Wanted for the Army.

New Army Watches.

Every Soldier should have the Magic Railway Time-Keeper. It has beautiful Silver Composite Hunting Cases, with new Patent Time Indicator, to save trouble of opening case, and is accurate for the time required by our Railroads. The handsomest and most useful Watch ever offered $15.

Every Officer should have the DOUBLE TIME DISPLEX STOP WATCH.—This highly useful Watch has beautiful and Strong Silver Hunting Cases, with different Indexes for Washington and London time, Sweep Seconds with Supplementary Dial and Stop, to be used for Racing, and also by Sportsmen, Artillerists, &c., in marking time, $25.

All the leading novelties can be seen by sending for our Catalogue. Watches sent by express to agents in order to ensure liberal terms.

All Watches warranted free to any address, and warranted for 12 months.

ARRANDALE & CO., Importers of Watches.
219 Broadway, New York.

Deafness Overcome by using HALLAK'S SOUND ACOUSTIC TUBES. They can be concealed. Send for a descriptive pamphlet to

P. HALLAK, 97 John Street, New York.

RHEUMATISM.

USE THE ELECTRO-METALLIC INSOLES, BELTS, AND ARMLETS. They are an INFALLIBLE REMEDY for RHEUMATISM, COLD FEET, &c. METTAM & CO., No. 429 Broadway, N. Y. Insoles, $1 per pair; Belts, $3; Armlets, $1 50 each. Sent by mail for 50 cents additional.

DO YOU WANT LUXURIANT WHISKERS OR MUSTACHES? If so, we guarantee to force them to grow heavily in six weeks upon the smoothest face without injury or injury to the skin. Sent by mail, post free, to any address, on receipt of an order. E. G. DARLAND, No. 129 Nassau Street, N. Y.

CHLOASMA, OR MOTH PATCHES.

Or Discolorations of the face, called Moth, very annoying, particularly to ladies of light complexion, as the discolored spots on the skin show more distinctly than on brunettes, but they contribute greatly in marring the beauty on dark and swarthy skin. We will remove moth patches without injuring the skin in texture or color, could no doubt be considered a great achievement in medical science. Dr. B. C. PERRY, 49 Bond Street, having devoted his whole time and attention to diseases of the skin, will guarantee to remove Moth Patches and other discolorations of the skin without injury to delicate tissue or color of the skin. His success in this, as in other branches of his specialty—DISEASES OF THE SCALP AND LOSS OF HAIR—will warrant him in guaranteeing a CURE OR NO PAY CASE. For particulars address circular letter. No charge for consultation. DR. B. C. PERRY, 49 BOND STREET, NEW YORK.

GREAT DISCOVERY.—What everybody needs: sells freely at enormous profits. Agents wanted everywhere. Full particulars and a sample mailed free for 25 cent to any address on receipt of 30 cents. Address C. J. MARTIN & CO., Box No. 1073, Philadelphia, Pa.

J. H. Winslow & Co.,

100,000

WATCHES, CHAINS, &c., &c.

Worth $500,000.

To be sold for One Dollar each without regard to value, and not to be paid for till you know what you are to get.

SPLENDID LIST!!

Of Articles to be sold for One Dollar each.

100 Gold Hunting Cased Watches.....	$100 00 each.
100 Gold Watches.....	60 00 each.
100 Ladies' Gold Watches	35 00 each.
500 Ladies' and Gent's Silver Watches ..	15 00 each.
2000 Vert and Neck Chains.....	5 00 to 10 00 each.
3000 Gold Band Bracelets	5 00 to 10 00 each.
2000 " "	3 00 to 5 00 each.
3000 Cameo Brooches	4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Mosaic and Jet Brooches	4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Lava and Florentine Brooches..	4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Coral, Opal, and Em. Brooches.	4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Cameo Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Mosaic and Jet Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Lava and Florentine Ear Drops.	4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Coral, Em., and Opal Ear Drops	4 00 to 6 00 each.
5100 Gent's Breast Pins	2 50 to 6 00 each.
3000 Watch Keys.....	2 00 to 6 00 each.
5000 Fob and Ribbon Slides	2 00 to 6 00 each.
5000 Sets of Room Studs.....	2 50 to 6 00 each.
5000 Sleeve Buttons.....	2 50 to 6 00 each.
6000 Plain Rings.....	2 50 to 5 00 each.
6000 Stone Set Rings.....	2 50 to 6 00 each.
6000 Lockets.....	2 50 to 10 00 each.
2000 Sets Ladies' Jewelry.....	5 00 to 10 00 each.
10000 Gold Pens, Silver M'ted Holders	4 00 to 5 00 each.
10000 Gold Pens, with Silver Extension
Cases and Pencils	4 00 to 6 00 each.

All of the above list of Goods will be sold for one dollar each. Certificates of all the various articles, stating what each one can have, are first put into envelopes, sealed up, and mixed; and when ordered, are taken out without regard to choice, and sent by mail, thus giving all a fair chance. On receipt of the Certificate, you will see what you can have, and then it is at your option to send one dollar and take the article or not.

In all transactions by mail, we shall charge for forwarding the Certificates, paying postage, and doing the business, 25 cents each, which must be inclosed when the Certificate is sent for. Five Certificates will be sent for $1; eleven for $3; thirty for $5; sixty-five for $10; and a hundred for $15.

AGENTS.—Those acting as Agents will be allowed ten cents on every Certificate ordered by them, provided their remittance amounts to one dollar. Agents will collect 25 cents for every Certificate, and remit 15 cents to us, either in cash or postage stamps. Great caution should be used by our correspondents in regard to giving their correct address, Town, County, and State. Address

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,

208 Broadway, New York.

VETERAN Solid Silver, $1 00.

J.A.MILLER C.O.B. 5TH N.Y.V.

Veteran Soldiers.

We are now prepared to furnish all Loyal Veteran Fire for all the 45 Regiments and Corps now in the field, at $1 50 each. Also all the various Army Badges worn by the different Armies, by the single one, 100, or 1000.

Sent to any part of the country by mail. Send for a circular.

DROWNE & MOORE,
Manufacturing Jewelers,
208 Broadway, New York.

War Songs for Freemen.

Dedicated to the Army of the United States, with Appropriate Music, 20 cts. CAMP SONGS. A collection of NATIONAL, PATRIOTIC AND SOCIAL SONGS for the Volunteers, 12 cts. The above books contain both Words and Music. Copies will be sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of price. OLIVER DITSON & CO., Publishers, Boston.

$75 A MONTH !!.—want to hire Agents in every county at $75 a month, expenses paid, to sell my new cheap Family Sewing Machines. Address S. MADISON, Alfred, Maine.

WATCHES
FOR
THE ARMY.

Superbly finished watches, the beauty of which is only equaled by their cheapness.—N. Y. Weekly, July 25th.

Particularly valuable for officers in the army, and travelers.—Frank Leslie's, July 25th.

Perfect, best and cheapest time-pieces ever offered. —N. Y. Illustrated News, Jan. 23.

Magic Time Observers,
The Perfection of Mechanism!

Being a Hunting, or Open Face, or Lady's or Gentleman's Watch combined, with Patent Self-winding Improvement.

A most pleasing novelty. One of the prettiest, most convenient, and decidedly the best and cheapest timepiece for general and reliable use ever offered. It has within it and connected with its machinery the most wonderful attachment, rendering a key entirely unnecessary. The cause of this Watch are compact motive metals, the other one being fine 16 carat gold. It has the improved ruby action lever movement, and is warranted as accurate timepieces. Price, superbly engraved, per case of half dozen, $264. Sample watches in neat morocco cases, $35. If sent by mail, the postage is 36 cents; registering, 50 cents.

Silver Watches!
First-Class Hunting Time-Pieces.

FOR ACCURACY OF MOVEMENT, BEAUTY OF MATERIAL, AND, ABOVE ALL, CHEAPNESS IN PRICE, THESE WATCHES ARE UNEQUALED.

UNIVERSAL APPROBATION!

An imitation so faithful that it can hardly be detected by the most experienced judges. The movements, being of two metals, the outer one first quality Silver and the inner one German Silver, it can not be impaired by putting or heavy engraving, making it not only in appearance, but in durability, the best resemblance of Solid Sterling Silver in existence.

The sale of these watches in the army is a source of enormous profit, retailing, as they very readily do, at $25 and upward. Many hundred dollars may be made in a single day-day by any one of ordinary business tact!

As Watches of this class, having numerous cases, beautifully engraved, white enamel dial, and fancy and hands, in any variety order, for the half price, $12 to $16; postage, $5 38; registering, 99 cts. Sold only by the case. Can be readily sent by mail.

☞ TERMS CASH, INVARIABLY IN ADVANCE. No agents employed; buyers must deal direct with us. All money is sent us by express or mail in a registered letter, as it is at our risk! Orders will be duly, promptly and faithful attention.

HUBBARD BROS., Sole Importers.
Broadway, cor. Courtlandt St., New York.

The best selling Book yet.

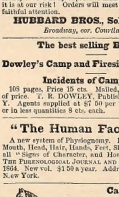
Dowley's Camp and Fireside Life'y. No 1.

Incidents of Camp Life,

168 pages. Price 15 cts. Mailed, post-paid, on receipt of price. T. R. DOWLEY, Publisher, 13 Park Row, N. Y. Agents supplied at $7 50 per 100; 96 cts. per doz.; or in less quantities 8 cts. each.

"The Human Face Divine."

A new system of Physiognomy. Eyes, Ears, Nose, Lips, Mouth, Head, Hair, Hands, Feet, Walk, Complexion, with all "Signs of Character, and How to Read Them," in PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL AND LIFE ILLUSTRATED for 1864. Now out. $1 20 a year. ADDRESS FOWLER & WELLS, New York.



Cavalry Badges.

Accurate and beautiful fac-simile design of our newest style Cavalry Badge, sent free to any address on receipt of price, with Name, Co. and Regiment handsomely engraved thereon.

Solid Silver.....$3 00
Solid Silver, letters in gold relief..... 3 50
Solid gold..... 6 00
Solid gold enameled. 7 00
Also our style Artillery Badge, and every style Corps Badge worn by the Army. Send for our illustrated Circular. Address C. L. BALCH & CO., Jewelers, Troy, N. Y.

To Compositors.—Wanted, three strictly first-class Compositors, used to Book-work. Apply to MR. MANN, Foreman of HARPER & BROTHERS' Composing Room, N. Y.

ALL ARTICLES FOR SOLDIERS

At Baltimore, Washington, and all places occupied by Union troops, should be sent by ADAMS EXPRESS CO., No. 74 Broadway. Sutlers charged low rates.

Union Playing Cards.

Colonel for King, Goddess of Liberty for Queen, and Major for Jack. Ornamented suits of the pack. Eagle, Shield, Stars, and Flags are the suits, and you can play all the usual games. Pretty packs, by mail, post-paid, on receipt of price. The usual discount to the trade. Send for a circular. Address AMERICAN CARD COMPANY, 74 Chambers St., or 74 Broadway, New York.

Military and Naval

COLLECTIONS and BANKING OFFICE.—SCOTT, BROWN & CO., No. 9 Park Place, New York, adjust and collect every variety of just claims against the Government or States. Bond-Books containing laws, &c., sent by mail, free.

In Press—Excelsior Music Book for Violin, Flute, Fife, or Cornet. I love that dear old Flag the best, piece. When the boys come home. Your fortune is too small for me. My love is on the battle-field, cath 25c. Union Songster No. mailed. MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS Illustrated price list sent on receipt of post stamp.

FREDERICK BLUME, 203 BOWERY, N. Y.

CANVASSERS

Wanted everywhere to sell "FISH'S UNION ATTACHMENTS," designed to support Vessels or Shades over the frame of a common cent oil lamp or gas burner. EVERYBODY WANTS IT. PRICE 50 CENTS. Active men can make $10 a day. Call at No. 206 Pearl St., N. Y., or send for a circular. W. D. RUSSELL, Agent.

HEAD-QUARTERS
For Veteran, Cavalry, Army Corps, Company, and Division Pins of every Description.

On the receipt of $1, I will send you a Solid Silver Shield, or either Army Corps, Division, or Co. Pin with your Name, Regt., and Co. handsomely engraved upon it, or a fine Gold Pen with Extension Case and Pencil, or a neat Style Vest Chain or Chain, or a California Diamond Ring or Pin, or a Seal Stone Ring; and for $1 50, I will send you a Solid Silver new Artillery Pin, engraved as above. Agents sending for 10 or more Pins at one time will be allowed 15 cents each.

B. T. HAYWARD,
Manufacturing Jeweler, 208 Broadway, N. Y.

Soldiers of the Union!!

Read the following Letters received from your Comrades as endorsements of the World Known and World Tried

REMEDIES, KNOWN AS

Professor Holloway's Pills and Ointment.

You will here find unsolicited testimonials received from all parts of the country where our army of occupation is in force.

See to your Health!

All of you have some one interested in your welfare, then do not delay.

Your Life is Valuable!!

Not only to yourselves, but to your Fathers and Mothers, Sisters, Wives, and Brothers. Then while you may, purchase your Health!

For 30 cents, 70 cents, or $1 10,

Will, when expended in these medicines, bring you down to the greatest state of health.

The following are genuine letters, on file for inspection at this office,

80 Maiden Lane, N. Y,
QUARTERMASTER'S DEPARTMENT,
HEADQUARTERS,
FOLLY ISLAND, S. C., November 28, 1863.

PROF. HOLLOWAY, Dear Sir: Enclosed please find two dollars, for which send me one dollar's worth each of your Celebrated Pills and Ointment, by return mail. Please attend to this at once, for I am much in need of this valuable medicine. Address

Lieut. A. W. FELLOWS, Q. M.,
20th Illinois Vols.

CAMP NEAR BRANDY STATION, VA.,
January 7, 1864.

PROF. HOLLOWAY:

DEAR SIR: I have heard a great deal of talk about your famous Pills, and as I never was in need of them until now, I want to try them, as I expect to be here several at the present time: send me the worth of the enclosed.

Yours, &c.,
TIMOTHY WALSH,
Co. E, 5th Regt., Excelsior Brigade.

PULASKI, Tennessee,
December 28, 1863.

PROF. HOLLOWAY:

DEAR SIR: Please find enclosed one dollar, and send me the amount in your famous Pills, as I am troubled with Dyspepsia, and seek a cure.

Yours, &c.,
THOMAS P. TURNER,
Co. I, 2d Iowa Infantry.

MORRIS ISLAND, S. C.,
January 13, 1864.

PROF. HOLLOWAY:

DEAR SIR: Enclosed you will find 50 cents, for which I wish you to send me some of your valuable Pills; send them by mail. I enclose 20 cents for postage. Address

ISRAEL C. HALE,
Co. D, 4th N. H. Vols.
Port Royal, S. C.

CAMP OF 5TH EXCELSIOR BRIGADE,
January 22, 1864.

PROF. HOLLOWAY:

SIR: Please send me for the enclosed $5 one dollar's worth of it in Pills; enclosed find 15 cents to pay postage, and you will oblige. Address

Yours, &c.,
Sergt. WM. ROWERS,
Co. E, 5th Regt. Excelsior Brigade,
Washington, D. C.

MORRIS ISLAND, S. C.,
January 21, 1864.

PROF. HOLLOWAY:

Please find enclosed the sum of one dollar for Pills. I have Diarrhœa, and can't get it stopped, so I want to try your Pills.

Yours, &c.,
WILLIAM CHRISTY,
Co. D, 104th Regt., Penn. Vols.
Morris Island, S. C.

New Catalogue of Jewelry

Sent free. Address
THOS. CAFFERTY & CO.,
Providence, R. I.

Printing-Press for Sale.

One Taylor Double Cylinder, five Rollers, Table Distribution, Bed 29x31. Price $2,000.

Apply to HARPER & BROTHERS, 329 Pearl St., N.Y.

$60 A MONTH! I want Agents at $60 a month, expenses paid, to sell my Everlasting Pencils, Oriental Burners, and 18 other articles. 15 circulars sent free. Address JOHN F. LORD, Biddeford, Maine.

"I'm going to fight mit Sigel."

Look out for this NEW SONG, now ready. Mailed free for only 6 cents. Address

HUNTER & CO., Hinsdale, N. H.

PATENT POCKET—For Ladies and Gents. Can not be picked or cut. Price $1 25. Large size for all purposes. Sutlers, Collectors, &c., &c., at $1 50. Sent by mail (10 cts. extra for postage).

W. C. WEMYSS, 679 Broadway, New York.

Gold! Gold!! Gold!!!

30,000 Watches, Chains, &c., &c., &c.

Worth $150,000.

To be sold for One Dollar each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 20 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time get our Circular containing full list of articles and particulars. Also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the country.

SIX Certificates can be ordered for $1, thirteen for $2, thirty-five for $5, and one hundred for $15.

Address C. F. SHULTS,
285 River Street, Troy, N. Y.

EMPLOYMENT

At your own homes. Thousands can realize a Hundred Dollars Weekly.—No utensils required except those found in every household; profits 100 per cent.; demand staple as flour. It is the greatest discovery of the age. Full particulars sent on receipt of two stamps for return postage.

Address C. MUNRO BROWN, 74 Bleecker St., N. Y.

Just what every Family wants. Savage & Co.'s No Chimney Burner for Hard Lamps and Coal Oil, burns Kerosene Oil with a brilliant light without chimney, smoke, or odor. Saves 25 per cent. Office 203 Fulton St., N. Y. Agents wanted. Send for circular. Sample sent free for 60 cts. Manufacturers and Inventors should call.

POLLAK & SON, MEERSCHAUM MANUFACTURERS, 337 BROOME ST., NEAR BOWERY, N. Y., sell wholesale and retail. Will send, free of charge, a genuine Pipe for 6 Dollars. Pipes cut to order and repaired.

"A Book of Rare Excellence."

HARPER & BROTHERS
Have Just Published;

LYMAN BEECHER'S
Autobiography and Correspondence.

Vol. I., 12mo, Cloth, Price $1 75.

"Few men of the last generation in America, and perhaps no clergyman, exerted a wider influence than Lyman Beecher. For more than half a century he was a power in the land; and his character and influence are perpetuated for another generation in his descendants, more than one of whom are his mentals and moral, as well as his physical children. These children have also a valuable as well as a pious service in giving to the world a faithful portraiture of their father. Apart from its special value as a biography of a notable man, the work presents a vivid picture of the social and religious life of New England fifty years ago."

CAXTONIANA: A Series of Essays on Life, Literature, and Manners. By Sir E. BULWER LYTTON, Bart., Author of "The Caxtons," "A Strange Story," "My Novels," &c. 12mo, Cloth, $1 50.

MCWHORTER'S HAND-BOOK OF THE NEW TESTAMENT. A Practical Handbook of the New Testament. By GEORGE CUMMING MCWHORTER. 12mo, Cloth, $1.

VERY HARD CASH. A Novel founded on Facts. By CHARLES READE, Author of "Love me Little, Love me Long," &c. 8vo, Cloth, $1 00; Paper, 75 cents.

VANITY FAIR. A Novel without a Hero. With Illustrations. By W. M. THACKERAY. (New Edition.) 8vo, Cloth, $2 00.

THACKERAY'S ROUNDABOUT PAPERS. Roundabout Papers. By JOHN ESTEN COOKE, Author of "The Four Georges," "The English Humorists," "Vanity Fair," "Henry Esmond," "The Newcomers," "Virginia," of Philip," &c. With Illustrations. 12mo, Cloth, $1 25; Half Calf, $2 25.

FIVE YEARS OF PRAYER, with the ANSWERS. By Rev. SAMUEL IRENÆUS PRIME, D.D., Author of "The Power of Prayer," "Prayer and its Remedies," "Tent Life," "Life of Rev. Dr. Murray," &c. 18mo, Cloth, $1 25.

JOHN MACHMOND'S LEGACY. A Novel. By M. E. BRADDON, Author of "AURORA FLOYD," "ELEANOR'S VICTORY," &c. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

HISTORY OF THE SIOUX WAR AND MASSACRES OF 1862 AND 1863. By ISAAC V. D. HEARD. With Portraits and Illustrations. 12mo, Cloth, $1 50.

RACHEL RAY. A Novel. By ANTHONY TROLLOPE, Author of "Orley Farm," "Framley Parsonage," "Doctor Thorne," &c. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

A HISTORY OF THE INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT OF EUROPE. By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M.D., LL.D., Professor of Chemistry and Physiology in the University of New York; Author of a "Treatise on Human Physiology," &c., &c. 8vo, Cloth, $3 00; Half Calf, $5 25.

MR. WIND AND MADAM RAIN. By FAYE DE MUSSET. Translated by EMILY MARKHEAM. Illustrated by CHARLES BENNETT. Square 16mo, Cloth, $1 00.

DAILY WALK WITH WISE MEN. RELIGIOUS EXERCISES FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR. Selected, Arranged, and specially adapted, by Rev. NEILSON HEAD. Large 12mo, Cloth, $1 50.

MARY LYNDSAY. A Novel. By the Lady EMILY FOLKESTONE, Author of "The Discipline of Life." 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

THE CAPITAL OF THE TYCOON: a Narrative of a Three Years' Residence in Japan. By Sir RUTHERFORD ALCOCK, K.C.B., Her Majesty's Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Japan. With Maps and Engravings. 2 vols 12mo, Cloth, $3 00.

THE RING OF AMASIS. From the Papers of a German Physician. By ROBERT BULWER LYTTON (Owen Meredith). 12mo, Cloth, $1 00.

☞ Any of the above Works sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of price.

HARPER'S
NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE
For February, 1864.

TERMS.

One Copy for one year..... $3 00
Two Copies for One Year..... 5 00
An Extra Copy, gratis, for every Club of Ten.

Postage to be paid by the Subscriber.

Payment invariably in advance.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE and HARPER'S WEEKLY, together, one year, $5 00.

HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS.

Circulation over 100,000.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

TERMS.

One Copy for Four Months..... $1 00
One Copy for One Year..... 3 00
One Copy for Two Years..... 5 00
And an Extra Copy will be allowed for every Club of TEN SUBSCRIBERS, at $2 50 each, or 11 Copies for $25. Payment invariably in advance.

TERMS TO ADVERTISERS.—Seventy-five Cents per line for inside, and One Dollar per line for outside Advertisements each insertion.

Vols. I., II., III., IV., V., VI. and VII. for the Years 1857, 1858, 1859, 1860, 1861, 1862, and 1863 of "HARPER'S WEEKLY," handsomely bound in Cloth extra, Price $5 00 each, are now ready.

HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS.

THE DISAPPOINTED SHOWMAN.

MONS. LOUIS CRAPEAUD. "Walk in, Sir! No charge, Sir!"
FARMER BULL. "Ah! 'aven't do, Lou! Can't fool this child with your One Horse Stuffed Animal Show this time, old fellow!!"

FISK & HATCH,
Bankers and Dealers in Government Securities,
No. 5 NASSAU STREET,
AGENTS FOR THE UNITED STATES
FIVE-TWENTY LOAN,
No. 38 Wall Street, New York.

Munro's Ten Cent Novel. No. 6.

The Man-Eaters;
Or, The Cannibal Queen.
A Story of Wonderful Events and Exploits in the South Pacific.

By Ilius Constellano.

Mr. Constellano writes exclusively for this series. Read the "Hunted Unionist," but read especially "The Man-Eaters," one of those charming pictures of Central Africa from which delights everybody. Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price, Ten Cents. GEORGE MUNRO & CO., 137 William Street, N. Y. This is the unrivaled series of Ten Cent Publications! formerly published by Irwin P. Beadle & Co. IRWIN P. BEADLE.
GEORGE MUNRO.

Watches Given Away.

Agents and Dealers look at the Great Chance to make Money we offer, by engaging in the sale of our New Novelty, STANDING PENCIL PASTE. Only $15 capital required to obtain a WATCH, FREE, with first order. We also offer SOLEMON STEEL ENGRAVINGS. $10 invested will yield $50. Never before such inducements were offered. Full particulars in Circulars, mailed free.
G. S. HASKINS & CO., 56 Beekman Street, N. Y.,
The Oldest Established Twist Package House in the U. S.

WARDS SHIRTS
SENT EVERYWHERE
BY MAIL OR EXPRESS
Ready made or to measure, at $33, $30, and $45 per doz.
Self-Measurement for Shirts.
Printed directions for Self-Measurement, list of prices, and drawings of different styles of Shirts sent free on application or by mail.
FRENCH FLANNEL OVERSHIRTS, $3 00, $3 15, and $4 50 each; all cut and long sleeves. A single shirt sent by mail on receipt of the cash and 45 cents postage for each shirt.
Send the size of your neck. Also

STEEL COLLARS
ENAMELED WHITE,
Having the appearance and comfort of linen, have been worn in England for the last two years in preference to any other collar, as they are readily cleaned in one minute with a sponge.
To Military Men and Travellers they are invaluable.
Price $1 each; sent by post to any part of the Union on the receipt of $1 13.
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.
AGENTS WANTED in every Town in the Union.
S. W. H. WARD, 367 Broadway, N. Y.

The Celebrated ORAIG MICROSCOPE, combining Instruction with Amusement, is mailed, pre-paid, for $5 25; or with 48 beautiful Mounted Objects for $8; with 24 Objects, $6. W.
HENRY CRAIG,
305 Broadway, New York.

Also, he will mail, prepaid, the Bibliscope, or Perfected STEREOSCOPE, with a sliding Focus and Field-Piece, accommodating all eyes, for $3 50; with 13 assorted views, $5. A liberal discount to the trade.

A Household Word.—Buy your Housekeeping Articles at BAGBY, GOLD & COOPER'S Institute, New York.

A Bad Breath.—The Greatest Curse the human family is heir to. How many lovers it has separated—how many friends forever parted. The subject is delicate, your nearest friend will not mention it, and you are ignorant of the fact. To effect a radical cure, use the "BALM OF THOUSAND FLOWERS" as a dentrifice, night and morning. It also beautifies the complexion, removing all tan, pimples, and freckles, leaving the skin soft and white. Price 50 cents. For sale by all druggists. The Trade supplied by HOWARD, SANGER & CO., 160 and 197 Chambers Street, N. Y., and for sale by all Druggists.

THE SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN

This is unquestionably the most popular and interesting Journal of its class in the world. It has been published seventeen years and has a larger circulation than any other paper of its character. It is a weekly paper of 16 pages, and is devoted to Science, Discovery, Invention, Mechanics, Manufactures, and the latest news of INDUSTRIAL ART. Most of the Inventions patented in the United States are illustrated in the SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN. Every number contains numerous original Engravings. The present volume (a new one commences on the 1st of January) contains 832 pages of useful and entertaining matter, and about 500 Engravings. A full report of all the Patents Claims published officially each week.
The paper is printed weekly on fine paper at the marvelously low price of $2 per year, or $1 for four months. Discounts to clubs and trade. Address
MUNN & CO.,
No. 37 PARK ROW, NEW YORK.

F. GROTE Manufacturer of Show Goods, 75 Fulton St., New York; or, Gold, Bronzetic, Fool Bells, Ten Pin Balls and Pins, Checker Board variety, Marbles and Napkin Rings, and all other kind of Ivory Goods, wholesale and retail. Also Manufacturer and Importer of Cues, Cue Leather, Chalk, &c. The only place to get a good set of assorted Billiard Balls at reduced prices. All Orders by mail promptly attended to.

PATENT AGENCY OFFICES.
Established in 1846.
MESSRS. MUNN & CO.,
Editors of the Scientific American,
SOLICITORS OF AMERICAN & EUROPEAN PATENTS,
With a Branch Office at Washington, D. C.,
Continue to transact, with unabated success, the business of procuring Patents for New Inventions, Reissues, Extensions, Assignments, Interferences, Re-issues, Appeals, Examinations of Rejected Cases, Infringements, Re-issues, Caveats, Designs, Trade Marks, Copyrights, Opinions of the Infringement and Validity of Patents, and all other business connected with Patents.
Patents secured in England, France, Belgium, Austria, Russia, Prussia, Spain, and all other foreign countries, at the shortest notice. A Pamphlet of "Advice, Information, and Directions concerning Patents," including the Patent Laws of the United States, furnished free. All communications confidential. Address
MUNN & CO.,
No. 37 PARK ROW, NEW YORK.

The only enameled "Turn-over" Collar made in metals. Send $1 for a "Turn-over" or 75 cents for a "Choker," to Box 3373, and receive it by return mail. A patent enameled Metallic Collar Co., 94 Pine St., N. Y.

GOLD PENS AND CASES
Retailed at wholesale prices. 14 kt. Gold Pen, Solid Silver Case, $1 50, warranted for one year, guarantee accompanying each one. Send for a circular. Pens repointed on receipt of 25 cents.
C. E. JOHNSON, 15 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

Shults' Oxygenet warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in six weeks, or no money refunded. Sent postpaid, for 60 cents. Address C. F SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

FINE WATCH FREE,
And $15 Per Day Easy.
Agents should be careful in directing their orders for our Original and "only Genuine" Extra Large Size Stationery Time Packages, which have become so popular through the fine quality and value of their contents. As we have several imitators, who copy our Styles, Advertisements, Premiums, &c., we are the only manufacturers of the "Celebrated Richards' Prize Packages," and ours are genuine unless bought direct from us. We still do as we have done for years past, present free to every one who sets as our agent a Fine Gold or Silver Hunting-Case Watch, "Genuine English Movements," and warranted a correct time-keeper. These watches are presented on the spot at once with the first order. No one else does this. A single one of our Westfield Packages contains more really valuable articles than any half dozen others ever sold. Among the surprising contents of "such packages" will be found Fine Stationery, Pens, Pencils, Envelopes, Engravings, Ladies' Fashion Plates, Designs for Needle-work, Cologne Keepsakes, Household Companions, Letter-Writer's Instructor, Parlor Amusements, Gent's Pocket Calendars for 1864, Union Emblems, Camp Companions for Soldiers, Military Likenesses, Games, Army Advice, Rare Recipes, Many Ways to get Rich, Yankee Notions, Fancy Articles, Rich and Costly Presents of Fashionable Jewelry, &c., &c., all together worth many dollars, for only 25c. As we make immense profits 100 to 200 per cent allowed. We guarantee smart agents can make $15 per day. Our regular agents average that. Our Packages stand same as ever, above all others for quality and quantity of contents. Agents wanted in every camp and town in the country. Goods sent safe to all parts of the army. Send for our Great New Circular for 1864, containing Extra Premium Inducements, free. S. C. RICHARDS & CO., 102 Nassau St., N. Y. Only Original, and Largest and Oldest Fruit Package House in the World.

$7 ARMY WATCH. $7
A BEAUTIFUL ENGRAVED GOLD PLATED WATCH, Double Case, Lever Cap, small size, stem wound dial, set hands, "English Movements," and correct time-keeper, sent free by mail in neat case. Only $7
A SOLID SILVER WATCH, same as above, only $7. Specially adapted to the Army.
$15 European Timekeeper. $15
A Superb "Extra Double Gold Plated" engraved Hunting Case Watch, Maple Leaf pattern, "Genuine English Jewelled Movements," Independent Action, Self Balance, a perfect timekeeper, warranted one year." WILLIAM ADAMS, Sole Agent, and sole
Exact Imitation of $100 Watch,
Used by the British Army Officers,
Sent free by mail, in elegant Morocco Case, for only $15.
The Celebrated Full Jewelled Corby Watch, for ladies, "Rich escutcheon designs," ruby movements, extra heavy gold plate, in Engraved Hunting Case. "Will stand all tests." Exact timekeeper, a perfect "Rejoicer." Sent free by mail, in richly embossed Turkey Morocco Case, for only $18.
Engine Turned Silver Lever Watches, engraved Hunting Case, jewelled movements, $18.
And English Jewelled Watches. Fine artists from $45 to $100.
Send Watches, for Army use, of all descriptions. We are sole importers of the above styles of Watches. Catalogue of trade prices mailed free.
Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper of Feb. 20 says of the "European Timekeeper," "It is an imitation of the celebrated timekeeper so much in use among the British army officers, and is calculated to meet the wants of our soldiers in the field." Illustrated News says, "Correct timepiece; equal in appearance to $100 watches."
Address CHAS. P. NORTON & CO., Importers, 38 & 40 Ann Street, New York.

Kirtland, Bronson & Co.,
MANUFACTURERS AND JOBBERS OF CLOTHING,
45 and 47 Chambers Street,
NEW YORK.
FRED. S. KIRTLAND,
J. M. BRONSON,
SAML. CALDER.
} N. Y.
J. M. BRONSON,
JOHN TILDEN,
JOHN H. WHITE (Special).

Putnam Clothes-Wringer.
The only reliable Self-Adjusting Wringer.
No wood-work to swell or split.
No thumb-screws to get out of order.
WARRANTED WITH OR WITHOUT COG-WHEELS.
It took the First Premium at Fifty-Seven State and County Fairs in 1863, and is, without an exception, the best Wringer ever made.
Instead of believing the statements of parties interested in the sale of other Wringers,
Try it, and Judge for Yourself.
Test it THOROUGHLY with ANY and ALL others, and, if not entirely satisfactory, return it.
It will wring any thing from a thread to a bedquilt without alteration.
Patented in the United States, England, Canada, and Australia. Agents wanted in every town.
No. 2, $5 50; No. 1, $6 00; No. A, $8.
Manufactured and sold, wholesale and retail, by
The Putnam Manufacturing Co.,
No. 13 Platt Street, N. Y., and Cleveland, Ohio.
S. C. NORTHROP, Agent.

GUNS, PISTOLS,
Military Goods,
FRENCH AND ENGLISH FANCY GOODS.
Also, a full assortment of
Jet, Coral, and Steel Goods.
Schuyler, Hartley & Graham,
19 Maiden Lane & 22 John Street. N. Y.
31 Rue du Chateau d'Eau, Paris.
Sands St., Birmingham, Eng.

The United States Service Magazine.
Devoted to the interests of the Army and Navy. Among its contributors are Generals Scott, Cullum, Grant, McMahon, Barnard, Admiral Davis, Hon. Edward Everett, and many others.
Monthly, $3 00 a year; single Numbers, 50c. Sent by mail. For sale by all News Dealers.
C. B. RICHARDSON, 596 Broadway, N. Y.

$47 AMERICAN $47 LEVERS.
Trade Mark. P. S. Bartlett, Full Jeweled, WARRANTED, in 4 oz. coin silver hunting case, gold joints, fancy push pin, for $47.
A series of years' trial warrants us equally low rates. All orders from the Army must be pre-paid, as the Express Companies will not to us for collection on orders.
J. L. FERGUSON, Importer of Watches,
208 Broadway New York.

HOW TO BE A GENTLEMAN.
Read that excellent new hand-book, indispensable for all who would really know
HOW TO WRITE, HOW TO BEHAVE,
HOW TO TALK, HOW TO DO BUSINESS.
Cap handsome 12mo vol., 600 pages, sent by first post for $2. Agents wanted. Address FOWLER & WILLS, No. 308 Broadway, New York.

15 More Agents Wanted—Business Light and Independent! No Capital required! Salaries, average $100 per month, or $100 per month, besides expenses. For Agent's Instructions, Samples of Goods, address Henry B. Carter & Co., Inventor's Exchange, Boston, Mass.

Straight Hair made Wavy!! without heating it, by using Iole's Patent Hair Crimpers. For sale by variety stores.

Wheeler & Wilson's Highest Premium
LOCK STITCH
Sewing Machines, 505 Broadway.

The Most Magnificent Illustrations
Ever issued in an American Weekly
(from the pencil of Darley)
Accompany
Ned Buntline's New Story,
SADIA,
A Heroine of the Rebellion.
Now ready in the
New York Mercury
at all News Agencies.

Soldiers' Special Notice.—Do your duty to yourselves, protect your health, use HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT. Dr. W. Stone, Bovel Complaints, and Fevers, they are a perfect safeguard. Full directions how to use them with every box or pot. Prices 30 cts., 70 cts., and $1 10 per box or pot.

10,000 Agents Wanted.
Business respectable, and very profitable. Enclose stamp for information by mail.
JONES & CLARK, 33 Nassau Street, N. Y.

SPECIAL NOTICE.
AGENTS, male or female, SOLDIERS, and all having some time to spare, are particularly requested to write to us, to send us their address, and we will send in return, FREE, information by which they will be REMUNERATED. We offer EXTRA INDUCEMENTS. From $8 to $15 per day ABOVE EXPENSES. We want addresses from every County in the U. S., and from every REGIMENT in the Army. Address RICHARDS & CO., 37 and 39 Nassau Street, Box 3131, N. Y.

THE BOWEN MICROSCOPE.
Magnifying small objects 800 times. Retails itself everywhere for 30 CENTS. Five of different powers for $1 00. Address P. C. BOWEN, Box 320, Boston, Mass.

Booksellers—Peddlers—Sutlers! Send at once for a specimen of our last new 24 cent Military Book —just out—splendidly gotten up—very popular.
ALEXANDER & CO., Philadelphia, Pa.

Mason & Hamlin's

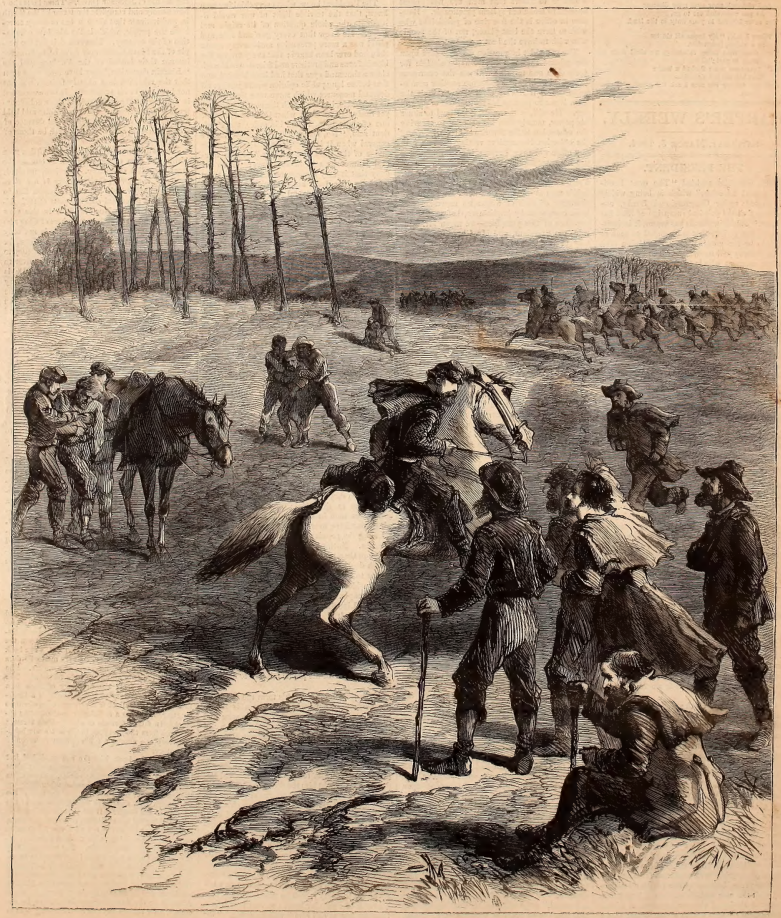
CABINET ORGANS
FOR FAMILIES, CHURCHES, AND SUNDAY SCHOOLS: ADAPTED TO SECULAR AND SACRED MUSIC.
A great improvement upon the Melodeon, Harmonium, &c. Recommended as the best instruments of their class in the world by more than two hundred of the most eminent musicians in the country. Prices $85, $100, $125, $150, to $550. Illustrated circulars, with full descriptions, sent free. Address MASON BROTHERS, New York, or MASON & HAMLIN, Boston.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION.

VOL. VIII.—No. 375.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, MARCH 5, 1864. [$1.00 FOR FOUR MONTHS. $3.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1864, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.



THE ESCAPED REFUGEES FROM THE LIBBY PRISON.—[SEE PAGE 161.]

THE BEAUTY THAT ENDURES.

I have loved you, Laura dearest,
And it is not for your eyes,
Though on me they shone like stars in every storm:
And I will not call you fairest,
For I know you little prize
The perfections of the perishable form.

But your spirit, fresh and kindly
As the bedge-rose peeping forth
In the dews and dewy blushes of the dawn,
I have worshipped, and not blindly,
For on balancing your worth
With your foibles, they, like feathers, were upthrown.

Like a fountain never fallow
From the only disk of sand
Palm-shaded in the desert, singing rain—
In your ear the voice of wailing
Ever strikes as answering chord,
And you rejoice with pleasure as with pain.

There's a cheerfulness about you,
Making every labor light,
And your modest household deities you adorn:
Life were cold and dark without you,
As to journey through a night
Unrelieved by any sprinkle of a morn.

When the war-blast in shrill tremor
First reverberated o'er the fen,
Though you trembled, yet your words were clear and grand;
And although your eyes grew dimmer
As you counseled me to go,
You ne'er faltered in your duty to the land.

When I said, "My hopes all cluster
In a Union, Laura fair,
That, some time hence returning, we shall meet no more to part"—
In your eyes there flashed a luster
That bid me not despair—
And now for my lost sun I ask the guerdon of your heart.

H.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, MARCH 5, 1864.

THE PRESIDENT.

THE pamphlet entitled "The next Presidential Election," which is being widely distributed under Congressional franks, announces that the political campaign of 1864 has opened. And now that it has begun, it is desirable, in every view, that it be conduct as soon as possible by open nomination. The Union party of the country will naturally wish to know at the earliest moment who is to carry their standard. that they may be able to devote all their time and force to the prosecution of the war and the restoration of the Union, instead of wasting them in personal squabbles among themselves.

Obviously in the midst of a war which, to gun amidst the sneers and skepticism of foreign governments, and the sad doubt and fear of true men at home, has yet advanced to a near prospect of final victory, it would be a great moral advantage to retain, before all the world, the same general front; to say, on the one hand, to the rebels that the terrible experience of the three years past will be the experience of the four or five to come, if they do not yield, and to the world at large that the people of the United States are steadily bent upon the original purpose of the war, and by every legitimate means whatever, inflexibly mean to restore the Union and maintain the Government. If, indeed, the opinion of public affairs were different; if our military lines were marked by disasters; if the rebellion had evidently strengthened itself; if there were a reasonable expectation that the Government might be overthrown; if trade were prostrated or industry paralyzed; if we had been overtaken by crushing financial calamity; if there were no fair prospect of recruiting our armies with veterans and the best of new men; if the measures of the Government at home had been such as to create a powerful and threatening opposition, or had been unfaithful to human liberty; in a word, if there were not a general conviction deep down in the heart of the people that, allowing for all faults and mistakes, and weaknesses, from which no men and no administration can be free; yet, under all the circumstances, military, social, and political, public affairs have been upon the whole, and certainly so far as the President is concerned, sagaciously and honestly conducted, then a change in the head of the Government would be not only wise, but it would be inevitable.

That the conduct of the war has been upon the whole satisfactory is evident from the fact that the political struggle is not really between the Administration and the Opposition, but among the Union men themselves. No loyal Union man proposes a serious change in the present policy, and therefore a change of President is advocated upon theoretical grounds. But is this a time for personal preferences and theories? The pamphlet of which we spoke in the beginning of this article argues warmly, for instance, although not very ably, against a second Presidential term, and forties its position by the advice of Washington and Jackson, each of whom came forward to be re-elected for many consecutive years, because of the popular satisfaction with the man and his services. Is not that liberty of choice of the very essence of a free government? Is it not, as a rule, better that a representative, who really represents the feelings of his constituency, should be sent for many terms to Congress than that an inexperienced person should be sent every two years? The biennial election may be, and often justly is, the declaration of entire satisfaction with the service of the representative. It would certainly be a remarkable exception in the practice of a popular system if the representative must, of necessity, be displaced. The doctrine of rotation in office is the result of a misapprehension of a popular government. No State, city, or nation, or village would be necessarily better ordered, because the authorities were changed every month or every year. It is the regular frequency of elections which is the characteristic safeguard of our system. The object of the election is to allow the people to choose the man who pleases them. But to make him ineligible after one term is to defeat that object, and compel them to adopt one who is not their preference. It is in effect to say either that a man who has been once elected is supposed to be fit for his office shall not continue to hold it, which is absurd; or else that he can not safely be intrusted with it for more than one term, which is to assert that men are not honest enough to make our system practicable. Rotation in office is the doctrine of politicians who wish to keep the best places out of the people who wish to have the best magistrates.

The pamphlet in question urges its plea upon the ground that if a President be eligible for more than one term he will use the enormous patronage of his office to secure another nomination. But it is very clear that to limit the term is not to destroy the power of patronage. He will, in that case, if inclined to abuse his power, merely turn his energies to securing the succession to the favorite of his party. And the objection lies against intrusting patronage to any office whatever, because, if a President may use his patronage to secure a renomination, a Secretary may use his to defeat a Presidential. Take, for instance, the case of two conspicuous public men at this moment, upon the honorable character of each of whom no aspersion had been cast, even by the author of the recent appearance of this pamphlet—we mean Mr. Lincoln, the President, and Mr. Chase, the Secretary of the Treasury. The latter has wielded enormous patronage. The President, according to the pamphlet, should not be eligible for two terms lest he should misuse his patronage. Very well. Are the people to elect the Secretary—? If the reasoning be sound, he should not be eligible at all lest he should misuse his. Is it proposed that no man who commands patronage shall be eligible to the Presidency?

As a fact, however, the President is eligible for two terms; and this pamphlet—wisely nonsense—therefore argues that Mr. Lincoln can so wield his patronage at this time as to secure his re-election, it will be much easier for him, with half a million of offices and enormous treasury at his command, to keep himself re-elected from term to term through his natural life! The author has spared us the necessity of the reductio ad absurdum. For he is speaking of Mr. Lincoln; and unless we have entirely misapprehended the impression he has made upon the people, it would be as easy to persuade them to elect Mr. Lincoln as President as to believe Mr. Lincoln to be a new Aaron Burr.

The other argument against the renomination of the President is not theoretical, but practical; it is, that the people are mortified, humbled, and disappointed by the duration of the war, for which, they say, Mr. Lincoln's policy and the vacillating policy of the President is responsible. Yet, whoever will deliberately picture to himself the condition of the country and of the public mind at the beginning of the war, the utter lack of general belief that there was to be a war; the want of an army and a navy; the indifference and doubt of the great Democratic opposition at the North; the want of a sentiment of nationality; the question as to the coercive power of the Government; the political and social sympathy with the rebels; the instinct of abolitionism, and the careful excuse of men who said that they were willing to maintain the Union but not to "wash slavery;" the empty treasury; the universal scorn and jealousy of the Western European Powers; the long declamatory history of the rebellion which had been carefully wrought by Calhoun and his political school, which had so long controlled the Government, and so successfully that some men now in high office were its leaders in the South—whoever will recall all this will probably agree that the President had before him a task which required infinite tact, patience, and moderation. His success would depend upon his ability to interpret the real popular sentiment, and to distinguish between enthusiasm and conviction. If he lagged, or even too fast, he would equally fail. Every step he took must seem wise to the great public mind, whether it pleased or displeased the ardent van of thinkers and talkers, who are the educators, but not the representatives, of public opinion. Elected as a Republican, known as the author of the saying in reference to slavery and freedom in this country, "A house divided against itself can not stand," supposed (as he was supposed at that time) to be ruled by the Secretary of State, who had declared the existence of the irrepressible conflict, Mr. Lincoln knew that whatever might be the love of the Union—and even that was to be proved—the hate of abolitionism was practically universal. His object was, it must have been, to have a party to sustain the Government, and that party must be, so far as practicable, the undivided North. Senator Yulee, of Florida, had declared and in Washington what every body feared: "The North will have enough to do to take care of itself." Franklin Pierce had written to Jefferson Davis that the war would be at the North. Had the President made a mistake, Yulee and Pierce would have been true prophets. Had the President said on the 15th of April, 1861, that he was attacked by the Union, slavery is abolished," the suspicious jealousy of the Opposition would have burst into full cry: "Treason! we have it. He takes advantage of a riot in South Carolina to overthrow the Union and plunge us into civil war." But the President, equal to his great office in the most solemn crisis of our history, said, simply, "The Union and Government must be maintained by force;" and the country, with its party-spirit paralyzed, cried, "Amen!"

The President knew, what every thinking man knew, that the terrible light of war would illuminate the whole question of its origin and scope. That he had only every gun and rifle and pistol was a more persuasive anti-slavery orator than had ever been heard; that every drop of the blood of sons and brothers and friends would wash clear a thousand stains that had been blinded, and that before long public opinion would justify and demand measures which some men then saw to be inevitable, but for which the country was not yet ready. Therefore, when General Frémont, one of those men, issued his order, the President said, "No, not yet. The policy must be general when it is adopted, and I must be the judge of the time and the way." So to General Hunter he said in substance: "I do not deny that it may become necessary to do what you have done, but I am the person to order it." There were many faithful men who, when they heard his words, said, sadly, "He does not understand the case, or he would see as we do." There were many faithless men who thought, "The rebellion is sure of success." If you say that he ought to have consulted the popular enthusiasm, which would have supported the extremest measures, at least you confess that it is only a question of relative sagacity between you and the President. But the people were ready. He thought they were not. And observe that now, more than two years afterward, the Senate of the United States, almost purged of secessionists, can not bring its mind to pay colored soldiers, who have most bravely fought for the flag, the wages which the Government expressly promised to pay them. Do you suppose they would debate the point a quarter of an hour if those soldiers were white? The President can not rightfully do what he honestly thinks the people would do if they knew he honestly thinks they do wish, because only what they do wish will stand. There were men enough who said, when General Frémont came, "Certainly; arm the slaves, and they will make short work of rebels." But within six months these same men were sighing for well-stocked plantations. From whatever cause distinguishes between the furious but evanescent gust of excitement and enthusiasm and the steady trade-wind of principle is the wise man to be desired in a chief magistrate at this time; and among all the prominent men in our history from the beginning none have ever shown the power of understanding the public mind so accurately as Mr. Lincoln. Nothing is more natural and more common than that an ardent man should in one breath denounce Mr. Lincoln while in the next course to be pursued, and in the next sneer at the President because he yields only to a pressure of the people. What should he yield to? And if Mr. Lincoln ever does yield? Did he ever lag behind it? The President can not treat the nation as a general does an army, and make a subject of discipline of it; and although the Constitution wisely intrusts during war the most important powers to his discretion, that discretion consists in his wise estimate of the conviction and desire of the public mind as to their exercise.

From the beginning of his term the President has always been persuaded that this was a people's war: that, if the people were wise and brave enough, they would save the Union and the Government; and if they were not, then that no leader could be found to save them. Twenty months ago he was without a party. The Copperheads hated him; the "Conservative Republicans" thought him too fast; the "Radical Republicans" thought him too slow; the War Democrats were looking for the chance of a return to political power. He held steadily upon his way. As he thought the people ready he took one advancing step. He issued the preparatory proclamation. He followed it with the New Year's decree. He wrote the Greeley letter, the Valandigham letter, the Springfield letter, simple, plain, direct; letters which the heart of every man in the land interpreted, and, unlike any other instance in our political annals, every letter he wrote, every speech he made, brought him nearer to the popular heart; so that now it is a little too late to call him "well-meaning," "incompetent," "a mere joker," because it is the general conviction that he is no man's puppet; that he listens respectfully to his Cabinet and then acts from his own convictions; that by his calm and cheerful temperament, by his shrewd insight, his practical sagacity, his undaunted patience, his profound faith in the people and their cause, he is peculiarly fitted for his solemn and responsible office. Nor is it likely that the people who elected him when he was comparatively unknown will discard him because, in the fierce light of war which tries every quality and exposes every defect, he has steadily grown in popular love and confidence.

OUR DUTY TO LOYAL SOUTHERNERS.

A PARTY of loyal Texans, attempting to escape to our lines, were lately almost entirely destroyed in the Lavaca Valley, and all the rounds are reported to be securely guarded to prevent escaping. On the other hand, our prisoners who broke away from Richmond report that eighteen Texans were murdered at Castle Thunder for attempting the life of Jefferson Davis. These facts show how deadly and complete the terror of the South is, and indicate that there is but one way to release the people, which is the absolute occupation of the country. However deluded the people of the Slave States may have been, however intense their hatred of the Yankees and the "Lincoln despotism," they have long since seen that the rebellion is a ghastly failure. It has ceased to be popular with them. It has succeeded in nothing but the entire ruin of the whole country in which it rages. Its utter futility and bold folly are now evident to the dullest devotee of slavery, and its acts will henceforth be those of ferocity and desperation.

Meanwhile the fate of the hapless Union men within the area of the rebellion is one of the great tragedies of history. Marked, insulted, outraged, murdered, their country is a hell to them, and their only hope of salvation lies in the advance of armies and loyal hosts of their fellow-citizens at the North. It is in this view that the conduct of certain members of Congress and newspapers of the loyal States is not only contemptible but virtually criminal. When, for instance, a man says that there is a tendency to place us at the North under a similar terror to that of the South, and that because Mr. Davis is despotism and a Lincoln despotism there is very little to choose, he says and implies what he knows to be false. He deliberately assists the bitter agony of the loyal men at the South, and by doing what he can to destroy popular support of the Government of the United States he connives with Toombs, Benjamin, Clingman, Yulee, and the rest of the wretched rebel crew, to shed the innocent blood of faithful citizens. At this moment to be a Copperhead is to be infamous. And the case of the men who in the Kenosha Valley and elsewhere murder escaping loyal Texans. It is to encourage the soldiers of Lee, and Longstreet, and Johnston to hold out. It is to say to the doubting, hoping, fearing slaves, "Your chains shall be riveted again." It is to befriend treason, to foster anarchy, to betray liberty.

If these truths were borne constantly in mind the Copperheads would be made to feel the weight of social obloquy which they richly deserve. The plea of an honest difference of opinion is inadmissible. If a man be honestly a rebel, let him take that position. If he be unconditionally for the country and the Government, let him stand earnestly by them. If he vociferate that he is for them, and by all he says and does he plainly shows the wish that the disasters loyal men, let him expect and receive the consideration due to the basest falsehood.

GUROWSKI'S DIARY.

COUNT GUROWSKI'S book must not be dismissed with a smile or sneer. It is the criticism of an intelligent, brave, fanatical, sincere European republican and revolutionaire upon the American constitutional Government. This book the President is a fool; the Secretary of State is a knave; the Secretary of the Treasury is a blockhead; and the American people is incapable of even so language furnishes a sufficiently contemptuous epithet. In fact, a tornado of abuse whirls through the air as the first gun to the fort, every shortcoming every one except a few arbitrary favorites of the author.

And yet the book, like the one published last year, is only an extravagant expression of opinions frequently expressed in more cool terms. Their value may be more readily apprehended when they are thus gravely set forth in print. If the tone of the work were just, what hope would there be for the cause of the world? If the popular system ended in nothing but the exaltation of boobies, dastards, and knaves, who would not wish the rebellion to succeed? The Count, with evident sincerity, offers his homage to the people. But who could help deciding a people who would be so duped by transparent charlatans, and who could help distrusting their judgment wherever and however expressed? Count Gurowski, it seems to us, even after his long residence and faithful study, does not understand America or the American people. When he exclaims, after the sad day of Fredericksburg, that in such circumstances the very rabble of Constantinople would storm the Seraglio, implying that the American people are reckless or stupid because they do not rise against the authorities, he merely takes the ground of Vallandigham and Jeff Davis, of all wild and reckless revolutionists, and shows his exact misapprehension of the genius and temper of the American people.

We can imagine a judge of the old Revolutionary tribunal of France criticising the conduct of William Third as the Count censures the President. An honest man, a friend of the people, patient, devoted, pure, we can imagine the old revolutionist to be; but not a wise leader, nor a safe counselor, nor a sound critic. And to see in sincere haste a progress of unwarrantable rage, to read his scornful gibes at trusty friends, to know how large a heart he had, how truly enlightened he was, what heroism he showed and had shown, would move neither anger nor contempt, but the profoundest pity and regret, which also the kind revolutionaries would reject with a kiss of indignation.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

CONGRESS.

SENATE.—February 11. Several private measures were introduced and referred; among which was a message from the President recommending an appropriation for paying the claims of the owners of the Indiana ship Ida Lewis, in effect that, after the passage of the act, slavery shall not exist, nor be in the United States or Territories, any law, usage, or custom to the contrary notwithstanding, and that involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime, is prohibited: referred.—Mr. Pomeroy introduced a bill authorizing the issue of State bonds payable to the amount of 30,000 acres for each Senator and Representative in Congress from the States as children or orphans of soldiers and sailors who may die in the military or naval service; one-fourth of the bonds to be applied to homesteads for such persons as may desire them: referred.—Mr. Johnson, from the Judiciary Committee, reported adversely to the bill for the Kansas reorganization of the Confederation Act; the report urges that the proposition to establish a mail route in that State stirred us to create any restriction or forfeiture of real estate other than those provided by the Constitution is a new attainder of treason.—Mr. Davis concluded his speech on the bill to suspend the pay of rebels and their sympathizers. In the course of his remarks he said the President had assumed the authority to prohibit the return of the United States under their Constitutions, and to require that certain conditions should be fulfilled before the States should be complied with before the State shall be allowed to take its seat. He contended that the re-election of the present President, or the election of one of similar radical views, would place these monstrous usurpations in the future of power. In the course of his speech Mr. Davis made several elaborate arguments in favor of the institution

Sand-Zel Fisher Girl. Peasant Girl and Woman in Sunday Dress. [Milk Girl.

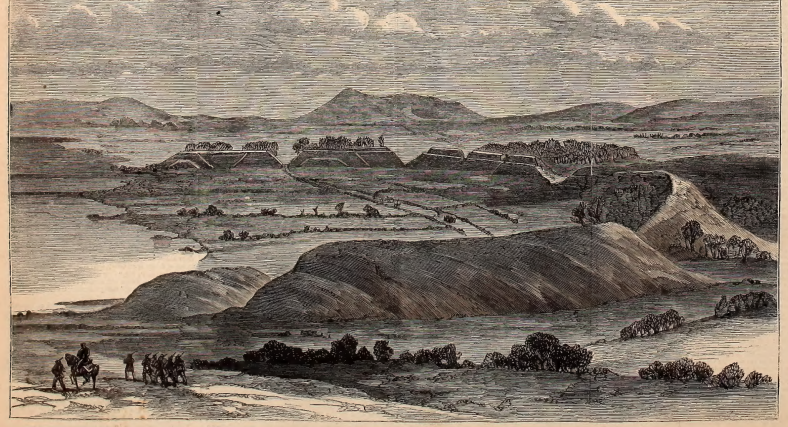
SCHLESWIG COSTUMES.

DENMARK AND GERMANY.

DENMARK, with a population, exclusive of the Duchies, of 1,600,000, has ventured into war against Germany, with 45,000,000, to which may be added, in the event of a general war, 20,000,000, the population of the non-German portions of Austria and Prussia. The Danish army, on a peace footing, is 25,000 men; but during the former Schleswig war there were 70,000 men in the field, which is probably the utmost possible force of the kingdom. The standing armies of Austria, Prussia, and the Confederation number something more than 1,000,000, and can be increased by quite another million. We can hardly suppose that Denmark would have ventured into so unequal a contest without positive assurances of support from the Great Powers.

On page 149 we give a Map showing the strong lines of fortification called the Dannewerk, or "Danish Work," which defend the frontier of Schleswig. They form, as a whole, a long line of earth-works, strengthened at various points by elaborate defenses. On the right is the "East Rampart," two miles long; on the left the "Crooked Rampart," in the centre the complicated system of defenses called the "Great Dannewerk," fourteen miles long. These works, with the lake formed by an expansion of the River Schlei, form two sides of a triangle, half way across the base of which is the Kurgraben, or "Elector's Ditch," four miles long. There are fourteen distinct forts strengthening various portions of the Dannewerk. The great Semicircular Rampart at Bustrup, a view of which is given below, is one of the principal of these. So admirably is this great triangle—the sides of which must measure nearly forty miles—arranged by nature and art, that the best military authorities consider that a force of 40,000 could hold it against one of 100,000. The great strength of the Dannewerk, however, consists in its flooding apparatus. Indeed the work was constructed more than a thousand years ago as a dyke to protect the low lands in front of it from overflow, and it is only within comparatively modern times that this dyke, or series of dykes, has been turned to military purposes. By opening certain sluices nine-tenths of the lowland region in front of the works, as large as one of our counties, can be laid under water in a few hours; and an invading army must march along the remaining tenth right up to the very strongest parts of the defensive works. The Map also shows the scene of the recent engagements, an account of which will be found in the news column of this paper.

Above are some representations of the national costumes of the female peasants of Schleswig. The Fisher Girl comes from one of the small groups of islands which line the coast, and are peopled by a most primitive race, of pure Danish descent. To appreciate the Sunday dress of the Peasant Woman, we must suppose it of the brightest hues, and that the ornaments which decorate it are of solid silver and gold, and are so costly that they descend as heir-looms from generation to generation. The Peasant Girl comes from one of the islands, and belongs to a lower class, and her dress is of stout woolen, which she has probably spun and woven herself; and the lace which trims her odd-shaped cap has been worked by her in the evening while she was awaiting the return of the family fishing-boat. The Milk Girl is very likely selling the produce of her dairy in the streets of the capital.



THE DANNEWERK.—SEMICIRCULAR RAMPART NEAR BUSTRUP.

MAP OF THE SCENE OF HOSTILITIES IN SCHLESWIG, SHOWING THE DEFENSIVE WORKS OF THE DANES.—[SEE PRECEDING PAGE.]

[Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1864, by HARPER & BROTHERS, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.]

QUITE ALONE.

By GEORGE AUGUSTUS SALA.

☞ Printed from the Manuscript and early Proof-sheets purchased by the Proprietors of "HARPER'S Weekly."

BOOK I.—CHILDHOOD.

CHAPTER I.

SEULE AU MONDE.

THIS is Hyde Park at the most brilliant moment in the afternoon, at the most brilliant period in the season. What a city of magnificence, of luxury, of pleasure, of pomp, and of pride this London seems to be! Can there be any poor or miserable people—any dingy grubs among these gaudy butterflies? What are the famed Elysian fields of Paris to Hyde Park at this high tide of splendor? what the cavalcade of the Bois de Boulogne, or the promenade of Longchamps, to the long stream of equipages noiselessly rolling along the bank of the Serpentine? Every body in London who is worth naming is there carried along on wheels, or bestrides pig-skin girthed o'er hundred-guinea horse-flesh, or struts in varnished boots, or trips along soft, sandaled pumella, or white satin with high heels. There is Royal Blood in a mail phaeton. Royal blood smokes a large cigar, and handles its ribbons scientifically. There is a Duke in the dumps, and behind him is the Right Reverend Father in a silk apron and a shovel hat, who made that fierce verbal assault upon his Grace in the House of Lords last night. There is the crack advocate of the day, the successful defender of the young lady who was accused of poisoning her mamma with nux vomica in her negus; and there is the young lady herself encompassed with a nimbus of crinoline, lolling back in a miniature brougham with a gentleman old enough to be her grandfather, in a high stock, and a wig dyed deep indigo. Is that Anonyma driving the twin ponies in a low phaeton, in a paletot and navy buttons made by Poole, a pork-pie hat with a pheasant's plume, a parasol attached to her whip, and a groom with folded arms behind her! Bah! there are so many Anonymas nowadays. If it isn't the Nameless one herself, it is Synonyma. Do you see that stout gentleman with the coal-black beard and the tarnished fez cap? That is the Syrian ambassador. The liver-colored man in the dingy white turban, the draggle-tailed blue burnouse, the cotton stockings, and the aplaca umbrella, is the Bimbo envoy. The nobleman who is driving that four-in-hand, and is got up to such a perfection of imitation of the manners and costume of a stage-coachman, has a rental of a hundred and thirty thousand a year. He passes his time mostly among hostlers, engine-drivers, and firemen. He swears, smokes a cutty pipe, and of his two intimate friends, one is a rough rider and the other a rat-catcher. Mr. Benazi, the great Hebrew Financier, you must know: yonder cadaverous, dolorous-looking figure in shabby clothes, huddled up in a corner of the snuff-colored chariot, drawn by the spare-ribbed horses that look as though they had never enough to eat. He is Baron Benazi, in the Grand Duchy of Sachs-Pfeifgen, where he lent the Grand Duke money to get the crown jewels out of pawn. That loan was the making of Ben. There is nothing remarkable about him save his nose, which stands out, a hooked promontory, like the prow of a Roman galley, from among the shadows cast by the squabs of the snuff-colored chariot. That nose is a power in the state. That nose represents millions. When Baron Benazi's nose shows signs of flexibility monarchs may breathe again, for loans can be negotiated. But when the Benazian proboscis looks stern and rigid, and its owner rubs it with irritable finger, it is a sadly ominous sign of something being rotten in the state of Sachs-Pfeifgen, and of other empires and monarchies which I will not stay to name.

What else? Every thing. Whom else? Every body. Dandies and swells, smooth-cheeked and heavy-mustached, twiddling their heavy guard chains, caressing their fawn-colored favoris, clanking their spurred heels, screwing their eye-glasses into the creases of their optic muscles, hawhawing vacuous commonplaces to one another, or leaning over the rails to stare at all, to gravely wag the head to some, to nod supercilliously to others, and to grin familiarly to a select few. Poor little snobs and government clerks aping the Grand Manner, and succeeding only in looking silly: not in looking swells. Any number of quiet, sensible folks surveying the humors of the scene with much amusement, and without envy. Disreputable women, who are known to be such, by scores. Disreputable women, not yet found out, by hundreds. Foreigners who, after a five-years' residence in London, may have discovered that Leicester Square, the Haymarket, and the lower part of Regent Street, are not the only promenades in London, and so come swaggering and jabbering here, in their braid and their pomatum and their dirt, poisoning the air with the fumes of bad tobacco. An outer fringe of nurse-maids revolving new projects of crinoline, to be constructed chiefly of cane, in emulation of the prodigies in whalebone and watch-spring, here sweeping the gravel—then some soldiers listlessly sucking the knobs of their canes, and looking very much as if they considered themselves as flies in amber, neither rich nor rare, and wondering how the deuce they got there. As useless as chimneys in summer, seemingly, are these poor, strong men done up in scarlet blanketing, with three half-pence a day spending-money, and nobody to kill, and severely punished by illogical magistrates if they take to jumping upon policemen, or breaking civilian's heads with the buckles of their belts, through their weariness. Aggravated assaults, says the magistrate, as he signs their mittimus, are not to be tolerated. Why what is it but a soldier's bounden duty to keep on committing a series of aggravated assaults upon people who never did him any harm? Did Jacques Bonhomme, the French conscript, whom Solomon Lobb, the grenadier, bayonested at Waterloo, ever do him wrong? Did Ivan Ivanovitch, the Russian, whom he hewed down at Inkermann, ever spoil his goods? Why should soldiers be fined or sent to the treadmill for exhibiting in peace that unprovoked brutality and ferocity for which they are hired, and clothed, and fed?

Any thing else in Hyde Park at this high tide of the season. Much: only a score of pages would be required to describe the scene. All is here—the prologue, the drama, the epilogue; for here is Life. Life from the highest to the very lowest rung of the ladder: not only the earliest youth and extreme old age, in comely virtue and raddled vice, in wisdom and folly, complacency and discontent; but—look yonder, far beyond the outer fringe in utter want and misery. There, under the trees, the ragged woman opens her bundle, and distributes among her callous brood the foul scraps she has begged at area gates or picked from gutters. There, on the sunny sward the shoeless tramp sprawls on his brawny back, and flaunts his flesh, grinning in impudent mendacity from the windows of his tatters in the very face of well-dressed Respectability passing shuddering by; and the whole "bags, foolish whirligig where kings and beggars, angels and demons, and stars and street-sweepings chaotically whirl," the Spirit of Earth surveys and pities his eternal task. Where is my copy of Faustus? There: I can not read the German. Here is Monsieur Henri Blaze's French interpretation of the mystic utterances of the Esprit da la Terre, "Dans les flots de la vie, dans l'orage de l'action, je monte et descends, flote ici et là: naissance, tombeau, mer éternelle, tissu changeant, vie ardente: c'est ainsi je travaille sur le bruyant métier du temps, et tisse le vivant manteau de la Divinité." Sufficiently weak, limp, and wishy-washy is this French Faustus of Monsieur Henri Blaze, I wot. It savors of abstinence, and au estaminet where they charge nothing for stationery. Turn I now to another and immeasurably greater translator:

> In Being's flood, in Action's storm
> I walk and work, above, beneath
> Work and weave in endless motion:
> Birth and Death,
> An infinite ocean;
> A seizing and giving
> The fire of living
> 'Tis thus at the roaring Loom of Time I ply
> And weave for God the garment thou seest him by.

"Of twenty millions," asks the author of Sartor Resartus, "that have read and spouted this thunder-speech of the Erdgeist, are there yet twenty of us that have learned the meaning thereof?" But, Sage, is not the Spirit of Earth the Spirit of Nature? Is not Life the warp and Humanity the woof over which, spread on the "Roaring Loom of Time," the shuttle of production is always plying? And what is Nature: a field, a flower, a shell, a sea-weed, a bird's feather, but the woven garment that we see God by?

When Humanity begins to fade out of Hyde Park, and goes home to dinner, or to brood by the ingle nook, dinnerless, or betakes itself to other holes and corners where it may languish, panting, until bread or death come; when only a few idlers are to be met with in the Ring, or Rotten Row, or on the Knightsbridge Road, you sometimes see a solitary horsewoman. She is QUITE ALONE. No groom follows: no passing dandy ventures to bow, much less to accost, or condescends to grin as she passes. A spare slight little woman enough, not in her first youth—not in her second yet; but, just entre chien et loup, between the lights of beauty at blind man's holiday-time, she might be Venus. She wears a very plain cloth habit, and a man's hat. I mean the chimney-pot. She has a veil often drawn down. Great masses of brown hair are neatly natted under her hat. She rides easily, quietly, undemonstratively. If her habit blows aside you may see a neat boot and faultless ankle, wreathed in white drapery, but no sign of the cloth and chamois leather riding-trouser affectation. She carries a light switch with an ivory handle, which she never uses. That tall, lustrous black mare never came out of a livery-stable you may be sure. She pats and pets, and makes much of her, and very placidly she paces beneath her light weight. The groom keeps his distance; she is always alone: quite alone.

"Who the doose is that woman on the black mare one sees when every body else has left the Row?" asks Faindant number one of Faindant number two at the Club.

GEORGE AUGUSTUS SALA, AUTHOR OF "QUITE ALONE."—[SEE PAGE 151.]

"Sure I don't know. Seen her hundreds of times. Ask Tom Fibbs, he knows every body."

Tom Fibbs is asked, and takes a "sensation header" at a guess.

"That's the Princess Ogurzi, who was knouted at the office of the Secret Police, in the year '56, by Count Orloff's private secretary and two sergeants of the Ismailofsky guards, for sending soundings of the harbor of Helsingfors to Sir Charles Napier."

"Word o, Fibbs. Try again. The Princess Ogurzi died at Spa the year before last, and the whole story about the knout turned out to be a hoax."

"Then I am sure I don't know," answers Tom Fibbs (who is never disconcerted when detected in a fiction); "I give her up in despair. I've been trying to find out who she is for months. She is always alone, quite alone. A brougham meets her at Ayahlova, and the groom takes her mare away. I asked him one day who she was, and he called me Paul Pry, and threatened to knock me down. She dines, sometimes, quite alone at the Castelmaine Hotel in Bond Street. The waiters think, either that she's a duchess or she's mad. She's the only woman who ever dined alone in the coffee-room at the Castelmaine, but nobody dares to be rude to her. She rests at the Star and Garter at Richmond, at Greenwich, at Brighton, at Ventnor, and in Paris, always quite alone. She's an enigma. She's a Sphinx."

"Is she paw-paw? Demi mondo?" thus, one Innelent.

"Nobody knows. Nobody ever presumes to speak to her, and she never was seen to speak to any body except her groom and the waiters. She goes to the Opera, to the theatres, to the Exhibition, always quite alone. Upon my word I think that woman would turn up at a prize-fight alone. I've seen her myself at Ascot."

As Tom Fibbs said this a very tall angular well-dressed gentleman, with grizzled hair, and close upon fifty years of age, who had been sitting in an arm-chair close by, hastily flung down the copy of Echo he was glancing over, and leaving a by no means complimentary look at Mr. Fibbs, and strode out of the room.

"I really don't know much about the Mysterious Stranger," languidly remarked Faindant number one as the door closed. "He knows all sorts of mysterious queer people, and he didn't half seem to like what Fibbs said."

"Very likely. He's a descoud cranky fellow."

"Very odd, isn't he?"

"Disgustingly so. What he wants in Parliament with twenty thousand a year I can't make out. He never speaks, and passes most of his time in the smoking-room."

"Twenty thousand. That's a tremendous screw for a Radicle barnacle."

"Yes: but he was as poor as Job till his father died. Painted pictures, or went on the stage, or something, and married, or did something low for a living, I'm told; but he's all right now."

As Thomas Fibbs, Esq., member of the Committee of the United Logics Club, of the Turnpike Ticket Commutation Commission (salary £1200 per annum, hours of business 8 to 9 past 3 P.M., 3 times a week, 3 months in the year), was selecting his umbrella from the stand about twenty minutes subsequent to this conversation, preparatory to looking in at the Burke and Hare Club, to which he also belonged, and which is younger and more convivial than the Fogies, he found Sir William Long, Bart., M.P., in the act of lighting one of those cigars which he was almost continually smoking.

"Might I trouble Mr. Fibbs," said the baronet, in a slow and rather hesitating tone, "to refrain, in promiscuous conversation, from hazard ing conjectures as to the identity of a lady with whom I am acquainted, and who, I am sorry to say, is many maker, the bootmaker, the staymaker, the hairdresser, could do no more for him than they had done. They had exhausted their faculties in adorning him. Another lapped to the coat, another curl to the coiffure, another whiff of perfume about him, and the dandy would have been spoiled. As it was he was as perfect as a man could be with three under-waistcoats, a very high-shouldered, high-collared coat with velvet collar and cuffs, lavender pantaloons very tightly stranged over his boots, a hat with a turned-up brim, a voluminous shirt-frill with diamond studs down the breast, white kid gloves, and a gold-headed cane with a long silk tassel. Nay, the pocket-handkerchief with which he had flicked the dust from his chaussure was of crimson silk. From time to time he tapped the lid of an enamelled snuff-box, and refreshed himself with a pinch of Macouboy.

Dress makes up so much of the dandiacal entity that the description of this ineffable person's countenance has been temporarily overlooked. It was worth looking at, however. A dandy face, but not a monkeyfied, not a simpering one. His age seemed to be between thirty and forty; but it was evident that at no very remote period he had been an eminently handsome man. His teeth were beautiful. His hands and feet you could see (his gloves and boots notwithstanding) were Byronically small and symmetrical. He had a charming red and white complexion. His hair was black and glossy, and admirably adjusted. So, too, with his mathematically-cut whiskers and chin-tuft. Mustaches had none. When he smiled he showed the beautiful teeth a good deal; when his glove was off he made a liberal display of the emerald and diamond rings on his dainty white hand. There was no finishing any fault with the man's outward appearance; for effect expensively produced. There was great gold chain meandering over his cat velvet waistcoat, and a double diamond pin in his cravat, he looked from head to foot a gentleman. It should finally be mentioned that there were two trifling drawbacks to his good looks. Across his left cheek, almost from the corner of the mouth to the eye, there ran a very deep scar, which when he talked turned, as Othello's eye, too, were very colorless and sunken, and there were brownish rings beneath them. But for these the dandy would have been as Adonis, and rivaled D'Orsay on his own ground.

He was evidently very well known. He stopped to speak to ladies belonging to the best set. He was asked whether he had been to the duchess's ball; whether he was going to the masquerade's rout. His replies were inconclusive. He was tapped on the arm with pretty parasols and scent-bottles, and scolded prettily for not having executed some commission or accepted some invitation, joined some fashionable junketing then or recently about. The dazzling trifle had work enough to do; the dandy's mind was hinged and reshinged in urbane apology. Clearly our dandy was very popular among the sex. Nor did the men treat him with less favor. He was of every chattering group, of every swaggering conversation where wickedness was made a merry jest of, and reputation lightly sported with. He went to and fro and up and down, and scanned prize flowers through his eye-glass with admirably-complacent criticism. He was charming.

There came up my Lord Carlton, a wild freak of the time, and deep gaming, and with him Harry Jermyn, his adjutant, crony, toady, or his arm.

"How do, Griffin?" was his ordship's salutation. "Monsous bad shopping here. Confounded military band blow, reckon of one's head off. Come away, Griffin, and have a hand at picquet at my rooms in town."

"I would with pleasure, viscount," the dandy addressed as Griffin answered, "but I have a little business to transact in this neighborhood before I return."

"Business!" echoed his lordship. "Business at a flower-show! Dooced queer place for business, Griffin. You haven't turned market-gardener, have you?"

"If y a des fleurs animées," quoth little Mr. Jermyn. "All the Chiswick roses bow-down on bushes. Our friend may have a love-duet somewhere close by."

"Not at all, not at all," smiled the dandy, lifting his hat for the hundredth time to a passing party of ladies. "You wrong me, I assure you. I am not on bonne fortune, upon my word."

"Then what are you going to do, Griffin, when it's time to go back to town?" Lord Carlton pursued, elevating his eyebrows in pardonable amazement. "Going to look at a horse?"

"No, my lord."

"Going to dine at Richmond?"—his lordship said "Wichmond," but it would be both tedious and indecorous to give typographical expression to his defective linguals.

"Not at all. I lunched very late, just before coming down; and if I dine at all it will not be till night."

"Never mind, my boy; you'll get plenty of supper at Crocky's," here cut in Mr. Jermyn.

A slight cloud passed across the white forehead of the dandy, but he chased it away with an airy toss of the head.

"Of which cloth," he blandly retorted, "Mr. Jermyn is not, I believe, a member."

"Got nothing but black balls," his lordship added by way of confirmation, and with a loud chuckle. "Poor fellow! his prospect staid away, and his seconder came from the country and forgot to pill him. Stop, there was one white ball, and that was from a fellow who was short-sighted, and popped his pill into the wrong side."

"Mr. Jermyn will have, I trust, better luck next time," the dandy remarked, with a conciliatory bow to Jermyn. Had I not been in Paris—"

"At Fracati's," interposed his noble friend. "In Paris," he continued, taking no notice of the interruption, "Mr. Jermyn might have reckoned on my humble support. I should have been delighted to find him one of us."

"Yes, I dare say you would," acquiesced Lord Carlton. "Harry's a very good fellow, and has got plenty of feathers ready to be plucked before he is fit to be made into a canopy for pigeons. You'd have given him two white balls, I'm sure you would, Griffin."

"Oh yes, I'm sure you would," repeated Mr. Jermyn. The assurance was double-barreled—susceptible of two meanings. Mr. Henry Jermyn hated the dandy he belonged to, and by which he had himself failed to procure admittance, although he well knew that the honorary membership might prove to the baronet-son easily if not ruinous. Yet he would have jumped for joy had the exquisite addressed as Griffin offered to propose him.

"Never mind, Harry," his good-natured lordship observed. "Safe to get in next time. Can't keep you out. Besides," he added, turning to the dandy, "the fellows made a dooced mistake when they took Harry for big Jack Jermyn after all. They took Harry for big Jack Jermyn —you know, the racing man who was in the Eighth, and levanted after Newmarket the year before last. They thought it was all up with Jack, and didn't care about having a rook in the dove-cot. By Jove! if they knew that Harry were to turn all the pigeons into sparrow-hawks old is she, Harry?—he'd have been elected unanimously, and received with a salute of twenty-one guns."

Mr. Crockford must have shed tears when informed of the sad truth," remarked the dandy, with soothing politeness. "Your lordship forms will make amends. I hope to meet Mr. Jermyn as a fellow-member at supper in St. James's Street so soon after his gentlemanlike absence as possible. By-by, viscount; Mr. Jermyn, I have the honor." And, with unmoved urbanity and a gentleman's bow to the company, he thought his leave-taking to the person next in rank might have been, "Fellow, get out of the way!" the dandy, during the whole of the colloquy and tenth time that afternoon, strolled away.

"Monsous well-preserved man, Griffin Blunt," Lord Carlton said, looking after the dandiacal attention after his retreating friend, "wears very well. Must be forty, if he's a day."

"He looks more than about the eyes," Mr. Jermyn ventured to observe, in mild disparagement.

"Late hours," explained his lordship, who generally went to bed about four in the morning and rose about three in the afternoon. "Grif. Blunt is a shocking roué, I'm told."

"What do they call him Griffin for, and who is he?"

"How amazingly raw you are!" exclaimed his lordship, elevating his eyebrows in some surprise. "Don't you know Griffin Blunt goes by the name of Griffin, because he used to wear a scaly green silk coat when he drove his own drag, at the time of the Regency? Don't quote time it must have been, too, and dooced queer fellows. Should have liked to belong to that set, only they drank so confounded hard."

"Has he got any money? How does he get his living?"

"How should I know? P'raps he's his grandmother's heir, if he hasn't sold the reversion. You'd better ask him. He's apt to turn cruel sometimes. He put twenty feet of water in Jack Hobbs's pond, and drowned his pet monkey for 'im, by Jove! he killed the dragoon."

"And what does he do now?"

"What a dooced lot of questions you ask, Harry. I'm not his godfathers and his godmothers. I believe he sold out after the peace, and went to India to get up a regiment, opium, or shake the pagoda-tree, or something of that sort. Well, he came back, and he's been on town three years or more. I don't know him ever since I came up from Oxford. He knows every body, and belongs to every club on town, and the women adore him, for he plays the harp, and the piano, and the guitar, and sings little French songs, and is small, and has a British wool and Poonah painting. Ha! ha!"

"Is it mauvais sujet?" Mr. Jermyn asked.

"I believe he's a regular out-and-outer," succinctly replied Lord Carlton. "He's worse than I am, and that's saying a good deal. He takes more trouble. He has more time. Lives, and likes his birds wild. That's a bore. I prefer a batter, and fellows to beat for me."

"And his wife?"

"Don't know any thing about it. He lives high, and must spend two or three thousand a year. Charming house in Curzon Street, in Curzon Street. He goes in for deep play, and bets, and so forth; but I'm sure I don't know whether he's worth twopence in the world or not."

"Is he married?"

"Married! By Jove! one would think you wanted me to say my catechism. What do I know about it? Don't remember ever said any thing about his being married, and there's nobody in Mayfair who owns to the name of Mrs. Blunt. Can't be along; I want some luck and soda-water, and then I'll take you back in my cask"—which was Lord Carlton's humorous designation for his cabriolet—"and we'll have some cards before dinner. Isn't there a game called cribbage? I should like to learn it. It must be a jolly game. I'm sick of all the French ones. I wish Grif'd come, and we'd make it loo. He plays admirably."

Mr. Blunt was otherwise engaged. He was a squire of dames. Group after group of ladies took him up, and did not drop him after brief parley, as it is the elegant but rather embarrassing custom of the ladies of the great world to do. They were sorry to part with him, for it was agreed on all sides that Mr. Blunt was most amusing and agreeable. The genuine society he was not called Griffin Blunt. His sobriquet was known, but it was ascribed less to his dueling adventure and to his eccentric than to his dandiacal character. Five or six-and-twenty years ago the Road had not become in polite society the object of thoroughfare and of contempt to which it is now (of course) is. It was thought that, to be very dissolute, or, at least, to have a name for disinclination to be like the late Lord Byron; for many an assumed libertine brags of the vices he does not possess, as they rest on a foundation as fundamentally as innocent as M. Hendrik Conscience's Cog du village. There were some prudent mammas who looked upon Blunt as a dangerous man, and warned their daughters to beware of him; but then it was impossible to keep severe watch on a gentleman who went into the very best houses, who was undeniably accomplished, faultlessly dressed, enormously well-bred, and who could always procure a voucher for Almack's. Besides, Blunt had the rare art, or rather the rarer tact, of pleasing indifferently the young and old middle-aged ladies. He never despised his dowagers; et elles lui en savaient gre, avec toute la ténacence de quarante ans passés. He cast himself, morally, at their feet, and overwhelmed them with attentions, as though they were in all the pride of fashion and beauty. It was only when the world was not looking that Mr. Blunt occupied himself with young people; and it was then a delicious sight to see the courtesy that the sleek Griffin put forth his claws.

"There are always young people growing up for me," he would say, when he was reproached for a nod or a half-civil word from half the people he was laughing and flirting with. Blunt, in fact, was a universal purveyor to bonnetdrums to duchesses, and promising to draw caricatures in the albums of embassadors, he palpably that he must be fêted in society. "My humble proficiency in the fine arts," Blunt would say, "is worth fifty dinners, a hundred balls, and a week's visit at the best country houses a year to me. Or what use should I be in Dorset or Russell Square? What do the Duchess of Dorset's fine arts beyond the 'Beauties of England and Wales,' the portrait of the late Princess Charlotte, and the set of Sèvres? Why, Lady Jane in Hyde Park? To assiduous study in the Vatican Museum and the Pitti Gallery I owe my introduction to Lady Caroline Gracé's ear. Grace's appui is invaluable. Je suis de Mary. I go to her water-parties at Kew. My little musical soirées positively have the éclat of an heiress or an Indian widow to me if I were—well, a marrying man. If I could only play the violoncello as I can the flute, I'd go to the Queen Highness's Wednesdays. I must learn the violoncello at all hazards. Tell me where Dragonetti lives, and I will give him a guinea a lesson."

"You're an ambitious fellow, Griffin," would then interpose Whipstaff, the Flower-show writer, Whipstaff, to whom Blunt sometimes imparted these demi-confidences, remark. "You sail well before the wind, I must look to it, or Mark you to distance the best; but you've no bullast, my boy, and you'll founder. I suppose your estates are all in Cochin China, like Lord Stowaway, and that your balance in the Joint Stock Dogerbank is pretty well dipped into. Take care, Griffin, or you'll be found by the Gazette one day, borrow somebody else's umbrella, and don't give it back again."

"Mark was an excellent moralist," thus Mr. Blunt, with a pleasant sneer. "Are you, too, ready for the voyage, my dear Whipstaff?"

"Never mind," retorted Whipstaff, who was notoriously not worth a penny, and in dire difficulties. "Never mind about me. I'm afloat, I trumps yet. Every bird feathers his nest in a different manner. The wisest one, after all, is the one who builds the warmest, and Whipstaff's making a nest of his own, but pops into somebody else's. There are still a few sinecures left, that confounded Whig-Radical Ministry has not swept away, and I'm a Tory, and a high-church Conservative—" notwithstanding. The wind is tempered to the shorn lamb, and the old tavern of the Tyburn Bench will be opened for the barrister of seven years' standing." Such was the worldly wisdom of Mr. Whipstaff, who had eaten his terms very much at other men's own expense, with the firm and fixed resolve of eating a great many more terms, some day or another, at the expense of the country.

Whipstaff was at the Flower-show, and remarked to several acquaintances that he never saw Griffin Blunt looking better. "However he manages it," he continued, "I can't imagine. Lucky fellow, he never pays any thing. I can't engage in fashionable society under a net loss of two guineas an hour. I shall be glad to give the recipe for nothing. A rate of two thousand a year upon nothing."

"Shakes his elbow," suggested purple-faced Captain Hanger, who hated Blunt.

"Perhaps," acquiesced Whipstaff, with a sigh, "and is lucky. With me that species of paralysis has always proved the costliest of diseases."

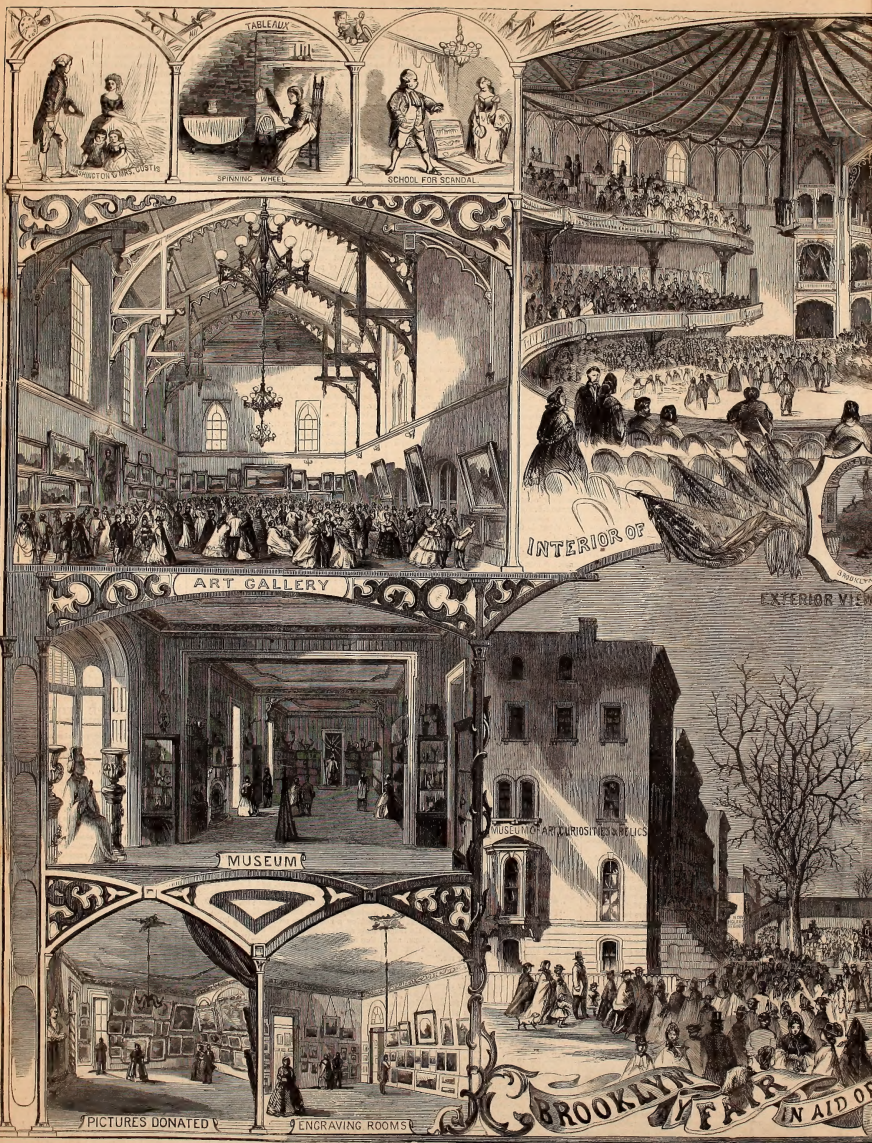
And so the Whirligig went on. Now Scandal's sirocco seized a spiteful anecdote, and twirled, and twisted, and sent it spinning from one end of the gardens to the other. Now it caught up a woman's reputation, and eddied it in wild hide and seek through the summer leaves. It was the merriest kind of word-valzing imaginable; and never a sneer, an innuendo, a whispered hint, but found a partner. And in the midst of it all the band of the Royal Horse Guards Blue brayed forth Suoni la Tromba with tremendous and sonorous emphasis. What did it matter how its tone—accompanied, regretfully, indoors, sneers? It was their business to blow, and they blew as though they would have blown the walls of the gardens down like Joshua's rams' horns. So the drummer beats the charge or the chamade, the advance or the retreat. So while Cleopatra reclines at her banquet, lolling on her poop of beaten gold, beneath her canopy of tissue, with Inas and Charmian—those "gentlewomen like to Nereides"—the Egyptian musicians who play the flute and the hautboy have quite enough to do at the prow, blowing and tooting while the silver oars keep stroke to their music, and without troubling their heads about the "Serpent of Old Nile," or Mark Antony or Octavius Cæsar either. Their business is to blow, and they do blow. This is a good state of life; to sit in the gentlemen-lifeating your reduced quota of sound, and enjoying your forty bars rest without belonging either to the actors before or the audience behind you. They have not an old fiddler once, at the French Opera, who so minded his crochets and quavers, listening to countless overtures for fifty years, singing through innumerable ballets, and who could yet declare on his honor that he had never seen a single pair of legs under the age of forty at the Royal Horse Guards Blue, at the Chiswick Flower-show, had the best of it. When their labors were over, they had a pleasant cold supper and beer, and the band-master shared between them a handsome donative.

GEORGE AUGUSTUS SALA.

THIS popular novelist, whose portrait we print for the benefit of readers on page 149, was born in 1828. His father was an Italian, and his mother, a favorite singer, was a West Indian. Early in life Mr. SALA devoted his energies to painting. When the Gore House was furnished up as a grand Symposium by ALEXIS SOYER, the latter exercised both the taste and the skill of Mr. SALA in its paraphernalia and scenic arrangements. From his own account of this Symposium it appears to have been in imitation of unrivaled magnificence — with its beautiful gardens, terraces, its tasteful library, and its rooms fitted up in the Oriental style—with sea-Chinese pagodas, or Italian cottages overlooking lakes. At length the grand Symposium vanished, and Mr. SALA commenced his career as a contributor to Mr. DICKENS'S "Household Words." Some of his productions were translated into French, and Mr. SALA was invited to Russia, and wrote a series of articles on his tour for the "Household Words." Subsequently Mr. SALA left the staff of Mr. DICKENS'S periodical, and has appeared as a diligent writer, but his papers are always entertaining and original. His new story, "QUITE ALONE," commenced in Harper's Weekly for this week, as a serial, from advanced sheets.

THE ESCAPE FROM LIBBY PRISON.

THE escape of a large number of Union officers from THE LIBBY PRISON AT RICHMOND, on February 9th, aroused a deep feeling of public interest. We publish this week, on page 145, a sketch representing the meeting of some of these refugees—worry and wearied by the fatigues of flight, aided to the severities of their long imprisonment—with the Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry, who were scouting the country for their relief. The plan of escape had been conceived two months previous to its execution. The only possible way of escape was through the subterranean canal, excavated by a number of the prison to some convenient point of exit on the outside. A start was proposed to dig the tunnel in the direction of the avenue, and sixteen through that; but after several days' hard work the entrance to the sewer could not be discovered, and it was determined to change the direction of the tunnel, so as to lead under the street to an out-house across the way. Here the work was again resumed, small parties of ten or twelve being engaged at a time. The work was carried on at night, and for instruments they used bits of hoop-iron, knives, any thing at hand—the dirt being hid under the refuse and straw in the cellar. When it was impossible any longer to throw the dirt into the cellar, the prison was used as a dirt-cart, being attached to a string on either side, and drawn to and from the cellar. After patiently working in this manner for a number of days they came to a point under the out-house, and began to dig upward, until finally the work was done. The prisoners started out on the evening of the 9th, in small squads, each taking a different route. At two o'clock the whole night of the city were put out, and escape was more feasible. In their efforts to reach the Union lines some were recaptured, but of the one hundred and fifteen when, hotly pursued by the enemy and almost exhausted, they beheld the old flag which had come to find and protect its soldiers.



WASHINGTON CROSSING THE DELAWARE
TABLEAUX
SPINNING WHEEL
SCHOOL FOR SCANDAL
INTERIOR OF EXTERIOR VIEW
ART GALLERY
MUSEUM
MUSEUM OF ART, CURIOSITIES & RELICS
PICTURES DONATED ENGRAVING ROOMS
BROOKLYN FAIR IN AID OF

TABLEAUX
CORN HUSKING 1720
CHOIR OF THE OLDEN TIME
QUILTING IN '76
ACADEMY OF BUILDINGS
KNICKERBOCKER HALL
KNICKERBOCKER HALL
DEPT OF MANUFACTURES AND MECHANIC ARTS
THE SANITARY COMMISSION
ARMORY
NEW-ENGLAND KITCHEN

[FROM CHARLES DICKENS'S "All the Year Round."]

A WHITE HAND AND A BLACK THUMB.

IN THREE CHAPTERS.

CHAPTER XII.

An hour later Arthur Haggerdorn sat alone in his little room, trying hard to restore some order among his scattered thoughts, when he was startled by a heavy step without, followed by a tap at the door. It was a frank, hearty knock, and worthy of the individual who had delivered it, a jolly grazier-like personage, with a round head, hairy ridge-bones, and whity, who entered, strode straight up to Arthur, and taking his hand wrung it cordially.

"I've come up to you to eat a beef-steak with me, Master Haggerdorn," said the visitor, in a provincial accent of considerable breadth.

Arthur replied that he was much obliged, the more so as he was in total ignorance even of the name of his proposed entertainer, and was not in the least disposed for dinner.

"As for names, mine's Bill Brightson," was the rejoinder. "As for hunger, the very fits of the steaks at Katy Dewe's coffee-house would put an appetite into a mile-stone; so come along. Your brother bade me ask you."

"My brother!"

"There's his token" (giving Arthur a long twisted lock), "one of his kisscombs, Master Arthur; we call 'em in—here—in Lincolnshire. He said he shouldn't want it no more. Bless you, I know all about it! And as my time's precious, and there's gentlemen a-waiting me in several directions, why, there's no time to waste in getting peckish. Are you coming, or why's you coming?" asked the visitor, at his patience on the wane.

He evidently listened eagerly to every sound, and Arthur had noticed more than once, that at any sudden movement in the house, the country gentleman's hand made a curious quick motion in the direction of his breast-pocket. "I've only three-quarters of an hour to spare. You want a cab!"

"Cab!" said Arthur. "Its is my desire—to find no cruel, crafty murderer of Humpage father."

"Would the crafty murdered do as well, now?" asked Mr. Brightson, with a curious flicker in his eye.

"Ze murdered!"

"If you come along and eat a beef-steak," was the oracular reply.

And Arthur, yielding to one of those sudden convictions common to impressible minds, caught up his hat, and followed the worthy grazier with all the alacrity the latter could possibly desire.

Mr. Brightson, whose rustic shyness perhaps led him insensibly to prefer the less frequented thoroughfares, conducted Arthur through a network of intricate labyrinth of back slums, to what seemed one of the very dirtiest little taverns that ever welcomed the hungry traveller to steak and pot of ale. A low bar, closely followed and interpreted by a burst of savory steam, met the visitor on the threshold, and though it might not absolutely be a spire a mile-stone, certainly suggested ideas not appreciable by barren argument.

Mr. Brightson pioneered his young companion through the inner darkness, which was so profound that Arthur was fairly seated in a box opposite his guide before his eye could clearly distinguish surrounding objects.

There was but little talking; there was a low continuous rattle of knives and forks, not to mention the ceaseless fric, indicating that people came thither exclusively to feed. It was too dark to read or write, and a man might easily have helped himself from the same salt-cellar with his own brother without recognizing him. The attendance was performed by two grimy persons, or other sable beings, who flitted gloomily about the room, and being invoked as "Alice," and "Bokey," had probably been ascertained by some visitor whose sight was stronger than common to be male and female of the species.

Mr. Brightson apologized for not offering his guest a choice of viands, such being the celebrity of this house of which "Alice"—in the matter of rump-steaks, that to have ordered any thing else might have endangered the instant expulsion of the audacious wight so having offered a wanton and unmanly insult to the feelings of the gourmeteaten at work below. Rump-steaks and ale appeared (or these two) to exhaust their pressure on the table as suddenly as if they had only awaited the arrival of Mr. Brightson and friend. There followed, of necessity, a minute's silence, after which the grazier wiped his mouth on his sample sleeve and spake:

"It pose you don't much frequent this ken—that is, coffee-house—my kid—that is, my boy?"

Arthur replied that he was not in the habit of selecting that locality as his favorite resort.

"It's a very 'spectable place," said the grazier, "but it's out of the way, sometimes comes fellers that don't want to be twigged. You're going fur to hear something."

Arthur naturally inquired what it was he was going to hear?

"What'll turn your love-locks into green thizzywigs," was the unsatisfactory reply, the speaker's eyes peering curiously into the dark recesses of the room. "Alice! Hot flannel!"

Arthur almost started at the strange and sudden order, but had hardly time to ask its meaning, when Alice placed the answer on the table, in the form of a pewter jug filled with a mixture of gin and beer, further complicated with sugar, nutmeg, and a crab-apple.

"You're sure you can bear it?" said the grazier, with the manner of a man who spins out time, or postpones a painful revelation. "Take a toothful of this stuff. You'll want it."

Following the turn of his companion's head rather than the direction of his eyes, Arthur noticed that a dark object had glided in, and had taken post, silent as a shadow, at the end of their own table. It was a low sleeping figure.

"Just as I expected," said Mr. Brightson, leaning across the table, and addressing Arthur in a low, distinct tone. "That disappearance job has done its work. A pity, that it is! Twas an sweet little creeter as ever I see—just like my Matty, which is still in pantaloons—but solider. I see her twice, when I was on familiar visiting terms with Snells, silversmith's in Jermyn Street—them as was robbed, you know." (He paused an instant, then continued.) "I see her but twice, for you your crib was right opposite num'er twenty-seven, and you must have known her! Well! She's dead! Dead!" repeated Mr. Brightson, in a loud, clear voice.

But louder and clearer was the heart-broken cry that burst from the dark figure at the end of the table, as, rising from its cowering attitude, it flung its arms wild, and fell forward across the board. All present started up and crowded to the spot.

Brightson caught Arthur by the arm.

"That's your sons, he said, hurriedly, in his ear. "See to him—it's off. Nervous in a crowd. If you want Bill Brightson, advertise in Flying Post —Spittlegate Jerry."

"And Miss—Miss—" gasped Arthur.

"She's all right. Trap for a bolted governor. Here's your hand-bag, headforemost on the table here. Get him home!"

So saying, the timid grazier wound himself into the crowd, and vanished.

CHAPTER XIII.

The excellent Arthur, though secretly inclining to Lord Lofty's opinion that Lofty-Hall ought to be paid down, might be better adapted to his ideas and habits than an unconquered wife with an income of that amount, and so on, and so on, and left without dream, and ended, after much cogitation, by resolving, as he mentally expressed it, to at least "try his fist." He therefore, from what had passed between himself and the prisoner, that Bob Cauter, the lieutenant, and Quest of the Black-Thumbs, would be put upon the track of the dis-courteous practitioner of Liverpool, and he doubted not that the latter's haunt would be reported to him before many hours were over. That was as good as settled. Whatever might subsequently be Arthur's relations with Miss Carge—in just requital of his rudeness and selfishness, in crushing a crib entirely out of his legitimate sweetheart's possession—Mr. Arthur, Mr. Armour, master of George and of the situation, was surely bound to make the very best of his opportunity.

Thus it came to pass that Polly-my-Lamb's next visitor of note was Henry, of Hoe Street, who, presenting himself in the absence of the lady with his air of quiet authority, requested an audience, and was instantly admitted.

Polly was seated in her favorite large chair, white as marble, and almost as motionless: her only gesture being a slight inclination of the head, accompanied by a faint smile.

Mr. Armour was conscious of a trifling amount of embarrassment, but, recovering himself, pounced at once upon the subject, as he would have collared a thief.

"You are aware, madam," he said, "that we have effected the capture of the notorious offender, Lord Lob, and that he is safely lodged in Newgate?"

Polly was aware of it.

"And that Sir James Polhill has always attributed to this miscreant the anguish of nothing we have been so deeply interested in punishing?"

Again Polly was aware of it.

"With all deference to Sir James's acuteness and great experience, I have presumed to form a contrary opinion" (Polly looked up with some surprise), "and the result justifies that hardihood," continued the modest Henry. "The man is totally innocent of any complicity with that crime. No, he seems identified—though by no means free from the most exalted motives—at its commission."

"Indeed, Sir!" said Polly, with a curious feeling, in which she would have puzzled any one to whether relief or disappointment had the larger share. "I—excuse me—you had something to add."

"Merely that, although Lord Lob had himself no hand in the business, he can help us to the real criminal, and has given us the promise."

"Do I understand you to mean, Sir, that you possess some clew which the chief magistrate does not?"

"That is my meaning, young lady; and, further, that within twelve hours I will have in my personal custody the murderer of Mr. Humpage."

There was something in the man's assured, significant manner that made the color to the very roots of her hair. She made an effort to speak.

"Is—is Sir James aware of your present visit, Sir?"

"He is not. He has, however, made me fully acquainted with your noble and dutiful intentions."

"Leave me, Henry. I beg, Sir," said Polly, turning whiter and whiter.

Conscious that his blow must be struck now or never, Henry, nothing daunted, calmly stood his ground, and put his point with his usual unperturbed and business-like manner. He made one step forward.

"Am I to understand, Madam, that you depart altogether from the principles of the arrangement you announced to Sir James Polhill? Or was it intended, may I ask, for the exclusive advantage of the young foreign gentleman to whom you gave the rose—"

"Ze young foreign gentleman is here to answer for himself," said a stern voice, almost at Henry's ear. "Leave ze room, fellow!"

"I think you had better do so, Mr. Armour," said a somewhat milder voice; that of Sir James Polhill, who had followed Arthur into the room. "You're a first-rate fellow in your line, Henry—a part to the officer—" but this is a little beyond it. Leave the case to me."

Henry withdrew without a word.

Polly-my-Lamb was in the arms of Aunt Sere-cold, and for some minutes tears and sal volatile had it all their own way. Meanwhile the apartment was silently filling. Mr. Hartshorne had appeared, but stood apart, sympathetic, yet inactive, as if he knew that his closer attention would not be required. Mrs. Goodall, Stephen, and Kezie were present, and even a faint vision of Mrs. Arcroft hovered near the door.

"Better, darling?" were the first accents that broke the silence of the room.

"Much, dear," said Polly, raising her head from its lavender pillow, and smiling through her tears. "What is the matter? O tell me what has happened?"

"Tell you, my dear," said Sir James; "can you bear good tidings fearlessly?"

"Try me, Sir James."

"I think I may. I think I will. You know, my dear, that I have always entertained an idea, amounting to conviction, that your father's life was not taken."

Polly knew nothing of the sort, but she welcomed the idea with all the warmth due to an old acquaintance.

"My dear, there is hope of his safety."

"There is certainty," cried Polly, with hands uplifted, and eyes glittering through tears. "I read it in your kind faces. Where is he?"

The group opened, and Arthur Haggerdorn came forward, bowing under an aged withered broken form, with stooping head and snow-white hair. Was this, indeed, all that was left of the bluff, handsome, debonair, Basil Humpage? Polly thought so, for she fell upon his neck without delay or question, gave him one kiss, and, her excitement having now reached its zenith, fainted. Nevertheless, the old man would not suffer her to be removed. He was placed in the great chair from which Polly had risen, and one of those around quickly restored the happy child to the consciousness of her newly-received treasure.

In the explanations that succeeded, Arthur was, of necessity, chief orator. As agitation proved detrimental to his English, we interpret for him as follows:

When the old gentleman fainted in the coffee-house, Arthur, in accordance with the suggestion of his friend in the cab, had, with unlike his precise liar care, and, on his recovering sufficiently to mention an address in Westminster, and his desire to be transported thither in a cab, he left a check with every care and solicitude. But it was some time after that he and the old gentleman of powerful restoratives that the poor old man regained the complete use of his faculties.

Mr. Brightson's conduct appeared to be an honest-featured old matron, who wept genuine tears at the condition in which he was brought back; but who, nevertheless, exhibited herself vigorously in doing all that was required for his relief.

Of course I knew his name wasn't Higgledum," said the old lady to Mr. Arthur, as the two sat in the adjoining room, but with the door open, so as to command a full view of the patient's bed. "Nobody's name ever is. Not Higgledom, or Piggledom either. But he's the best of masters and of men; and, now you tell me you know his right name, I'm sure he was making a mystery about it. He ought to have his friends about him."

"And he shall," said Arthur.

"I know you'll manage it, you're a-bidin'," continued the old dame, apparently so delighted to get the secret off her soul that she could not check her revelations. "He's up to no end of all sorts of tricks, 'specially to make me think his name was Higgledum. Scores of letters he must have written to himself, Mr. Humpage, Esquire, Esquire! but he forgot, now and again, to destroy them, and so I see, as they lays on his bureau, there was nothing in 'em but Higgledum; and they was tiresome to answer, so he soon gave that up. He used to dine at some out-o'-the-way place, and read his paper at another out-o'-the-way place. I don't think he spent forty pound a year. I knew he was a-bidin', but I'd take my Bible oath he never hurt any mortal, nor I don't think any mortal would hurt him. And," concluded the honest soul, wiping her eyes, "of course I didn't believe in that 'Reward.'"

"Reward?"

"Would you like to see it?" asked the old lady. "Wait a bit."

She stole on tip-toe into the bedroom, took the old man's keys which lay on his dressing-table, duly returned to the parlor, and signed to Arthur to approach it. He did so, with like caution, and saw pasted on the interior of the lid a paper carefully written with a pen and ink, but in large carefully drawn capitals, announcing that a "Reward of Ten Thousand Dutch Guilders would be paid to any person, Dead or Alive, of the Body of Basil Humpage, late Merchant and Banker of the City of London, an Absconded Felon."

"In Heaven's name!" exclaimed Arthur, "what prepared this? It is as false as—"

"Hush!" said the old lady, with a glance toward the patient. "I think he's a moving. False! I know it is. Hark, young gentleman. Ze done it, Sir, Sir!"

"Himself!"

"I see him a-finishing and touching of it up. He hadn't no copy. It all come out of his own head, and that head's—"

The matron's dubious sort of gesture, but Arthur caught her meaning, and the mystery flashed upon him. He was aware of the rumors which had arisen, but which had been utterly disregarded on investigation, respecting the business connection between Humpage and the fraudulent bankrupt house of Dietrich Brothers. The former had, indeed, as may be remembered, while ignorant of the designs of this unhappy firm, assisted them with certain advances. This circumstance it was that, preying on the old merchant's mind, had induced the monomania from which such strange results had come.

In effect, this was the solution. Pursued by the belief that an attempt would be made to apprehend him, but successfully disguising his fear, Humpage had only watched his opportunity to escape, when, on the morning of the twelfth of March, his purpose was precipitated by an accidental movement in the house, which reached his ear while dressing. The repeated summons at his door alarming him more and more, he, with scarcely a moment's consideration, effected his desperate exit from the window. Failing in a first attempt to scramble down by the water-pipe, and cutting his hand severely in regaining the room, he secured a piece of rope used for conveying luggage, and, arranging the coil so that he might clear it after him, this time effected a safe, and, strange to say, unperceived descent.

Simple it is, but less true, that his first refuge was opposite to his own mansion, in the house of Mrs. Arcroft! Confused as his judgment was, its failure of the latter could not part so quickly with its darling. Where he completed his disguise was never clearly known, but at dusk, on the fifteenth day of March, there appeared, at Mrs. Arcroft had truly deposed, a stout gentleman, of civil demeanor, with light bushy hair, and profuse beard, who engaged her second-floor rooms, front and back, and quickly finding fault, as she further stated, with the stable disturbances at the back, caused his bed to be removed to the front room, from whence he could watch his own house, and the proceedings of its inmates, at pleasure.

Here he enjoyed a peace, to which (as he afterward stated) he had been for many months a stranger. Though still a slave to the fixed idea that he had been somehow associated with the Dietrichs in their guilt, he was aware that his own affairs were prosperous and in perfect order. Those he loved best in the world were in affluence, and, save for his loss, in happiness. He might still watch over them unseen, and there was, in this, a mysterious cunning pleasure, not remotely akin to the disturbance of his brain, that determined him to preserve his present strange incognito as long as possible: at all events, until his honest name should be cleared.

It was with great regret that, under the influence of some new delusion, he gave up his lodgings at Miss. Ascroft's, and retired into a small back street in Westminster, laying aside his disguise, and simply assuming a false name.

Scarcely established in the Westminster lodging, his health, hitherto remarkably strong, began to decline, and to grant a change did a few months make in the appearance of the once lale and portly merchant, that it was not surprising if, in the obscurity of the dim coffee-houses to which he resorted, he ran little risk of recognition. How Bill Brightson, otherwise Bob Causter, discovered his real name and history, is a point that gentleman thought proper to conceal, the only satisfaction he would vouchsafe on a subsequent period, he received a handsome reward from Arthur) being couched in the single expression:

"Blest yer 'art, nobody knows a dog!"

Arthur had found the task of reassuring the old man as to his daughter neither hard nor critical; indeed, the chief difficulty he had encountered was in his treatment of him was to dissuade him from an attempt to hasten home while he had scarcely strength to leave his bed, and change as he was, either the shock he had just received, or the rapid decay of his bodily powers, or both, had fixed his mind firmly upon the conviction that no medicine he had done this extraordinary and well-known act of effecting his disappearance and keeping himself concealed, for the bare act itself has been on record long before now.

However, that very same evening Arthur Haggerdorn had the happiness of restoring Basil Humpage, a sane and reasonable man, to his long-deserted home and loving daughter.

What more remains to tell? It is mortifying to reflect with what extreme ceremony important characters can be swept from the scene, how heroes may be extinguished in a sentence, how coquettes may be reformed in a line.

Place for the nobility! A notice to the following effect was sent for insertion to the Morning High-Flyer, the court and fashionable organ of that period.

DEATH.

On the sixteenth instant, near Tyburn, aged twenty-five, in consequence of a sudden fall, to the great grief of a large circle of friends, the Lord Viscount Lofty of the Right Honorable the Earl of Hawkweed, K.G.T., etc.

It is true that the fashionable notice declined to publish the above (though drawn up by no less an authority than the deceased himself, on the day preceding the anticipated demise), but that it did so, as on that very night his lordship, who had been some time ailing, fortunately broke a bloodvessel, which put his disease was, from that authority, adjourned for three weeks. During that interval a copy of the above announcement was submitted to the Earl of Hawkweed himself, and acted so strongly upon the well-known sensibility of that excellent nobleman, that his influence was exerted to the sick man's favor, and obtained permission for him to visit the plantations of America. Mercury so unexcited, and, let us add, so unmerited, immediately began to display its virtues, and, of death could not. He survived, indeed, but for a few months, but these were months of penitence, and that time "could not be repeated or."

Considering that old Mr. Humpage positively refused to pay any of his friend Arthur's debts, and obstinately preferring little in domestic affairs, he was regarded, more than ever, as absolute master, Polly-my-Lamb, and Arthur, as best she might, with the society of the young artist. In order, however, to relieve her as much as possible, kind Aunt Serecold contrived to secure little studios in a remote corner of the mansion, to which it was confidently hoped Arthur would often retire. And so he did, and also painted six more portraits; but as these proved to be all studies of the same young person, in different attitudes, and as no strange model visited the house, it is to be presumed that Miss Serecold's principal object failed.

One evening, as the party (little Mr. Hartshorne happened to be present) were sitting together after tea, papa, who seldom spoke, suddenly raised his white head, and taking a hand of each of his two nearest neighbors, put them softly together.

"My children, my good children, make me happy."

There was again a day of excitement in Jermyn Street. All Saint James's appeared to be out on that pleasant morning in May that witnessed the nuptials of the charming and wealthy heiress of Basil Hampage, Esquire, and Arthur Haggerdorn, of Stumpfelgeldgarend, Western Transylvania. The St. James's High-Flyer devoted a special paragraph to a description of the ceremony, in which the Very Reverend Doctor Cox, Rector of St. James's, without the slightest assistance (as in these degenerate days), first united the above parties, and subsequently, in like a pleasant postscript to an interesting letter, married Miss Mabel Sercould to Mr. John Hartsberne. Among the bridesmaids attendant on the younger bride, the High-Flyer distinguished the Setsors Torre-Diaz, whose elevated interest in her lovely friend, to the loss of her own incomparable beauty, attracted deserved attention. The bride's magnificent necklace of pearls and emeralds was a present from Sir Lucas Polhill, the eminent magistrate. The police arrangements, rendered necessary by the immense assemblage, were under the immediate direction of Mr. Henry Armour, chief officer.

LOVE'S SACRIFICE AND ITS RECOMPENSE.

"No, boy, you can not go. The country does not need you; its armies are full, its triumph sure. You must leave your old mother, George, now that she has no other arm to lean upon."

There was a painful pathos in the woman's voice entirely blended with something of command. A tear, too, stood in her eye, as, laying her hand upon her boy's arm, she added:

"I have given one son, George, to the cause; it can not be asked that I should give you too, my last and only one."

They stood in the library, mother and son, the summer twilight folding them in its soft hale. Already in the mother's forehead age had silver'd its snows, but the face was beautiful and noble still—a page without blot or blemish. The son, standing with commanding power in the maturing prime, carried all that mother's shining womanhood in his mien, touched only with a masculine hardness and force; but it was plain without, from all his appearance, that he had grappled as yet with few of life's sterner duties; indolence rather had marked throughout his one-and-twenty years, out of which no deed or achievement had sprouted into growth. This night, however, there was a new inspiration upon him, and very soon he spoke again:

"You know, mother, I would not be undutiful; but would you have me stand on the flaming edges of this great conflict and have no participation in it? You did not in your heart begrudge Edward to the cause; you are willing, surely, to give the world enough as a testimony that you do not grudge the sacrifice? Oh, my mother, could I lift my face among men when this war is done and our scarred heroes come marching home, if I had not been ready to secure the triumph crowning their tattered banners? Could you feel comfort in the proud moment when Liberty was in peril you stopped short of my sacrifice? Would you not rather see me laid under the grasses where Edward is lying than that that you had a coward for your son? But while I say all this, you know, my mother, I would be dutiful—dutiful to you next to my own conscience and the pleadings of humanity."

The twilight deepened, but the mother, with a deep yearning in her eyes, took no note of the passing moments. For a time perfect silence reigned; then at last she said:

"You have been a true, thoughtful son, George; I know it is no idle caprice that prompts your purpose; I give my consent—go, and God bless and guard you!"

It was indeed no idle caprice that had determined George Marsland's choice of a career. Even in the midst of luxury, hedged about through all his earlier years by every comfort that affluence and position could confer; educated into the refined of the ancestral eminence in the more refined and polite social spheres than to fill a place in the dazzling working world; lifted above the necessity of exertion, with no internal predisposition thereto, he had entered into a polished, purposeless drone, spending his days in trivial pursuits, which afforded neither genuine pleasure nor durable results. But when suddenly over the land the war-cloud burst and its shrill call to arms, and the nation, out of its profound peace, rose with flaming face to meet the peril of rebellion, the souls of the people in their vigorous action the slumbering impulses of his better nature; life grew to be, in his estimation, an earnest, solemn thing; he saw in it new possibilities of growth and achievement; he saw opportunities opening every where, tempting the earnest soul to effort and adventure, and out of his selfishness and dumb apathy there came, under the sharp inspiration of the time, a longing to be useful, to earn a place in the world's regard, to do something for the Liberty that through all the royal years of her bondeuage pay should make his name luminous and noble. But at first the longing was not grasped. An elder brother, in the first red days after Sumter fell, went and did from his own means, even by stealth, and George, obedient to the commands of affection, remained for a time behind, the one thought of his duty burning deeper and deeper into his soul. At last the first-born of the house—the dear brother of his love—in a hot charge at Bull Run, fell never to rise: then, with a purpose yet more intense, George determined, come what might, to go to the field; and now at last, after repeated importunities, the mother's fear had been removed, and his dream was to be fulfilled.

But one thought troubled him still, as with thoughtful pace he left the library and passed into the little boudoir opposite. What would Mary Spencer say—would she, the companion of all his later years, the mere than sister, whose life he hoped some day to knit into his own, would she, with warm Southern blood in her veins, and Southern memories lying like sunny pictures on her heart, approve his decision? Of late he had concealed from her his real thought; but he felt, from what had passed when he had months before named it to her, that she would attempt to dissuade him from his purpose. She stood, as it were, so entirely alone in the world, dependent wholly upon the bounty of his mother, whose ward she was, that it would be only natural she should cling to one upon whom she had learned to lean, one whom he felt in his inmost consciousness she loved with all the strength. But in spite of affection, no bland solicitation of hope, should woo him now to disgraceful ease, and with that thought pulsing in his veins, he sought the quiet retreat where he knew he was awaited.

How he told her of his purpose; how, in the sudden evanishing of the light, the pallor expression of the eye, he read the confession he longed to hear and know; how he combated the objections which love suggested; how the discussion, begun in tenderness, grew at last passionate and vehement, the very consciousness of the power of mutual affection adding to the willfulness of the moment; how, while the one grew stern and inexorable in the thought that he was on the side of right, that was in him, the heart of the other, stung by the pangs of a jealousy that could not brook the bestowal of precious wealth upon any thing save itself, perhaps, by innate indifference to the cause the other loved, became bitter and perverse—why rehearse all here? Suffice it that at last the touch of love bitter word spoken in the heat of a passing gust of passion, he rose to go, saying, as his face paled,

"I had thought you knew me better, Mary, willing to do and suffer for your country; but I was mistaken. I should not be worthy to fight for this holy cause if I could permit for a single hour the considerations like those you have addressed to my conscience, to keep me here as you wish."

The words were crisp and cold, and the voice had a rebuke sharper than any sting in it. The pale, girlish face flushed under the taunt they enfolded.

"Go, then, if you will; a love that flies its object so soon upon possession is scarcely worth a true man's keeping."

It was over—this difference—in a moment; but so, in some pivotal second of time, lives are made and cut under bright, suns are obscured, mountain tops of joy are won or lost, kingdoms and crowns are achieved or broken in the dust.

That night, before deep came to soothe his restlessness, George Marsland had volunteered in a city regiment, bravely putting away from him the love he had hoped, a little while before, might enrich and exalt him to new heights of blessedness and joy.

Nor did Mary Spencer find a more tranquil time than he had done, as she communed through the night with her own heart. The moment he had quitted her presence, obedient to the high impulses of her all-deepening manhood, all the vastness of her loss forced itself upon her consciousness. She saw, then for her intellectual eyes, how supreme above she had erred, crucifying her own better emotions while wronging his patriotic instinct, in laboring to dissuade him from his purpose. She saw what she had done it, so abased did she become in her own esteem, she would have entreated on her knees pardon for her offense, but that he was not there to do. He would never seek her presence again; she knew his nature too well to hope for that. Obedient to the generous impulses of true affection, she had yet ever been as first when once wronged or betrayed. Besides, he would leave upon the morrow. Her cry was to God, that he would in some way she might make him understand how grieved she was for her offense, that he might sometimes think of her in the battle-field, and not cease to longing to make amends for her fault. Perhaps, some day, he might return, and then, it might be, his heart, empty and desolate, would turn to her love she would keep fresh and pure for him. Some day! Alas! there was another thought; he might, some day, fall in the battle-field, and never return; and then for her life would never more have one ray-gleam-hint of coutent gathered about it, but one hope to brighten the "dumb, waste places of the dark." That thought was like a knife scarcely for the very life of her heart, and she fell upon all the night at stung and harassed her, until at last the morning came, purpling the east and mocking all its brightness with her pallor.

But she must act now, if she would have George "show the very name thrilled her!—carry with him the thought of her." She rose, and, ringing the bell-hand, she penciled on a card the words, "I was in fault—forgive me;" then slipping into the still silken parlor, thrust the card into the hand of a servant who lay in wait, and, with a heart that seemed to stand still, she sank upon a chair and listened.

The morning broadened over the world. Mother and son met at breakfast; but Mary, timid and weak, with all her overpowering anxiety, and an excuse which he regarded as only a pretext unworthy of an honest heart. It was a silent meal; each felt a mystery in the other, and yet could not utter it. At length, rising, all their little plans having been discussed, with a warm embrace, which burst on their faces, with unuttered prayer in their hearts, they went apart, the son going with hasty step, as if he were afraid of his own heart's impulses, to join his regiment, which that day marched afield, the mother hurrying into the privacy of her own chamber, there to think of her boy, and pray that no harm might come to him in the battle days whose hail and fire he might be called to face.

George, in going, left no message for the weeping one, whose eyes, looking from the casement through which the morning shone so grimly, followed him with inexpressible longing as he hurried down the street; he had not found her message, and he knew not—did he ever know?—she had prayed for his forgiveness.

Weeks slipped by, the summer deepening and fading, and George Marsland was in camp in Virginia, in General Banks's Division. Almost daily hopeful letters came to the New England home whence he had gone for Freedom's sake, and daily the mother's heart grew stronger in patriotic purpose, in ability to repress all selfish thoughts, and elevate only, as the one thing worth living for, her country's good. But daily also on Mary's face the shadow deepened, and the way in which she walked grew more difficult and weary. She knew he was safe and well; George was a considerate boy, but no word for her ever came from the distant camp, and that was more than she could bear. Certainly, she thought, he must have found her farewell message. It that at least been removed from the niche where she placed it. His silence, therefore, could only mean that his heart was still closed against her. And so, with doubt and fear shadowing her persistence, the time crept grimly on.

At last, when her torture was quite gone and the leaves had begun to fall, there came one day this brief message: "We are ordered to Texas tomorrow, and expect an engagement with the enemy. We are prepared, all of us, to do our duty; but we can not tell what may happen. May God keep you!"

Almost with the letter came the news along the lines of the encampment at Bull's Bluff. Mary Spencer knew that he was there. At first the intelligence was only partial: we seemed to have won a victory with little loss. But gradually the truth was disclosed, and all the terrors of that defeat burst upon the public eye. Who of us can forget what a panic of grief and horror in the heart of Baker's death? Who can forget how every soul was stirred as we learned how, under a mercilessly savage fire, the gallant Massachusetts soldiers stood firm as Bunker Hill, their heroic daring matching the noblest exhibitions of old Roman courage? Even in the midst of that every lip a thanksgiving was poured on the State whose sons had redeemed that day from utter and complete disgrace?

Many an anxious home that day performed, whose story only the Day of Revelations will rehearse. George Marsland was in the fore-front of the conflict. When the fatal dismay for a moment seized our little band, he stood firmly in his lot, rallying around him the confused and straggling column, and permitting the foe not to feet. When the summons came to surrender, he it was who answered the demand with defiance. When overtaken, wounded, dying heroes, forced to the river's brink, plunging into the tide, seeking a refuge in its depths as more to be preferable to the cruel covered their retreat with a score of other lionhearted ones who laughed with him at death.

That conflict was finished, and the marsh and roar of musketry had for the moment ceased. George Marsland stood by the river's edge contributing a word of cheer to those life were ebbing fast. Suddenly a body of rebel cavalry dashed from the wooded height, and discharging their carbines at retreating foe, the group by the river's brink, wheeled and swept away. But they left another gap in the Massachusetts band. George Marsland, struck in the breast by a wandering shot, fell dead in their very midst.

In the hush of a sombre twilight days thereafter one who was with him there broke the news to the mother in the home whose threshold he should never come again alive. Hers was a heart of noble stuff, spite of weaknesses in the past, and though a deeper shadow fell upon her face she only said, "He fell in his country's cause, and that, sacred before, it will now be doubly so;" and with that thought lived and bore her grief out of sight. She bravely shouldered the work which her loss seemed to intimate to her awakened consciousness was a nonefold greater than ever before.

A fortnight after she had abandoned her luxurious home, and in the hospitals at Washington was nursing with tender fidelity in the service of the sick and wounded ones, who to her were now as sons. To-day, at Newbern, among the many selfsacrificing, kindly members of the Freedmen, there is one to whom all look with especial reverence and affection; one whom they always regard as a patient smile, brightens all who catch its glow; and the face is that of George Marsland's mother, and the smile also. Her hair, shining through her tears, she gave him her parting benediction.

Not so did Mary Spencer accept the tidings of his death and her future life. Sitting silently at the gate of Hope, the news came like a decree of banishment, shutting it forever against her, putting out the light even of the land prophesied of brighter days to come. Nor was the future only dark and forbidding. The past had at first no solace for the wild soul; but at last, pitifully to truth and duty darkened all the retrospect.

But one day, while this fearful mood was still upon her, a new thought into the still house. At its side Mary Spencer sat down, with her grief gnawing fiercely at her heart. Alone, through the chill October night, she sat there with the dead. And the Father who pities the stricken one turned heart in the silent night-watches, and with his morning she rose up with a better, purer thought; and thenceforward, having washed away in tears of penitence the stains and dross of her life, performed with serene rejoicing a true woman's work in the grand conflict of the time.

"Perhaps" she said to her heart—"perhaps, looking down from his rest, As will behold me bearing on his work, striving to make it triumphant and complete, and so will come to meet me, when I too am called, at the outer gate of the City, 'eternal in the heavens.'"

Shall we tell of her work? Mayhap, in these later days, you have heard her voice pleading with assembled thousands for Liberty, for Justice, for Union; stirring the pulse of whole communities, touching the souls of senates, lifting all to new planes of patriotism and courage?

Blessed are the dead who die for Freedom's sake! for out of their sacrifice harvests of recompense are born in the present, and in the future thronging generations shall gather inspiration from their high example.

Blessed, too, are the living, who, in the same holy cause, have abandoned ease and all life's accustomed enjoyments to suffer in the field. Often, doubtless, they long—these brothers of ours—to sit in the old chair at the table's head, to hear the prattle of children climbing to their knees, to feel the mother's soft hand upon their foreheads. Standing on lonely outposts, pacing the weary sentry-rounds, do no glimpses of the peaceful Past flutter through their souls, and their familiar faces beam upon them, now and then, through the silence of sweet dreams, with pleading love? But their hearts fail not, their purpose falters not; they have consecrated themselves to the nation's cause, and they go straight on wherever duty leads. Think of them, care for them!—care, too, for all brained, fatherless and widowed of free communities, remembering that there are thousands of homes which, in this grand strife with barbarism, like ourselves, have in every deed of our enlightened civilization, have been made desolate and childless as was that out of which George Marsland went to the field and to immortality.

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

SCHLEMIEL-HOLSTEIN.—These can never be Peace as long as there is a General Wrangel.

"Sadly, my boy, but green how many cheeses there are in this one box! Why, I'll give you a dollar apiece!" "Five, to be sure."—"Arrah, by my soul! but luck to the man that sould ye!"

"My name is SOMERSET. I am a miserable bachelor. I can not marry. I am poor. I am old. I am ugly. I am lazy, possessed of common sense, or the slightest notion of delicacy, to turn a decided flirt."

IMPROPER EXPRESSION.—Let it never be said, that when a man jumps for joy, "his delight knows no bounds."

The other day, a gentleman, without assigning any reason for the change, ordered a coffin-maker to enlarge a coffin's shop, and put his hands upon two sharp carving knives, upon which he had previously fixed his eyes!

Advertising for a wife, says a contemporary, is just as absurd as it would be to get married without a license.

WOMAN.—So long as a woman inspires love she is not old. But what is it to be said? It does not depend upon the last time she was married, but upon the unfortunate number of years which have been allotted to each of us. To be old is to be ugly, and when a woman feels that she woman preserves the attractions of youth until she reaches the age of sixty-five hundred, she will be younger than the woman of twenty who wants them.

People often wonder at the most natural things in the world. "I say, Jerry," said Quilp, to one of his cronies, "you look sober this morning." "And for a very obvious reason," said Quilp, "I have been sober."

There sometimes seems to be nothing in the universe but the sound of old sobs and the tracks of old tears.

Why are crockery-ware dealers unlike all other shopkeepers?—" Because it won't do to crack up their goods."

A good place for early birds—the city of Worms.

The worst town in England to enter with a new dress on—Soiltown.

A traveler was lately boasting of the luxury of arriving at night, after a hard day's journey, to partake of the entertainments of a well-appointed inn. "Ah, sir," replied a Jerry, "that is the peculiar luxury of a left leg" "Why, in common with the luxury, you must find that it is the only leg that is left."

Two young ladies and Mr. Thaddeus O'Grady were conversing on an age when one of them put the home question: "Which of us do you think is the elder, Mr. O'Grady?" "Sure," replied the gallant Irishman, "you both look younger than each other."

A paragraph has been going the rounds concerning an old lady who has a mustache on her lip; to which a hotelkeeper replies that it is not the mustache but the young hotter to have mustaches on their lips, but it is rarely that they grow thick.

"I say, Mick, what sort of potatoes are those you are planting?" "How one, to be sure; your Honor wouldn't be thinking I'm planting turnips!"

In a country church-yard we find this epitaph: "Here lies the body of James Robinson, and Ruth, his wife;" and underneath the text: "Their works do follow them."

"Please, Sir, I don't think Mr. Dosen takes his physic regular," said a doctor's boy to his employer. "Why so?" "Cause sir, he's getting well on prettier fast."

What would be likely to give the best report of a fire? A powder magazine.

A druggist anxious for an increased sale of his counterplaster, put the following couplet upon each package:

"Whoever needs this plaster I am sure,
And that 'tis pleasure to endure."

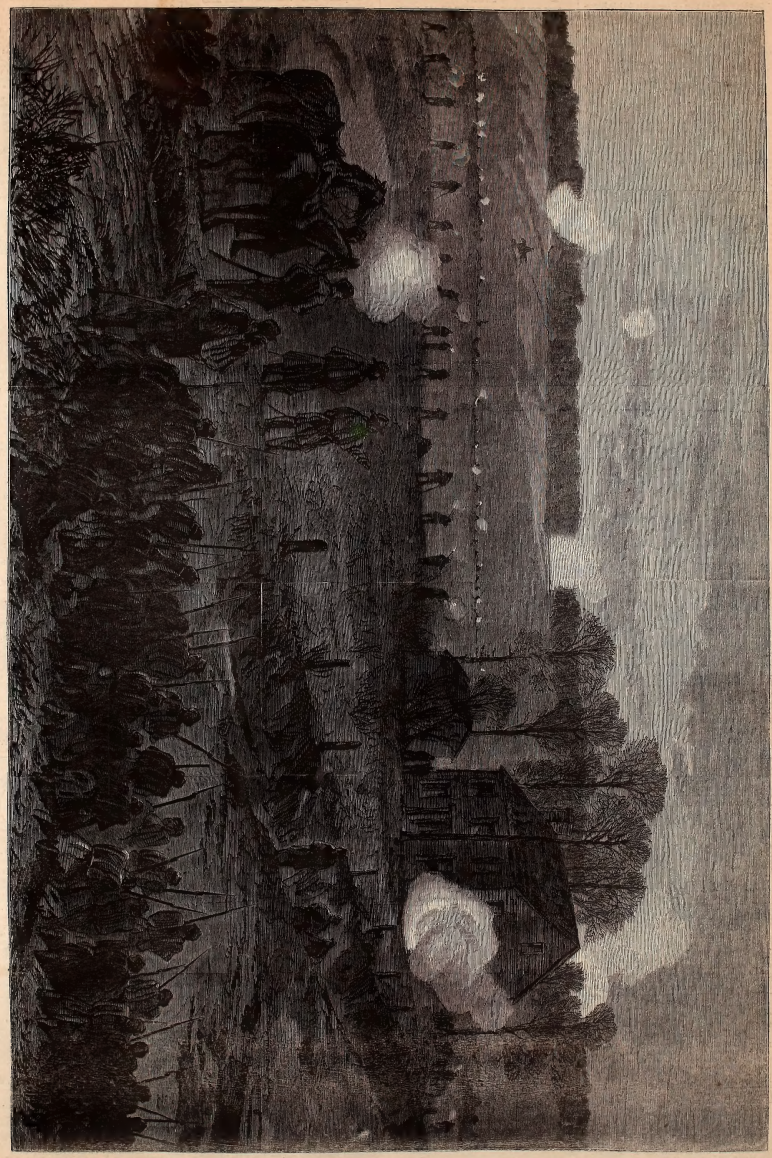
A wag some years ago advertised a carriage to run without horses, with only one wheel, and invited the curious to entertain to see it. Many of them came to the Society of Arts attended, and in the ardor of expectation they were shown a wheel-barrow.

We don't like to see a lady with very minute feet. Ladies should't stand upon trifles.

A gentleman being asked by his friend what it was that rhymed with "purse," replied, "I never saw it" asked the inquirer. "Why," said the wit, "it is not quite one; but that which has that one missing, replied, "Ah, Sir, I did not expect that from you—indeed I did not; for you well know that when all the country refused your dress I took them."

"It is strange," muttered a young man, as he staggered home from a supper party, "how evil communications corrupt good manners. I have been surrounded by tumblers all the evening, and now I am a tumbler myself."

"ANY THING FOR ME, IF YOU PLEASE?"—POST-OFFICE OF THE BROOKLYN FAIR IN AID OF THE SANITARY COMMISSION.—[SEE PAGE 158.]



RECONNOISSANCE AT MORTON'S FORD—NIGHT SCENE—SKETCHED BY A. R. WARD.—[See next Page.]

AT MORTON'S FORD.

THE illustration on page 157 represents the late RECONNOISSANCE AT MORTON'S FORD. The enemy's further position is on the hill, from which he is firing; on a lower hill is his line of skirmishers, in front of which our line is being formed. In the fore-ground are our troops, and beyond them Generals WARREN and HUMPHREYS, and other officers

THE BROOKLYN SANITARY FAIR.

THE anniversary of Washington's Birthday was fitly celebrated in Brooklyn—the third city in the United States—by the opening of the Fair in aid of the Sanitary Commission. On pages 152 and 153 we illustrate some of the leading features of this Fair; and on page 156 will be found a sketch of the "Post-Office," where anybody can go to write a letter to be duly—postage paid—sent. The buildings occupied by the Fair comprise the Academy of Music and Knickerbocker Hall, on one side of Montague Street, and two large buildings on the opposite side. One of these is connected with the Academy by a temporary bridge thrown across the street. Knickerbocker Hall and one of the other buildings were erected expressly for the Fair, all the materials and labor having been given, without charge, forming one of the leading items in the list of contributions. The location of the Fair occupies the centre portion of the Academy; but as most of the stalls are beneath the first tier of seats, they are not seen in our general view of the interior, which is taken from the dress circle. The artist has saved us the labor of describing in detail the general arrangements and some of the most striking special features of the Fair. To give any thing like a catalogue of the articles contributed would require a volume. By way of hint it may be said that there are more than 10,000 sofa-cushions, and a lady of a methodical turn of mind sends us that there is a pin-cushion for every pin in the city. The Art Gallery contains 178 framed engravings, most of them of great value, besides many gems from the albums of our patriotic artists. In the Department of Manufactures and Mechanic Arts we find almost every thing from a buggy to a bag of coffee—from a saddle to a sewing-machine. Not the least interesting contribution here is a huge hole, marked "250 lbs. Sea-Island Cotton," the product of free labor, sent from Hilton Head. In the New England Kitchen the descendants of the Pilgrims may regale themselves upon the national delicacies of Indian-cakes, doughnuts, molasses, pies, pickles, apple-sauce, pork and beans, cider, and the like. If any man wishes to know just how his grandmother appeared when she was quite enjoying the youthful heart of his respected grandfather, he has only to look at the fair attendants, who are arrayed in the garb of the last cent—for it is an old sight; but our belles in their hoops, etc., will look quite as oddly to their grandchildren. In the detached building at the corner of Montague and Clinton Streets is a museum of rare and valuable contributions, paintings, engravings, and works of art and curio. One room contains a beautiful arrangement of flags and war materials from the navy-yard, and another a collection of flags captured from the rebels.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

MORTON'S GOLD PENS are now sold at the same prices as before the commencement of the war; this is entirely owing to the Manufacturer's improvements in machinery, that keep pace with the times, and the Extra Advance System; for, until he commenced advertising, his business was done on Credit and strictly with the Trade.

The Morton Gold Pens are the only ones sold at low prices, as the makers of all other gold pens charge the Premium on the Gold, Government Tax, &c.; but Morton has in no case changed his prices. Wholesale at the old rates.

Of the great numbers sent by mail to all parts of the world during the past few years, not one in a thousand has failed to give entire satisfaction in safety; and now that the Morton Gold Pen can be obtained by any one, in every part of the world, at the same price, postage only excepted.

Reader, you can have an enduring, always ready, and reliable Gold Pen, exactly adapted to your hand and style of writing, which will do your writing vastly cheaper than Steel Pens; and at the present elegant universal High-Pressure Price of everything, you can have a Morton Gold Pen cheaper, in proportion to the labor spent upon it and material used, than any other Gold Pen in the World. If you want one, see "The Pen is Mightier than the Sword," in next column.

A New Story of American Life!

Eliza Woodson;

OR, THE EARLY DAYS OF ONE OF THE WORLD'S WORKERS.

Of this new and fascinating book, the New Crescent says: "Since Uncle Tom's Cabin we have read nothing in the way of Autobiography half so interesting, nothing in the way of fiction so thrilling."

It is a book to interest all ages and classes, and especially to valuable to youth. Price $1.25. By mail, postage free.

Address A. J. DAVIS & CO., Publishers,
374 Canal Street, N.Y.

SOMETHING NEW IN PLAYING CARDS.
LOVE SCENES.
Designs from French Artists.

The above new Gilt-Edge Cards are beautiful pictures, of elegant design, and they can also be used the same as ordinary playing cards, thus combining pleasure with amusement. Enclose 50 cents and send for sample pack. 50 per dozen. Discount by gross to dealers.
L. A. CASWELL, 69 Nassau St., New York.

DR. B. C. PERRY,
DERMATOLOGIST,
49 Bond Street, New York.

Formerly of 29 Winter Street, Boston, treats successfully all Diseases of the Scalp, Loss of Hair, and Premature Blanching. Also, removes Moth Freckles, and other Discolorations from the face, without injury to the texture or color of the skin. Consultation free.
For particulars address stamp for Circular.

THE "JERKS" or CONVULSIONS, when under religious excitement.—Wonderful Phenomena in Kentucky.—Explained.—A change of Heart.—THE FUTURE ALMOND —Which, Real, or Hymn—which? What we were.—Pulpit Cooing.—ANNE NASBY, or the Surprise Party.—SUPREME Court of Massachusetts and Ireland. Death Colors. Signs of Misfortune, Witch Guards.—Irish Fairies.—Rain at a Funeral.—Trying Experiences, etc., in March No. of SPIRITUAL TELEGRAPH. Only 15 cts. or $1 50 a year. Fowlers & Wells, 308 Broadway, N. Y.

"THE PEN IS MIGHTIER THAN THE SWORD."

THE GOLD PEN—THE BEST OF ALL PENS,
MORTON'S GOLD PENS,
THE BEST PENS IN THE WORLD.

On receipt of any of the following sums in Cash, the Subscriber will send by return mail, or otherwise, as directed, a Gold Pen of Morton's Superior Make, the same according to description, viz.:

GOLD PENS WITHOUT CASES.

For 75 cents, the Magic Pen; for 88 cents, the Lucky Pen; for 88 cents, the Always Ready Pen; for 75 cents, the Elegant Pen; and for 94, the Excelsior Pen.—These Pens are not numbered, but suspended in order to numbers 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 respectively.

THE SAME PENS IN SILVER-PLATED EXTENSION CASES, WITH PENCILS.

For 69 cents, the Magic Pen; for 76 cents, the Lucky Pen; for 82, the Always Ready Pen; for 88, the Elegant Pen; and for $1 50, the Excelsior Pen.

These are Warranted Good Gold Writing Gold Pens, with Iridomia Points, the average wear of every one of which will far outlast a gross of the best Steel Pens; although they are unwarranted, and, therefore, not exchangeable.

MORTON'S WARRANTED PENS.

The name "A. Morton," "Number," and "Quality," are stamped on the following Pens, and the points are warranted for six months, except against accident.

The Numbers indicate size only: No. 1 being the smallest, No. 6 the largest, adapted for the pocket; No. 4, the smallest, and No. 10 the largest Mammoth size, for the desk.

Plain and Medium Nibs of all sizes and qualities. Short Nibs of Numbers 4, 6, 6, and 7, and made only of first quality.

The Long and Short Nibs are fine pointed; the Medium Nibs are Broad, Coarse Business points. The engravings are fac-similes of the sizes and styles.

GOLD PENS, WITHOUT CASES.

For 90 Cts. No. 1 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 2 Pen, 2d quality.

For $1 00 a No. 2 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 3 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 3d quality.

For $1 25 a No. 3 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 4 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 3d quality.

For $1 50 a No. 4 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 5 Pen, 2d quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 3d quality.

For $1 75 a No. 5 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 6 Pen, 2d quality.

For $2 00 a No. 6 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 7 Pen, 2d quality.

For $2 50 a No. 7 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 8 Pen, 2d quality.

For $3 00 a No. 8 Pen, 1st quality; or a No. 9 Pen, 2d quality.

For $4 00 a No. 9 Pen; for $5 00 a No. 10 Pen; and for $6 a No. 10 Pen.

The "1st Quality" are pointed with the very best Iridosmin Points, carefully selected, and none of this quality are sold with the slightest imperfection which skill and the closest scrutiny can detect.

The "2d Quality" are superior to any Pens made by him previous to the year 1860.

The "3d Quality" he intends shall equal in respect to Durability, Elasticity and Good Writing Qualities (the three true considerations) any Pens made by other houses.

In regard to the Cheap Gold Pens, he begs leave to say that, previous to quoting them, he had selected Nibs, choice, he could not have made as Good Writing and Durable Pens, for $3 00 each, as he now sells them for, contentedly.

Parties ordering want in all instances specify the "Name" or the "Number" and "Quality" of the Pens wanted, and if for a Gentleman or a Lady, or for Boy, or for—whether of or timber, coarse or fine.

All communications will be kept private, and letters are at my risk: and to all who send twenty cents (the charge for registering), in addition to the price of the articles, I will guaranty their safe delivery.

Further raising Gold or Silver will be allowed the full premium on the day received.

FOG GUILDS, for the price of 10 per cent. will be allowed on sums of $12, of 15 per cent. on $24, and of 20 per cent. on $40, if sent to one address at one time.

Address A. MORTON,
No. 25 Maiden Lane, New York.

THE "RIDGEWOOD" PATENT
SMOKING CASE.
Major-General Burnside

Writes, Jan. 26th, 1864, to the Patentee: "Since what he is pleased to call our 'woeful and beautiful pursuit' of a Ridgewood Pipe and Tobacco Case, I find it to be the most complete thing for a Smoking Apparatus that I have ever seen, and so entirely within the reach of the Soldier in price, that it will certainly work itself into general use." Compact and portable as a Cavalry Pistol. It is offered in various styles at $1 50, $2 00, $2 25, $2 50, $3 00, $3 75 and $5 00, the two latter being silver and engraved. Any Case sent by mail, free to the Army, and everywhere, on receipt of price and 20 cents. A liberal Discount to Dealers and Sutlers. Also the

Ridgewood Smoking Tobacco,

of superior quality and flavor, which is specially put up to fill the Case, and in various sizes for the General Trade. All prepaid everywhere.

OFFICE RIDGEWOOD MANUFACTURING CO.,
252 Broadway, Adjoining the Astor House, New York.

We are now offering our Celebrated Gold Pens and Extension Silver Plated Holders at the following low prices for Cash:

No. 1 Magic Gold Pens and Holders, per dozen, $5 50.
No. 2 " " " " 7 00.
No. 1 Albertine fine Gold Pens and Holders, per doz. 8 00.
No. 2 " " " " 10 00.
No. 1 Always Ready " " " 11 00.
No. 3 " " " " 14 00.

These Pens and Holders are all warranted, and will retail from $1 to $5 each.

A deduction of 10 per cent. will be made on all sums of $50 and upwards. Our Pens are all fitted in Extension Cases, containing one dozen each, and are not soldin less quantities. Sent by mail or express.

Address SALISBURY BROS. & CO.,
Providence, R. I.

BAKER'S RHUMATIC BALM,
BAKER'S FEVER COOLER,
BAKER'S DYSENTERY MIXTURE,
BAKER'S CROUP ALLEVIATOR,
are four remedies which no family should ever be without. Price $1 per bottle each.

Also,
BAKER'S KIDNEY AND GRAVEL REMEDIES, which are invaluable. Price $5.

PERSONAL DEBOT:
No. 254 Tenth Street, near Fourth Avenue.
Remedies sent to any address upon receipt of price.

ALL ARTICLES FOR SOLDIERS
At the Lowest Wholesale Prices, when accompanied by Union troops, should be sent by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 74 Broadway. Rates charged low rates.

Bilious Affections

And the various complaints incident to this season, can not find a surer or safer remedy than BRANDRETH'S PILLS.

VOICE FROM EGYPT.

Fence be unto you, and length of days. The medicine (Brandreth's Pills) was a Sacra for to Azrael, both in pestilence and onerous sickness; the little orbs were rich with the wine of health; let the maker wear this golden circle, that he may know I was wounded with the arrows of disease, but am now healed. May he grow in the sunshine, and, dispensing blessings, be most blessed.

ACHMET HALLILLA.

The above, accompanied by a ring, was delivered to me by a distinguished Member of Congress on his return from Jerusalem. B. BRANDRETH.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS are sold at 25 cents per box, enveloped in full directions. Purchase none unless my PRIVATE GOVERNMENT STAMP is on the box. See upon it B. BRANDRETH in white letters.

PRINCIPAL OFFICE, BRANDRETH BUILDING,
NEW YORK.

For sale by all respectable dealers in medicine.

Caution
FROM
The American Watch Company.

It having come to our knowledge that imitations of the American Watch have been put upon the market in great numbers, calculated, by their utter worthlessness, to injure the reputation of our genuine products—to protect ourselves and the public from imposition, we again publish the trade marks by which our Watches may invariably be known.

We manufacture four styles of Watches:

The first has the name
"AMERICAN WATCH CO., Waltham, Mass.," stamped on the inside plate.

The second has the name
"APPLETON, TRACY & CO., Waltham, Mass.," engraved on the inside plate.

The name of the third is
"P. S. BARTLETT, Waltham, Mass.," engraved on the inside plate.

All the above styles have the name "American Watch Co." painted on the dial, and are warranted in every respect.

The fourth has the name
"WM. ELLERY, Boston, Mass." engraved on the inside plate, and is not named on the dial.

All the above Watches, whether made of various sizes and are sold or silver cases, as may be required.

It is hardly possible for us to accurately describe the numerous imitations to which we have alluded. They are usually inscribed with names so nearly approaching our own as to mislead the attention of the unaccustomed buyer. Some are represented as made by the "UNION WATCH CO., of Boston, Mass."—no such company existing. Some are named the "Solid Gold," to be sold as our POPULAR or WM. ELLERY grade, usually known as the "SOLDIER'S WATCH;" others are named the "APPLETON WATCH CO.;" others the "P. S. BARTLEY," instead of our P. S. BARTLETT, besides many varieties named in such a manner as to convey the idea that they are the veritable productions of the American Watch Company.

A little attention on the part of buyers will protect them from gross imposition.

ROBBINS & APPLETON,
Agents for the American Watch Company,
182 BROADWAY, N. Y.

THE NILE EXPLORERS, CAPTAIN SPEKE AND GRANT, with Illustrations, including their Africans.—AN AFRICAN Beauty, How the Nile Rises.—THE ISLE OF CAMELS.—THE Mogo-thing, Weber, Iron, Combination, Origin of Vegetables.—THE WORLD in Space.—The Breath of Life.—WOMAN, Duties of Creation.—THE PHYSICIAN—Monads, Birds, Physiological Laws.—THE PHYSICIAN in Marine Hospitals.—PROFESSIONAL JOURNAL, 15 cts. FOWLER & WELLS, N. Y.

To Invalid Soldiers,

Or others out of employment.—Good wages can be made by any Soldier, in the sale of his splendid new book, entitled

LIFE AND CAMPAIGNS OF GENERAL GRANT.

By Julian R. Locke. Nearly 500 pages with Engravings. Price $1 50. For Circulars and Terms, apply to DERBY & JACKSON, Publishers, No. 3 Ann Street, New York.

Soldiers and Everybody! A great Book for you! Over 3000 things worth knowing! Mailed free for 25 cents. Address T. S. DENISON, Publisher, Chicago, Syracuse, N. Y.
Agents, order our UNEQUALED STATIONERY PACKAGES.

JUST WHAT EVERYBODY WANTS.
A Splendid New ROCKET ALBUM
(FOR SOLDIER AND CIVILIAN.)
Holding Sixteen Pictures, is the cheapest and best Pocket Album ever offered to the public.
Sent by Mail to any address, post-paid, on receipt of Seventy-five cents.
It can be filled with Pictures (10) and sent by mail to others in the same army, or friends anywhere in Uncle Sam's domains, at the very trifling sum of thirty Cents postage. All orders promptly filled by
SAMUEL ROWLES & COMPANY,
Photograph Album Manufacturers,
No. 3 PEMBERTON SQUARE, BOSTON.

Military and Naval

COLLECTION and BUSINESS OFFICE.—SOUL, BROWN & CO., No. 2 Park Place, New York, adjust and collect every variety of just claim against the Government or States. Hand-Books containing laws, &c., sent by mail, free.

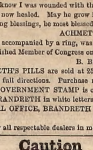
Opera and Field-Glasses

Can be a mere distance of 3 to 4 miles. Spectacles and Eye-Glasses with French flint glass. Also Microscopes of every description, from $1 to $50. Illustrated Catalogue sent free.
Wholesale and Retail. Send for Circular.
WM. WILSON & SON, 66 Nassau St., N. Y., cor. Fulton St., up stairs.

NATIONAL BATTLE PINS.

McClellan, Grant, Rosecrans, Burnside, Hooker, Sigel, and Fuller. All are the same Pattern as the cut, only differing in battle-grounds and dates. Perfect photograph likeness of each General with fine gold. By enclosing One Dollar a sample will be sent by mail.
AGENTS WANTED IN EVERY TOWN AND OUT THE ARMY. The undersigned has the exclusive right of manufacture of this beautiful keepsake and

Cavalry and Artillery Pins.



The above cuts represent the splendid new Cavalry and Artillery Pins we have been getting up in Silver Metal, to meet the request of inquiries from day to day for the same. Each branch of the service so desiring can have the appropriate badge. The Cavalry and Artillery Pins are Enamelled for the Divisions in

Red, White and Blue,

The under rim highly polished as Silver can be had for the Navy, and Regiment. These Pins are neat, and cost One Dollar and Fifty Cents each, with the Name, Co., Regiment, and Corps engraved upon them, or One Dollar without engraving. If any engraving is desired beyond the Name, "Co." and Regiment, Three Cents per Letter or Figure will be charged.

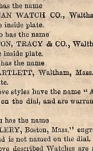
AGENTS will be furnished at $8 per dozen without engraving and $9 per dozen with the Name and Regiment. The Emblems are raised, and the Pin about the thickness of a two-shilling piece.

UNITED STATES NAVY
Monitor Pins.



The cut is a correct copy of the Monitor Pins got up in Silver Metal. The name of the Monitor and number of the Pin will be engraved upon the Pin about the thickness of a two-shilling piece.
AGENTS will be furnished at $8 per dozen without engraving, and $9 per dozen with the Name and Regiment. The Emblems are raised, and the Pin about the thickness of a two-shilling piece.
Agents wanted, and supplied at $7 per dozen, without engraving, and $10 per dozen, engraved as above.
Every Soldier in the Army should have one.
LOUIS PHILIP & CO., 609 Broadway, N. Y.

Accordeons from $3 00 to $25. Flutes from $5 00 to $100. Violins from $2 00 to $50. Guitars from $5 00 to $20 00. Drums from $5 00 to $12 00. Fife Drums $15 to $20. On receipt of money we will forward instrument by Express. WM. A. POND & CO., No. 547 Broadway, N. Y.

CHURCH VIEWS.—Card Photographs of the Principal Churches of New York and Brooklyn; also 75 Splendid Views of Central Park. Price 25c. each, $2 per doz., or $12 per doz. Views. Send for list. Address on receipt of price. Send stamps for catalogues. W. O. WEMYSS, 675 Broadway, N. Y.

ARMY BADGES,

Watches, Gold Pens and Cases. Jewelry of all kinds at reduced rates. Send for a Circular.
H. REITH, 208 Broadway, N. Y.

DO YOU WANT LUXURIANT WHISKERS OR MUSTACHES?—My Organent will force them to grow heavily in six weeks upon any smooth face) without stain or injury to the skin. Price $1—25 cents extra if sent by mail, post free, to any address on receipt of P. O. order. R. G. GRAHAM, No. 169 Nassau Street, N. Y.

$75 A MONTH! I want to hire Agents in every county at $75 a month, expenses paid, to sell my new cheap Family Sewing Machine.
S. MADISON, Alfred, Maine.

To Compositors.—Wanted, three strictly first-class Compositors, used to Bookwork. Apply to MR. MARSHALL, Printer of HARPER & BROTHERS' Composing Room, N. Y.

The Beard &c.

IN these cases of enmity, retarded growth, where the hair has been drawn out by depilatories, pulling and stimulating power, the Tennessee Swamp-patch Balsam has been found effectual. Sold by druggists, Manufactories, &c., to an exceedingly fine and vigorous growth. The Balsam, of Little Rock, Arkansas, is a vegetable, and will be sent sealed, on receipt of return postage.
JOHN RAWLINS, 815 Broadway, N. Y.

Union Playing Cards.

Colonel for King, Goddess of Liberty for Queen, and Major for Jack. 52 counsel cards to the pack. Eagles, Shields, Stars, and Figures are the suits, and you can play all the usual games with them. Two packs, in neat case, mailed at $1. The usual discount to the trade. Send for a Circular. Address AMERICAN CARD COMPANY, 14 Chambers St., N. Y., or 105 William Street, N. Y.

J. H. Winslow & Co.,

100,000

WATCHES, CHAINS, &c., &c.

Worth $500,000.

To be sold for One Dollar each without regard to value, and not to be paid for till you know what you are to get.

SPLENDID LIST!!

Of Articles to be sold for One Dollar each.

100 Gold Hunting Cased Watches..... $100 00 each.
100 Gold Watches..... 60 00 each.
200 Ladies' Gold Watches..... 35 00 each.
500 Ladies' and Gent's Silver Watches.. 15 00 each.
3000 Vest and Neck Chains..... 5 00 to 10 00 each.
2000 Gold Band Bracelets..... 5 00 to 10 00 each.
3000 " " " ..... 3 00 to 5 00 each.
2000 Cameo Brooches..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.
2000 Mosaic and Jet Brooches..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Lava and Florentine Brooches.. 4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Coral, Opal, and Em. Brooches.. 4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Cameo Ear Drops..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Mosaic and Jet Ear Drops..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Lava and Florentine Ear Drops.. 4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Coral, Em., and Opal Ear Drops 4 00 to 6 00 each.
3000 Gent's Breast Pins..... 2 50 to 3 00 each.
3000 Watch Keys..... 2 00 to 3 00 each.
5000 Fob and Ribbon Slides..... 2 00 to 6 00 each.
5000 Sets of Boson Studs..... 2 50 to 6 00 each.
5000 Sleeve Buttons..... 2 50 to 6 00 each.
6000 Plain Rings..... 2 50 to 5 00 each.
6000 Stone Set Rings..... 2 50 to 6 00 each.
6000 Lockets..... 2 50 to 10 00 each.
5000 Sets Ladies' Jewelry..... 5 00 to 10 00 each.
10000 Gold Pens, Silver M'td Holders 4 00 to 5 00 each.
10000 Gold Pens, with Silver Extension Cases and Pencils..... 4 00 to 6 00 each.

All of the above list of Goods will be sold for one dollar each. Certificates of all the various articles, stating what each one can have, are first put into envelopes, sealed up, and mixed; and when ordered, are taken out without regard to choice, and sent by mail, thus giving all a fair chance. On receipt of the Certificate, you will see what you can have, and then is it at your option to send one dollar and take the article or not.

In all transactions by mail, we shall charge for forwarding the Certificates, paying postage, and doing the business, 25 cents each, which must be inclosed when the Certificate is sent for. Five Certificates will be sent for $1; eleven for $2; thirty for $5; sixty-five for $10; and a hundred for $15.

AGENTS.—Those acting as Agents will be allowed ten cents on every Certificate ordered by them, provided their remittance amounts to one dollar. Agents will collect 25 cents for every Certificate, and remit 15 cents to us, either in cash or postage stamps. Great caution should be used by our correspondents in regard to giving their correct address, Town, County, and State. Address

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
208 Broadway, New York.

VETERAN
Solid Silver, $1 50.
A. MILLER
C.B.
5TH N.Y.V.

Veteran Soldiers.

We are now prepared to furnish all Kinds of Veteran Fine for all the Regiments and Corps now in the field, at $1 50 each. Also all the various Army Badges worn by the different Armies, by the single one. 100, or 1000.

Sent to any part of the country by mail, C.O.D. for a circular. Address

DROWNE & MOORE,
Manufacturing Jewelers,
208 Broadway, New York.

"The Human Face Divine."

A new system of Physiognomy. Eyes, Ears, Nose, Lips, Mouth, Head, Hair, Hands, Feet, Skin, Complexion, with all "Signs of Character, and How to Read Them," in THE PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL AND LIFE ILLUSTRATED for 1864. New vol. $1 50 a year. Address FOWLER & WELLS, New York.

Printing-Press for Sale.

One Taylor Double Cylinder, Five Rollers, Table Distribution, Bed 32x51. Price $3500.
Apply to HARPER & BROTHERS, 329 Pearl St., N.Y.

The Army Lantern.
The Convex Reflector Lantern,
(PATENTED APRIL, 1863.)

For burning Coal Oil or Kerosene without Chimney. GIVES A PURE WHITE LIGHT without Chimney.
STANDS QUITE STEADY IN ANY DIRECTION.
FLAME IS REGULATED from the outside.
IS VERY SUBSTANTIALLY MADE, AND CONVENIENT IN FORM AND SIZE.
Sample sent on receipt of $1.
ARCHER & PANCOAST, Manufacturers of Gas Fixtures, Coal Oil Lamps, Chandeliers, &c., 9, 11 and 13 Mercer Street, New York.
N. B. Liberal discount to Dealers and Sutlers. Circulars with particulars sent free.

IF YOU WANT TO KNOW
a little of everything relating to the human system, diet, air, exercises, etc., etc., read revised and enlarged edition of
MEDICAL COMMON SENSE.
Among the many subjects treated in this work are the following: Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma, Catarrh, Scrofula, Rheumatism, Dyspepsia, Piles, Liver, and Phthisophy of Digestion, Constipation, Affections of the Urinary Organs, Barrenness, Rupture, Salt Rheum, Cancer, Paralysis, Diseases of the Heart, Neuralgia, How to Recover the Sight and throw aside Spectacles, Marriage, the Curious Marriage Customs of the World, Philosophy of Elopements, a Chapter for the Married, and a thousand things of value to married and single every one will be interesting, altogether, a curious book for curious people, and a good book for every one. 400 pages: 100 illustrations. By E. B. FOOTE, M.D., No. 1,130 Broadway, N.Y. Contents tables sent free by mail to all applicants, or the book forwarded by mail, postage paid, on receipt of $1 50. Address S. TOUSEY, No. 121 Nassau Street, New York.

NEW ARMY WATCHES.

$15	THE GREAT NEW ARMY WATCH, expressly for SOLDIERS, in very heavy solid silver hunting cases, fine ENGLISH LEVER Movement, full jewelled, patent regulator, white dial and steel cut hands. Engine turned, open face. Each watch warranted a perfect time-keeper for three years. $15.	$15
$15	GOLD COMPOSITE, same as above, exact imitation of the English Army Watch. $15.	$15
$25	FINE DOUBLE BOTTOM silver English Hunting Watch, full jewelled, CHRONOMETER BALANCE, $25.	$25
$35	OFFICER'S WATCH, MAGAZINE AMERICAN LEVER WATCH in 4 oz. sterling silver cases, FULL JEWELLED, gold joints, and finished in every part. $35.	$35
$45	AMERICAN LEVER, same as above with Chronometer Balance, $45.	$45
$11	Silver Hunting Watch, fine movement, $11.	$11
$16	Ladies very small hunting Gold Composite Watch, beautifully engraved, in neat spring case, exactly as accurately be detected from gold, $16.	$16
$85	EXCELSIOR 18 CARAT SOLID GOLD AMERICAN WATCH, in 40 pennyweight cases. $85.	$85
$92	SAME AS ABOVE, WITH CHRONOMETER BALANCE, $92.	$92
$38	GOLD HUNTING ENGLISH LEVER WATCH, RUBY JEWELLED, Serene Balance in 3 Tones, $38.	$38

CONSTANTLY on hand Watches of every description.
We will send any of the above Watches on receipt of price, free of expense, to any address. Registered letters come at our risk if properly sealed. All Watches registered, $1 extra. Liberal discounts to Agents. Send FOR OUR CIRCULAR.
Parties desiring will give their address plain. All orders promptly and carefully filled.
GEORGE A. LEVY & CO., Importers, 208 BROADWAY, N. Y.

Cavalry Badges.

Annexed is a fac-simile design of our newest style Cavalry Badge, sent free by mail to any address on receipt of price. Name, Co., and Regiment handsomely engraved thereon.

Solid Silver, ... $3 00
Solid Silver, heavy
in gold relief..... 3 50
Solid gold..... 8 00
Solid gold enameled. 9 00
Also new style Artillery Badge, and every style Cavalry Badge worn by the Army. Send for our Illustrated Catalogue. Address C. L. BALCH & CO., 9 Nassau Street, N.Y.

New Catalogue of Jewelry
Sent free. Address
THOS. CAFFEETY & CO.,
Providence, R. I.

$60 A MONTH! I want Agents at $60 a month, expenses paid, to sell my Wonderful Inventions. Oriental Burners, and 13 other articles. 15 circulars sent Free. Address JOHN F. LOREE, Shirley Mass.

CONJUGAL RESEMBLANCES, where Love begins and Ends.—Woman's Wage.—Matrimony in the way.—Money.—Its nature, use and abuse.—Theology, Skulls and national character of the English, Scotch, German, French, Italians, Hindoos, Negroes, and Good Samaritan.—Rev. H. M. TRYON.—His likeness, and a sketch of sermon on the MARCH OF THE INTELLECT.—Sermon, 16 cents, or $1 50 a year. FOWLER & WELLS, 308 Broadway, N. Y.

Gold! Gold!! Gold!!!

30,000 Watches, Chains, &c., &c., &c.

Worth $150,000.

To be sold for One Dollar each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 20 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time get our Circular containing full list of articles and particulars. Liberal terms to Agents, which we will send by return mail. Town in the country.

Six Certificates can be ordered for $1, thirteen for $2, thirty-five for $5, and one hundred for $12.

Address C. F. SHULTS,
265 River Street, Troy, N. Y.

Just what every Family wants. Sawyer & Co.'s No Chimney Burner for Hand Lamps and Lanterns, burns Kerosene Oil, gives a brilliant light without chimney, smoke, or odor. Sent by express, on receipt of $1 each. Address Sawyer & Co., 83 Nassau St., N.Y. Agents wanted. Send for Circular. Liberal discount for 50 etc. American Institute awarded 1st Premium and Medal, 1863.

WATCHES
FOR
THE ARMY.

Superbly finished watches, the beauty of which is only equaled by their cheapness.—N. Y. Weekly Journal, 1864.

Particularly valuable for officers in the army, and travelers.—Frank Leslie's, Feb. 27.

Prettiest, best and cheapest time-piece ever offered. —N. Y. Illustrated News, Jan. 30.

Magic Time Observers,
The Perfection of Mechanism!
Being a Hunting, or Open Face, or Lady's or Gentleman's Watch combined, with Patent Self-winding Improvement.

A most pleasing novelty. One of the prettiest, most convenient, and decidedly the best and cheapest timepiece for general and reliable use ever offered. It has within it and connected with its machinery its own winding attachment, rendering a key entirely unnecessary. The cases of this Watch are composed of two metals, the silver one being fine 14 carat gold. It has the improved rotary action lever movement, and is warranted an accurate timepiece. Price, expertly engraved, per case of half dozen $204. Sample watches in most morocco boxes, $35. If sent by mail, the postage is 36 cents; registering, 20 cents.

Silver Watches!
First-Class Hunting Time-Pieces.
FOR ACCURACY OF MOVEMENT, BEAUTY OF MATERIAL, AND ARTISTIC FINISH, THESE WATCHES CANNOT BE EXCELLED.

UNIVERSAL APPROBATION!

An imitation so faultless that it can hardly be detected by the most experienced judges. The material being of two metals, the one of fine quality Silver and the inner one German Silver, it can not be recognized by cutting or heavy engraving, making it not only a genuine case, but in durability, the best resemblance of Solid Sterling Silver to coinage.

The sale of these watches in the army is a source of immense profit, and they vary readily at $25 each and upward. Many hundred dollars can be made in a single payday by any one of ordinary business tact.

AT WHOLESALE ONLY! In heavy hunting cases, beautifully engraved, Lever movement, Gold, and fancy set Jewels, in good reventeen jewels by the half dozen, $72; postage, $2 28; registering, 20 cts. Sold only by the case. Can be safely sent by mail.

EF" THE GREATEST NOVELTY, INVIABLE IN ITS EFFECTS. No agents employed; buyers must deal directly with us. If you want a watch that will wind itself in a registered letter it is at our risk! Orders will meet the most prompt and faithful attention.

HUBBARD BROS., Sole Importers,
Broadway, cor. Courtlandt St., New York.

PATENT POCKET—For Ladies and Gents—Can not be picked. Price $1 25. Large size for use of Paymasters, Sutlers, Collectors, &c., $1 50. Sent by mail free of postage.
W. C. WEMYSS, 305 Broadway, New York.

FOLLAR & SON,
MERCHANT TAILORS AND CLOTHIERS, 697 BROOME ST., NEAR BROADWAY, N. Y.
Keep always on hand and to order a well-selected stock of cloths, of the finest fine for a genuine Pipe for 6 Dollars. Pipes cut to order and repaired.

ENAMELED CHAMBER FURNITURE.

All Interested in Shorthand should send for the PHONOGRAPHIC MAGAZINE. It contains a complete Catalogue of Phonographic Books. No. 2 explains the Phonographic Alphabet. No. 3 contains the Outline, explaining all the more general principles of the Art. Single No. 3 cents. Nos. 1, 2, and 3, 17 cents.
Address A. J. GRAHAM, No. 491 Broadway, N. Y.

THE COLOR OF YOUR EYES. Language of Blue Eyes, Black Eyes, Brown Eyes, Hazle Eyes, Gray Eyes, Green Eyes, Children's Eyes, and the Eyes of Celebrated Persons.—Poetry of the Eyes—

The bright black Eye, the melting blue,
I can not choose between the two;
But that is clearest all the while,
Which speaks the most and the smartest smile, and much more on the same subject, in the PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL for 1864, now ready. only 25 cents, or $1 50 a year. Address FOWLER & WELLS, 308 Broadway.

Portable Printing Offices.

For the Army and Navy
Hospitals, Merchants,
Druggists, and all who wish to print neatly, cheaply, and expeditiously. Circular No. 2 sent free. Specimens of Type, Cuts, &c., at cost. Address PRESS Co., 31 Park Row, N.Y., and 59 Lincoln St., Boston.

Excelsior Music Book, for Violin, Flute, Fife, or Cornet. I love that dear old Flag the best, thine. When the boys come home. Your forms is too small for me. My love is on the battle-field, each 25c. Violin Strings 25c. each. Metronome. Instruction Books. Sheet Music sent on receipt of post stamp. E. Blume, 205 Bowery, N.Y.

NOW READY—COMPLETE.

GROSSBEAR MANSION:
A MYSTERY OF NEW YORK.
BY NED BUNTLINE.
ILLUSTRATIONS BY DARLEY.
PRICE TWENTY-FIVE CENTS.
Mailed free of charge to any address.
FREDERIC A. BRADY, Publisher,
415 Sixth Street, New York.

Two Dollars made from twenty cts., call and examine, or ten samples free by mail for 25c. Retail for $3, by A. L. WOLCOTT, 109 Nassau Square, N. Y.

Solid Silver, $1 50. Fine Gold, $3 00.

HEAD-QUARTERS
For Veteran, Cavalry, Army Corps, Company, and Division Pins of every Description.
B. T. HAYWARD,
208 Broadway, New York.

This NEW Battle Pin will be sent, with a knowledge of any officer in the army, for $1. I have also a New and Beautiful Artillery and Infantry Pin, and Engineer's and Pontonier's Pin. Also Solid Silver shield, or officer Army Corps, Division, or Co. Pin, with your Name, Regiment, and Company handsomely engraved upon it, for $1.
B. T. HAYWARD,
Manufacturing Jeweler, 208 Broadway, N. Y.

Ballard Patent
Breech Loading Rifles and Carbines.

Carrying the copper water-proof cartridge, which also using ordinary loose ammunition. This arm is now admitted by all competitors to be superior to any other ever offered to the public. Its simple construction and perfect workmanship are a sure guarantee against getting out of order. The great rapidity of loading with either fixed or loose ammunition alone makes it superior to all others. These arms are made for both sporting and military purposes, and have been adopted both by the General Government and the State of Maine. We have the highest testimonials of their efficiency and durability.

We also offer to the Public our new Cartridge and loose ammunition breech loading shot gun. This arm has no equal as a hot or pocket weapon. No one wishing a first-class arm should be without it.

For further particulars send for descriptive circular.

P. S. Do not purchase a Rifle or Carbine until they be used with either copper cartridge or loose ammunition.

MERWIN & BRAY, Sole Agents,
262 Broadway, N.Y.

RHEUMATISM.

USE THE ELECTRO-METALLIC INSOLES, BELTS, AND ARMLETS. They are an INFALLIBLE REMEDY for RHEUMATISM, CURE FEET, &c. Sold by HARPER & CO., No. 5 Astor House, N.Y.
Insoles, $1 per pair; Belts, $3; Armlets, $1 50 each. Sent by mail for 30 cents additional.

HARPER'S NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE
For March, 1864.

CONTENTS:

SCENES IN THE WAR OF 1812. — VIII. WASHINGTON AND BALTIMORE.
ILLUSTRATIONS.—Bills of the President's House, 1814.—W. H. Winder.—The Capitol in 1814.—Old Bill now Bridenburg in 1861.—The Bridge at Bladensburg in 1861.—Barney's Spring.—Rodgers's Station, Baltimore.—Belvidere Mansion.—The Battle-Ground.—Battle Monument where Ross fell.—The Battle-Ground the Day after the Battle.—Lot Winery in 1861.—Battle-Flag of the Twelfth Regiment.—Battle Monument, Baltimore.—Battle-field Monument.
ALASI
THE NORWICH ARMORIES.
ILLUSTRATIONS.—The Armory Buildings.—The Rolling Mill.—The Barrel-Room.—Polishing the Bayonet.—The Proving-Room.—The Bayonet Room.—Grinding the Bayonet.—The Trip.—Sweeping Machine.—Testing the Bayonet.—The Trip-Hammer.—The Assembling Room.—The Inspecting Room.—The Breech-Loading Rifle, Open and Shut.—Musket and Bayonet.—The Lock, Stock, and Barrel Department.
JOHN HEATHERWICK'S STILE. (Concluded.)
THE SMALL HOUSE AT ALLINGTON.
CHAPTER XLIX. Preparations for going.
CHAPTER L. Mr. Dale Is Thankful for a Good Thing.
CHAPTER LI. John Eames ooes Things which he ought to have done.
ILLUSTRATIONS.—Packing up.—"Bell, here's the Inkstand."
MUNTIAL HEALTH.
SAMPLE AMERICANISMS AND ROMANCE.
WOMAN IN COMDY.
THE SCIENCE AND ART OF CIVILIZATION.
NETTY'S TOUCHSTONE.
MRS. JOHNSON'S HOME.
IN MEMORIAM: W. M. THACKERAY. (With Portrait.)
HISTORICAL CONTRAST.
BRACKEN HOLLOW.
ILLUSTRATIONS.—In the Glen.—At the Foot of the Stair.
THE SEA-SHORE.
WITH A BAG OF FREE.
DITTY DAYTON.
PARTY AND PRICE.
MONTHLY RECORD OF CURRENT EVENTS.
EDITOR'S EASY CHAIR.
EDITOR'S LITERARY DRAWER.
ILLUSTRATIONS.—In the Lecture Room.—Turnpike Tobbeary.—Under the Nursery above.—In the Study below.
CONTRIBUTIONS FOR MARCH.
ILLUSTRATIONS.—Home Dress and Child's Pardessus.—Dinner Toilet.

TERMS.
One Copy for one Year..... $3 00
Two Copies for One Year..... 5 00
Any Person procuring five copies for every Club of Ten Subscribers, at $2 50 each, will be entitled to One Copy of HARPER'S WEEKLY and HARPER'S WEEKLY, together, one year, $5 00.
HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS.

Circulation over 100,000.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

TERMS.
One Copy for Four Months..... $1 00
One Copy for One Year..... 3 00
One Copy for Two Years..... 5 00
And an Extra Copy and is allowed for every Club of TEN SUBSCRIBERS, at $2 50 each, or 11 Copies for $25, Payment invariably in advance.
TERMS TO ADVERTISERS.—Seventy-five Cents per line for Inside, and One Dollar per line for Outside Advertisements each insertion.
VOLS. I., II., III., IV., V., VI. and VII. for the Years 1857, 1858, 1859, 1860, 1861, 1862, and 1863 of "HARPER'S WEEKLY," handsomely bound, in Cloth extra, Price $5 00 each, are now ready.
HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS.

WAKING UP A HORNET'S NEST.

LITTLE LOUIS NAP. "I say, JOHNNY BULL, I don't like dem zings zat GID. WELLS have stir up. I tink I will go away!"

FISK & HATCH.

Bankers and Dealers in Government Securities,

AND

AGENTS FOR THE UNITED STATES FIVE-TWENTY LOAN,

No. 38 Wall Street, New York.

Charlotte Temple, the most affecting tale ever written. Also, The Death Face, a Tale of the Minnesota Massacre. Both post-paid, on receipt of twenty-five cents each. GEORGE MUNRO & CO., 137 William St., N. Y.

Watches Given Away.

Agents and Dealers look at the Great Chance to make Money we offer, by engaging in the sale of our New NOVELTY STATIONERY PRIZE PACKET. Only $15 capital required to obtain a WATCH, free, with first order. We also offer SPRINGFIELD STEEL ENGRAVINGS. $10 invested will yield $50. Never before such inducements were offered. Full particulars by circulars, mailed free.

G. S. HASKINS & CO., 36 Beekman Street, N. Y.,
The Oldest Established Prize Package House in the U. S.

SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN

This is unquestionably the most popular and interesting weekly of its class in the world. It has been published for more than eighteen years, and has a larger circulation than any similar journal in existence. It is a weekly paper of 16 pages, and is devoted to Science, Discovery, Invention, MECHANICS, MANUFACTURES, and NEW PRODUCTIONS of INDUSTRIAL ART. Most of the Inventions patented in the United States are illustrated in its columns, the Engravings being numerous and beautiful. Each number contains 16 pages of matter and from 6 to 10 Engravings. At the end of the year the publishers present a splendid volume of 400 pages of useful matter, containing the matter, and about 300 Engravings. A full report of all the Patents Claims are published each week.

It is printed weekly on fine paper at the moderately low price of $2 per year, or $1 for four months. Specimen copies sent free. Address—

MUNN & CO.,
No. 37 PARK ROW, NEW YORK.

The Celebrated ORAIG MICROSCOPE, combining Instruction with Amusement, is mailed, pre-paid, for $3 25; or with 6 beautiful Mounted Objects for $4; with 24 Objects, $5, by

HENRY CRAIG,
335 Broadway, New York.

Also, he will mail, pre-paid, the Bellows, or Perfected STEREOSCOPE, with a sliding Focus and Field-Piece, accommodating all eyes, for $3 00; with 13 assorted views, $6. A liberal discount to the trade.

Cancer! Cancer!

HAVE YOU A CANCER? If so, you are undoubtedly much troubled about it. Give yourself no undue anxiety concerning it, but put yourself under the hands of Dr. DIXON, and, if mortal skill can avail, you may yet be saved. Do not wait until it gets beyond the reach of remedy! Dr. DIXON treats this, with kindred cancers, that class of disease called Nervous, and which arise from waste of Nervous Vitality; such as Neuralgia, Rheumatism, St. Vitus' Dance, Epilepsy, Dropsy, Torpid Liver, Constipation, Lockjaw, Asthma, Lumbago, Ulcers, Crooked and Weak Spine, Irregular and Deficient Menstruation, Leucorrhœa, and all diseases peculiar to the female sex.

☞ Persons at a distance can receive the necessary advice on writing and inclosing two stamps to prepay postage. Address DR. ALFRED D. DIXON, 143 East Ninth St., near Broadway, N. Y.

STAMMERING

And Stuttering cured by Bates's Patent Scientific Appliance. For (New Edition of) descriptive Pamphlets and Drawings, address H. G. L. BATES, 377 W. 23d St., N. Y.

THE BOWEN MICROSCOPE.

Magnifies a small object 500 times. Mailed free on receipt of $1 00. Address C. BOWEN, Box 320, Boston, Mass.

A Beautiful Complexion free from Tan Pimples and Freckles, may easily be procured by using the "BALM OF THOUSAND FLOWERS." For sharing it is unsurpassed. It is composed of palm oil, honey, and other valuable articles, highly perfumed by its own ingredients, and when used for washing, night and morning, renders the skin soft and white, and free from blemish. Price 50 cents.

The Trade supplied by HOWARD, SANGER & CO., 105 and 106 Chambers Street, N. Y., and for sale by all Druggists.

A Household Word.—Buy your Housekeeping Articles at BASSFORD'S, Cooper Institute, New York.

To the Trade.
PHOTOGRAPHS.

Excelling everything in the line yet produced, in beauty of execution, and selection of subjects.

These Photographs are produced in the highest style of the Art, and the subjects—with the exception of cases that are standard—are all new, and the very choicest that can be produced. To which will be continually added new subjects, all choice. No poor stock will be used in the manufacture of our Photographs, and no subject will be found among our Stock, that will not command a ready sale. Dealers, in ordering of us, can depend upon getting the most saleable Photographic Stock produced in the country. Send for Catalogue. Address F. W. HUTCHINGS, 493 Broadway, N. Y. (Store and Manufactory).

$12 The Soldiers' Watch. $12

This Watch is particularly adapted for the use of soldiers, being set in extra heavy solid silver hunting cases, full ruby jeweled, silver capped, fine English movements, and warranted a perfect time-keeper for one year, together, with a fine gold plated chain and key. Sent to any address, carefully packed in a neat case, on receipt of Twelve Dollars.

Please remember we warrant all our Watches for one year. Address

LOWRETT & CO., P. O. Box 5650, New York.

Holloway's Pills.—Emaciation and premature decay, slow and life-destroying fever, and the chronic consequences of neglected symptoms of disease, may be expelled even in the eleventh hour, by a few doses of this starting medicine. It acts as an alterative as well as a purifier of the blood, and may be safely taken by females as well as children of all ages. Sold at the manufactory, No. 80 Maiden Lane, New York, and by all Druggists, at 50c., 70c., and $1 10 per box.

WARDS SHIRTS
SENT EVERYWHERE BY MAIL OR EXPRESS

Ready made or to measure, at $13, $9, and $45 per doz.

Self-Measurement for Shirts.

Printed directions for Self-Measurement, list of prices, and drawings of different styles of Shirts and Collars sent to everywhere.

FRENCH FLANNEL OVERSHIRTS, $8 00, $9 75, and $10 00; sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of price. A single shirt sent by mail on receipt of the cash and 63 cents postage for each shirt.

Send the size of your neck. Also

STEEL COLLARS

ENAMELLED WHITE,

Having the appearance and comfort of linen, have been worn in England for the last two years in preference to any other collar, as they are readily cleaned in one minute with a sponge.

To Military Men and Travellers they are invaluable.

Price $1 each; sent by post to any part of the Union on the receipt of $1 10.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

AGENTS WANTED in every Town in the Union.

S. W. H. WARD, 367 Broadway, N. Y.

Straight Hair made Wavy!! without heating it, by using Irish Patent Hair Crimpers. For sale at Variety Stores.

$47 AMERICAN $47 LEVERS.

Trade Mark, P. S. Bartlett, Full Jeweled, WARRANTED, in 4 oz. coin silver hunting case, gold joints, fancy push pin, for $47.

Also, every variety of and Watches at equally low rates. All orders from the ARMY must be pre-paid, as the Express Companies will not take them for collection on soldiers.

J. L. FERGUSON, Importer of Watches,
206 Broadway New York.

$7 ARMY WATCH. $7

A BEAUTIFUL ENGRAVED GOLD PLATED WATCH, Double Case, Lever Cap, small size, enameled dial, cut hands, "English Movements," with stem-winder and set, sent free by mail in neat case, only $7.

A SOLID SILVER WATCH, same as above, only $7. Specially adapted to the ARMY.

$15 European Timekeeper. $15

A Superb "Extra Double Gold Plated" engraved Hunting Case Watch, Magic Spring, "Genuine English Jewelled Movements," Independent Action, Self Balance, a perfect timekeeper, "warranted one year." Will stand Acid, and is an

Exact Imitation of $100 Watch,

Used by the British Army Officers,

Sent free by mail, in elegant Morocco Case, for only $15.

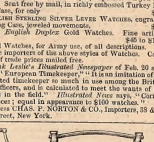
The Celebrated English Coin Watch, Acton, for Sedan. Rich enameled designs; ruby movements, extra heavy gold plate, in Splendid Sporting Hunting Case. "Will stand all tests." Exact timekeeper, a perfect "Bijou Article." Sent free by mail, in richly embossed Turkey Morocco Case, for only Engine Turning Silver Levers Watches, engraved Hunting Cars, jeweled movements, $15.

Real English Duplex Gold Watches. Fine article, from Gold Watches, for every variety of all descriptions. We are sole importers of the above styles of Watches. Catalogue of fifty prize medals free.

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper of Feb. 20 says of the "Army Watch," that "it is an imitation of the celebrated timekeeper so much in use among the British army officers, and is admirably adapted to the wants of our soldiers in the field." Illustrated Notes says: "The timepiece; equal in appearance to $100 watches." Correspondence solicited.

Address CHAS. F. NORTON & CO., Importers, 35 & 40 Ann Street, New York.



Putnam Clothes-Wringer.

TESTIMONY OF MESSRS. ING. W. WHEELER, of Cleveland, Ohio, and John T. Lefferts, of New York City.

GENTLEMEN: I know from practical experience that iron pulleys less than six inches in size will not oxidize and rust one particle. I can safely say that for several years experience in the manufacture of chain, for chain-pump and waterdrawers, in which I have tested the affinity of iron and steel, that, if the process is conducted properly, it is a perfect void of rust.

For one year ago my family commenced using one of your Wringers, I have performed all of the washing myself for the first time it was used, and has become an indispensable article to me. I have closely observed your Wringer in all kinds of clothes-wringers, the modus operandi being different, and can say unhesitatingly that as a Clothes-Wringer, but in my judgment they have failed. The Putnam Wringer is so very perfect as possible, and I can cheerfully recommend it to be the best in use.

Respectfully yours, JOHN W. WHEELER.

Many years experience in the galvanizing business enables me to endorse the above statement in all particulars.

JOHN L. LEFFERTS, No. 160 Beekman Street.

New York, January, 1864.

Patented in the United States, England, Canada, and Australia. Agents wanted in every town.

No. 2, $5 50; No. 1, $6 00; No. A, $8.

Manufactured and sold wholesale and retail by

The Putnam Manufacturing Co.,
No. 13 Platt Street, N. Y., and Cleveland, Ohio.
S. C. NORTHROP, Agent.

GUNS, PISTOLS, Military Goods,

French and English Fancy Goods.

Also, a full assortment of

Jet, Coral, and Steel Goods.

Schuyler, Hartley & Graham,
19 Murray and 25 Reade Street, N. Y.
31 Rue du Chateau d'Eau, Paris.
Sands St., Birmingham, Eng.

PATENT AGENCY OFFICES.

Established in 1846.

MESSRS. MUNN & CO.,

Editors of the Scientific American, and Solicitors of American & European Patents,

With a Branch Office at Washington, During the past seventeen years they have prepared more than Fifteen Thousand Applications for patents, and solicited through the Scientific American Patent Agency. All inventions connected with the Examination of Inventions, Preparing Specifications, Drawings and Assignments, and the Prosecution of Rejected Cases before the Patent Office, Extensions, Interferences, and Infringements of Patents, and Opinions of the Infringement and Validity of Patents, will receive prompt attention.

Patents secured in England, France, Belgium, Austria, Russia, Prussia, and all other foreign countries where patents are granted. Pamphlets, containing the Laws and Regulations, and Directions how to obtain Patents in the United States, sent free. All communications confidential. Address—

MUNN & CO.,
No. 37 PARK ROW, NEW YORK.

Shults' Ongucent, warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in six weeks, or money refunded. Sent prepaid, for 30 cents. Address C. F SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

FINE WATCH FREE,

And $15 Per Day made Easy.

By selling the Great "original and only genuine" Buckeye Prize and Stationery Packages, each of which contains "more real saleable articles" than any half-dozen other packages ever sold. Each Package contains Fine Writing Materials, Engravings, Fashion Plates, Fancy Articles, Yankee Notions, Gems, Recipes, Many Ways to Get Rich, Rich Presents of Finest Jewelry, &c. The whole worth several dollars if bought separately, free only 25c. Wholesale rates to Agents low. Profits large. Sales immense. Every soldier and every family wants them. Agents wanted in every town and county. Sales pay guaranteed, and a splendid Gold or Silver Hunting Case Watch, genuine English movements, perfect timekeeper, PRESENTED FREE TO EACH AGENT. Be sure of immediate. Send for our great new Circulars for 1864, containing "extra premium" inducements, free.

S. C. RICKARDS & CO., 102 Nassau St., N. Y. Original, Largest, and Oldest Prize Package House in the World.

The only enameled "Turn-over" Collar made in metallic. Send $1 for a "Turn-over" or 75 cents for a "Choker," to Box 3173, and receive it by return mail. American enameled Metallic Collar Co., 81 Pine St., N. Y.

GOLD PENS AND CASES

Retailed at wholesale prices. 14 kt. Gold Pen, Solid Silver Case, $1 50, warranted for one year, guarantee superseding each. Pen. Send for circular. Pens repointed on receipt of 25 cents.

E. S. JOHNSON, 15 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

HOYT'S HIAWATHA
Hair Restorative.

The standard preparation for the hair. Warranted in all cases to restore faded and gray hair and whiskers to their ORIGINAL color. It restores the natural shading of one hair with another, and thus gives a life appearance instead of the dull dead look of dyes, so that the most critical observer can not detect its use. It does not require previous use of a preparation to open the pores of its application, nor does it stain the skin; but is as readily applied and easily rubbed from the skin as any hair dressing. It does not claim to make the hair come in when it has once fallen out, but will do all that, whatever may be advertised to the contrary; but it will prevent it from falling out, make it soft and silky, and destroy and rid the scalp from all impurities and humors, and entirely overcome the bad effects of previous use of preparations containing sulphur, sugar of lead, &c.

HOYT'S IMPERIAL
COLORING CREAM.

An appropriate accompaniment to the Hiwatha; oils and dresses the hair at the same time, and imparts light and red hair to a beautiful brown or black. Sold, everywhere. JOSEPH'S A. HOYT & CO., 10 Dey Street, N. Y.

N. B.—See Business Notice in the Evening Post.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

AGENTS, male or female, SOLDIERS, and all having some time to spare, are particularly requested, as a favor, to send for our Circulars, and we will send a Sample Free, information for which they will be THANKFUL. We offer certain premiums for which we will pay $25 per day and EXPENSES. We want addresses from every COUNTY in the United States, and will pay liberally for them. Address in full, RICHARDS & CO., 37 and 39 Nassau Street, Box 3131, N. Y.

(A CARD.)

TO PHYSICIANS AND INVALIDS.

The Rev. Charles E. King, formerly Secretary to the London Evangelical Alliance, and recently connected, as resident Minister and Physician, with the Venezuelan Mission, will send GRATIS Free of Cost and the Prescription by which he successfully treated, while in charge of the Large Mission Hospital, upward of one hundred cases of CONSUMPTION in the first, second and third stages.

The remedy is equally adapted to the treatment of Asthma, Catarrh, Bronchitis, and all affections of the Lungs and Throat. Also Nervousness, while it speedily invigorates the enfeebled Nerves System, and energizes the deranged functions of the Stomach, Liver, and Bowels.

Address, with stamp,

Rev. CHARLES E. KING,
Box 3341, Boston, Mass.

P. S.—I wish publicly to acknowledge the generosity of these publishers who, from a sense of humanity, have given us the gratuitous publication—Religious papers are earnestly requested to copy.

From the Lebanon Star.

Dr. Stott, the proprietor and editor of the Lebanon Star, is a prominent physician, and State Senator.

"Perry Davis' Pain Killer, which has received a world-wide celebrity, and which has acquired a reputation unsurpassed for the cure of cold, coughs, etc., weak stomach, general debility, nursing sore mouth, cankered mouth or throat, liver complaint, dysentery, bowel complaint, painful colic, and pain in the stomach, bowel complaint, painters' colic, and cholera morbus and dysentery, has lost none of its good name by repeated trials; but continues to occupy a prominent position in every family medicine chest."

Brokers' Stock of unredeemed goods for sale at $3 per entire package, consisting of a variety of rich and valuable goods worth from 75 cents to $300 each. Any person sending $3 will receive one of them in advance what article they will receive. Ten certificates, giving the value of each article, for $1 00; 25 for $2 00; 50 for $3 50; 100 for $10. Address

ANDREWS & CO., 108 Sudbury Street, Boston, Mass.

"NO EXCUSE FOR GRAY, RED, OR FLAXEN HAIR."

ALDRICH'S IMPERIAL POMADE changes gray, red, or flaxen hair to a beautiful black or brown by a few applications, without dyeing, besides being the most perfect hair-dressing ever discovered.

Try it and be convinced.

Price, 50 cents for large bottles.

Prepared by A. ALDRICH, 870 Broadway, New York.

Sent by express to any part of the United States.

Sold by Heimbold, 594 Broadway.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

A JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION.

VOL. VIII.—No. 376.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, MARCH 12, 1864. [$1.00 FOR FOUR MONTHS. $3,00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1864, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

MAJOR-GENERAL WILLIAM T SHERMAN.—[See Page 178.]

TO THE SANITARY COMMISSION.

How They went forth to die!
Pale, earnest thousands from the dizzy mills,
And sunburnt thousands from the harvest hills;
Quick, eager thousands from the city's streets,
And storm-tried thousands from the fisher fleets;
How They went forth to die!

How To went forth to save!
O Merciful! with swift and tireless heed
Along the myriad ways of pain and need,
With laden hand and ever-watchful eye
Fixed on the thousands going forth to die;
How To went forth to save!

How They went forth to die!
Heeding yet shrinking not from the hot breath
Of the fire-angel in the front of death;
Seeing afar yet meeting without fear
The fever-angel lurking in the rear;
How They went forth to die!

How To went forth to save!
To close the purple wells torn open by
The fiery angel ere he drank them dry;
To fan to bloom the pallid forms anew
Struck with the fever-angel's deathly hue;
How To went forth to save!

How They went forth to die!
Counting themselves as the unvalued dust
Trod by a nation; bearing on its trust,
Content if but their sunken graves should be
The footprint of the progress of the free;
How They went forth to die!

How To went forth to save
The precious offerings, like the patriarch's given
On high Moriah, in the faith of Heaven,
To stay the knife ere its point be hurled
Through hearts that hold the promise of the world;
How To went forth to save!

How They went forth to die!
Unnamed, unnumbered like the desert sand,
Blown to build up a bulwark round some land,
To stay the sea of wrong that vainly raves
Forever on a shore of patriot graves;
How They went forth to die!

How To went forth to save!
Embodied wills of thousands far and near
In love's wild agony of hope and fear;
Embodied answers from the throne above,
Enwinged by gifts, of prayers enwinged by love;
How To went forth to save!

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, MARCH 12, 1864.

THE QUESTION.

THE friends of MR. CHASE can not but regret the appearance of the POMEROY circular. It is understood, indeed, that the Secretary himself denies previous knowledge of it. That could hardly be otherwise, for it would clearly be inconsonant with the self-respect of any honorable man to continue to form part of an Administration which he condemned as injurious to "the cause of human liberty and the dignity and honor of the nation," or to be the confidential adviser of a President whom he had denounced as so corrupt as to make the "one-term principle absolutely essential to the certain safety of our republican institutions."

But while we fully exonerate the Secretary from any actual complicity in the preparation or publication of such a document, there can be no doubt that the movement to present his name for the Presidency has been fully known to him and not disapproved. Long used as we have been to respect MR. CHASE, we regret this fact profoundly, and certainly, because any citizen may not honorably wish such a distinction, nor because we believe him to be indequate to the office, but because his action inevitably darkens and distracts the loyal men of the country, and because we can not see in what way his removal from the Treasury to the White House will counterbalance the immense disadvantage of such a change at the present juncture.

If it were true, as the POMEROY programme sets forth, that the re-election of MR. LINCOLN is impossible; or that his re-election would endanger the country and human liberty; or that he has corruptly used his power of patronage, we should, on any one of those grounds, advocate some other candidate; because the defeat of the Union standard-bearer, the peril of the nation and of liberty, and official corruption, are greater dangers to the country than a change in the Presidency.

But as MR. LINCOLN'S re-election seems to us infinitely more possible and probable than his original election; as his administration can by no impartial spectator be said to have imperiled the country, or to have injured human liberty; and as the imputation of corruption no more cleaves to him than to Washington, we must look for other reasons before sympathizing with any effort to expose the country to the consequences of all the changes that follow a change of the President. It is not that MR. LINCOLN has any other "claim" than his record that we so earnestly wish his re-election. Ability and honesty are the only claims to the Presidency which we recognize. We find both in him, while we certainly do not deny them to others. But this is not a question of "claims." If it were, on what grounds could General FRÉMONT and other good men be overlooked? It is a question of national policy and good sense. How can the country be carried through the necessary excitement of a Presidential election in the midst of civil war with the least danger and distraction?—that is the question. It is likely to be done by a general wrangle among Union men as to whether MR. CHASE, or General FRÉMONT, or General BUTLER, or General GRANT, or somebody else, are more likely to carry out the present policy of the war, and secure peace by liberty; or by the general assent of the friends of all these gentlemen that the man who is not only a lover of liberty than they, but has officially initiated and pursued that policy, and who has borne himself with marvelous sagacity in his difficult post, is the man to pursue that policy to the end? We know not what either of the gentlemen named would do; but we do know what MR. LINCOLN has done. Is it perfectly clear that any one of them—and no man can respect and admire them more than we—would have achieved nobler results for the country and human liberty than he? And is the chance that they might do so worth the inevitable risk?

It is a wise friend in another State who writes us: "It is difficult to understand how reasonably desirous to advance the cause of liberty and of the Union can, with the remembrance of the 200,000 votes cast for WOODWARD, Slavery, and Disunion last October in Pennsylvania, think it desirable to support any candidate whose only claim to superiority over MR. LINCOLN lies in the fact of his being supported by a smaller party. . . . Mr. LINCOLN'S words, 'It is very difficult to do sensible things.'"

THE ISSUE PRESENTED.

THE spectator of the political drama will observe that the renomination of the Democratic party has opened its campaign both in New York and Connecticut; and if he would understand what the spirit of the movement is he must look not only at what the Democratic resolutions say, but at the known views of the leaders. He will then find that in Connecticut the platform is essentially that of last year, upon which stood Mr. THOMAS H. SEYMOUR, a practical disunionist, who was supported by FERNANDO WOOD, CLEMENT VALLANDIGHAM, and their friends, and was signally defeated by the Union men of that State after one of the most thorough and exciting campaigns ever known. This year Mr. ORIGEN SEYMOUR is the candidate—a gentleman whose views justify his name. For the name of SEYMOUR stands in this country in the same relation to the great democratic doctrine of equal rights and the Union as the guillotine that the name of BOURBON holds in Europe to the rights of the people. There is no more essential difference between the Democratic party of the United States, and of the SEYMOUR of last year than between the platforms upon which they stand. The rebels will as earnestly desire the success of the one party as of the other. The late President of the Convention was Mr. W. W. EATON, who is a political brother of VALLANDIGHAM. With full knowledge of the people are active engaged in subduing the rebels and maintaining their own national existence. Judge Parker exhorts his hearers to "stop to enjoy a proud satisfaction of having done our whole duty. The faithful people, with the exception of the rebels and their allies, respond heartily "Amen." They have done and are doing that duty. In the wastly Judge aware that during the last year Connecticut, like every State, with some exceptions in New Jersey, stood steadfastly by the great cause of American Liberty? They have blessed on their banners Liberty and Union, and, with certain political doctors of the old school at Albany—" Vallandigham and Slavery."

FAIR PLAY.

Our excellent neighbor the Tribune asks whether it is not possible by mutual consent to adjourn the Presidential canvass? It is just about as practicable as to adjourn the coming of the spring and to postpone crocuses until May. The spring is coming. The canvass has begun. The party of it appear in the Tribune every day.

Upon the same page of that paper, which asks the question of postponement, we find, under the head of Special Dispatch from Washington, an allusion to the proprietorship into Secretary Chase's regulation of trade in the Mississippi Valley as a "tender of services to butcher the reputation of a statesman to whom the nation owes a debt of gratitude."

Just below we find: "It is stated here in military circles that the Red River operation was ordered and ordered by the President."

Very well. It is stated by common sense that party prejudice do not reign a postponement of the Presidential canvass; but that one of them, if the Tribune will pardon such language, is a "dig" at the President, and the other a "boost" for the Secretary of the Treasury.

The campaign for the nomination has begun. The Tribune takes unfairly an active part in it. It is opposed to the nomination of Mr. LINCOLN, and is doing what it can to make opposition against it. It says that Union men will make a grave mistake if they do not apply the one-term principle to Mr. LINCOLN. Nobody can quarrel with it for saying so, however opinions may differ. But let us have fair play. The Tribune is not an ostrich. It surely does not seriously suppose that it is taking no side any more than it can seriously believe that the President ordered an attack to advance into the enemy's country without skirmishers whatever may be "stated" in military circles. But it does obviously injure itself, both in the estimation of its friends with whom it differs and those with whom it agrees, when it insinuates, and hints, and shrugs, and sneers, instead of frankly owning and maintaining its opposition to the renomination of Mr. LINCOLN.

TYPE IN PI.

THE slaveholders and their friends have always tried to avoid using the word Slavery. It is too direct and expressive. It is the synonym of injustice and cruelty, and every body knows it as such. Therefore we have been regaled with all kinds of euphuisms. The first is in the Constitution—"person held to labor." Then we have such as "peculiar institution;" and "involuntary servitude;" and "the industrial system of the South"—and a score more. The thing named was always inhumanity and crime, but it was extremely disagreeable to call it by its name. "Human shambles," or the selling of a woman by a "high-toned gentleman" to pay his debts "dealing in human flesh," because, as Senator Beverly Johnson blandly said, "gentlemen" are very proud and sensitive. But they have now reached the highest point of euphuism. The leaders of the Confederate Government what John Wesley had more concisely described as "the sum of all villainies" by an infinitely sweeter name. Human slavery, with all its horrible woes and wrongs to the victim and his master—which the Honorable James Brooks described a few years since as "a deep, black stag upon the body politic," endangering "the peace and happiness of the master, and robbing the slave of his freedom and birthright"—that foul system is airily mentioned in the rebel address as "the selected type of social characteristics." Mr. BROOKS is now of opinion that the selected type of social characteristics has been thrown into pi—and we heartily agree with him.

THE SOLDIERS' VOTE.

On the second Tuesday in March the electors of the State of New York are to decide whether a citizen is to be disfranchised because he loves his country enough to fight for it. Shall the soldiers vote? is the question to be answered. We should like to see enough about the system to spell their Union right. We should like to see the argument which maintained that in a republic the citizens who cared most for the support of its laws and its liberties, and who risked their lives in its defense should be the very ones who by that act should be deprived of their share in the government. The process of saying to each man who incurs exposures, but it has been tried several times during the war, and whatever the disadvantages may be, the injustice and consequent inequity of any other course are evident enough. The obvious objection to the election is that it assumes the soldiers not to have the right. But that is unavailable. After the second Tuesday of March it will be secured to them, or New York will make a very fatal mistake, and be the gross injustice to many of her most faithful children.

LITERARY.

THE "Life of Lyman Beecher" is a most valuable contribution to our biographical literature. In his old age the "Father of the Beechers," seated in the quiet family-room of the author of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," was ready to narrate the incidents and reminiscences of his long and active life. These were taken down by his children; questions were asked and remarks made which brought out more reminiscences; then illustrative correspondence and documents were added in their appropriate places; and so upon the autobiographical thread has been strung a complete memoir of Beecher, with characteristic pictures of his times. The work though edited by Charles Beecher is really the joint production of several members of the family.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

CONGRESS.

SENATE.—February 24. A petition was presented from citizens of Idaho asking for a division of that Territory, on the ground that one portion was inaccessible to the other.—A petition was presented from contractors for gunboats of an increase of compensation.—The Committee on the District asked to be discharged from further consideration of the question of the extension of the law securing colored persons equal privileges with whites in the District of Columbia, and agreed to.—Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill amending the act for aiding the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Lake Superior to Puget Sound. This amendment permits the issue of 1,600,000 shares at $100 each, authorizes the company to appropriate public lands containing coal and iron at the same rate as paid for agricultural lands; removes the limits of time within which the company may locate in twenty miles on each side, to remove the limitation for agricultural purposes, and to postpone the time for the completion of the first hundred miles; and allows not for more than one hundred miles to be located free of duty.—Mr. HARRIS introduced a bill giving to colored men West Point cadetships, to educate, commission, and train them drill, and rendering their dismissal if found deficient in any of these respects.—The Secretary of War was requested to furnish the report of the Military Commission of which GENERAL MCDOWELL was President, relative to cotton and other speculations by officers of the army.—A bill authorizing the people of Colorado and Nevada to form State Governments and enter the Union, was passed. The bill provides for the exclusion of slavery, and secure perfect religious toleration.—The amendments of the Military Committee to the House resolution on the Lieutenant-Generalship came up. Mr. GRIMES opposed the resolution on the ground of its inexpedience. He carried into effect it would either take General Grant from the field and place him at the seat of colonel at Washington, or while making him nominally commander-in-chief, would leave him liable to be replaced by a junior officer; and it would confer no distinction except an increase of rank and pay: he would still be under the control of the President and of General Halleck. General Grant was a man of action, but there was no assurance that as General-in-Chief he would be better than the one we have; and, indeed, ere we sure that bad military counsel has not come from another source than General Halleck? He was no admirer of General Halleck, but whether that Justice should be done to him. If there was no other objection to the resolution, a vital one would be that it would have the ultimate effect of making a wide breach of Lieutenant-Generals, for every Major-General would be ambitious of attaining the highest honors possible. Mr. Sherman supported the resolution as a tribute to Grant, and not place General Grant at the head of the army; it was altogether complimentary. Grant had captured twenty or thirty thousand prisoners, taken guns, and won more battles than any other General on record. He would be happy to extend similar honor to Sherman or General who should do equally well. General Halleck's position was that of Adjutant-General to the President, who is Commander-in-Chief; in his position lies he was, where he could serve others; yet, it should be borne in mind, with an army superior to that of the enemy lying within fifty miles of Washington, Richmond was not taken by Halleck or Meade. The Army of the Potomac is just where it was years ago. It has not won the heart of the war, Grant and his army had, and these should be extended to him and them. Mr. Johnson would not vote for the resolution if it retained the clause designating the person to be appointed. He presented a letter from Halleck; if there had been disaster, history would attribute it to others than Halleck. No one could have more ably conducted the siege of Corinth. While in his present position he had shown himself capable, and was not responsible for opinions but not always been taken. The Army of the Potomac had always been successful when not subject to superior numbers. If Halleck's advice had been taken after Chancellorsville when only would have been a victory at Gettysburg, he refused to adopt his advice was unjustifiable. Gentlemen on the Johnson thought, was one of the finest battles on record. As a critical juncture afterward, when it was important that the enemy should be pursued, General Meade took the opinion of his corps commanders, who advised against the movement. He thought General Meade should have taken the responsibility: still, if the movement was made, Government could have been the mercy of the enemy. Mr. Conness said that the Army of the Potomac had been in the war, had taken the most difficult commissions; should we not seek for a man with the telegraph to report to direct it? In the West, while the Senate would not confer a new empire honor upon General Grant, he was giving him any extra rank. Mr. Hale said he would vote for the resolution at some time when the Senate could more easily have been acted upon it. Grant; a few years ago he was striving to rise above the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel. He hoped that the resolution, as amended by the Military Committee, authorizing the grade, without designating the person, would pass. The judgment of the country pointed to General Grant as the person, and he hoped that the President was to be free of his appointment. If any man, more than another, had stood up for the war, it was the President; he had stood firm when the Press and general officers were every where denouncing him. Mr. Howe was in favor of placing the resources of the country into the hands of General Grant; he had been appointed by the President, and would not hesitate to bestowed upon him. There was no distinction in asking the Senate to do what all agreed should be done. Mr. Rosenbaum would not detract from the honors so justly due General Grant, but thought it was proper for the Senate to indicate the person upon whom the grade should be conferred, as that body must become sit as judges upon the confirmation. It was no mere empty honor that the resolution, as introduced, proposed upon

ESCAPING UNION OFFICERS SUCCORED BY SLAVES.—[SEE PAGE 173.]

MAJOR-GENERAL PALMER.—[PHOTOGRAPHED BY T. B. BISHOP.]

BRIGADIER-GENERAL W. S. SMITH.—[PHOTOGRAPHED BY MOSES & PEABLES, NASHVILLE.]

GENERALS PALMER AND SMITH.

On this page we give portraits of Generals PALMER and SMITH, the former connected with the late movement against Dalton, and the latter with General Sherman's expedition. The movement against Dalton was probably no more than a reconnoissance; but there was some very severe fighting, as the enemy were strongly posted, and our forces were compelled to give up the attack, which would otherwise have been successful. An account of this movement is given in its proper place, as also of General Smith's cavalry expedition, which started from Memphis to co-operate with Sherman, but which encountered the concentrated force of the enemy's cavalry, under Forrest, Lee, and Rhoddy.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE HOLSTON.

WE give below a view on the Holston River, which runs through Knoxville, Tennessee, showing the pontoon bridge and the bridge built by the United States Government, as seen February 5, 1864. On the right is a stone quarry, the rocks being used for filling the inside of the piers, which are built of timbers. The bridge is now completed. On the left are seen slaughter-houses and the remains of the gas-works destroyed by fire, the chimney still standing. Camps of the troops are seen in different places. The Holston River is the stream which has separated Longstreet from the Federal army at Knoxville, and from the banks of which the rebel General has lately retreated.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE HOLSTON, AT KNOXVILLE, TENNESSEE.—[SKETCHED BY C. H. FERRING.]

MAP OF THE CAMPAIGN IN EAST TENNESSEE, MISSISSIPPI, GEORGIA ALABAMA, AND FLORIDA.

THE HOSTESS OF THE BIG CABIN.

A few weeks ago my reportorial duties calling me in the vicinity of Knoxville, Tennessee, the tedium of my ride over the rough mountain roads was much alleviated for a dozen miles or so by the genial companionship of my friend, Captain Leighton, the scout. As we rode along I begged him to give me an account of an adventure which had created some interest in the army a few months before, and in which he himself had figured somewhat conspicuously. He complied, and his relation was very much as follows:

There were few pretty girls in the part of Tennessee we traversed during the last campaign southwestward, so that, so soon as we reached the Georgian frontier, and got wind of the old widow Cobb and her three grand-daughters, Amelia, Cordelia, and Ophelia Granby, living in the Big Cabin, at the first fork of the lower Atlanta road, there was little else thought of by our "shoulder-straps," except, perhaps, Bragg and his crew, and they were making tracks for a more genial climate at the lively rate that peculiar to the fair damsels of the liquid names began to trouble brass-buttoned bosoms to an alarming degree. I had first discovered the Jewels in one of my lonely expeditions southward, and through me nearly all my chums had been introduced at an early stage of the ball, and half a dozen of us had been specially invited to the house upon several occasions, myself included, to the envy of the whole staff. Bouquets were not to be had, but all the sutlers of the division were besieged for their best notions, and silk handkerchiefs, snuff, hair-grease, lemon syrup, lime cordial, tooth-powder, tooth-brushes, etc., etc., began to fly in the shape of compliments; and one poor fellow—Lieutenant Shone, of the —th Ohio—could find nothing appropriate among the sutlers' stores, so he sent an enormous old pound-cake, as stale as a brick, with some chattering verses, to the youngest. Even General K—— had gone head over ears with Cordelia to the tune of his grand rival, and had sent the old lady a dozen camp-kettle, with an eye to grace in high quarters.

But the impression was slight. They were secesh all over; and though the presents were received with much willingness, I, for one, saw that we were "Yankees" still, and rated accordingly in their warm Southern estimation. It might have been different if the girls had been by themselves, but the old lady—there was the rub.

Besides being as proud as Lucifer (taking what she could get from our stores though, from sheer necessity), I sometimes caught an ugly twinkle in her eye, when some of our fellows were beneath it, immersed in the sweet converse of the younger doves, which led me to think that if a small company of guerrillas could be let in at the back door, some of those delightful autumn evenings, upon an unsuspecting festival or two, that the old fury was just the girl to do it, and chuckle afterward.

The grand-daughters—whose sire was cooling his Southern blood in some Northern prison, and whose mother had quitted the hoe-cake and bacon of her native land for another, and, very probably, a better, world—were more agreeable, if less original, subjects to contemplate. And a compound description will answer for the three. There was but one year's difference in their respective ages, one inch difference in their respective statures, and, apparently, one shade (a positive one) of variation in the color of their respective hair. Amelia's—the oldest —being black, Cordelia's brown, and Ophelia's a brilliant auburn. Otherwise, they all looked alike; did about the same amount of smiling, laughing, and sighing—always in concert.

The Big Cabin, as their home was called and known from far off, was an exceedingly primitive, but not uncomfortable, manor house, only one story high, with a multitude of wings, sheds, porches, and additions of various dates, all built of logs, rough outside but plastered within—the whole structure appearing to spread itself over a full half-acre of ground, with a corn-field in front, and a kitchen-garden and stable-yard between the rear and the unbroken forest, which they called a pasture.

Well, something extraordinary was on the tapis. The old lady had apparently melted, and we were progressing in her favor, as well as that of the girls. There was to be a ball, a gathering, or whatever it may be called, at the Big Cabin. Hints had been ably dropped; some of our mess acted mysteriously, as if they were deeper in the secret, while all of us looked forward expectantly. And one morning I was officially apprised of the affair by a contraband aboard a scow, who brought me the regular printed invitation cards in a yellow envelope, a sheet of foolscap, and blue ink, which ran as follows, verbatim et literatim:

THE BIG CABIN, —— 186—.

Capt. Leyston:

We want you very much to come over to nite with the other fellars and partake the bumbel fair of our fertil bord.

Very Afe. your
AMELIA
CORNELIA } GRANBY.
OPHELIA

P.S.—Mother is going to have some other gentlemen from the neighborhood also with some cake.

P.S.—Do try and make Gen. K. come to. He thot he would but were afrade he wont.

Of course I was in seeming ecstasies at this gushing, guileless mark of esteem; but there was something in it that set me thinking. Colonel S—— was with me. He had just received a similar invitation, and was smiling all over like a pond in the wind. I exhibited my note exultingly as if it contained something signally tender, when he made haste to refute the idea of any favoritism having been shown me by displaying his own, which was almost in the same words, with a postscript running, "General K—— thought he would come over with the rest, but wasn't sure he could. Pray try to induce him. It will be so nice;" or something in that strain. And Captain D——, entering at that moment, displayed a similar epistle, with a postscript equally solicitous of the presence of the gallant General K—— at the morrow's gathering. "Lucky dog," thought Colonel S——. "Happy fellow," mused the Captain, aloud. "K—— has surely made an impression." And I said nothing, having something else in mind, and not doubting that all the invitations, could they be scrutinized, would have postscripts of which the gay General would be the burden.

There were about twenty officers among the chosen; and such an ado in the way of toilet as* exasperated us a week in the anticipation. Whiskers were trimmed that had had their own sweet will for many a month. Pomatum was at a premium. Boots were polished, and new cravats and linen shirts borrowed, and neck-ties improvised; watch-guards the prominently displayed, to the astonishment of the whole camp. But if any one was successful, if any rig was neat, unexceptionable, surely that of General K—— was gorgeous. He journeyed to dress himself in the morning, and had not finished when the evening fell. All the rest except myself were mounted and impatiently awaiting their pleasure, when I went to see how he progressed. He was so generous and handsome that four privates, two of them Germans, who had been barbers in St. Louis, had volunteered to assist in his "get up." Besides these, he had his own two contrabands who had followed his fortunes from Western Virginia, and the interior of his tent presented a novel and unwarlike spectacle as I entered. Sambo was polishing a pair of top-boots with the mysterious time, expending an incredible amount of saliva on the same; Cuffee was breathing on the epaulets and rubbing their bullion with a soft donkey, himself in his side attesting to the same effects having been performed on them; one of the Germans was trying to twist some coil into the General's hair with a broken bayonet, which new and then he would plunge into the embers of the campstove near by, drawing it in its spare time to whet upon the side his brother in nativity was brushing the coat and polishing its rear buttons. The two remaining soldiers were engaged in the saddle and harness metal with all their might in another corner; and the poor General himself was half-undressed, and half-arrayed in their midst. But he was not the least discocerted at my entrance—sprang from the hair-dresser's last finish, with a satisfied glance at the small mirror before him, drew on his boots briskly, and finally worked himself inside of his coat with a smile of remarkable good-will.

Hardly refraining from laughter, I let my feelings have vent in a burst of spontaneous admiration, which he received with a slight scatter of curses. I let him get entirely dressed before saying another word—let the bushy epaulets gleam on his shoulders, the spurs to be buckled, and the voluminous handkerchief half lose itself out of his manly bosom, and finally the presentation-sword dangle at his side, and the salvers of refreshments before his small mirror before him, drew on his boots briskly, and finally worked himself inside of his coat with a smile of remarkable good-will.

Hardly refraining from laughter, I let my feelings have vent in a burst of spontaneous admiration, which he received with a slight scatter of curses. I let him get entirely dressed before saying another word—let the bushy epaulets gleam on his shoulders, the spurs to be buckled, and the voluminous handkerchief half lose itself out of his manly bosom, and finally the presentation-sword dangle at his side, and the salvers of refreshments before his small mirror before him, drew on his boots briskly, and finally worked himself inside of his coat with a smile of remarkable good-will.

"Nonsense," said he; "I have already kept them waiting. Time to be off."

But I was not to be put back in that way, but insisted; so the tent was cleared of attendants, and I proceeded to make a picture to the General for a few minutes, which had the effect of dissipating much of his self-satisfied dignity, and replacing it with a cheerful fidget painful to behold. But after a few minutes further talk he looked better, and his eye began to twinkle with some of its wonted fun.

"I leave it all to you," said he, and sitting down to a table he gave me a line or two of writing, with which I departed, and which I presented incontinently to my comrades, first, however, depositing the order I had received with Colonel K——, the officer of the day, and leaving him behind, which I hung from my neck as an extra ornament.

"The General says he can't come for an hour yet," said I, as we galloped off through the twilight without him.

It was quite dark, but the Big Cabin was dotted with lights as we came in sight, and was welcomed by all the darkeys on the estate, some dozen in number, who took charge of our horses; and, leaving our cape and fatigue coats in the hall-entrance or hall-we first entered, we walked and scraped and bowed and curveted into the great room of the Cabin, where the Misses Granby were receiving four of the lovely Georgians of the neighborhood were notably awaiting us in their best garments, which, I may as well say, were by no means unbecoming. None of the male Georgians we had expected to meet were present yet on hand, but every one seemed in the best humor, and we, and we cared little whether they would or not, as there was only about a girl apiece as it was.

Although early autumn the mountain vicinity made the nights coolish, and a great fire, apparently composed of the trunks of small trees, and crackling in the fire-place, which occupied almost one end of the apartment. And there, at one side of it, sat the old lady, with a pipe in a dress that hid her lips, and the set sneer on her brows and mouth, and the inveterate, high old sky-blue silk on her person. Not a word of welcome could I get from the life of "How d'ye do's," "Wa'al, I declares," and introductions of the strange damsels take its course for a few moments, when the harsh voice fell among us with,

"Where's the General?"

The girls also looked concerned; but I explained that his absence was only temporary, and they brightened up again.

Well, dancing was in the programme, and the civilian guests not appearing, we prepared for the "light fantastic" as old Cobb turkey, flanked upon a hogshead at one end of the room, began to tune the screechiest old violin that ever tortured mortal sympathies, and a rush was made for the prettier girls, who were "gobbled" in less than no time, it being my fortune to lead forth the fair Ophelia—she of the crimson curls; and it was not long before all were paired except two—Lieutenant G—— a bashful fellow, and the most unengaging girl in the room. The latter had been introduced, if I remember rightly, as a Miss Curdy, and was not without considerable claims to notice in person; but there was something so spiteful, so repulsive in her vindictive eyes and angry lips that every one had tried to overlook her in the choice of partners, and all with success except poor G——, whose timidity had kept him in the back-ground, and who now seemed positively frightened at the prospect—he and he the only ones left unmated, except the lonely hostess at the fire-place. Actually the poor fellow's resolution seemed to waver between the two. He waited so long as to attract the attention of all, to the merriment of most. It was Miss Curdy on the one hand, with the crocodile on one side and the tiger on the other. First he sidled over to the fair Curdy; but a glance from the latter's eyes brought him to a halt like a leveled bayonet, and at length, with something desperate in his demeanor, he made up to the old lady, and requested to have the honor as if demented. He was theatrically inclined, and we heard him stammer something about leading some one into the ring—but whom, when the black pipe dropped from the lady's lips and her scorn broke forth.

"What! her! look 'ere!" But there was no adequate expression of her wrath; so she began to laugh in a light, raspy way, and finally roared, almost every one but poor G—— joining in the chorus.

"Turn roun', and back hout down the hall door," said she.

"What?" cried G——, immersed in the idiom through sheer confusion.

"Take that Curdy, you donk. Go 'long!" said the other, pointing at the scornful beauty close by; and G—— went, with a sudden bound, bowing and perspiring furiously, while she across and took his arm like a queen.

Then the old lady fished the fiddler from the contempt of the company and down as he bent to his task, the crazy instrument shrieked and wailed forth the liveliest of tunes, a sort of reel called Jon, which none of the male performers had ever attempted before, so that there were frequent bumpings up against the quintessential cleanliness of partners, which not only added to the hilarity of the occasion, but contributed much to the discomposure of the unfortunate Curdy. Her emotions, as she called the figure, had little effect upon us. The unique manner in which this worthy performed the part of master of ceremonies was somewhat interesting as well as incomprehensible.

"Keep in de ring! keep in de ring! Fellahs to de right, gal to de left. Keep in de ring! Now: han's all roun'! han's all roun'! Swap de partners! Keep in de ring! Now: sharp, sharp—keep in de ring! Now to de left, gals to de right! Now: han's all roun'! han's all roun'! Whoop!"

Such was the old man's nature, vociferated at the top of his mighty lungs, with a periodical Anabatem was-whoop rising through and mingling with the screams of delight of the great crowd as the fat fiddler crashed up and down on the loose planks of the floor, contributed to the strangeness of the ruder scene. Every one of us got used to it, and even the female portion seemed absolutely in ecstasies. Even the widow looked up excitedly from the fireplace, and muttered, as if to the mother behind her, over her hard face at some master-piece on the part of one or another of her girls.

"Go to it, Curdy. Sling him, Pheely! Hooray, hooray, look at Meely!" would burst from her lips at intervals, while her eyes seemed to flash and her figure trembled in the ample and rotund ease with as we swept before her.

The whole thing ended in a tremendous waltz, for which we were favored by the fiddler—"Han's all roun', and den start by for de Georgia reel;" and then we fell into it as naturally as a chip in a whirlpool, and began to waltz around the green grass in an awful pace. If the excitement was furious before it was now delirious. Even the shyest beau ever caught in the dance. Her eye fired and her yellow cheek bloomed, and poor little G—— was fairly lifted from his feet by the impetus of the whole. Wild hurrahs from the music seemed to permeate and play through as they swirling in the resistless tide. The Misses Granby were in their element. The ear-linged accents of the darkey would chime in periodically with—

"Sling 'em, sling 'em, ha, ha! Sling 'em, sling 'em—flow 'em roun'—whoop!" till at last the bow dropped from his exhausted hand, and we spun into one seize—perhaps it was only in one seat, for they are free-and-easy down in Georgia—and the air was loaded with our pants and congratulations.

"I say, Colonel," whispered Lieutenant Ophelia told me some of her secrets; how some fellow had been "rocking poises to her" all summer, when the war came and took him off, she evidently presumed that he had been courting her through the eloquent medium of floral gifts—and how some other fellow had been "sweet on her" all winter, but couldn't speak it, because his feet wouldn't fit them," etc., so pleasantly that I began to forgive her the color of her hair, and wish myself amiable a few Confederate cents for true love's sake. And then the gallant General entered at last, spandels and all, amidst a perfect furor of welcome and applause. "Ere's the General!" "Oh my, look at the brass on him!" "My stars, what whiskers!" cried a dozen voices at once, and the whole house rose to him honor. I am compelled to say that, in spite of her "whars" and "thars," and her rather slovenly attire, the widow was something of quiet dignity and courtesy in the old woman's mien when she had laid aside her pipe and bowed her welcome, which was not unreasonably in favor of the choice blood of which she boasted.

Another dance and then supper, which had been waiting long enough, the widow said, and should wait no longer for all the quality in Georgia. We were ushered by half a score of darkeys into an apartment narrower, but much longer than the one we had danced, with two greening tables upon it extending the whole length side by side, table-cloths, napkins, and heaped with as noble a repast as ever dilated the eyeballs of a hungry man. A large pig—quite a hog, in fact—crowned the centre of one board, roasted whole. All sorts of fowl, from the domestic turkey to the diminutive game of humble kind to be sure, the vegetables of the season, and your choice of rye coffee, sweet cider, or army whisky. The whole affair was a surprising success for "the impoverished South;" but, nevertheless, we afterward learned that the neighbors had been borrowed from for miles around to crown the occasion with plenty. We were soon seated; the darkeys hopped about as busy as bees, and the feast commenced. The General took care of the widow. He toasted her and every one else. High glee was the order of the evening; and it was nearly midnight when we thought of rising, intending to close the occasion with a grand waltz.

We had just formed for the purpose, the shiny pate of the minstrel was beginning to bob up and down, and the instrument to plead for mercy, when we heard the tramp of feet in the hall, and presently a knock at the inner door, which the widow opened eagerly.

"Wa'al, I declare, if 'ere ain't the rest of 'em. Come in. Gentlemen, this 'ere's Mr. Jenks."

"Wa'al, since you insist, I'z pose I must, ole gal," said that individual, entering.

"And, gentlemen," continued the hostess, merrily, "this 'ere's Mr. Simons. And this 'ere's Mr. So and So," with each expression bowing in a lank, ragged, barefooted cut-throat of a guerrilla, with half a dozen pistols and a knife or two in his belt, till they numbered about thirty, while our arms were in the hall.

"Ha, ha, ha!" said the leader, was a specially villainous-looking wretch, who had appropriated General K——'s sword, which he had found upon entering, and now brandished, as with an attempt at a military washern, brutal features which was positively impious.

"How d'ye do, gents? What nice clothes them is!" said he. "And, bless me, what a pretty little turnip you've got, General!" turning his attention to our worthy superior as he spoke. "Let's see what time it is, eh?" and he coolly drew it from the fob. "Twelve, as I live! Must go shortly. You'll go with us, won't you? Never mind; no thanks. Ha, ha!"

"Ha! ha!" roared the burly crew in concert, appearing to see a joke somewhere.

And then the leader passed from each, begging for seal-rings, watches, or whatever else we might have; while the girls tittered, and began to talk among themselves. "Yank's being knitched this time, shore." I had heard and read about the effrontery and treachery of Southern women—and seen some of it, but never such an exhibition as was here. It was difficult to comprehend how these beings, with the warmth, impulsiveness, lively, joyous, and sympathetic in a measure—could reconcile in their womanly breasts a betrayal of those whose bread they had eaten, by whom they had rendered happy for hours, with aught of the milk of human kindness. Yet not a blush of shame mantled their cheeks. Their self-possession was perfect. They did not seem to hate us particularly; the dance was too fresh in their minds; they gave us no smiles to be sure—indeed, such an utterly artless air of duty which was wonderful.

All of us, except the General and myself, were treated to the contents of the pockets—contre-temps; visions of Richmond prisons and rebel fare flitted ominously before them, and two or three retained their fair deceivers in their arms for preserving than elegant. But the darlings only laughed, and mocked them. The gang had each seized, by this time, a portion from the deserted feast, and were moving about with the girls, gnawing away at a bone or crust, and making themselves exceedingly merry at our woe-begone appearance. As they were somewhat taken aback when my turn to be pilfered came round.

"Maybe I hain't seen you afore?" growled Jenks.

"Maybe you hain't," I responded.

"Maybe you hain't the chap I seed on the lower road day before yesterday?"

"Maybe I hain't."

"But you air."

"True."

"That's a pooty bogle o yours. I'll have it."

"You can't have it."

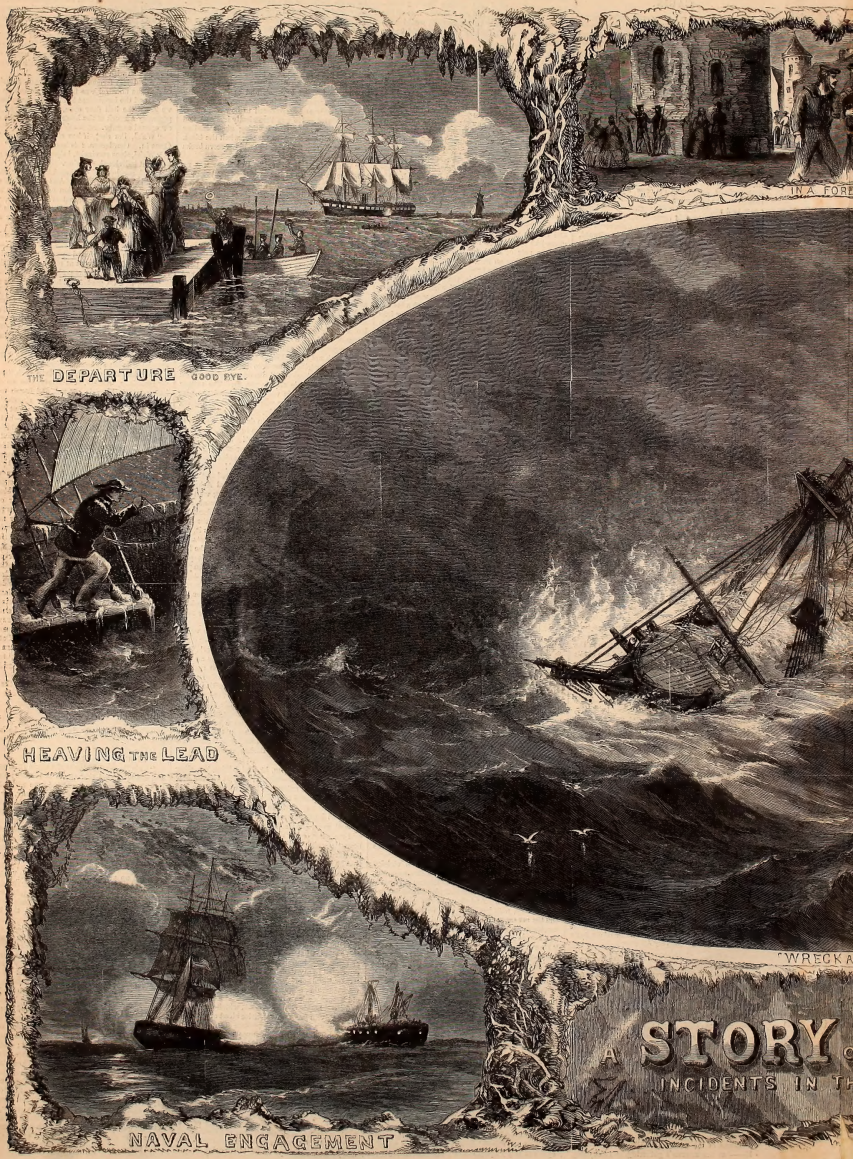
"What's to prevent me?"

"This!" and I produced the bugle from my side and wound a peal that shook the house; simultaneously we heard the door tried from without, and, before the echo of the bugle had ceased away, we heard the door, which the scoundrels had bolted as they entered, crash in from the butt end of a musket, and the hall began to fill with many feet. Arabs made a horrible imprecation, drew a pistol and fired, but I knocked up his hand a second before the discharge, and he was down to sleep with a blow from the poker, which I snatched from the fire-place close at hand.

"Put up your weapons, my friends," said I to the rebels, who, hardly comprehending the state of the case, were still standing in the middle of a free for all.

"You will gain nothing by resistance. A regiment surrounds the house, and the hall is crammed with troops."

Then the door opened, and Colonel S—— entered with a file of our boys, who proceeded to disarm the guerrillas without much resistance. But if any one felt sheepish, the widow and her three promising daughters must have been the victims of proper chagrin. The old lady was simply mad. She had schemed for this nice little affair for days and nights, and now of the nine hard-cases only one might be excusable. Besides, she might have delivered us to the enemy before that good supper had been disposed of, if she had so desired, and I, for one, was not so hard on her after all. A bucket of water on the head of Mr. Jenks (a guerrilla long notorious in the army) brought him to his senses; and he, together with his comrades, in a few hours was safely lodged in the camp. Jenks had broken his parole four times, and the oath of allegiance innumerably, was tried next morning by court-martial, sentenced, and shot at noon. The rest were sent to Johnson's Island. We have accounted that region a long time now, and all the needy homes of the vicinity, whether or of friend or foe, have drawn draws from our commissary department, with thanks and blessings upon the donors; all homes except one—the Big Cabin at the fork of the Atlanta road.



THE DEPARTURE
GOOD BYE.
IN A FORE
HEAVING THE LEAD
WRECK A
A STORY
INCIDENTS IN T
NAVAL ENGAGEMENT

THE RETURN.
FURLING SAIL.
BETWEEN DECKS
SEA.

[Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1864, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.]

QUITE ALONE.

By GEORGE AUGUSTUS SALA.

Printed from the Manuscript and early Proof-Sheets purchased by the Proprietors of "Harper's Weekly."

CHAPTER III.

NURSE PIGOTT.

THE festival came to an end at last, and the glittering company departed. Griffin Blunt lingered to the last, and wound his way to the door of egress, through a silken labyrinth of polite conversations and bowing adieux. Ivanhoff's last grin, and Mahmoud's last "codeuce," young Mr. Disraeli's "Henrietta Temple," Prince Esterhazy's last conversazione, and the Duke of Devonshire's last ball at Brighton: the odds for the St. Leger, the beauties of drawn tulle bonnets; the musical glasses—without Shakspeare —had each their graceful mention, as the dandy fluttered in and about the purlerres of beauty and fashion. The scene at the gate was like the reception at the opera, only with more sunlight turned on instead of garish gas—like the "pen" at St. James's without the trains and plumes. The company had begun to yawn. The grandes dames wanted their siesta before dinner. The men languished for their clubs. Even Pauline is not exempt from the laws of fatigue; and perhaps one reason why great people grow old so soon is, that, under, and unsheer lassitude, constrained to indulge in mutual dispargement and backbiting, is that they see each other so frequently. What is the last monode, after all, but a huge convent in masquerade, with its vigils, macerations, mortifications, penances as voluntarily undertaken, and as painful often as those undergone in the monastery or the nunnery? Frets there never a hair-shirt or a spiked girdle beneath the embroidered cassage? Is there not often, appended to the perfumed dressing-room, a cell with its skull, its pallet of sharp ridges and scourges?

Mr. Blunt had divers offers of conveyance to town. He might have continued a Squire of Dames as far as, and sat behind the moor and pensively jobbed horses in the metropolis. But he courteously declined all such proposals. He had a little business to transact, he said, and he was every body's humble and devoted servant. He remained, however, chatting, bowing, smiling, until the last gay girl, until the shamefaced people who had come down in glass coaches and hackneys took heart of grace, and bid the vast jackets adieu, and hired private vehicles, and until one or two attaches of foreign legations, and hardened guardsmen, kindled their cigars before strolling away. In justice to them, it must be admitted that these offenders peeped round to see there were no ladies near. Nowadays, shame and the smoker have been hopelessly divorced. So far from hesitating as to lighting a cigar in a lady's presence, the worshiper of nicotine well-nigh presumes to ask Beauty for a Vesuvian. A qui la faute? Is Beauty or Bacchus to blame?

The trees of Chiswick were bathed in crimson and burnished gold, and cast shadows of deeper purple, before the dandy himself vouchsafed to light a cigar. When he began to smoke he smoked vigorously, and as he walked away with its hasty reed, the blue wreaths of vapor circling behind him, his gait seemed very different from that of the mincing, tripping exquisite of an hour before. Had you Fortunatus's cap, or been in the receipt of fern seed, you might have availed yourself of the privilege of invisibility, and been on his vanished heels marked how nervously he turfled and started, although he but crunched a pebble—and then, looking in the way he discovered, not without amazement, that his face was as the face of an old man.

Terribly jaded, haggard, and care-worn. A film seemed to have come over the eyes. No silver, but a sickly tarnish mingled with the jet hair and whiskers. And the smile had fled away from the mouth, and left only furrows of cruelty and malice.

He struck into a by-lane, green and solitary as though it had been fifty miles from London, and walking briskly, soon came upon a remote little wayside tavern, all thatch and ivy and honey-suckle, and with the sign of the "Goat" swinging before it. He passed through the bar, where two market gardeners sprawled over their pipes and beer on a bench—one awake and uproarious, the other snoring and snoring, and with as happy, doubtless, as the Great Mogul. He turned to a little side window, and in the most unaffected manner in the world ordered a glass of brandy. He order brandy! Marsachino, curaçoa, parfait amour, would have been seemingly more suitable to his refined taste. Nevertheless he not only ordered the liquor but drank it directly after finishing; and, which is still more singular, paid for it—a performance to which he was, to say the least, unaccustomed. However, this was to be for Mr. Blunt an evening unusually marked for the disbursement of ready money.

"There is a person here with a child," he said, less asking a question than asserting something of which he entertained no doubt.

"In the parlor, Sir," the landlady replied, with a low courtesy, for gentlemen so gallantly accoutred were by no means frequent customers at the "Goat."

The dandy looked inquiringly for the parlor's whereabouts. The landlady hustled from behind the counter, and ushered him into a little room at the extremity of the passage, and then returned to gossip with her daughter about the beautiful teeth and whiskers and gold chain of the distinguished stranger. Both conceived from that hour forward an intense abhorrence for all market gardeners who drank small-beer, and got tipsy.

"And such a lovely little angel of a child as is a-waitin' for him," the hostess pursued—"it's the darter, for sure!"

"Is her mother with her?" asked Phœbe, the daughter.

"Her mother!" echoed the landlady in great disdain. "Do you think, child, such a grand gentleman would bring his wife here among the likes of us? Why, he—I mean the child's—she's only got on a cotton print dress and an eight-and-twenty shilling shawl, and her bonnet isn't be dear at four and sevenpence, strings and all."

"What does he bring her here for, and what could pull her away from dancing with the gem'man of brandy?" persisted Phœbe, who was of an inquiring disposition.

"There, go along, child, and wash up your glasses!" cried the landlady in a pet, probably because she too was unable to answer these questions to her own satisfaction. "It ain't no business of ours. Maybe he likes brandy, though the nuss had a pint o' wine and a sweet biscuit, and paid for it like a lord. Go along, I say, and don't stand chattering there." Whereupon Mrs. Landlady, who was somewhat hot of temper, elbowed her daughter, who had quietly caved used as a lavatory for the drinking vessels of the establishment, and entered into communion with a pewter of drink a state, now, between "Missis" and the servitor perchance to be envied by customers from the bar, in the facile difficulty of calculating what additions ought to discreetly made to the score of the two market gardeners, while the one was snoring and the other singing a song, certainly without beginning and seemingly without end.

Meanwhile the object of this conversation had entered the parlor and made his salutations to its occupants. These salutations were of a twofold nature.

"How do you do, Nurse Pigott?" he said, with an affable nod, and a condescending grin—but it was feeble and forced—"how are you?" with a very red round face, and for whose attire the brief but graphic summary given by the landlady to her daughter was amply suffice.

"All well with you at home, I hope."

"Nicely, Sir, which it also left my husband, thankin' you kindly, Sir, for the 'arf-crown," and the dumpy woman, rising and dropping a profound reverence. "But oh, Sir, Miss Lily have been a-takin' on dreadful."

"Why, what's the matter with her—the little puss?" exclaimed the dandy, sharply. And this time his second attempt was a success.

The "Little Puss" was sitting on the dumpy woman's knee. Indeed she was a very little puss—a tiny fair girl of three years old, and very long brown hair curling in thick profusion round her pretty face. She had very large wondering blue eyes; but these, on the present occasion, were red and swollen. Her head was leaning upon her nurse's bosom—poor sorrow. Her little lips were twitching. It was evident that the "Little Puss" had been crying for her eyes out.

"Be quiet, miss, and don't be naughty, or I shall tell nurse Pigott to give you a whipping," said the dandy.

His words were harsh and unfeeling; but oddly enough his manner was not so. He spoke less in anger than in a sort of pettish fear—as Begum telling her slave girl that really, if she gave her any more trouble she would be compelled to have her executed with the bow-string. The dandy had enjoyed very, very little experience of children, and erroneously imagined that his whipping was the most terrible chastisement available in the case of tears. At any rate the threat had not the desired effect, the child only emulated the nurse. Mr. Blunt found it no more likely to execute it than to cut her head off with a carving knife, so she began, to the astonishment of the dandy, to cry louder than ever.

"Put, tut, tut!" Mr. Blunt murmured, pacing the room in vexation. "Dear me, dear me, Nurse Pigott, this is very embarrassing, and not at all fair to me. I wrote to Mrs. Pigott only last month's bill, and told you that I was obliged to take Miss Lily away. I distinctly informed you there was to be no crying; the doctor ordered it, they can't, indeed." But there was little good in reasoning with Nurse Pigott, who was crying quite as copiously, if not so noisily, as her little charge.

"Oh, Sir!" she sobbed out, half escaping to comfort Lily, and to hide her own face behind the corner of her shawl, "I can't help it—I can't indeed, Sir, when I thinks of that there blessed innocent mite a-leaving me. She have been with me never left, night nor day, for three years Janiwery, likewise nussing her through measles and hoopin'-cough, and all her pretty ways, calling of us all to pieces, and hangin' round us, and my husband is asfond of her as if she was his own, which we have buried two and the twins being the one of them that's left is but sickly, and will never make old women, and the doctor ordered us only last Tuesday was a fortnight, it breaks my heart, it do, indeed, to part with the little darling. Oh, Sir, let the child bide with us, and don't take her away."

Griffin Blunt was too well-bred to be his wife, besides he had not taken off his gloves, but he bit his lips, and contracted his brows, and paced the room more nervously than ever.

"You're a stupid old woman," he muttered, pettishly.

"I know I am," acquiesced Nurse Pigott, with a fresh succession of wails, "and so's my husband, that is in bein' fond of the little cherub, and glad would he be for us to keep it, though only a journeyman plasterer, and times is hard as hard can be."

"She is trying it on for more money," Mr. Blunt said, internally. "The old hypocrite. I told you," he continued, turning to Nurse Pigott, "that it was absolutely necessary for me to remove the little girl. I am about to take her to a place where she will be well educated.

"She ain't old enough to be educated, 'manded Nurse Pigott. "Besides, my 'usband reads beautiful, and there's a lovely school round the corner at twopence a week, and let alone teaching, there's nobody but me knows how much bread and butter she wants."

"Pray let me have no more of this painful discussion," the dandy, with calm dignity, interposed. "When I made my appearance, and I put you to meet me here you understood the purpose for which you were to bring the child. You have had ample time for acquaintance, and I must tell you that if you have any views of gaining more money by her they will be disappointed.

"Money," exclaimed Nurse Pigott, half choking, and by this time as much with indignation as with grief. "Money, I scorns it. It isn't money I want, nor my 'usband neither. It's the dear child had been put out to us by the parish we'd ha' done our dooty by it. If its fathers and mothers was cruel to it, and left it bemperors, we'd ha' done the same. It isn't for the money, though little enough, goodness knows, we have, and a mighty, which you know Sir, not being disrespectable to you. And if you'd have the darling with us, and money was a little 'ard, I'm sure we'd wait for better times, and never trouble you for one brass farthing if we could help it; no more we wouldn't little Lally," and Nurse Pigott subsided after this into more incoherence of grief.

The dandy winced when reminded that he had not been too punctual a paymaster. He could see, however, that the remark was totally devoid of malice. He could not help acknowledging that the child, whom he had seen perhaps six times during three years, had been reared with more than motherly tenderness by Nurse Pigott, all vulgar, dumpy woman as she was. And something like a feeling of shame made his mind bitterly aware of the abundance that this love and tenderness had been bestowed upon Lily by strangers.

"There, there, Nurse Pigott," he said, as soothingly as he could, "I'm sure that you've done your best with the little thing, and her mother has no reason to use it (as, poor thing, to come and see her) are very much obliged to you. Only, you know, the best of friends must part. You and I have had our say ago. Come, don't let us have any more fuss—you can't tell how it injures my nerves—and kiss the child and stop crying, for I'm rather pressed for time."

